The picket line could not, however, be broken up in this manner. As the ranks reformed in single file, Gordon, guarded by the captain and two uniformed officers, held a ten minute speech, calling attention to the heroic struggle of the Toledo strikers and appealing to the workers assembled to support the strike. He was then promptly whisked into a nearby store by the police and held for the patrol wagon. Al Dasch, leading the line of march at this time, protested against Gordon's arrest and was immediately pulled in to join the latter.

Undaunted by these tactics, the line reformed once more, taking up the chant "Free Our Prisoners." Thereupon the whole squad of cops charged into the ranks and ran in 18 additional pickets into the patrol wagon which had pulled up in the meantime.

In Magistrate's Court, on 54th Street, where Attorney Mendel Lurie of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense represented the prisoners, the 18 were immediately released because of insufficient evidence, while Gordon and Dasch were paroled for a hearing at a later date.

Dutch Party Gains 4 Seats In Elections

From Holland comes the gratifying news that our sister party there, the Revolutionary Socialist Workers Party, has gained 4 mandates in the provincial elections held recently.

What makes this simple piece of news more important than at first seems apparent is the fact that of all the parties standing in one form or another on a working class basis—it was the one upholding the banner of the Fourth International that made the most decisive gains.

The Communist Party increased its mandates by three. The Social Democratic party lost one.

The Nazis made considerable gains; but when it is understood that they have been heavily subsidized by Hitler's funds, thus enabling them to set up a huge propaganda machine, the results are not so surprising as it might seem at first blush.

This was the first election campaign for the newly organized revolutionary party in Holland. Like the Workers Party in the United States, the R.S.W.P. came about as a fusion of two currents in the labor movement. A gain of four mandates is only a beginning. It does, however, show clearly that what to others seemed only as an idea is steadily but surely impressing itself on the minds of workers all over the world—the Fourth International marches on.

'Wildcat' Miners Boo Solons at Hearing

HARRISBURG, Pa.—Five thousand coal truckers, who operate "mines" in which the whole family engages, trekked into Harrisburg where a hearing was held on a bill that would deprive them of the right to use the highways for the transportation of coal.

The bill was introduced by Representative George D. Holstrom of Lehigh who labelled the truckers as "bootleg miners." The object of the bill would require every independent miner and trucker to get a special permit to use the highway. The passage of the bill would make it necessary for each trucker to show "ability to pay for damages resulting from vehicle accidents." It is obvious that the bill was introduced at the behest of the coal barons of the state who hope by the passage of the bill to exclude the truckers from the sacred right of mining their own lots, thus safeguarding an intrusion on the profits of the coal barons. There are over 3,500 truckers engaged in earning a livelihood through this method.

Speakers for the bill were shouted down, the bill itself torn to pieces by Michael Demchak of the Workers Party and thrown at the feet of Representative Holstrom. Truckers speaking against the bill were applauded and cheered with gusto.

Allard Leads Illinois Jobless On Capitol

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 7.—Led by Gerry Allard, chairman of the four county organizations of the Illinois Workers Alliance, more than 1,000 unemployed demonstrated at the state capitol for the immediate resumption of relief.

With 200,000 human beings facing imminent starvation because of the policies of Harry Hopkins and Governor Horner, for whom the issuance of relief is a political football, this action is the first to force attention from the political pay-rioters.

Allard and a committee of five interviewed the governor and demanded from him that the legislature appropriate sufficient funds to reopen all relief stations in the state. Only in this way, it was pointed out, would the jobless be saved from indescribable suffering. "I'm powerless to act," the governor told the men.

"If a foreign enemy were invading the state, you would find a way to act, would you not," Allard asked, and the smug executive began to squirm in his chair, the unemployed leader raised his voice sharply: "An enemy just as potent as a war is present right now in this state."

In that suave manner which makes a virtue of evasion in answer to the demands of workingmen, Governor Horner informed the committee that the only hope was the raising of the sales tax from two to three cents.

This answer, in the opinion of qualified observers, throws the entire question into the arena of the state legislature where the snarling republican and democratic parties may squabble over it. Furthermore, as a method of alleviating suffering, it follows the well-worn road of transferring the burden from thousands of miserable unemployed to thousands of other slightly less miserable employed workers.

Hearing the report of the committee, the 1,000 demonstrators decided unanimously to organize a state-wide march on the capitol and to camp on its steps until the relief stations are reopened.

OAKLAND, Cal. (P).—Longshoremen at Crockett refused to work when the Matson liner Makawao prepared to take on oil handled by nonunion crews. The longshoremen struck in sympathy with striking oil tanker seamen.

The strike has nothing to do with the recent strike at Crockett of the warehousemen employed at the big sugar refinery.

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (FP).—The week-old strike of ribbon workers continue to spread, according to reports at a conference of national delegates of the United Ribbon Workers and the American Federation of Silk Workers in Allentown.

All but three small Paterson, N.J., shops are shut down, while at least 50% of the Allentown area is tied up, delegates stated.

Muste Rallies N. Y. Support For Auto Strike

400 Cheer Speaker to Echo in Inspiring Meeting

NEW YORK.—Solidarity struck the keynote of the Workers Party meeting in support of the Toledo Chevrolet strikers.

Beginning with a stirring message from a young comrade direct from the firing line enthusiasm remained unabated through the entire meeting which ended with the singing of "On the Line" by the entire audience of 400.

The hall at Irving Plaza rang with applause as comrade Cannon, chairman of the meeting, introduced A. J. Muste as the representative of the Workers Party in the Toledo strike. It did not take long for this oration to re-echo once again in response to the vivid picture of the picket line painted by the National Secretary of the W.P.

Reviewing Toledo's Tradition With rapt attention the audience listened as comrade Muste described the background of the strike, the killing speed-up, the spy system and the company unions. Especially interesting here was the report of the state of mind of the Chevrolet workers during the great Auto-Lite strike of last year. Here it was stated that at that time the workers, under the influence of the Company union propaganda, tore up leaflets calling on them to support the embattled Auto-Lite men.

Only a year had elapsed, Muste pointed out, and these same workers formed one of the tightest picket lines the country has ever seen. So tight in fact that Knudsen, vice-president of General Motors was forced to secure permission from Jimmy Rolland, chairman of the Strike Committee, before he could enter the plant.

Warns Against Dillon

Continuing in his rounded description, Muste warned of the perfidious doings of Dillon and Co. who had come on the scene to spike the struggle or failing that to trim it of all militancy. That the Toledo battle has thus far steered clear of the Akron road is chiefly due to one factor, said Muste, and that is not some special quality in the Chevrolet workers, but to the presence of and influence of the revolutionary party, the Workers Party.

An instance of this fact was driven home when a telegram received the same afternoon from Toledo was read by the speaker. In it was disclosed the fact that a young comrade who had distributed a leaflet of the Workers Party warning the strikers of the company moves was held prisoner by strike officials. After presenting a Marxist argument, the telegram read, "he succeeded in convincing them of the correctness of the contents of the handbill and secured unanimous consent for the distribution of it." The crowd roared with cheers and laughter.

Ovation From Crowd

On a rising crescendo Muste pointed out that what the strikers needed most was support from other parts of the country and he appealed to the workers present to continue the good work thus far begun in picketing General Motors offices and salesrooms. For a full two minutes the chairman tried in vain to make himself heard over the prolonged ovation accorded Comrade Muste as he took his seat.

The cheers and hand clapping was translated into something more substantial as Comrade Cannon introduced the unique feature of auctioning off a few score copies of the first issue of "Strike Truth" brought from Toledo. As high as ten dollars was paid for a single copy and the total reached over $100 in good American currency.

HOUSTON, Tex. (FP).—Deputy sheriffs, declared by Wilbur Dickey, International Seamen's Union agent, to be working in connection with the shipping company, arrested four strikers at Houston on a charge of disturbing the peace.

The men were seized when they attempted to board the tanker Brandywine to get their clothes, following a walkout, according to Dickey. Trouble arose when the captain of the Brandywine and an official of the Norsworthy docks tried to keep the strikers from the ship, and one striker was injured when he fell while trying to dodge a blow, Dickey explained.

Above is part of the mass picket line that daily forms around the General Motors Chevrolet plant in Toledo, and has so tightly closed it down that no one enters without permission of the picket committee.

Dillon Spikes Flint Strike Vote; Slurs Toledo Workers

DETROIT, May 7.—Burke Cochrane, Workers Party organizer, and Sam Beck, Spartacus Youth leader, were arrested today while picketing the Chevrolet plant here. The police interfered after some hours of militant picketing with banners demanding support for the Toledo strike. The company officials feared that the banners and slogans shouted by the marchers might have a "bad" effect on plant workers.

FLINT, Mich., May 6.—At a meeting of the Buick local in Flint Sunday night, Francis J. Dillon succeeded in smashing strong sentiment for a strike Monday morning. By refusing to allow the rank and file to speak from the floor, he railroaded through a plan to wait on a government election in Toledo of Chevrolet workers. Coming at a time when 35,000 workers were about to win a victory over General Motors, calling off of the Flint strike in favor of an election is calculated to prevent the spread of the strike and to break the fighting spirit of the Chevrolet local.

Until Dillon spoke, the crowded hall of Buick auto workers called loudly for strike Monday morning. At every mention of the Toledo strikers the crowd stamped their feet and cheered. Until last, Dillon's representative, and Dillon himself spoke the meeting was a strike meeting and the sentiment was for picket lines Monday morning.

Hart introduced the first anti-strike sentiment when he said, "I'm not so much concerned with whether you men go on strike but with a new set-up all-around for American labor." He turned to future hopes all around for all American labor and made no mention of tomorrow's strike, although a copy of the contract of immediate demands they were to strike for was in the hands of every Buick auto worker at the meeting.

Before Hart finished, Dillon entered the meeting with three newspaper men. The crowd instantly booed the reporters and cried: "Throw them out!" Calls for an expulsion vote were denied by the chairman and Dillon spoke. The speech which followed was nicely calculated to destroy strike sentiment not only in Flint but for all auto workers fighting for their union against General Motors, and to hand the men instead a gold brick. It contained the following points:

Sensing the enthusiasm of the Buick workers for the Chevrolet strikers in Toledo, Dillon promptly took credit for the strike of Local 18354. He said: "We worked out a strategy for fighting General Motors weeks ago. The one place where they didn't think we would strike was Toledo. We fooled them. Now the Toledo strikers are putting up a magnificent fight."

He took full credit on himself for the Toledo strike but failed to mention that for thirty days before Toledo went out he had in his pocket a general automobile strike vote which he never used. He failed to mention that the strike in Toledo was called without asking Dillon. Or that Norwood came on the picket line without asking Dillon.

Point 2 was railroaded the government election through and telling the men "to go back to work."

Roland Sounds Fighting Note At Big Meeting

Resume 'Strike Truth' as Union Prepares to Spread Battle

BULLETIN As we go to press, word comes from Toledo that the Chevrolet strikers have rejected the company's "peace" proposals by an overwhelming majority. The election conducted by the U. S. Department of Labor, showed a vote of 1,251 against acceptance and only 605 for. The strikers are jubilant at their victory. The militancy of their ranks has been strengthened all along the line.

Special to New Militant TOLEDO, Ohio, May 7.—35,000 General Motors workers, on strike or affected by plant closures due to lack of necessary parts, marked time today as they awaited the outcome of an election to be held here tomorrow under the auspices of the Department of Labor to determine whether the Toledo Chevrolet strikers desired to accept the G.M.C. proposals and return to work or to again reject them and continue their strike for union recognition and a signed contract.

After a week of decisive and militant action in which the Toledo strikers tied up almost the entire Chevrolet division of General Motors and spread the strike to Cleveland, Atlanta and Norwood, O., Francis Dillon, national A. F. of L. organizer in the automobile industry, succeeded in diverting the strike from the picket-lines to the ballot-boxes and in enabling the walkout of 9,000 Buick workers in Flint who had previously voted to go on strike yesterday.

Dillon Accepts Scab Terms

The election was called for by Dillon following a meeting held here by a company union group last Saturday night at the Chamber of Commerce which was attended by some 1,000 men, most of them former employees of the Toledo Chevrolet, strike-breakers and foremen. This group, organized by the G.M.C. officials as a scab-herding agency, put forth a demand for an election on the precise terms accepted by Dillon.

Dillon, together with Edward McGrady, assistant secretary of labor, and Thomas Williamson, federal conciliator, jammed the decision to hold the vote down the throats of all but three of the eight strike-committee men after almost seven hours of continuous verbal pounding on these new and inexperienced union men.

Dillon followed this maneuver to curb the militant tendencies of the strike by addressing a meeting of the Buick local at Flint of the United Automobile Workers Federal Labor Union in which he so misrepresented the sentiments and fighting qualities of the Toledo workers that he discouraged the Flint workers from taking strike action pending the results of the Toledo vote. In his remarks, Dillon called the Toledo strike a "circus," definitely implied that the Toledo strikers were yellow, had called for the election and wanted to return to work, and told the Flint workers not to strike until the Toledo Chevrolet workers had proved they were "serious" and would not go back on the Flint workers.

5,000 Rally Support The answer to this infamous slander was given yesterday by the more than 1,000 Chevrolet workers on the mass picket-lines, the enthusiastic meeting of 1,400 union strikers last night who fiercely denounced the company's proposals, and a mass meeting of Toledo labor tonight which jammed over 5,000 workers into the Civic Auditorium in support of the Chevrolet strikers and for the continuance of the strike.

At the huge mass meeting tonight, at which Dillon was the principal speaker, he put forward a complete class collaboration point of view, one of conciliation with the employers in which he boasted of his impartiality, and spoke of the company's proposals which offered the workers even less than they had before the strike, as offering some concessions. Not one word did Dillon mention of spreading the strike to Flint and other places, in which course lies the only possibility of bringing General Motors to terms. He largely skirted the Toledo strike and the issues involved in it by a pompous oration in which he spoke of "industrial democracy," "justice," "equity" and many other fine-sounding but empty phrases. His only references to the vote tomorrow was in his last sentence, in which he was forced by the sentiment and temper of the workers to declare himself against the Company's proposals.

Strikers Reject Union Busting "Peace"

Spread Strike Is Task Ahead

Knudsen Won't Negotiate

Even should the union win by a substantial majority, William S. Knudsen, vice-president of General Motors, has stated that the company will not negotiate with the union committee or with any of the workers until they return to work. Nothing has been gained by the strikers through this vote, even should they win. Instead much valuable time has been lost.

Representatives of many auto locals from Flint, Cleveland, Detroit and other auto centers addressed the meeting. No positive indication was given by these delegates that they would take strike action in the event of a successful outcome of the vote for the union, although they pledged 100 percent moral support.

Roland Fights Capitulation

The outstanding and only significant remarks made through the entire long meeting were the straightforward and militant proposals of Jimmy Roland, progressive chairman of the Toledo strike committee, who directly urged the Flint representatives to call a strike in Flint immediately, called for the establishment of a national strike committee and a national conference of all General Motors locals in order to strike the entire company, and stated that the Toledo Chevrolet strikers would not return to work until a settlement had been made for all the other workers on strike in other cities.

Roland's points were greeted with loud and approving applause, as were all remarks which had the slightest color of militancy made by any of the speakers. Fred Schwake,

How the Tables Were Turned

One year ago Toledo Chevrolet officials were looking out of plant windows extremely irritated. They were watching Jimmy Roland marching around the factory gates with picket signs on his back. A one man picket line around a factory employing 2,500 men!

Brazen, insane, unprecedented—but successful. The Regional Labor Board decided in his favor. The company ignored the decision, but the one man picket line was too much. It might be contagious. So Jimmy was rehired.

Roland was no "slacker" in those days. His efficiency had won for him a company offer of foremanship. Union-conscious even then, he spurned a job that would make him a watch-dog over his fellow workers.

It was then the company was organizing one of the famous employee representation plans. Jimmy entered the company union to convert it into a real one. General Motors would not stand for that and Roland was fired. The one man picket line baffled them and he was rehired. But not in the production department. He would co-terminate the others. . . Good Lord, never!

They put Roland in the office, although he knew as much about clerical work as a Kentucky mountaineer.

Fate was against Mr. Gulliver, however, and the plant was nonetheless infected with the unholy virus of unionism. . .

If they only could have foreseen. . .

Two thousand men were marching around the factory gates. Suddenly they stopped. A well dressed gentleman wanted to enter the plant. The picket captains shook their heads. Orders are that no one goes in. "But, but," he stammered enraged, "I'm Mr. Knudsen, I own this plant!"

"Sorry, mister, orders are orders," they replied, "but you can see the chairman of the strike committee, maybe he'll help you."

And who should the chairman of this strike committee be? Jimmy Roland!!

business agent of the union, whose previous activities in the strike had been in line with the policies of Dillon, made a verbal about-face and declared: "In 1934, Toledo workers made history with the Battle of Chestnut Hill (Auto-Lite strike). We are prepared to make another such historic battle although we don't know what name it will go by until after it is won." He further stated that in a conference with the management, when told that the General Motors could not make an exception in its national policy for a group in Toledo, he had remarked, "We are going to make General Motors change its policy, starting in Toledo."

Workers Party Active

The Workers Party branch here has been extremely active in this strike, organizing the progressive forces to counter-act the weak-kneed and conciliatory policies of the A. F. of L. top officials and is putting forward a program calling for the spread of the strike, an immediate visit of a large delegation of Toledo strikers to Flint and other auto centers to appeal for strike action, a caravan of striking auto workers to Munich to rally the Munich workers and to prevent the

Monday morning. The meeting roused itself and howled: "We had an election last year! How about strike!" Dillon was in a tight spot, but he shouted back: "I thought I would have to come here tonight to ask you to strike tomorrow morning." The workers in the crowd listened to him again. "I didn't think Knudsen would accept a government election—but he did! We forced G.M. to accept a government election!"

The crowd was doubtful but he played up this Knudsen move to break the union as a great victory. Workers afterward said to your correspondent: "Why, that's what Knudsen wanted all along. It gives him a chance to say over again: 'This union doesn't represent all the strikers. Hell, they had one election—it's time to deal with the union! Why have another election in the middle of a strike? I think Dillon's been fooled by Knudsen, or is playing his game.'"

Point 3 in Dillon's speech was an insult to the Toledo strikers. He said: "We don't want to support those boys till we know if they mean business." He suggested that the Toledo strikers were just putting on a "circus," and he yelled: "Don't strike! Wait for the election! We don't want to support those boys till we know where they stand!" It was clear to all present that Dillon insinuated the Toledo strikers were yellow. By this time half the Buick workers had walked out of the hall in disgust.

The final point of the meeting, before a vote, was made by Hart. Some auto worker yelled: "If we go to work Monday, we have to work on scab transmissions!" Hart answered that a few days work on scab transmissions would do no harm. This angered several union men but Hart defended the making of scab transmissions by Buick men. Dillon himself took the floor and backed up Hart on making scab transmissions. The workers were angry but Hart prevented any worker from speaking in opposition by ordering them to sit down and appealing for peace. Finally the motion to delay the strike was put to vote in the half empty hall and without discussion railroaded through the meeting.

crash, those who were hit by bank foreclosures and live in the shadows of economic insecurity but know that wealth is available in abundance, turn once again to the political demagogue and harken to the glamor of a middle class panacea. And in Father Coughlin's political organization many of them undoubtedly expect to find a haven. To make it attractive for them he announces that its national council and its state committees will be composed of appointed representatives of what he calls various groups, such as labor, farmers, veterans, small manufacturers, youth and possibly certain specialized industries. Of course, this is the characteristic middle class approach of defining interests by business groups and avoiding any open acknowledgment of class lines.

Among other outstanding points in the Coughlin program it is worth noting that while national ownership—that is government ownership—is demanded for banking, credit and currency; power, light, oil and natural gas, together with the "God given" natural resources, emphasis is placed on his belief in private ownership of all other property and of upholding the right to private property; yet it is to be controlled for the public good. What he is speaking of in this connection is not just personal property such as homes, radios, cars or toothbrushes, but private property in the means of production. But it is this form of private property that Coughlin believes in that secures for the owners thereof the right to exploitation of labor. It secures for them the right of acquiring profits which also carries with it the power of the suppression of the laboring masses. In the same program Coughlin declares for the abolition of tax exempt bonds and for the broadening of the basis of taxation founded upon the ownership of wealth and the capacity to pay and together with that it declares for an alleviation of taxation. His program is quite vague and contradictory but this is precisely what allows him to play on the feelings and the emotions of all classes.

Coughlin Explains His System
The political padre explains the system that he is aiming for as follows: "I believe that the economic system of tomorrow will not be that type of socialism which desires to nationalize not only natural resources, but also all productive industry. Nor will it be capitalism wedded to the theory of private financialism and production for a profit. It will be a new system based on the belief that wealth is not money, but that wealth is created by the union of capital and labor; and that this

Makes Bid For Farmers, Workers

Both Coughlin and Long are now making special efforts to obtain farmer and labor support for their movements. William Collins came to Coughlin's Michigan state convention, officially delegated by the A. F. of L. Executive Council together with Edward Kennedy, Secretary of the National Farmers' Union from Chicago. Among the members of Congress attending were William Lemke of North Dakota, co-author of the Lemke-Frazier farm mortgage bill and William P. Connery Jr. of Massachusetts who is co-author of the Connery-Black 30-hour week bill and the Wagner-Connery trades disputes bill in addition to being Chairman of the House Committee of Labor.

This set-up fits in well with the Coughlin scheme of labor organization. In his program the right of labor to organize in unions is proclaimed and it is insisted that it is the duty of the government to protect these organizations against the vested interests of wealth. But when broadcasting, Coughlin adds that strikes and lockouts are absolutely unnecessary, indicating that the "protection" he demands means a form of actual state control, including compulsory arbitration. Since his Michigan state convention, Coughlin has promised that his next step will be the organization of the automobile workers of the state. Will they respond to his efforts? No doubt many of them are taken in by his high-pressure demagoguery; but it is not likely that they should desire any more government "protection" for their unions after last year's sell-out experience. If the present strike action of the Toledo Chevrolet workers is an indication of the mood of the other automobile workers they can be expected to decline that kind of unionism.

Real Appeal is to Petty Bourgeoisie

Otherwise the appeal of Father Coughlin, the same as the appeal of Huey Long, is addressed essentially to the lower middle class, to the small businessmen, the farmers and the petty bosses. A good many of those among them who in former times managed to save up for a rainy day and since saw the bank

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LORE

When as well informed and cautious an observer of the labor scene as Louis Stark of the New York Times writes that "Organization of a bloc of industrial unions into a separate national labor federation . . . was regarded as an eventual possibility in labor circles today," we will do well to lend a second thought. It has been obvious for some time that the industrial union issue was coming to a head and that the Federation faced a major crisis in its solution. The shelving of the campaign in steel, the war against the brewery workers, the splitting up of the metal miners' ranks and the increasing drive against the industrial structure of the Federal Labor Unions was bound to create deep seated revolt.

Progressive Lewis . . .

The question of another labor Federation is a serious one. Does a real basis exist for such a move? Louis Stark sees the initiative for its formation coming from John L. Lewis of the Mine Workers in conjunction with the unions of metal miners, brewery workers, clothing and printing tradesmen. Such a phalanx might, he believes, swing the new mass unions of aluminum, rubber and auto workers into line behind it.

A realistic examination of the facts lends little hope that such a development lies close ahead. No progressive is going to get unduly excited about the prospect of an industrial Federation of Labor headed by Lewis and Berry, as an improvement over Green and Woll as leaders of a craft formation. Nor are the various unions mentioned, with the possible exception of the metal miners and the brewery workers, anxious to leave the Federation ranks. The astute Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers has labored too hard and too long to crash into the Federation. The influence of the A. F. of L. has made him a key figure in the NRA machinery and the risk of breaking with the craft moguls would be too great. Dubinsky of the Ladies Garment Workers cannot be distinguished from any other member of the Executive Council. At the last convention of the A. F.

of L. he voted his 200,000 members in favor of the infamous motion which is smashing the Brewery Workers Union, Berry of the Printing Pressmen and Howard of the Typographical Union may be in favor of industrial unionism for the other fellow but no such silly proposals ever get to first base in their own international conventions. . . .

Fireworks . . .

There is some fire behind all the smoke however. May it be the well known ambitions of John L. Lewis which are involved here? For a number of years it has been rumored that Lewis wants to sit in the seat which Bill Green warms so gracefully at the present time. At each Federation convention it has been denied by the Mine Workers chief. But John L. protests too much to be convincing. And when the 1935 convention opens its sessions at Atlantic City in October we may see fireworks and an open rupture in the ranks of the officialdom. For which radicals will be grateful. "When thieves fall out. . ."

Lumber . . .

Some weeks ago we reported that the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners had been given jurisdiction over the 130 newly organized locals of loggers and timber workers. The suggestion was made that at least part of the motive for such action was the need to take care of growing strike sentiment in the north-west camps.

Developments of the past few days confirm this view. May 6 had been set as the day for a general strike. Longshoremen had promised their support. On the day before the walkout Abe Muir, vice-president of the Carpenters stated that a general strike was unlikely and that "I expect to see a number of closed mills reopen on Monday." The closed mills were those shut down by advance strike action of the workers. Latest news indicates that the strike movement is spreading however, and that the sabotage of the Carpenters' officialdom may not be able to check its development. Over 12,000 are reported as I write. A complete shutdown will involve about 75,000 men.

S.Y.L. Regional Confab Held In Youngstown

By M. SLAVIN

YOUNGSTOWN, April 28.—The Regional Conference of the S.Y.L. held here on April 27 and 28 bore witness to comrade Gould's statement that the S.Y.L. is fast becoming a mass youth organization.

Delegates from Akron, New Castle, Columbus and Youngstown, reported on the progress made, the number of members gained since the National Convention of the S.Y.L., and the work conducted among the young workers and students. State College, a newly organized branch, reported that its S.Y.L. led the Students Strike on April 12, numbering some 1,500 students with comrade Shachtman speaking at the mass meeting. The Columbus Branch participated in the strike at Ohio State University where about 1,000 students struck against war and fascism.

The conference opened with the report of Nathan Gould, National Secretary, on the growth of the organization and its achievements since the Convention. He pointed out that the S.Y.L. increased its membership 144%, organized new branches, established a functioning N. C. which issued and is issuing bulletins and instructions to the local branches regularly, and initiated the call for an international youth conference of all youth sections moving towards a new youth international, to be held in Paris sometime in December.

The District report followed. M. Slavin stated that two new branches had been established (Columbus and State College), new members gained, among whom are young steel workers, and showed that good opportunities exist to build branches in New Castle and Akron in the immediate future. He emphasized that help should be given to Toledo and Cleveland where W.P. branches exist, but no youth work is being carried on as yet. The future work in the district was to consist of consolidating the branches, organizing new ones and establishing a functioning district committee.

A report by the Party representative, George Papcun, was next on the agenda. Comrade Papcun stressed the fact that the S.Y.L. should serve as a recruiting ground for the W.P., that more attention be paid by Party members to the S.Y.L. and that comrades who are members of both organizations should not become too involved in Party work at the expense of S.Y.L. activity.

The student report, given by comrade Brody, finished the business of the conference. In the report it was pointed out that since the S.Y.L. contains both workers and students attempts should be made to coordinate the activities of both sections.

The conference endorsed the N. C.'s stand opposing separate student organizations, and unanimously supported the slogan "Abolish the R.O.T.C." The following were elected to the District Committee: M. Ernst of State College, Watson of Columbus, Hawley of New Castle, A. Polak of Akron, London and Slavin of Youngstown.

The conference adjourned with the singing of the "International."

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

Imperial Jubilee . . .

If one can overcome the natural feeling of nausea on reading the press accounts of the celebration of twenty-five years of parasitism of King George, there are valuable political lessons to be learned from such circuses. The British monarchy is part of that vast paraphernalia of English imperialism for hypnotizing the working class. Without such hypnotism, the proletariat would see through their own eyes and not through those provided for them by the capitalist ruling class. The creation of illusions is the function of a vast apparatus supported by the bourgeoisie: the bourgeois press, the schools, the church, the radio—and the monarchy. With the aid of these weapons British imperialism gives the impression to the worker that he is part of a common civilization, that he has a common fatherland, that there are higher things in life than material class interests and the class struggle. By means, further, of bourgeois democracy completely controlled and manipulated by the rulers, the worker is hypnotized into believing that he actually has a share in willing his own slavery and exploitation.

Role of Monarchy . . .

The bourgeoisie foster carefully the illusion that the King is a mere figurehead, that he reigns but does not rule. So long as the proletariat remains acquiescent to bourgeois rule, so long as there is no threat to the power of the capitalist class, the monarchy remains seemingly a mere feudal tradition, quite harmless within the framework of bourgeois democracy. In reality the ruling class is far-sighted and in conducting the defense of its power against the possible attacks of the working class the capitalists resort to military strategy: they build in advance second and third line trenches to which to retreat in case the first line is taken. Thus if the workers begin to see through the heavy veils cast over reality by the propagandists of wage slavery, if they begin to utilize bourgeois democracy to change the system, then there is always the House of Lords upon which to fall back. If that is not enough, then there is finally the monarchy which can be made in the "national emergency" to assume, by the "divine right of capitalism," the prerogatives of outright, reactionary dictatorship. Under capitalism, in short, the King exists as a last resort for the defeat of the proletarian revolution. It is for that reason, to have a social "stabilizer," that the tradition of monarchy is maintained. Thus every so often the monarchical shield is exposed to published view, it is refurbished and polished so as to perform resolutely its hypnotic function. But behind this shield can be gleefully discerned the cold and calculating cruelty of the bourgeoisie!

Labor Party . . .

It is not only the direct instruments of capitalist power that serve to create illusions among the workers. It is also the reformist labor leaders who foster the viciously false idea that the King stands not for the ruling class but for the nation. Instead of teaching that the King may at the proper time become all the elements of state force and coercion epitomized and summed up, MacDonald and those of his ilk still in the Labor Party offer their allegiance to the King as the representative (chosen by whom?) of the "entire nation." The belly-crawling sycophancy of these reformist betrayers can arouse only the utmost disgust and loathing of the working class. The bourgeoisie will not let this occasion, a celebration of their preservation as a ruling class in Europe, pass without taking full advantage of the "wave of patriotism" evoked in the middle classes to force a general election on the patriotism and rearmament issues. The Jubilee will be utilized to prepare for war. Part of the preparation for war is the establishment of a conservative government. Recent political signs in England have pointed to the "danger" of a new labor government coming into power in the next general election. With the help of MacDonald the bourgeoisie will do everything in their power to prevent such a "catastrophe." The capitalists may not fear the present labor leaders, but they know that back of these false leaders stand the working masses, demanding decisive steps towards socialism. Let the masses once learn to the end the lesson that reformism is nothing but a form of betrayal, and they will quickly change their leaders for revolutionists who can lead them to victory and who can show them how to defeat fascism that grows more and more as a threat to the workers.

The 'American Approach'

By A. J. MUSTE

The term "American Approach" has been often used but seldom carefully analyzed. When a phrase is thus used, the inevitable result is that different people attach different meanings to it. In raising a discussion as to the real meaning of the term in a recent article (Modern Monthly, March 1935, "For An American Revolutionary Approach"), Comrade Budenz has rendered a service. He states that his thoughts are set down "for the consideration of honest-thinking radicals." A further discussion of them here is consequently in order.

The Workers Party of the U. S. has recognized in the most authoritative way open to it the importance of a realistic approach to the revolutionary task of overthrowing capitalism in the U. S.—namely, by setting it down in the Declaration of Principles adopted by the Party at its founding convention. According to that Declaration the primary task of the Party and of the American working class is "the defeat of the enemy at home—the overthrow of the capitalist government of the U. S." In carrying out that task the Party is pledged to "use the revolutionary potentialities of American tradition and history" and to adapt its strategy and tactics to the concrete situation and the line-up of class forces in the U. S.

Theory and Practice

Some of those who have advocated of the "American approach" have contended it, either openly or by inference, to the Marxian and Leninist approach. According to them you have to take one or the other; you cannot have both. This is not the viewpoint of the W. P. U. S. The very same section of the Declaration of Principles to which I have just referred states that "The W. P. U. S. is founded on the great principles of revolutionary theory and practice stated by Marx and Lenin and tested by the experience of the class struggle on an international scale, above all in the Russian Revolution of 1917." It is precisely these principles that we propose to apply in a fearless, realistic fashion to the American scene.

In proposing to do that we are certainly not going counter to Marx and Lenin. Quite the contrary. Neither one of them regarded their theory as a "dogma to be learned by heart and repeated mechanically." Both emphasized the importance of taking into account the special historical, cultural, political, economic, technological factors in different countries.

The "American approach" does not in and of itself give us a set of basic revolutionary principles. The term itself suggests that we approach the American scene with certain principles which we want to make effective there. We must make it clear, then, what these principles are. Are they the principles of Marx and Lenin—the conceptions of the class struggle, of the state as the executive committee of the ruling class, of the nature of capitalist exploitation of the workers, of the role of the working class in modern society, of the revolutionary method, the character of the workers' state, etc. set forth in our Declaration of Principles—or is another set of principles being advanced? If the latter, then we must have a clear statement of what the principles are, before any talk of applying them in the U. S. can mean anything.

Lenin's Realistic Approach
If we are speaking of a realistic application of Marxist-Leninist fundamentals to American conditions, then it is correct to speak not only of an American, but of a French, British, Chinese, etc. approach, i. e., of taking into account the special conditions with which the revolutionary movement is confronted in each country. And it is then important at this point to observe that it was Lenin who gave the world the supreme example to date of this fearless, realistic, yet experimental, reckoning with the special conditions in a given country at a given historical moment—which is not to imply, as we shall have occasion to point out later, that Lenin had a nationalistic outlook or philosophy.

There runs through the article of Comrade Budenz a "contempt for theory" expressed in vigorous and picturesque language. "Radical parrot-talk" of the "other-worldly breathers," "the futile pyrotechnics of other-worldly theoreticians," and "pontifical theology which is paralyzing effective radical action," are exoriated. Precisely because some very vigorous head-thumping needs to be done, it is to be regretted that by the manner in which these things are said and by what is left unsaid in the article in question, the way is left open for very serious misunderstanding.

How Advise the Youth?
Lack of revolutionary theory in the swiftly changing, complex modern world is exactly the same as want of a compass in mid-ocean. Shall we advise our young workers and students not to study the history of class struggles and the theory which is based upon an analysis of that history? Tell them that this is only a waste of time? Fortunately, they would not take the advice if we did give it. The alive and intelligent ones among them are eager to learn more of revolutionary theory. I am told that one of the ablest of the young workers in the former C.P.L.A. who would not and could not join the Communist Party, nevertheless for months secretly took every leaflet and statement that he drafted to a C. P. acquaintance to make sure that it was "correct from a Marxian viewpoint." That was not an unsound instinct by any means! Lenin who has the most colossal practical achievements in working-class history to his credit was constantly and profoundly occupied with theory. Pragmatically and to say the least, it did not seem to affect adversely his practical efficiency as a revolutionist!

There is even place for a certain division of labor in the revolutionary movement. The man who makes a contribution to theory or history, who can teach young workers, who writes a revolutionary drama or battle-song, is not necessarily to be read out of the Party because he never organized any steel workers or "educated" a seafarer on a picket line, any more than a picket captain who carries out the tasks assigned him by the Party is disqualified for membership because he cannot carry on a disputation about Bonapartism or the permanent revolution with one of the Party intellectuals.

The "Lunatic" Fringe

There are poets, various brands of pseudo-theoreticians, who merit the severest condemnation of responsible revolutionists. One consists of those who participate in the endless gab-fests in corridors and cafeterias which are supposed to be profound theoretical discussions; only they are carried on by comrades who do not know theories, only words and phrases—discussions which will never contribute anything to revolutionary theory, any more than church sewing-circle talk-speeches ever contributed to theology or certain Greenwich Village gatherings ever added anything to the science of biology or to literary criticism. Theory is no substitute for action and hum-drum practical work; much less is talk such a substitute. We agree with comrades in the Party, and with Marx, Engels, and Lenin in condemnation of those who use Marxian writings as a ritual or incantation, those who have a pat, abstract, mechanical formula from the books to apply to every situation, and who led Marx to exclaim that he was not a Marxist. We can share also the contempt of some of our comrades for those who regard themselves as fully qualified to pontificate on the most complex and fundamental problems of the working class movement on the other side of the globe though they have never shown any capacity to contribute anything to the solution of the simplest problem under their own noses. Most eagerly do we join in putting in his place the upstart who has read a few books and taken a few courses and who regards it as his prerogative to look down from Olympian heights upon workers who have performed colossal tasks in the actual class struggle.

"Activists" who encounter this species should not jump to the conclusion, however, that "theory is dangerous." It is a case of youth or glands or something like that. Responsible "theoreticians" and responsible "activists" are not enemies, not thin-skinned individuals who cannot stand criticism; they are comrades who have much to teach each other.

The American Pragmatism

One other point may be touched in this connection. Americans, we are told, are not interested in theory. They are pragmatists, experimental; they want action. Remembering that there are exceptions to all rules, and a good many to some, it seems to me that in the main this point is a valid one. We have already pointed out that this does not at all mean that the Party can dispense with theory or afford to despise it. Precisely because we are dealing with a working class which certainly to date has not acquired a working class philosophy or "world-view," which is disposed to work by rule of thumb, try first this and then that way out, hail Roosevelt today, Long or Coughlin tomorrow—in a period when the pace of development is exceedingly swift and the choice between Fascism and the working class revolution may have to be faced very soon—the Party must have a clear conception of the forces at work and the basic trends, must not dissipate its energies and lose the confidence of the masses by falling prey to nostrums which will cure no ills and from which the masses will presently turn away in disgust. Must not get bottled up in a blind alley. The Party must be sure of itself, able to endure opposition, even apparent isolation from the masses, not bargaining away for an easy and brief popularity, its chance to lead in the crisis that is certain to come. Lenin's party too seemed hopelessly weak, poor, isolated from the stream of events as the year 1917 opened. It would actually have been worthless but for its discipline, its grounding in theory, its militant use of theory in action. Because it did not try to win the masses by any cheap device, it actually won the masses as the objective situation developed to the crisis point.

Assimilating "Activists"

One thing that we might expect from the American emphasis on action and experimentation is a comparatively large number of "activists" in the Party and in the radical movement generally. The Party must welcome them, assimilate them, learn how to utilize their qualities to the utmost, make them feel that the Party is the avenue for the expression of their militant energies, educate them or it will simply be subjecting itself to a serious, if not fatal, handicap. Thousands of these militants have never been able to accept S. P. parliamentarism. They have tried the C. P. in many cases and given it up. Thousands more who have never been in any working class party or group are coming along in the new unions. From the picket lines we must recruit the most intelligent young workers into the ranks of the Party. We must win, keep and develop inspiring leaders of mass struggles. They are hard to find and to replace if lost.

As a natural outcome of the country's pioneer experience and tradition, movements of revolt in the U. S. and their leaders have had a strongly anarchistic tinge. Comrade Budenz correctly calls attention to this fact in his article. It is not without significance that the heroes he mentions are Jefferson, John Brown, Thoreau, Wendell Phillips, and that he writes with elevation of being "free from the leading strings of any radical Mother Church." This impatience of restraint and leaning to direct action is "American." (Both reactionary American employers and conservative American trade unionists exhibit the tendency in strikes.)

The Fallacy of Individualism

Insofar as this tradition of "freedom" makes for resistance on the part of American workers to bureaucracy in the economic or political movement and to mechanical domination of the Party by a bureaucratic International, it is a useful and precious thing. The trouble with the individualist anarchist is that his revolt does not express itself in an organized way. It takes the form of individual protest, "conscientious objection," "civil disobedience," putting oneself on record, withdrawal from society as in Thoreau's case, a dramatic demonstration in John Brown's case, etc. But this is for the most part futile, and side by side with it are found, consequently, the most extreme regimentation and conformity. Witness the auto cracy in the trade unions. And nowhere can one find people with greater ability to have their minds changed for them instantly and painlessly, to declare that black is white and vice versa at the behest of the boss, than in the American section of the Third International.

Thus it is essential for these mass workers and leaders to whom we have referred as important elements for the Party, to learn in turn the indispensable role of a disciplined, revolutionary party in the struggle of the working class today and in its final emancipation. They must learn to work in an organized way and to express their dissent, which often may be well founded, in an organized way, within the Party. If they do not learn to work under the discipline or at least influence of the Party, they are either condemned to futility in the end, or are drawn into the ranks of the service of the trade union bureaucrats (something that has happened with plenty of them in the American movement) or worse still go into the service of capitalists or even Fascists—as happened with a number of prominent Italian syndicalists, e. g.

The Vanguard

Where is there today a mass movement of workers, except the trade union movement which under its present collaborationist leadership is certainly not to be regarded as a model to be copied, or where is there a flourishing progressive movement in the unions themselves, except where there is some political party or group to give continuity, perspective and drive? The Party must express itself in mass organizations and mass work; but equally does the mass work depend for its very life upon the organized, conscious, disciplined, revolutionary vanguard.

It may not be amiss to follow these comments on anarchism through a step further. Anarchism is no solution for the working class today. The job is to overthrow the highly organized capitalist state and to construct a highly organized socialist society. For either the destructive or the constructive side of the task anarchism is helpless. Organization, not anarchy, is required. Let our comrades ponder deeply the brilliant and devastating comment of Trotsky after pointing out that Prince Kropotkin, anarchist leader, opposed the revolution and became a Russian patriot in 1917: "The principles of liberalism can have a real existence only in conjunction with a police system. Anarchism is an attempt to cleanse liberalism of the police. But just as pure oxygen is impossible to breathe, so liberalism without the police-principle means the death of society. Being a shadow caricature of liberalism, anarchism as a whole has shared its fate.—Like every sect which founds its teaching not upon the actual development of human society, but upon the reduction to absurdity of one of its features, anarchism explodes like a soap-bubble at that moment when the social contradictions arrive at the point of war or revolution."

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

SAMUEL Z. N. Y.—
Question: Do you not think that here in the U. S. the further logical development of the class struggle (strikes, etc.) will lead to a spontaneous overthrow of capitalism, so that we should concentrate our entire efforts in the economic field (trade union, unemployed organizations, etc.)?

Answer: This question raises the entire problem of "spontaneity of the masses," which is by no means new to the revolutionary movement. Thirty-three years ago Lenin, in his pamphlet "What Is To Be Done," polemized against the advocates of "spontaneity," and we can think of no better argument against this position than to quote from his writings of that time: "... All those who talk about 'exaggerating the importance of ideology,' the conscious elements, etc., imagine that the pure and simple labor movement can work out an independent ideology for itself, if only the workers 'take their fate out of the hands of the leaders.' But in this they are profoundly mistaken. To supplement what has been said ... we shall quote the following profoundly true and important utterances by Karl Kautsky: ...

"Many ... believe that Marx asserted that economic development and the class struggle create, not only the conditions for Socialist production, but also, and directly, the CONSCIOUSNESS (K. K.'s italics) of its necessity. ... In this connection Socialist consciousness is represented as a necessary and direct result of the proletarian class struggle. But this is absolutely untrue. Of course, Socialism, as a theory, has its roots in modern economic relationships, in the same way as the class struggle of the proletariat has, and in the same way as the latter emerges from the struggle against the capitalist-created poverty and misery of the masses. But Socialism and the class struggle arise side by side and not one out of the other; each arises out of different premises. Modern Socialist consciousness can arise only on the basis of profound scientific knowledge. Indeed, modern economic science is as much a condition for Socialist production as, say, modern technology, and the proletariat can create neither the one nor the other, no matter how much it may desire to do so; both arise out of the modern social process. 'The vehicles of science are not the proletariat, but the BOURGEOIS INTELLIGENTSIA (K. K.'s italics). It was out of the hands of members of this stratum that modern Socialism originated, and it was they who communicated it to the more intellectually developed proletarians who, in their turn, introduced it into the proletarian class struggle where conditions allow that to be done. Thus, Socialist consciousness is something introduced into the proletarian class struggle from without (von Aussen hineingebracht), and not something that arose within it spontaneously (unwuchsig). ...

"Since there can be no talk of an independent ideology being developed by the masses of the workers in the process of their movement then the only choice is: Either bourgeois, or Socialist ideology. There is no middle course (for humanity has not created a 'third' ideology, and moreover, in a society torn by class antagonisms there can never be a non-class or above-class ideology). Hence, to belittle Socialist ideology in any way, to deviate from it in the slightest degree means strengthening bourgeois ideology. There is a lot of talk about spontaneity, but the spontaneous development of the labor movement leads to its becoming subordinated to bourgeois ideology. ...

How far can the labor movement develop without the introduction of Marxian consciousness? To this Lenin answered "... The history of all countries shows that the working class, exclusively by its own efforts, is able to develop only trade union consciousness, i. e. it may itself realize the necessity for combining in unions, to fight against the employers and to strive to compel the government to pass necessary labour legislation, etc." (All emphasis in above quotations are in the original.)

Lack of space, which has required that we extract only important parts from Lenin's work, does not permit us to further develop this very important subject. However, let it suffice for the moment to point out that about 15 years ago the Italian proletariat was brought, by the logic of the class struggle, to an actual seizure of the factories, but, because there was no Marxian consciousness, i. e., a strong revolutionary party did not exist, the workers did not know what to do and Mussolini now sits in the saddle.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Comrade Editor:
We would like the use of your paper to express our thanks to those of your readers who made possible our liberation from a state prison sentence of two to four years; and compelled a reversal of the conviction in Judge Corrigan's court. The loyal support of all progressive trade unions and all of the political parties and groups in N. Y. resulted in our present freedom.

You probably remember that we were among the victims of the hotel strike of Jan.-Feb. 1934. The strike, although lost, succeeded in closing the restaurants in midtown and downtown hotels, and the heavy financial loss suffered by the hotels brought a demand for reprisals against the unions and we were the victims who went to state prison.

From prison we wrote the Provisional Committee for Non-Partisan Labor Defense and asked them to raise the question of an appeal from the sentence and a fight for our freedom. The Non-Partisan Labor Defense raised the question of forming the Robins-Gras Defense Committee with every political party and grouping in N. Y. and all responded to the appeal. That is, all except the Communist Party. The Hotel and Restaurant Branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers, which fell under leadership of Communist Party "leaders," wrote us in prison that they had tried their best for us but could not aid with anything but their solidarity. The membership of the union forced a change of policy and they finally joined the Robins-Gras Defense Committee.

The appeal was successful in the Appellate Division, the judges were unanimous in setting aside the verdict, and criticized the conduct of the trial judge in denying us a fair trial. We were freed from prison a week later.

This favorable result was due to the loyal working-class support our committee received and the really splendid legal work of Abraham

May 7, 1935
Abramowitz of the Socialist Lawyers Association, and Irving Glickhouse, who volunteered their legal services without charge.

Since our release we not only have to face the blacklist of the Hotel and Restaurant owners, but the leadership of the union co-operate (as good Communist Party leaders) in keeping us out of work and with the unemployed. In the four months since we are out of jail neither of us has worked on a union job more than one and a half weeks. Gras has been given six days' work, and Robins was given a "steady" job where he worked for a week and a half and closed out at the time he had to go to court for retrial.

We would like to thank the Workers Party for its invaluable aid.

Fraturnally,
H. ROBINS

Vol. 1 SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1935 No. 21

Shades of 1914

Europe's laboring masses stand in danger of a new holocaust that promises to dwarf the world war of 1914-1918. Turbulent war preparations are going on behind the smoke-screen of propaganda; the counter-part, in 1935, of the wave of social-chauvinism which ushered in the imperialist slaughter of 1914.

Since the armistice, some hundred and thirty odd diplomatic conferences have been held—each having as its aim the reduction of armaments and the establishment of "greater guarantees of peace." The net result of this diplomatic merry-go-round: the greatest war tension since July 1914, the biggest peacetime armament budgets the world has yet seen.

At Genoa and Locarno, some credibility could still be given to the illusion of a "peaceful" settlement of capitalist conflicts. Under the impact of long years of the economic crisis and the political upheavals it has engendered, the whole conference system has collapsed. The latest meetings of the statesmen, at Stresa and at Geneva, proved that it is no longer possible to uphold the status quo established by the Versailles Treaty without resorting to direct and open warfare.

While France is meeting Hitler's challenge man for man and gun for gun, while England jockeys for position with its traditional hypocrisy—the masses in every country remain imbued with the strongest sentiments for peace. It is this most important factor that creates the sharpest discord in the martial concert of the imperialist war mongers.

For the working masses of Europe, the Soviet Union has ever been identified with the cause of peace. For revolutionists it has been axiomatic that the peace efforts of the workers' fatherland can be assured of success only when accompanied by the most resolute struggle for the overthrow of the capitalist governments in other countries. The Stalinist diplomats, pursuing a National-Bolshevik policy, have been finally forced to restrict the struggle for peace to a military pact with French imperialism. This Franco-Soviet pact, signed last week, the leaders of the Communist International now treacherously counter-poses to revolutionary struggle. Nothing can be more reassuring to the worried war-mongers in the Quai D'Orsay, in Downing Street and in every other foreign office.

"Mobilization of public opinion, so that war, if it comes, will be accepted with patriotic resignation, if not with enthusiasm," writes the sharp-witted correspondent of the New York Sun optimistically, "is now practically complete throughout Europe. The last organized propaganda agency against war—the Communist party—has been silenced on orders from Moscow. . . . Nothing is left of the old dread that war would be followed in most of Europe by popular revolt." (Mr. William Bird in the New York Sun, April 14.)

In these all too clear words, a representative of the bourgeois press has summed up the aspirations of the capitalist governments; the fulfillment of which they await with greater satisfaction and more certainty each succeeding day. It cannot help but alarm every honest revolutionist to the seriousness of the situation. For, while the "mobilization of public opinion" may not be as complete as the Sun's correspondent believes, it is proceeding apace, with the direct aid of the social democratic and Stalinist parties.

A declaration of ten West European Communist parties completely falls in line with the Franco-Soviet pact, and stresses throughout only the danger of war from Hitler's Germany. L'Humanite, central organ of the Communist Party of France editorially urges support of the Franco-Soviet pact against the Third Reich, dressing it up as the 1935 model of the Black Sea Rebellion of 1919! But even more characteristic of this revolting turn from revolutionary struggle against the enemy at home to capitulation before the war plans of the Versailles robbers is the scandalous behavior of the French "United Front" in the Chamber of Deputies. We quote from the official record of March 15:

"M. LEON BLUM: . . . I am convinced, gentlemen, and I say it weighing my words, that in replying to aggression by Hitlerite Germany, all the workers of this country will rise to a man together with all other Frenchmen (Applause from the extreme left and the left, interruptions from the right)."

"I say, gentlemen, all the workers, without having received in this respect any mandate from my Communist comrades who will, no doubt, explain their own stand from the rostrum (Interruptions)."

One expects the social democrat, Leon Blum, to repeat his social-patriotic performance of 1914. But he claims to speak for the Communists as well, and he challenges them to refute him. Here is how Maurice Thorez, leader of the French Communist Party, born in the struggle against social-patriotism, "refutes" Blum, the social-patriot.

"M. MAURICE THOREZ: . . . One can only express one's indignation against the counter-revolutionary Trotskyists and other renegades from Communism who present the Franco-Soviet rapprochement as a bloc which may lead to war, while it is, under the present circumstances, an element of peace, a barrier against those imperialist states inclined to resort to force in order to proceed to a revision of the Versailles Treaty (Applause from the extreme Communist left)."

Instead of attacking Blum's outright stand for national defense, the Stalinist leader seizes the opportunity of attacking before the parliamentarians of bourgeois France, those who stand foremost in the struggle against social-patriotism. How little removed is such miserable behavior from the lynch incitements of the yellow socialists against the bold proponents of that uncompromising struggle which was headed by Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg in 1914?

It must be said without any mincing of words: the Stalinist and Socialist leaders are playing right into the hands of the war mongers! Under the cloak of a spurious defense of the Soviet Union, they are participating actively in a "mobilization of public opinion" that can serve no other interests than those of the capitalist governments.

The real defense of the Soviet Union, today as in 1917, can be achieved in only one way: in the revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of the imperialist governments.

The workers of the world cannot trust Franco-Soviet or Soviet-American pacts as long as at the helm of the government in France, or the United States, stand imperialist robbers who are ready at any moment to betray the confidence of their Soviet allies. The best defense of the workers' fatherland today is to spread far and wide among the toiling masses, counter-acting the virus of Social Democratic and Stalinist chauvinism, Liebknecht's old slogan: The Enemy Is In Your Own Country!

"The Shrine of the Little Flower"

War and the Franco-Soviet Pact

is in our own country! We reject the treacherous formula of "peaceful" imperialists on the one side and "aggressors" on the other. No truce in the class struggle, no moderation of the class struggle for a single day! The answer to imperialist war is the workers' revolution!

But what about the defense of the Soviet Union? cry the venal lackeys of the Soviet foreign office who will turn to social patriots overnight. We answer: An imperialist power will never "defend" the Soviet Union; its agreement to do so is treacherous through and through; in the logic of the class struggle it cannot be otherwise. The only way for the workers in a capitalist country to defend the Soviet Union is to defend themselves against the imperialists at home.

That means to fight the war, to struggle from the first day to overthrow the capitalists and establish a revolutionary workers' government which would make a loyal ally with the Soviet Union and, together with it, carry on the war against the capitalist nations. Woe to the French and American workers, woe to the labor movement of the whole world, if these simple precepts of Leninism are forgotten.

Can the Second International and the Comintern be depended on to arm and prepare the workers for this irreconcilable attitude toward their own imperialists in a war involving the Soviet Union? By no means.

The social patriotic position of the Social Democrats in the "democratic" countries is predetermined. They are already taking responsibility for the government in one "democratic" capitalist country after another. The social democrats of all countries will be ready to shoulder arms, or more correctly, to call the workers to shoulder arms, the moment the capitalist "Fatherland" is "attacked."

The policy of Soviet diplomacy, which has long since substituted a reliance on pacts with capitalist powers for the line of proletarian internationalism, and the servile acquiescence of the Comintern in this rotten policy, lead straight to the same conclusion.

The trumpet of uncritical approval with which the journalists of the Stalinist press greet the military agreement between the Soviet Union and capitalist France and their attempt, with utter cynicism, to pass it off as a revolutionary victory, sound the warning again in clearer, louder tones.

On the basis of the reactionary theory of "socialism in one country" and under the slogan of "Defend the Soviet Union" the Stalinists are preparing a new social patriotic betrayal.

The organization of the revolutionary struggle against the coming war depends entirely on the success of the movement to liberate the proletarian vanguard from the influence of Stalinism as well as Social Democracy.

The slightest taint of nationalism is fatal in the face of war. Those who, for any reason whatever, dally with the idea of a truce with the class enemy at home are certain to land in the camp of the jingoes when the real test comes. Without a thorough-going internationalist outlook a consistent opposition to imperialist war is impossible. And the first duty of the true internationalists is to unfurl their banner and organize their forces on an international scale, however few their numbers may be at the beginning. These are the great lessons of experience written in blood and fire in the last imperialist world war.

Those who have drawn the conclusions from the actual state of affairs in the international labor movement have proclaimed the necessity of a new International, as Lenin did in 1914. Swimming against the current, against unprecedented difficulties and complexities, against slander and poverty of resources—in spite of all the advocates of the Fourth International increase in strength and numbers. They, and they alone, are the real inheritors of the great tradition of Liebknecht and Lenin. They are the heralds of the revolutionary struggle against war precisely because they are the carriers of the only idea which can arm the workers for this struggle. Speed the day when the revolutionary internationalists of all countries will establish firmer relations among themselves and proceed with practical, concrete steps toward the actual formation of the Fourth International!

May First Sees United Front in Many Cities

Chicago

CHICAGO, May 1.—Several thousand workers braved the cold and the rain to celebrate May Day in a demonstration called by the Chicago Labor May Day Conference. The line of march stretching for a distance of four city blocks, marched a distance of a mile and a half from the city's West Side to Union Park, the scene of the Haymarket riot.

Headed by the Socialist red guard, carrying ten large red flags, the files included such organizations as the Socialist Party, the Cap Makers Union, the Leathergoods Workers Union, the Workers Party, the Spartacus Youth League, the Young Peoples Socialist League, the Workmen's Circle, the Workers Committee on Unemployment and many others.

The parade presented a colorful picture of flags, banners and slogans. The Workers Party file was headed by a large red banner with the white felt letters inscribed: Workers Party of the United States, Local Chicago. The Party and the Spartacus Youth League carried a number of posters containing the slogans of the W.P.

In the park an open air mass meeting was held in spite of a driving rain. Speakers for the trade union movement, the unemployed and the political parties spoke. Greetings were given by Spartacus Youth League, through its representative Al Garber. The Workers Party was represented on the speakers stand by Albert Grotzer, who proclaimed the need for the new revolutionary international, the 4th International.

Kansas City

By JEFFERSON RALL

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 1.—In the most imposing demonstration of labor solidarity seen here in recent times, more than 600 workers gathered at Crusaders Temple, under the auspices of the Kansas City Group Conference, to celebrate May Day and to express their determined opposition to the war plans of the Roosevelt starvation government.

Representatives of a number of working class groups, including the Workers Party, spoke, exposing the reactionary base of the present administration, and how any solution the capitalist government would attempt to find could only mean increased misery and degradation for the masses. The plea for a fighting united front against the Roosevelt war preparations and for an improved standard of living and the 30 hour week met with an enthusiastic response from the audience.

As was to be expected, reactionary elements were at hand, attempting first to prevent the meeting, and to intimidate the speakers, warning that any "radical talk" would bring the wrath of the authorities down on their heads. The speakers indignantly refused to submit to this humiliating condition and proceeded to speak exactly as they had intended. Consequently, at the conclusion of the meeting, police entered and arrested three of the speakers, including a Negro worker from St. Louis who especially incurred the rage of the reactionary hooligans by his militant and courageous stand. Plans are being laid to defend the imprisoned workers.

In spite of the police terrorism, the May Day rally can be regarded as being exceedingly successful, considering the obstacles that stood in the path of its achievement. This success was due to the combined efforts of many labor organizations, all cooperating in an honest united front movement which included the Workers Party, the Communist Party, Socialist Party, American Workers Union (unemployed) and various other working class groups.

Workers Party members played an important role in the preparation and conduct of the meeting. They established themselves as a genuinely constructive force. Copies of the New Militant and the May Day Manifesto of the Workers Party were widely distributed and met with much interest and a great deal of approval from the assembled workers.

New Castle

By FRED RAYBURN

NEW CASTLE, Pa., May 1.—Over 800 workers listened to addresses delivered by George Papayan of the Workers Party and Dick Harrington, chairman of the National Unemployed Councils, at the May Day celebration sponsored by the Cooperative Workers of America, a local unemployed organization.

At the conclusion of the meeting comrade Papayan was invited to stay over and address several locals of the C.W.A. On Wednesday evening he spoke before a mass meeting of locals 2 and 4 and was favorably received. On Thursday, Friday and Sunday he is booked to address other locals of this organization. His talks, so far, on the decay of capitalism and the need of workers' organization have met with favorable response.

Rebuild Dental Workers Union

NEW YORK.—The four and a half week strike of the dental mechanics is over. The strike was forced upon the union by the stubborn refusal of the laboratory owners to grant the "closed shop."

This was made clear in the course of negotiations when lawyer Gordon, their representative, informed the representatives of the "Equity" that they were willing to discuss wages and hours but that the "closed shop" was out of the question.

Conditions of the mechanics have declined systematically under the increasing introduction of layoffs. In view of this, the union had to demand higher wages and shorter hours. The employers replied with a vicious attack on the whole question of unionism in the trade. They resorted to threats, bribes, hiring of scabs and gangsters to protect them in the course of the strike.

But all of these tactics would have availed them nothing if there had not been a serious weakness in the ranks themselves. Many of the members, new to union organization, and a type of worker who sit next to the boss, became afraid of the struggle ahead and quit in the early days of the strike.

The dental mechanic was just learning how to fight. With the return of Brother Capella from an organization trip to Boston to prevent New York strike work from being done there, militant tactics began at the beginning of the third week of the strike. In spite of a terribly depleted treasury, a magnificent drive was put on that roused the membership and climaxed in a fighting mass picket line at the very doors of one of the largest shops in the Metropolitan area. This and other incidents have given the dental mechanic a realization that the real force that can win strikes is nobody but himself. This lesson will not so quickly be forgotten.

Approximately 200 men are working in signed shops and a fine nucleus of real scrappers went back to open shops determined to carry on and prepare anew.

The dental mechanics have been away from the rest of organized labor long enough to realize that they made a serious error in not before affiliating to the largest body of organized labor. On the matter of moral and financial aid alone it would have been of enormous value for them to have belonged to the American Federation of Labor. That step must be taken now! One national union in the industry is the big question before us.

Jobless Slugged at N.Y. Relief Bureau

NEW YORK.—The LaGuardia administration in New York is developing a new technique in speaking the militant demands of jobless men for the organized unemployed. Demands for relief are answered with the fists and boots of hired thugs.

Last Friday three members of the Workers Unemployed Union called to represent a fellow member in his demand for relief at the city relief station, 97 E. Houston St. The committee consisted of Isidor Harrison, Edith Storm and Morris Varon. They were successful in winning their demands and when they came down from the executive offices to a lower floor in the relief building they were set upon by about ten hired thugs who were "baying" for them.

Harrison and Varon were beaten and kicked so severely that they required medical attention. Miss Storm was badly shaken up in the fracas. Harrison is a brother of Charles Yale Harrison, author of "Generals Die in Bed."

The assault took place on city property with the customary policeman conveniently missing. Two guards who complacently stood by while the thugs were slugging the workers afterwards explained that "it was after four o'clock and we were off duty."

Uriah Heep? No, Abe Cahan!

We don't know whether Dickens is translated into Yiddish. But whether he is or he isn't Dickens has created a character by the name of Uriah Heep. This character has become a byword standing for everything sneaky or hypocritical. Perhaps the Jewish masses do not employ the name Uriah Heep in designating anyone as a hypocrite. It is quite possible they use the name Abe Cahan—and with at least as much justification.

Writing in the Forward of April 7, Mr. Cahan castigates with pious unctious the Day, a Jewish daily generally supporting the Democratic Party. The cause for this attack is the Day's criticism of Lang's anti-Soviet articles.

Says Mr. Cahan: "The strike (National Biscuit Co.) is now at its height and the Day publishes the company's advertisements regularly. The Forward, naturally, (get that, naturally!) does not accept such advertisements." What vulgar hypocrisy. In the May 5 issue of the same Forward, edited by the same Mr. Uriah—beg pardon—Mr. Cahan there is a quarter page advertisement from the General Motors Co. advertising the latest model Chevrolet cars. "At the height of the strike," too. Need any more be said?

Federal Judge Sees Doom of Capitalism

When a Federal judge recognizes the possibility of the masses making mince meat out of capitalism it is a signal that things are going to happen.

John C. Knox, the dean of the United States Circuit Court, ex-claimed before the Harvard Alumni Association that "insane policy of attempting to bully the nation into submission to its will," it may expect to hear a large part of the population saying: "To hell with capitalism and all its defenders!"

And he says: "... thousands upon thousands of people who once had property and have it no more are not willing further to fight, bleed and die for the capitalistic system."

Who will say that this senile dog-eat-dog system is not in a bad way when a custodian of private property in the person of a Federal judge takes fright that the scissor-bills might refuse to get his belly ripped open for Andy Mellon's millions. A sad situation, indeed!

"Thank God," sighs the judge, "these people, of whom there are 20,000,000 or more have not become desperate, and I pray that they will not become so. But this much is certain—their minds have become fallow for the planting of dangerous doctrines."

WAR and the Stalin-Laval Communique

By JAMES P. CANNON
More poisoned fruit from the reactionary theory of "socialism in one country."

Another deadly blow at the international working class movement.

A new step in preparation for another social-patriotic betrayal.

In the joint communique issued in Moscow on May 15 in the names of Stalin, Molotov and Litvinov for the Soviet Union, and Laval, the Foreign Minister of Imperial France, the Stalinist betrayal of proletarian internationalism stands out in fuller measure than ever before. For a long time it has been clear to revolutionary internationalists that the course of Stalin was based on a renunciation of the international revolution and could only lead to the disorientation of the workers in the struggle against their own exploiters. Now it is written down, black on white.

The fatal leadership of Stalin was never so clearly revealed as in this infamous communique. It is a warning signal to the workers' vanguard of the whole world to free itself completely from the influence of the Stalinist bureaucracy before it leads them to catastrophe on another "Fourth of August."

Read this paragraph in the joint communique, as published in the New York Times, May 16:

"Above all, the duty falls upon them (the Soviet Union and France), in the interest and maintenance of peace, not to allow the means of their national defense to weaken in any sense. In this regard M. STALIN UN- DERSTANDS AND FULLY APPROVES THE NATIONAL DEFENSE POLICY OF FRANCE IN KEEPING HER ARMED FORCES AT A LEVEL REQUIRED FOR SECURITY."

There can be no misunderstanding of the meaning of these words. It is clear alike to the workers and to their class enemies. The bourgeois journalists had no difficulty in interpreting it. Ralph W. Barnes, Moscow correspondent of the New York Herald-Tribune explained it bluntly as follows:

"This is an indirect way, of course, of explaining to the French Communists that, in the existing circumstances, subversive propaganda directed to the French military and naval forces is harmful to the Soviet Union as well as to France."

That's it, precisely; the paragraph cannot have any other meaning. The "leader of the international proletariat" says to the French workers: "Do not interfere in any way with the military preparations of French imperialism. M. Stalin understands and fully approves."

Nothing is to be done to interfere with military preparations of the French imperialists. And from that it follows (Continued on Page 4)

Next Week!

In view of the tremendous significance for the international labor and revolutionary movements of the Franco-Soviet military alliance and the joint statement on it issued by Pierre Laval and Joseph Stalin, the National Committee of the Workers Party is drawing up an official statement of its position. This statement, which will deal exhaustively with the problems presented by the alliance, will appear in the coming issue of the New Militant. Readers are urged to give it their closest attention and to see to it that it is disseminated as widely as possible.

St. Louis Gas Strike is Solid Despite Terror

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—The strike of the St. Louis Gas House Workers runs into its third month with ranks as firm and determined as ever. A short history of the slanders, provocation, and violence against the union reveals something of the spirit that has carried the union through with flying colors.

The Laclede Company, after recovering from the surprise attack of the union, hired scabs and an army of thugs to protect them. The company thugs discovered a "bomb plot." When this collapsed the company had three union members arrested for "possessing dynamite." Although the state refused to prosecute on so flimsy a charge the men were confined under arrest. The company obtained an injunction "bidding the union its legal picket."

The police began mass arrests of the strikers. The company thugs organized attacks on the homes of the strikers, breaking windows, and endangering their families. The police began beating the strikers at the point of guns, as many as six at one time in the open street. The company thugs stunk bombed the union headquarters and picket stations. And so on.—The Company, their thugs and the police all in one band against the strike—the kept press playing up every scrap of anti-union hysteria.

Strike Paper Invaluable

During all this storm and stress, the daily strike paper has proved invaluable in holding the union firm, in recruiting support of other unions, and of the general public. The first week's trial brought in over a thousand subscriptions. More than fifty unions have pledged support. In addition many storekeepers have assisted the strikers with food and supplies.

The lighter side of the strike is revealed in the following story from

Jobless Renew Relief March For Showdown

Will Lay Seige to Ill. State Capitol Says I.W.A. Leader

By GERRY ALLARD
SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 15.—Having staged two marches on the state capital as well as scores of local demonstrations, the Illinois Workers Alliance was again rallying its forces this week-end for another gigantic march for a showdown on the relief crisis now facing this state.

The mass upsurge of the jobless in Illinois was precipitated by the shutting down of relief stations in the state as the Democratic administration maneuvered to force a further levy down the throats of a stubborn legislature in the form of an increase in the sales tax from 2 per cent to 3.

Ragged, hungry and weary workers trekked into Springfield last week from various sections of the state to protest against the closing of relief stations, against the sales tax and for improvements in relief standards. A march took place through the heart of town to the capital. While approximately 1,000 jobless workers cheered speakers who spoke from the huge monument of Abe Lincoln a delegation was received by the Governor.

Present Their Demands

The delegation presented the demands of the demonstrators for the opening of relief stations, defeat of the sales tax, abolition of the national guards, clothing for school children, graduating, proper medical care, comfortable shelter, $1 for unskilled and $1.25 for skilled labor on projects with a minimum of 24 hours and a maximum of 30-hours per week, representation on local, county, district and state relief boards and for a levy on income, gift and inheritance. The Governor of the state showed respect for the committee now representing 150,000 organized workers, but the substance of his decisions as to immediate redress was nothing. "I am a servant of the people, not a king," he said. The excuse was a poor one because a few months before he had dispatched hundreds of troops to the coal fields in a most tyrannical invasion against the self rule of the population of the coal fields.

Thousands of Illinois workers faced actual starvation. Yet the Governor took the position that not "one red cent" would be further expended by the state on relief until the tax against labor's bread and beans was passed. At the very moment $7,500,000 was laying idle in the coffers of the state treasury. In Chicago former Vice-President Daves played the fiddle to the tune of the 90,000,000 dollars he had received from the R.F.C. without making an effort to repay the "loan," enough to carry Illinois' relief burden for 20 months. Applying the "Merit Clause"

FRANCIS DILLON

GENERAL MOTORS

Lessons of the Great Toledo Battle

All the forces of the General Motors Corporation, the resources of the U. S. Department of Labor's ace "trouble shooter," Edward F. McGrady, a barrage from the Toledo newspapers threatening a permanent shutdown of the Chevrolet transmission plant, and unbelievably dirty trickery and brazen terrorization on the part of Francis J. Dillon, representative of the American Federation of Labor bureaucracy, were needed Monday night to brow-beat and trick the Toledo Chevrolet strikers into voting acceptance of compromise proposals. Rejection, advocated by the large group of militants among the strikers in close touch with the Workers Party branch, would have meant in all probability a nation-wide strike against General Motors, one of the most terrific battles in the history of class struggle in the U. S., since the outcome would determine the whole issue of unionism in the basic industries. While a thorough analysis of the dramatic onslaught of the Toledo vanguard upon the citadel of open-shopery must wait, it is already possible to draw the main conclusions. It is essential that all party comrades and progressive workers understand the conclusions in order that they may be by so much better equipped for the battles to come.

1. When account is taken on the one hand of the forces with which we had to work and on the other hand of those arrayed against us, we can safely assert that the Toledo militants met the challenge presented to them and that the Toledo strikers put up a magnificent battle. William Green had the strike votes of the Federal auto unions in his pocket. Not only, however, did he not call a strike but he and his representatives did everything in their power to prevent it from spreading and to tone down its militancy. The Chevrolet workers had joined the union only a few days before the strike broke. Very few among them had previous union experience. Yet they shut down the Chevrolet plant. They tied up Chevrolet production throughout the country for three weeks. They brought 30,000 workers out with them. They measurably cut down production of the steel and glass corporations. General Motors said it would not confer with them until they went back to work. General Motors was forced to change its mind. It had to negotiate with the Strike Committee and grant additional concessions.

Not only was a great automobile corporation shaken, but a more open and more nearly (Continued on Page 4)

Dillon and Co. Wreck Chance To Win Strike

Temporary Setback is Signal to Cement Ranks

By ART PREIS

TOLEDO, May 14.—After three weeks of magnificent battling, the union auto workers of the Chevrolet Motor Ohio Company, whose mass picket lines had stopped the production of Chevrolet transmissions and closed down almost the entire Chevrolet Corporation, voted last night to accept the offer of a four cents an hour wage-increase and other slight concessions and to return to work. For three weeks these inexperienced workers, who have been in the union but a month, fought back blow for blow against the financial might of General Motors, the pressure of the government, the cunning propaganda of the capitalist press. They went down to temporary and partial defeat at last through the treachery of Francis Dillon, national organizer for the A. F. of L. in the auto industry, and Fred Schwake, the business agent of their local whom they had trusted. But they went down fighting.

In one of the most spectacular and rousing floor fights ever waged, the militant progressives in the union, denounced as "Mussolini" by Dillon, took the meeting last night by storm, hooded Dillon from the Civic Auditorium at the outset of the session, and were on the verge of tearing to pieces the General Motors offer, which failed to grant them one important concession, including their demands for union recognition, a signed contract and straight seniority without the notorious "merit clause."

Lack of Experience

Their lack of experience and desire for "democracy" and "fair play," which was appealed to by equally inexperienced members of the strike committee, caused them to rescind a previous motion which they had passed extending all proposals but the strikers and the members of the strike committee.

Dillon was recalled into the meeting and given the chance to speak on the agreement which he, Edward F. McGrady, assistant secretary of labor, and William S. Knudsen, executive vice-president of General Motors, had devised last Saturday. Dillon had already expressed his sentiments on this union-busting agreement Monday in the daily press, which featured his statement urging the strikers to accept the terms of the proposal, and hinted that the progressives who fought its acceptance, including every one of the elected strike committee but one, were "reds," through a vague allusion to "those who presume without authority to speak in the interests of the workers the language of a Soviet Dictatorship." His public statement was in direct violation of an agreement made with the strike committee not to express himself on the proposed settlement prior to the meeting.

Fulminates at Muste

Dillon was given the platform to speak. Two hours before he had raged from the auditorium howling that the union was expelled from the A. F. of L. The press reported him as saying then, before he entered a cab to go to his hotel, "Let Muste run their outfit. If they want an I.W.W. or a communist outfit let them have it. They're out! They're out! I disown them."

Three times during his ensuing speech Dillon was booed and hissed down. But with infinite cunning, demagoguery and the basest lies he shouted and threatened. His big club was the threat to withdraw the charter of the entire local if the strikers did not accept the company's offer. The local has members in nineteen Toledo plants. Slowly he ground into the minds of many of the strikers the fear that he would smash their union if they did not end the strike. In return for the "democratic" gesture of the strikers, Dillon used the foulest and most undemocratic tactics ever devised to force the company agreement down the strikers' throats. He used their very union loyalty, their desire to maintain their union at all costs, to betray them.

During the course of his tirade, Dillon snarled an attack at A. J.

W.P. Supports Election Battle Against Mpls. Reactionaries

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The coming election in Minneapolis will see a battle to the finish between the reactionary candidates of the Citizens Alliance and the candidates of the Farmer-Labor Party. Every worker in every trade union in the city is up in arms against the present Citizens Alliance administration, headed by Mayor Bainbridge and police chief "Bloody Mike" Johannes, who were responsible during Local 574 truck drivers' strike of last year for the shooting of fifty workers and the death of two. Both sides are marshalling all their forces for the election, on which depends the immediate fortune of the labor movement and the Citizens Alliance.

In view of the questions at stake and of the narrow majority which will determine the result, the Minneapolis Branch of the Workers Party has decided to throw its electoral weight behind the Farmer-Labor candidates, at the same time conducting its own campaign, warning the workers against the dangerous illusions of Farmer-Laborism. The campaign of the Workers Party is being carried on along the - lines of their election leaflet. After introducing as the main immediate task the defeat of the Citizens Alliance, the Workers Party clearly distinguishes itself from the Farmer-Laborites. "The Farmer-Labor officials will not and cannot give the working class any real, lasting benefits—these will have to be won by the workers themselves through their fighting organizations: the unions, unemployed organizations, and the revolutionary workers' party."

- The Party presents its own program although running no independent candidates in this election.
1. The thirty hour, thirty dollar minimum week.
 2. A ten billion dollar public works program.
 3. Unemployment and social insurance at the expense of employers.
 4. Immediate relief of $10 per week with $3 for every dependent.
 5. An end to red tape in relief administration; adequate medical care for the unemployed.
 6. Full rights of free speech.

Dillon Men Slug Toledo Workers in Flint Meet

FLINT, Mich., May 14.—For the third time in the past two weeks, members of the Buick local here were prevented from going on strike through the action of Francis Dillon and his organizer, Louis Hart.

When a progressive member of the Toledo local, Wilbur Patton, with a delegation including Dick Myers and Herbert Munson, attempted to speak at the meeting here last night to give a report of the Toledo strike, he was assaulted by members of Dillon's machine, led by Louis Hart.

Patton was injured about the head when he was struck by a chair. In order to break up the meeting, Dillon's men turned out the lights and threw chairs about. The meeting was broken up in confusion.

One of the methods employed by Dillon to discourage strike action here was to circulate a story, played up widely in the local press, that the Toledo strike was in control of "reds," "communists" and "professional agitators."

Expel Allentown Professor for Activity in Labor Movement

ALLENTOWN, Pa., May 15.—Dr. Winslow N. Hallett, treasurer of the Allentown local of the American Federation of Teachers and its delegate to the Central Trades and Labor Council, has been dismissed from his position as professor of psychology at Cedar Crest College because of his labor activities.

His dismissal by the board of trustees has been denounced by the student body. More than half of the 185 students enrolled at the college have signed petitions demanding his reinstatement. Asked by President William F. Curtis to resign, Dr. Hallett refused, requesting specific charges be brought against him. The formal notification of dismissal, on May 11, contained no charges. Pressed for an explanation of the board's action, President Curtis admitted that Dr. Hallett's work was satisfactory at the college and that the dismissal was due to Dr. Hallett's prominent role in the organized labor movement.

In addition to his position in the teachers' union, which Dr. Hallett was instrumental in organizing last November, he was until recently an officer in the powerful Lehigh County Unemployed League and is still an active figure in the Pennsylvania unemployed movement.

Dr. Hallett has taught at Cedar Crest College for three years. Previously, he was instructor in the psychology department of the University of Pennsylvania.

A fight for Dr. Hallett's reinstatement will be made at the meeting of the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church, scheduled for next week, at which the annual report of Cedar Crest College will be presented. Dr. Hallett announced today that Dr. Paul Ried Pontius, president of the Synod, has promised to fight for academic freedom in the college.

The Committee on Academic Freedom of the American Civil Liberties Union has announced it will take action in the case. The American Association of University Professors has been asked to make an investigation.

Dr. Hallett has asked the Non-Partisan Labor Defense to rally support for his case in the labor movement.

Privileged Classes . . .

"We have privileged classes in this country," said Miss Alice Mertz, New York relief supervisor in explaining the $99 per week salary of herself and husband. . . . Relief recipients in Clinton County, Pa., were told by relief investigators to "go and steal coal." . . . As relief funds are cut off and 1,300,000 people face starvation, the Illinois legislature adjourned so that members could attend the Kentucky Derby. . . . The $30,000,000 that the government "loaned" Charles Dawes (and which will never be repaid) would take care of Illinois relief needs for nearly a year. . . . An evicted share-cropper with his palled wife, rickety children and meager pile of furniture was seen standing by the roadside near Shreveport, La. All were wearing "EVERY MAN A KING" buttons. . . .

Food . . .

The AAA has expended to date $678,000,000 for crop reduction and $191,000,000 to purchase crop surpluses. . . . President Roosevelt last week signed a bill appropriating $600,000,000 for seed loans to farmers. . . . Food prices have risen 34 percent in the past year. The CONSUMERS' GUIDE issued by the AAA states: "never before in this country have so many people been unable to buy food and the simple necessities of life as in the past two years." . . . Secretary Wallace, head of the AAA, says: "Prices are not excessive; the increase in the price of food products has only kept pace with the rise in national income." . . . Although farmers comprise 25 percent of the population, for the past five years the farm income has averaged only 8.8 percent of the national income. . . . Profits reported for food processing corporations for 1934 are: National Biscuit Co.—$26,592,000; National Fruit Co.—$21,290,000; Armour & Co.—$19,446,000; Borden Milk Co.—$9,136,000; National Dairy Co.—$13,603,000; Corn Products Refining Co.—$21,207,000; A. & P. Stores (two year period) $43,219,000. . . . Increase in food prices have raised the average cost of feeding a soldier from 37 cents to 50 cents a day, necessitating an extra allotment of $5,000,000 per year to feed the army and navy. . . . Commissioner Osborne of the New York State Fish Hatcheries complains that because of the increased cost of liver he cannot feed the trout adequately. . . .

Jobs . . .

Helen Fortney, 138 lbs. of Lake Geneva, Wis., advertised for a job as bodyguard. She received 48 proposals of marriage, one offer of a job. "It must be phoney," she remarked. . . . Franklin Jr. and John Roosevelt, sons of the President, are in the market for summer jobs. The boys are willing to do almost anything says their mother. Last summer John taught polo at a summer camp and Franklin Jr. toured Europe. . . . Eighty percent of the industrial firms in the U. S. will not hire new workers over 40 years of age. . . . The majority decision of the Supreme Court nullifying the Railroad Retirement Act states: "It does not follow, as contended, that a man of 45 is inefficient or incompetent. The facts indicate a contrary conclusion." . . .

Patriotism . . .

Ex-Senator George Wharton Pepper shaved his mustache of 40 years standing in order to play the part of George Washington in a Philadelphia pageant. . . . In an "aversion test," Dr. E. L. Thorndike of Columbia University, found that two thirds of the older persons tested would "spit at the picture of George Washington" for $10,000. Half the younger ones would do it for less than $10. All were jobless. . . .

Society Notes . . .

"I couldn't tend to Anne drunk all night and work all day," pleaded Brandon Smith, husband of Anne Cannon, textile and tobacco heiress. "Brandon was dumb and I was dumb for living with him. The faucets are the heads of swans. The carpet is of white velvet. The electric lights are mother of pearl in a design of oyster shells. There are always white flowers, sometimes great sprays of white orchids." . . . Ninety percent of American farmers still perform the Saturday night ritual in a galvanized wash tub. . . .

Central Labor Union Backs Local 574

Unanimous Appeal For Reinstatement

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Without one dissenting voice the Minneapolis Central Labor Union voted last week full support to Local 574 of the Truck Drivers in their battle for reinstatement in the International. A motion to continue 574's delegate on the Central Union was defeated only after an appeal from the chair, on the ground that such a motion would lay the Central Union itself open to expulsion by Green.

Find Charges False

The vote was taken after a report by a committee of three appointed by the Central Union to investigate the charges made by Dan Tobin, reactionary president of the International. Tobin's charges, the committee found, were unjust, and in some cases completely unfounded. It was shown that 574 had made tremendous sacrifices to pay its per capita tax, although it was faced with extraordinary expenses, debts left over from last year's strike, the expenses of negotiating with hundreds of employers, the expenses consequent on the hospitalization of workers wounded in the strike, the expenses of maintaining the widows and families of those killed, etc. In spite of all these expenses, the local paid over $3,000 in the last 15 months. It was pointed out that in previous years the union had been as much as one year behind in per capita tax without action from Tobin.

Tobin's charge that the union had overstepped its jurisdiction was answered by evidence showing that 574 has voluntarily relinquished the Ice Drivers, the Bakery Drivers, the Laundry Drivers, the Brewery Drivers, etc. etc. although such actions went against the better judgment of the union leaders. In the case of the Brewery Drivers, the union leaders, not wishing to break up the industrial union of the Brewery workers, actually went against the advice of Tobin who, merely to gather the extra dues, pressed for a jurisdictional fight with the Brewery Union.

Against Tobin's charge that the financial secretary of the union was not bonded were presented documents, including the bond itself, dated last November, when the secretary was elected. It was pointed out that a copy of this bond was on file in Tobin's own office.

Take Immediate Steps

After voting support, the Central Union took immediate steps. A committee of three was voted to see Tobin in Indianapolis and Green in Washington, to fight out the case on its merits and demand the reinstatement of local 574.

In presenting its case local 574 contrasted the policy of Tobin and the policy of the union:

"There were two lines open to the union after the strike. First: It could have followed the policy indicated by president Tobin in his letter of April 15 in which he says 'No union shall have the right to pay any bills before they pay the per capita tax due the International Union each month.'

"This would have set up a small office with a secretary in charge who could have done little more than collect dues—and would have resulted in the quick and decisive liquidation of the union and would have reduced it in a few short weeks to its former impotent position."

"Second: the policy followed by the present leadership, that is, throwing every available force into the field."

"(a) To check and finally defeat the bosses' plan of wholesale discrimination. That this was absolutely necessary the record of the membership lists month by month will show."

"(b) To set up a steward system and build a well-knit block of active organizers in the different firms and sections."

"(c) To take care of the wounded men and their families, to pay off gradually the most pressing obligations, hospital, doctor and food bills, to maintain a suitable hall and headquarters."

"(d) In the meantime to pay to the International every cent possible without crippling the union and scattering the membership, which is the source of all funds."

"(e) In this way to lay the basis for the liquidation of all debts to the International, as well as other local obligations."

In connection with debts to the International it was pointed out by the union that "During the past 18 months while the work of building the union was in progress no strike benefits or other financial aid or, indeed, any assistance, organizational or otherwise, was received from the International."

Boston Dressmaker Calls for Effective Preparations to Improve Conditions

By J. RAYMOND

BOSTON, May 3.—A general stoppage in the dress industry was called here yesterday with about 2,000 workers responding. Although this strike comes at the tail-end of the season, the conditions which surround it and led up to the union action are highly instructive for all dressmakers.

For the past year conditions in the dress industry have been rapidly rolling down hill. The little gained in the May strike two years ago after the signing of the code was fast disappearing. The union on its part did nothing to organize the unorganized who were undermining conditions in the union shops.

On February 15 the agreement with the employers expired. The workers believed a strike to be necessary if conditions were to be improved and the unorganized recruited for the union. Insistent demands were voiced at local meetings that preparations be made and machinery set up for strike. But the administration dallied and postponed on the pretext that the time was poor for a walkout. With their usual hypocrisy they declared that the workers could not be depended on in these "hard" times and would not support a strike.

The union militants struggled desperately against this policy but to no avail.

At conferences between manufacturers and the union about twelve of the bosses agreed to sign the old agreement. There was no great sacrifice for them in this offer as the agreement had remained a dead-letter hitherto. At a mass meeting called to ratify these negotiations considerable opposition was voiced by rank and file. They were enthusiastically received by the workers present. As was to be expected, however, the stage was set in advance and Hochman, International President, was the last speaker.

Soft-soaping in his own inimitable style, Hochman dilated on the depression, pleaded for acceptance of the agreement, begged for patience until the opportune moment, urged that the workers wait for the New York strike after which conditions would automatically improve in Boston.

Filled with disgust the workers voted for the agreement and left the meeting with disappointment, the prevailing sentiment.

Conditions went from bad to worse. Most of the dressmakers worked without agreements. Wages were anything the workers could get. Lock-outs and reorganizations were regular occurrences. But the union did nothing, calmly awaiting the return of prosperity. Only when talk became rife that the union was worthless and that members would stop paying dues to it, were the bureaucrats stirred out of their swivel chairs. The strike was called for the purpose of forcing agreements on the contracting shops.

All shops, with and without agreements, have been called out. What is most necessary now is for the strike to be settled in short order since the season will soon be over. And of greater significance are the preparations for the future. All sincere and active workers must be banded together and an intensive organization drive started. Only such preliminaries and then a determined struggle will lead to improved conditions.

Reject Pact in Rubber Strike

By R. FERGUSON

AKRON, May 13.—The first militant step in turning back the tide of reaction in the rubber workers' unions was taken yesterday by the locked-out workers of the India Tire and Rubber Co. when by a vote of 141 to 33 they flatly rejected the proposal of President Klaus that the company be turned back into an open shop.

Klaus, having pleaded with great emotion that the closed shop, the only one in the industry, was ruining India's business, that the consumers of India tires (bearing the union label, no longer would buy them "on account of their problems regarding labor."

The company, admittedly in bad financial shape as a result of bitter price wars between the large corporations, expects to receive a $190,000 loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corp. if "labor difficulties are ironed out"—meaning, of course, if the open shop is reestablished. Once again the rubber workers witness the role of the government in the class struggle.

Having temporarily broken the morale and exhausted the treasures of the big rubber unions, Coleman C. Claherty, A. F. of L. organizer in rubber, was rushing off to Toledo to make an empty pledge of "moral and financial" support of the rubber workers to the auto strikers. He left behind one of his henchmen who merely advised the India workers "to use their own judgment" about voting down the open shop proposal. Again the rubber workers see the bureaucratic leadership deserting them at the crucial moment. The India rubber workers can depend only upon their own strength on the picket line, and the support given them by the large and militant Unemployed League at Mogadore.

In the big rubber unions plans are being pushed to test the recent sell-out agreement by demanding wage increases for the cleaners and elevator men.

W. P. in the Strike

The methods by which the progressives in this strike were organized have laid the groundwork for more successful and wide-spread attempts in the future. Although most of the strikers were new union men, the militants were drawn together. Bill Prior did a splendid job on this. A real floor machine, inexperienced as it was, was developed, and it put up a magnificent battle when all the circumstances are considered. A regular series of leaflets were issued to the strikers by the Workers Party. These were eagerly read and were tremendously effective in suggesting to the strikers the practical and necessary course to be pursued in the strike. Key men, rank and file leaders, were educated and trained in parliamentary procedure, strike tactics, and militant unionism. For one brief period, despite all the handicaps, it seemed as though the progressives would carry the day.

This year the production season is almost over. But the seeds of clean, progressive, fighting unionism which the W.P. has succeeded in implanting in the minds of the auto union members will bear fruit.

At a meeting of the Chevrolet local held tonight, a thousand union men cheered the President of the local when he said: "In three weeks you won more than General Motors has granted any group of workers in twenty years. What can you do in another six months! Build the union for the next fight." Walter Gunthrop, President of the Central Labor Union of Toledo, denounced the settlement as a bastard affair whose mother was Francis J. Dillon. Midwife at the birth was James Wilson, Green's personal representative, he stated. The men unanimously pledged themselves to stick in the union, throw out their false leaders, and build the organization toward a fight to a finish with General Motors.

Progressives Organize

The results of this strike cannot be termed an utter defeat, however, although the auto workers have lost their finest opportunity to date to force the auto barons to their knees throughout the country.

Out of this fight has grown a force of militant progressives in the auto unions who have demonstrated conclusively their power and ability. The struggle they put on in Toledo, although meeting with temporary defeat, has already aroused progressives in the auto unions throughout the country. Tonight these progressives are planning to get together, to lay out a national program, to organize, train and discipline themselves more thoroughly.

Moreover, this strike has proved to the auto workers that the auto barons and corporations are not invincible. A small handful, comparatively, of Toledo strikers, militant and determined, forced General Motors to negotiate with them directly, against all the previously declared policy of General Motors. They won some concessions, even though meagre and apt to be withdrawn if the union men fail to push forward their organization and fight every attempt to violate the terms. Further, they have demon-

Ill. Jobless March on Capitol

came out simultaneously with the roaring banners on the "hunger march" that thousands of dollars had been appropriated for the Great Lakes naval station. Other items told of millions being expended for naval maneuvers in the Pacific. Yet, when the unemployed petitioned the Governor of the state for redress in the face of famine and wholesale destitution, they were told in no uncertain terms that a levy on an income tax was "unconstitutional." In the coal camps, hovels and shacks of the jobless, whimpering children starved. This, perhaps, is "constitutional."

Learn Political Lesson

The unemployed of the state learned the political lesson of their life. They were taught that the government of Illinois, like its big brother, the government of the United States, was a government of a class—the capitalist class. Illusion after illusion were dispelled and the unemployed should realize by now that a program of action must assume definite political character if victory is to be acquired.

The marchers carried banners. "United We Eat — Divided We Starve," the slogan of the fighting National Unemployed League was adopted as the most popular banner of Illinois' hunger army. "We Want Work At Union Wages," "Down With The Sales Tax," "Feed Us Or Shoot Us Down," "Tax The Rich," "We Want Shelter" were others among a hundred or more banners carried by the marchers.

Strangely enough, after Horner had issued a statement of "not one cent," and Hopkins "not one thin dime" for the jobless, the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission came across with $1,250,000 as a sop to the unemployed. Other counties through rich donors and special appropriations began to announce that some money was on hand. The hunger marchers had exerted pressure.

Federation Knives Unemployed

As a desperate resort to undermine the threat of the unemployed workers, Mr. Soderstrom and Mr. Olander, boss parrots and officers of the State Federation of Labor, issued a vicious denunciation against the Illinois Workers Alliance and came out in favor of the sales tax. Soderstrom, a Republican state legislator, and Olander, a member of the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission, again stabbed the militant labor movement in the back with an irresponsible charge that the jobless "were allied with the Chamber of Commerce."

At the same time when the hunger marchers, tattered and hungry, petitioned the state to feed them, these two arch labor traitors were eating in ritzy restaurants, sleeping in swanky hotels and consorting with the very enemies of hungry men and women, many of whom are members of the Federation of Labor. We were compelled to witness again well groomed, well fed and well cared labor aristocrats splitting in the face of the masses who were desperately trying to avert a calamity of famine.

The Illinois unemployed marched. They experienced some necessary political lessons. They rehearsed in one of the simple immediate struggles. They'll march again. They will march in larger numbers, better organized and knowing more about this thing called the class struggle. In the meantime the fight continues. The jobless will refuse to starve in silence. They will refuse to be satisfied with a "bean order."

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

So I was hanging on a subway strap Monday morning, and I read on the front page of the New York Times.

"A. F. of L. officials here (Toledo) are irked at the influence which A. J. Muste of the Workers Party appears to have with the left-wing members of the strike committee," so I step all over the gent's toes in appreciation, and say "Atta boy" right out loud, and several people look at me, and the gent gets up and gives me his seat—maybe he thought I was talking to him!

Which doesn't have much to do directly with the Manager's request that I write something for the New Militant campaign, but I thought I'd mention it anyway. After all, "influence" of the W. P. does depend a mighty lot on the New Militant too.

I understand the sub campaign is only so-so, and there is only half a month left. Personally I like to work "under pressure" at the last minute, and perhaps many comrades are planning to send in most of their subs between now and June 1, but there will have to be some tail hustling!

Visiting headquarters I hear rumors of an enlarged paper, a daily, a bi-monthly supplement, eight pages, etc. And apparently the main obstacle to taking the plunge is not having quite adequate support in pushing the paper from the branches and membership as a whole. It's my guess that if this campaign were to approach closely 100 percent success, the New Militant would immediately come out larger or more frequently.

With a larger paper, its character inevitably improves. In my own case, for example, it hasn't been easy to sell the New Militant "as she is" in the wilds of Worcester, Mass., open-shop, middle-class-minded city. But I am sure a larger paper would be more comprehensive and complete in its viewpoint and presentation of news, and so easier to promote. Only WHOLE-

HEARTED SUPPORT NOW CAN PRODUCE THAT TYPE OF PAPER!

I have three more to get on my individual quota of ten subs, and I'll get them somehow. One student, one housewife, an S. P. secretary, a machinist and a pal of his (vocation unknown), a printer and a shop foreman comprise my catch to date. I shall go gunning for a school teacher, a minister and shall give the tenth sub to an unemployed friend, instead of seeing "Goin' to Town." Now isn't that sacrificing for the Party! But after all Mae West will always be Mae West, while that sub might make a W.P. member out of a good Democrat!

How about it? All together for a final two-week's drive!

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

In Belgium . . .

Social Democracy again proves its role as a brake on the working class in its struggle against capitalism. With the existence of a Marxist party in Belgium, the political crisis through which that country has been passing could have been utilized to direct the proletariat in militant struggle for the purpose of achieving as a first step a workers' government. But a revolutionary party did not exist there, owing in largest measure to the criminal blunders and betrayals of Stalinism. Social Democracy retains its power over the trade unions and in the political activities of the masses. But within the ranks of the socialist Labor Party of Belgium, the most advanced workers, absorbing some of the bitter lessons of the German defeat, have been slowly moving to the left. The deep-going crisis of capitalism produced the objective conditions for the rapid growth of such a left wing, but its leadership could only accommodate itself to the pressure of the reformist leaders at the right and thus held back the workers instead of arousing them to militant action.

Coalition Gov't . . .

In Belgium, as in France, fascism is a growing menace to the working class. The Belgian king is in close touch with the forces of reaction and the monarchy will be utilized without a doubt in the attempt to save the capitalist system by handing the power to the extreme reactionaries who will crush all workers' organizations unless the workers seize the power and liquidate the monarchy at the same time. Far from preparing the masses for this revolutionary task, the Social Democracy is rendering them passive. Instead of breaking with the bourgeoisie as the first step in the defense of the workers against fascism, the betraying leaders of the Labor Party have joined in the coalition ministry. The militant workers have demanded straight along that in the political crisis accompanying the economic one, the Labor Party take over the government alone. But there is nothing that socialist leaders fear so much as power, for then they cannot reject the basic demands of the working class without standing naked and exposed. The entry of Vandervelde, De Man and the "leftist" Spaak into the Van Zeeland coalition shows once more how reformism creates illusions among the workers by denouncing capitalism loudly in words in order the better to save the capitalist ("democratic") system in deeds. Vandervelde requires the bourgeoisie in the coalition so as to avoid complete exposure when he tramples on the needs of the masses.

The Effects . . .

It is clear from the circumstances surrounding the formation of the coalition ministry that the socialist workers, the rank and file, were opposed to this betrayal and to class collaboration at this juncture. For the entry was in the nature of a coup d'état, an accomplished fact, put over not merely on the Labor Party, but on the Central Committee of the party as well. This throws the clearest light possible on the attitude of these misleaders towards "legality." They would have the workers follow the course permitted to them by finance capital in the struggle to overthrow the bourgeoisie, but they reserve to themselves the right to act "illegally" for the benefit of the bourgeoisie. In the ranks of the working class. This act on the part of the reactionaries will have wide repercussions. The desertion of the left wing by its leader Spaak, who also joined the ministry (his reward for this foul treachery), prevented an immediate split, since the left forces in the Labor Party were thrown into confusion. Nevertheless the left wing continued its publication of "Action Socialiste" and denounced the coalition government, stating: "We again reaffirm our belief in the revolutionary road to Socialism. Coalition is disastrous." The situation in the Labor Party at present is a real test of the leftist forces and may result in rapid progress to a real Marxist basis. Thus a deputy from Brussels declared in the Special Congress called to "ratify" the fait accompli: "I am convinced now more than ever that with these methods (compromise) capitalism will never be conquered. We have behind us bitter events—Germany, Austria—Isn't that sufficient that we should learn? We must have more confidence in the power of the working class—in our own strength—the time will come when our voice will be heard—the voice of Revolutionary Socialism."

The struggle against coalition will tend to unite the left centrist forces and aid them to reach the advanced workers. This also involves the struggle against De Man for putting into effect his entire "Labor Plan" which would involve the taking of power by a workers' government, and not merely portions of it, as De Man now proposes. In this fight the Bolsheviks must come to the aid of the revolutionary workers in the Labor Party. In the course of common struggle the Bolsheviks can win over these forces for a real militant struggle against fascism and for workers' power.

(Ed. Note: This is the second of a series of articles by Comrade Muste. The third article will appear next week.)

By A. J. MUSTE

There is another idea advanced by Comrade Budeuz which along with certain valuable suggestions exhibits the same individualism, unreality, "other-worldliness," the pioneer's longing for a fresh start, the yearning for the ideal, as the conceptions we have been discussing. The "American approach" means, he suggests, that in building the American revolutionary party we must make a fresh start. The movement in this country must be "foot-loose from the broils of European radicalism." Our workers and farmers are "nauseated with the charges and counter-charges of 'opportunism,' 'renegadism,' etc. which fill the radical air." They are "fed up on the neurasthenic fictions which one radical group must, as a matter of duty, create about the other—muddying the waters and hiding the lesson of correct tactics."

There is here, be it said in passing, a hint that it is only European radicalism which is afflicted with broils, that American radicalism would be free of them if these bad Europeans had not brought them over or, perhaps, foolish Americans had not imitated the Europeans. There is surely no foundation in fact for such an assumption of the peaceableness of Americans, red or any other color, and a tendency is evident here to slip into language which might easily be given a nationalistic interpretation which its author would be the first to disown.

Mud-Slinging Methods

Now there is no question that radical parties and groups have sometimes devoted time and energy to wrangling over non-essentials or issues that had become dead. It is also true that controversy has descended at times to the level of petty sniping. The C. P. has pursued a policy of mud-slinging, characterized by a certain amount of character assassination (at this very moment directed against Comrade Budeuz), lying, double-crossing, breaking up meetings of other groups, which have introduced a demoralization and bitterness into the radical movement. With any protest against any of these tendencies wherever they may appear, the W. P. will associate itself. It has taken and will take the lead in the effort to eradicate them.

But there is here a lumping together of all controversies in the radical movement and the suggestion that they are not over serious and genuine issues but the product of "neurasthenic fictions" which each radical group has to trump up against the others as a justification for its own existence. Are the discussions which have indeed raged furiously many times in the radical movement thus to be dismissed as the ravings of neurasthenics about fictions? Was there not a real issue between Marx and the Utopian socialists? Or Marx and Bakunin? And was it not essential to the advancement of the working class that these issues be fought out and clarified? To take another illustration, comrade Budeuz would be the last to argue that there is no real issue as between the Social-democrat and the revolutionist or that it is not necessary to break the hold of the Social-democracy on the mind of the working class.

It really comes down, then, to the question as to whether the conflict between the C. P. and the W. P., between the Third International and those who have raised the banner of the New, Fourth, International, has to do with significant issues. But to ask this question is to answer it! Conceivably an honest worker may be on one side or the other in the controversy, and we do not class those workers who differ from us as counter-revolutionists and social-fascists (a breed that seems suddenly to be as extinct as the dodo). But every day in the field our comrades encounter those who belong to the C. P. or are under its influence. They must be equipped to reason with them. What else should a responsible worker do with other workers?

Furthermore, the issues of the united front, the trade union policy of the C. P., social-fascism, party and workers' democracy, socialism in one country, the foreign policy of the Soviet Union, cannot be dismissed as unimportant, "neurasthenic fictions," any more than the controversy between Marx and the Utopians, or Lenin and the Social-Democrats could be. The advent of Fascism, the reasons why the workers' movement did not prevent it, the debate of the C. P. in Germany, the fact that in seven years, and such years, the Third International, claiming to be the general staff of the world revolutionary movement, has had no congress—all this, the W. P. claims, can only mean that the working class of the world has entered upon a new epoch, as truly as a new epoch dawned with the debate of the Second International in 1914.

Confronted with such a situation, the revolutionary vanguard must first decide whether the basic principles of the movement remain or whether a new set is to be worked out. The W. P. bases itself upon the principles of Marx and Lenin. No one has come forward with any others that merit serious consideration.

The Point of Departure

It then becomes necessary to ask how the basic principles have been perverted, misapplied, departed from. How can the revolutionary movement possibly go on, unless it is simply to make a leap in the dark, save on the basis of an evaluation of the past, its successes and its failures? Since when has it become scientific and realistic for a movement not to strive earnestly to benefit by its own experience? To propose to "start from scratch" with a brand-new revolutionary movement is to cry for the moon. We cannot wipe out history. Our opponents will talk about it if we do not. It is not even true that the workers of the U. S. are nauseated with discussion of these issues. Most of them do not know anything about them, it is true. They are uninterested, rather than nauseated. But will any one say that there is less discussion in the S. P. for example, or among the more advanced workers generally, about revolutionary principles and the evaluation of European events, etc. than a few years ago?

Less now than ever before is it possible or advisable for the revolutionary movement in the U. S. to ignore or isolate itself from European or world-experience. As capitalism in the U. S. rapidly approaches the same stage of development as in European countries and resorts to much the same devices to thwart the labor movement, we can learn very direct and specific lessons from European experience. Fascism is not a remote or abstract issue for us. Furthermore, they are international, not national issues. Still further, it is utterly impossible to comprehend what is happening in the pocket-book, the home, the dinner-table of American workers and farmers, or to devise a way out, save by an understanding of what is happening to world-capitalism and of what the working class of all lands can do about it.

Unity—Its Real Meaning

One other point in this connection. It is true that the workers desire unity. They must achieve unity in order to win their freedom. But a revolutionist has no business to lapse into sentimentality or middle-headedness. As we have pointed out on other occasions, there was a united labor movement in Austria, but it went down before Fascism because it was united on a false, social-democratic, basis. We must not, therefore, seek to evade the controversy as to what is the sound basis for unity. Rather must we fight with all the mental resources at our command for our conception as to what that basis is. Are we then to become a "debating society" or an "academy of theoreticians"? If by that is meant that we have vigorous internal discussions over real issues, in the national and international sphere, we say, By all means: no organization has any vitality which does not have that sort of internal life. If, however, it is meant that we talk and write, but do not act, that we develop an ingrown party, the answer is that we shall permit that to happen at our peril. Again and again we say, the Party must get into the class struggle, yes, here in the U. S. A. It must prove itself in action, and if it does not, it will be thrown into the garbage-can, where it would belong, by the working class. Theory is with us the guide to action and is to be tested in action.

The Question of Stalinism

Are we to be an "anti-Stalinist" rather than an "anti-capitalist" party? It seems to me that there are certain comrades in the Party who from different angles take an unrealistic view of the matter here raised. On the one hand, there are comrades who to all intents and purposes say that we have to answer the Stalinists' arguments and if we do that we can dispose of them and go ahead, and those who from a slightly different angle contend that until the C. P. has been put out of the running, by whatever means, there is very little we can do.

For one thing, the Stalinist arguments have all been answered, but that has not made the C. P. disappear. The arguments of the capitalists have all been answered too. Only comrades with a very academic, intellectualistic, i. e. non-Marxian, approach could possibly think that arguments, oral or written, by themselves, dispose of institutions and organizations. We have to demonstrate to the workers not only that we can win a debate with the C. P., but that we can offer them a living alternative, a revolutionary party that can actually function in the class struggle. Obviously, if we have to prove that we can function in order to win the leadership of the workers as against opponent parties, we have to function while these parties still exist and are also at work. Who would expect to be otherwise in the world of reality? Who can give the matter a moment's thought and then propose that we put off trade union work until the C. P. has been liquidated rather than contest the field in the unions now with the C. P.? Yes, comrades, again: Project the party into the class struggle!

The Strich Method

On the other hand, there are comrades who practically take the position that the Party should ignore the existence of the C. P., "simply go ahead with its work," spread its anti-capitalist message, build branches, help organize the unemployed, enter the unions, etc., but eschew controversy either about principles or practical matters. If the comrades referred to in the preceding paragraph suffer primarily from being academic, these latter comrades are afflicted with a sentimental outlook. It would indeed be pleasant if there were no serious controversies in the working class, if they were all engaged in a united attack on the capitalist system. But then the revolution would be here! The world does not happen to be as we would like it. In the real world we must fight those who mislead the working class in order to fight capitalism effectively. In any event, they will attack us and leave us no alternative but to fight.

And though argument about principles does not of itself suffice to wrest leadership from an opponent party, it is just as true that in order to achieve leadership the Party must do more than conduct picket lines. It must demonstrate its intellectual superiority. Partly because only thus can the most advanced and intelligent workers and intellectuals be won. Chiefly, because the Party's job is not merely to conduct a series of skirmishes with the employing class, but nothing less than leadership in the overthrow of capitalism. The Party must have intellectual competence and satisfy the advanced workers that it has.

The Job Before Us

It makes a tremendous difference, however, whether the attack on Stalinism is regarded as a means or as an end, whether we think of ourselves or act as if we considered ourselves critics of another party which is after all to do the job or whether we are really conscious of being the revolutionary party whose task is to rally the workers for the assault on capitalism, which justifies itself in action on a broader and broader scale, and pays just so much attention to other parties as may be necessary as an incident in that major task. We are the anti-capitalist, anti-imperialist, revolutionary Party and our preoccupation is not with the C. P. but with the capitalist system in the U. S. and throughout the world—the system which with our sister parties we aim to overthrow.

By A. WEAVER

S. W. PHILADELPHIA—

Question: Do not Stalin and other of his followers prove that Lenin claimed that it was possible to completely build a Socialist society in the Soviet Union alone?

Answer: The sole theoretical justification given by the Stalinists for the "theory" of Socialism in one country consists of two quotations from Lenin, one from his article on the United States of Europe, written in 1915, and the other from his unfinished article on Cooperation, written in 1923. Everything else that Marx, Engels and Lenin said, wrote, or did is ignored, as are the programs of the Party and Young Communist League during the October period and all the opinions expressed by the Party leaders during that time, including those of the now-supporters of the "theory."

Space does not permit a demonstration of the fact that even the quotations adduced by the Stalinists do not permit them the claim that Lenin was an advocate of the "theory" which Stalin first advanced in 1924, but if you will refer to "The Draft Program of the Communist International, a Criticism of Fundamentals" by Trotsky, a copy of which is available from almost any of the former C. L. A. members, you will find a complete analysis of this question under the chapter headed "The Theoretical Tradition of the Party."

(H), NEW YORK—

Question: What is the difference between a "minimum" and a Marxist program?

Answer: The posing of the problem in this manner puts the entire question in a false light. The confusion surrounding the term "minimum" where the program of the political party is concerned, flows from the attempt to decree history, i. e., to set up, a priori, and regardless of time and space, the concept of what a program must be, and to label this "Marxist." When a program, under definite historical conditions, obviously advances the historical needs of the working class but is nevertheless "less" than that which the historical ultimatum would "like," it is sometimes accepted by them but labelled "minimum" IN CONTRAST to "Marxist." Actually such contrasting is impermissible because that program, conditioned as it must be by the life process, which moves social forces in a progressive direction, IS MARXIST.

Let us recall a historical example. When the Bolsheviks, under Lenin, divided the land equally among the peasantry, this was sharply criticized by Rosa Luxemburg as having nothing in common with Socialism. The progressive character of the program of the Bolsheviks is now obvious so that if we were to follow the methodology of those who contrast "minimum" with "Marxist" we must necessarily conclude that the Bolsheviks had such a non-Marxist "minimum" program. Actually it was Marxist in the fullest sense of the word and Trotsky had occasion to point out that if they had followed Rosa Luxemburg's "Marxism" they might have been left with this but in all probability without the proletarian power.

"It would be possible to speak of Socialist perspectives only after the establishment and successful preservation of the proletarian power. And this power could preserve itself only by giving determined co-operation to the peasant in carrying out his revolution. If the distribution of the land would strengthen the socialist government politically, it was then wholly justified as an immediate measure. The peasant had to be taken as the revolution found him. . . ." ("History of the Russian Revolution").

The gist of the matter is this: Revolutionists may, without illusions, adopt a program which does not contain all that they would like to see fulfilled but which advances the historical needs of society under a given set of circumstances, and such a program IS MARXIST even if it be labelled "minimum" to show its historical conditioning.

Question: Is the "Declaration of Principles" of the Workers Party a Marxist document?

Answer: YES! The "Declaration" contains the following points which are essential prerequisites for advancing the historical needs of the proletariat under present-day historical conditions: The recognition of the decline and reactionary nature of present day capitalism (imperialism); the recognition of the nature of the capitalist state power; the need for the overthrow of capitalism through a revolutionary struggle for power; for a vanguard party; for the dictatorship of the working class; for workers' councils (soviets); for a classless society; for a new International, for the defense of the Soviet Union; for a struggle against imperialist war and fascism; for a program of immediate demands and the united front; against reformism, Stalinism and centrism.

The Forgotten Men in America's No-Mans Land

Ward H. Rogers Tells Stirring Story Of Share-Croppers Battle

By HARRY STRANG

"The plight and struggle of the exploited sharecroppers of Arkansas are an integral part of the plight and struggle of the whole American working class. It is quite logical, therefore, that the Non-Partisan Labor Defense should be part of the committee supporting my appeal against a six-months' sentence for 'anarchy.' The Southern Tenant Farmers Union appreciates this support. I wish the Non-Partisan Labor Defense every success in its effort to build a nation-wide, fighting defense body including workers of many political affiliations."

Thus Ward H. Rogers, class war victim of the Arkansas plantation struggles now touring the East on behalf of his union, of whose executive he is a member, wound up a brief address to members of the New York N. P. L. D. at their reorganization meeting last week. Rogers, who will speak in many eastern cities during the next two months, was unanimously elected an honorary member of the new Executive Board of the N. P. L. D. at this meeting.

Interviewed after the meeting, Rogers told something of the situation in Arkansas, the fight of his union and his own persecution at the hands of the landowning class. "Our union is made up of share-croppers. A sharecropper is a man who owns nothing but his own labor-power. Generally, whether Negro or white, he has no vote. He lives on a great plantation and farms a little corner of it. The plantation owner furnishes him, that is gives him seed, a mule, tools and food, as well as a rotten clapboard shack. The cropper and his family work all year, planting, cultivating, picking.

NRA a New Burden

"He is supposed to get half the market price brought by the crop. That would be little enough. . . . but by the time the landlord gets through with his 'deducts'—whether reckoned honestly or with a crooked pencil—the cropper gets next to nothing. The new policies of Roosevelt mean nothing to the cropper—except that some of the most energetic among them have been forced off the land altogether to starve with the urban unemployed.

"Poverty, illiteracy, tuberculosis, pellagra, malaria, starvation . . . that is the life story of the share-croppers of Arkansas as well as of other parts of the country. In Arkansas the average family earns about $300 a year. Half the population of the state are living off that much—if you can call it living."

The croppers have been promised salvation a thousand times, but they never got a step nearer until they began to take their fate in their own hands. When Rogers and others began to organize the Southern Tenant Farmers Union last July, the croppers at Tyronea went for it in a big way. Today, according to Rogers, it has 10,000 members in 50 localities in eastern Arkansas, with a few in southern Missouri and eastern Oklahoma. It has held the largest mass meetings ever held in the history of Arkansas—and held them in the face of a fierce government-backed terror campaign launched by the landowners.

Color Issue Raised

"I used to hitch-hike when I went out organizing," Rogers related, "and it was quite safe. We started in the summer and the owners thought it was just a little pre-election stunt by political fakery. Election passed, and we went on organizing the union. We took in Negroes and white, mixed up in the same union. We showed the croppers that militant unity is the only road, that class matters rather than color. The union grew.

"Then the owners changed their attitude. They did not wait for us to strike. They raised the color issue. Then, before we could even pose demands, the terror began, and now I can't move around in North Eastern Arkansas safely even in a high-powered car. Deputies, night-riders, vigilantes are the exploiters' answer to the croppers' first move to improve their living conditions."

Rogers outlined some of the acts of terror perpetrated by the agents of the landowners. A few of them follow.

On November 20, 1934, W. H. Stultz, President of the Union, and three organizers were arrested and jailed while organizing Cross County. They were held in jail for 40 days. At the trial in February the judge ordered a verdict of "Not guilty." The union meeting was broken up by Sheriff Stacy who acted on orders from plantation owners near Parkin and Earle, Arkansas. A gang of gunmen accompanied Sheriff Stacy, including Floyd Roberts, planter, O. R. Belford, plantation rider (foreman), W. W. Hazlip, Justice of the Peace, and Walls Campbell, Justice of the Peace at Parkin, Arkansas. O. R. Belford took charge of A. B. Brooks, Negro minister and Chaplain of the Union and beat him so badly that it was necessary for Sheriff Stacy to secure medical treatment.

On January 26, 1935, Rogers was arrested at Marked Tree, while addressing a meeting of Negro and white croppers. Fred H. Stafford, deputy prosecuting Attorney for Poinsett County had been stationed with his stenographer at the edge of the crowd with the evident intention of framing someone. Rogers was tried for "anarchy" by a jury composed of 11 planters and business men and 1 tenant farmer. He was sentenced to six months and a fine of $500. The case is now on appeal.

Threaten Lynchings

On February 1 Lucien Koch and Robert Reed, both of Commonwealth College, Ark., were forcibly taken from a church at Gilmore, Arkansas by an armed mob carrying a rope with which to lynch them. Both were severely beaten and "pistol whipped." The mob was led by Jake Lewis, a plantation rider and Benton Moore, formerly an officer of the law in Crittenden County.

On February 2 Rogers, Koch, Atley Delaney and Robert Baker were arrested and jailed by J. Mays, city marshal of Lepanto, Arkansas.

They were terrorized while in jail by a mob of planters who threatened to lynch them. They were held in a flooded cell for three days without adequate food or fire.

On February 9 Powers Haggood, of the Socialist Party and several union officials were prevented from holding a meeting at Birdsong by planters and officers.

On March 6 Will Irving, share-cropper and union member was shot in the arm by a plantation rider named Lancaster.

On March 16 Norman Thomas, H. I. Mitchell, John Herling and Howard Kester were manhandled and slugged by a drunken mob of planters and officers at Birdsong. Bob Frazier of Tyronea, Arkansas, reported head of the recently organized Ku Klux Klan was in the mob. There were many prominent planters in the mob who took no active part except to encourage the others.

On March 21 a mob, many of whom are identified, attempted to lynch Rev. A. B. Brooks, Union Chaplain and organizer at Marked Tree, Arkansas. After the mob had failed on four occasions to lynch Brooks from his cabin they turned their guns upon his home and riddled it with bullets. Brooks is in hiding.

On March 22 W. H. Stultz was taken to the office of Chapman-Dewey Land Co. in Marked Tree by A. C. Spillings, Fred Bradsher and Bob Frazier. Stultz was told by Frazier and Bradsher that they would personally see to it that "Your brains are blown out and your body thrown into the St. Francis River."

On March 26 the home of C. T. Carpenter of Marked Tree, attorney for the union, was fired upon by vigilantes in Marked Tree.

Shoot Union Men

On April 1 Walter Moskop, one of the members of the trio which toured eastern cities in behalf of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union, escaped from his home when he was told by his eleven year old boy that the vigilantes were closing in on home to kill him. Andy Smith, riding boss for Chapman-Dewey, lay in hiding throughout the day near Moskop's home. Moskop is a native of Arkansas and has had his home in Marked Tree for years.

On April 2 the home of E. B. McKinney, another member of the party which toured the east in the interest of the union and vice-president of the union, was riddled with more than fifty bullets while his family and some friends were inside. Two men were badly shot and the entire household terrorized when the mob told them that unless they all left Marked Tree within 24 hours they would be killed.

The Federal government, that friend of the oppressed, sent an investigator to Arkansas, Mrs. Mary Connor Myers. She didn't like to make trouble for the plantation owners, but so terrible is the plight of the croppers, so obvious the crimes against them, that her report necessarily reflected some criticism of the landowners' methods. As a result, the Department of Agriculture and the AAA have suppressed the Myers report. Senator Robinson of Arkansas, Roosevelt's floor-leader in the upper House of Congress, uses his power to block all requests for the publication of the report. He vetoes any Federal intervention on behalf of the croppers.

The Federal government knows what is going on in Arkansas, and it wants nobody else to know about it or to do anything about it!

N. P. L. D. Aids Defense

Rogers stated that the only solution is further organization and further struggle. He said that since the terror was loosed against the croppers, the union has moved ahead. "Down in Arkansas we are fighters," he says. "When the owners began to fight the union, the croppers came to the sensible conclusion that a union must be a good thing for the croppers. So in they came, and no terror can stop them."

Rogers came before the higher court of Arkansas in October. His defense is being handled by a union committee which has the backing of the Ward H. Rogers Defense Committee, a joint body including the Workers Party, the Socialist Party, the I. W. W., the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, unions and other bodies. If this committee succeeds in raising the needed funds and bringing aggressive pressure successful fight was put up against the A. F. of L. bureaucrats in the automobile situation than ever before.

That General Motors knew whom it was fighting is attested by the fact that when Flint was threatened with a strike despite all the efforts of the company and the A. F. of L. to prevent it and the General Motors-controlled newspapers in that city launched a vicious campaign of red-baiting and incitement to violence, it was directed against the Workers Party and its national secretary.

That the A. F. of L. bureaucrats shared the company's view as to the enemy to be feared is attested by Francis Dillon's petulant exclamation when the Chevrolet workers barred him from speaking at their meeting: "Let Muste run their union for them if they want him."

2. The Party and the workers must nevertheless frankly face the fact that the strike was only in a very limited sense victorious. General Motors was compelled to negotiate directly with the Strike Committee elected by the rank and file. The Automobile Labor Board was clubbed into unconsciousness. Wage increases were obtained. They are small when the cost of living and General Motors' profits are taken into account. Real union recognition and definite assurance that a quietus will be put upon the company union was not obtained. Questions of seniority and abolition of the "merit clause" are left hanging in the air. Most deplorable is the fact that Toledo workers who have marched in the vanguard so often and to whom General Motors' workers in Norwood, Cleveland and Atlanta had pledged not to return to work until Toledo got its union contract—Toledo workers at the critical moment permitted themselves to be thrown into confusion and to vote to go back to work before settlements had been negotiated in these other plants. That was indeed a defeat and a humiliation.

3. The Toledo workers were subdued not by General Motors and not from any lack of courage and militancy on their own part, but chiefly by the perfidious treachery of Francis Dillon, the chief representative of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy in the situation. The lowest forms of trickery, the most brazen intimidation, were employed by him. For public consumption he pretended to urge the Norwood committee to call their men out in support of Toledo. Privately he told them to throw copies of Strike Truth into the waste basket. The New Militant has told the story of how he literally forced the Flint workers to stay in, condoned their working on scab transmissions, and insinuated that the Toledo strikers were yellow and unworthy of support. His henchmen beat up a Toledo union militant in Flint.

This mouther of phrases about "democratic" America and the "democratic" A. F. of L. told the Toledo strikers, the strike committee, the union executive board, BEFORE THE VOTE Monday night that if they did not vote to accept the company's compromise proposal, he would withdraw the union's charter! This is his notion of democratic procedure! Thus when the Chevrolet strikers had barred him from speaking at their meeting—correctly so in view of the slimy role he had enacted—he played, desperately and despicably, upon their very loyalty to their union, upon the desire of the new unionists to be a part of the A. F. of L., in order to put over a brazen piece of auto-cracy, which violated the most elementary principles of democratic unionism.

More openly and more sharply every fight for unionism is a fight against the present reactionary leadership of the labor movement. In every strike we must from the outset make it one of our principal tasks to expose it and undermine whatever confidence the rank and file may have in it. That it can be done was proved in Toledo. The Chevrolet strikers Monday night, after having read the New Militant issues with the exposure of the Akron sell-out and Dillon's performance at Flint on the picket lines that day hooted with derision at Mussolini Dillon's attempt to whip up a red scare against the W.P.

4. The next most important factor in the partial undoing of the Chevrolet strikers was the organizational and political inexperience of the strikers themselves and their leaders. Of the marvelous battle put up especially by Jimmy Roland and some of his colleagues we have already spoken. Nothing can dim that achievement, yet there were defects which must be avoided in the future. The importance of making a fight for a militant daily bulletin was not sensed and the Strike Committee backed down on it too readily when the union executive at Dillon's behest vetoed the idea. Technical details such as regular strike committee meetings, secretarial service, etc. were neglected. The calling of a conference of all striking locals was too long delayed. When Roland for the Strike Committee at last got the call out, Dillon was in a position to countermand it. The power of the reactionary forces in the labor movement, and the length to which they would go in betrayal, was underestimated. Strike Truth was the greatest weapon of the strike. It was a fundamental error to allow it to be suppressed.

5. What next? For the Chevrolet workers, loyalty to the union. No tearing up of union books. Closing of ranks, so that General Motors will understand that they are dealing with workers who have been tested and hardened in the fires of experience, who intend to build an ever stronger union, and who will fight at the drop of the hat against any attempt to discriminate against active unionists or to revive a company union. We know that this is the spirit of the Toledo workers.

For the militants in the Toledo Auto Union and especially those in the Chevrolet plant who in a few days were developed into such an intelligent, courageous, dashing force, the task now is solid organization. That organization must not be merely local. Through the contacts they have made in other centers, a national organization of progressive automobile unionists must be built. The time is ripe for it. This will give notice to Dillon, to Fred Schawke, the business agent who buckled under pressure, and all their ilk that this was the first round and that in the next they will not merely be hanging on the ropes but down for the count. No lesson of the General Motors strike, so brilliant yet so far from attaining the results that the courage and spirit of the workers had earned, is more basic than this that the progressives in the unions must learn, must discipline themselves, must organize, must become an independent force.

In the eyes of General Motors, of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, of the press of the nation, the Workers Party is in the vanguard of the battle for unionism in the automobile industry. We must, we shall, meet the challenge which that implies. Branches in the auto centers must redouble their work, recruit, project themselves into the struggle. New branches must be built where we have as yet no base. The National Committee must map out a comprehensive plan of action based on careful and constant study of the industry. All of us must toil and sacrifice to raise the material resources needed for the task and to make ourselves the trained revolutionists who can eventually lead the workers of the United States to the assault upon the citadels of company unionism and open shopper!

The Pulitzer Prize for Poison Pens

The Sacramento Bee wins the Pulitzer prize for the year's best newspaper reporting. The prize is awarded by a board of editors and professors of journalism, on the advice of the publishers of big capitalist newspapers, such as Adolph S. Ochs of the Times, whose recent death, Karl Tadek of the Communist International tells us, should be mourned by "newspaper men of every class."

Not even Hearst's notorious San Francisco Examiner printed more lies per column-inch about the recent Sacramento criminal syndicalism trial than did the Bee.

For example, when the defense counsel told the jury that a conviction would be used by reactionaries to renew terrorism against workers (a prophesy which came true a few days after when the cops told Mike Plesh, an acquitted defendant, to get out of town or be beaten up), the Bee reported that defense counsel had threatened "red terror" in the event of convictions!

The closing argument by Attorney Albert Goldman of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense so profoundly affected several jurors that they held out against convictions for 66 hours. When he concluded, he was given a hand-written note by a Bee reporter explaining that "for reasons which will be obvious," the report in the Bee would not represent what the reporter really thought. The Bee did not dare report Goldman's argument honestly; it was afraid of awakening sympathy for the defendants.

The campaign of lies against the defendants, their ideas, organizations and counsel, created the atmosphere in which reactionaries on the jury could bulldoze Juror McFutire into a horse-trade which sent innocent workers to prison and gave an impetus to reaction. The Sacramento Bee, which might better be called the Sacramento Viper, led the swarm of loathsome creatures whose hissing and buzzing dominated the jurors' "deliberations."

For its efficiency in wielding a reactionary poison pen and bending to its ends the talents of its kept reporters, the Bee gets the Pulitzer Prize and thousands of capitalist editors envy the achievement.

There can be no over-estimation of the importance of the workers' own press to counteract the poison pens of the bosses' kept journalists and kept journals. The New Militant alone, with its honest, accurate weekly reports, gave a true and complete picture of the Sacramento trial. Build the New Militant and help scotch the Sacramento Viper!

Stalin's Treason in France

Some Startling Quotations from L'Humanite of Paris

wish to conquer war. (L'Humanite, April 4)

Péri and Pertinax

Blum rates Pertinax, of the Echo de Paris, among the "awkward friends" of the U.S.S.R. (Populaire, April 21) because, bourgeois realist that he is, he considers the question of an alliance with the U.S.S.R. from the point of view of relative force, without attaching any importance to vague promises. Pertinax is solely concerned with "French" interests. If he were solely concerned with "Russian" interests he would no doubt write as Péri, true friend of the U.S.S.R., writes:

"Others believe that M. Laval together with John Simon would be disposed to replace the project of an Eastern Pact by an Air Alliance open to all the signatories of the Locarno Treaty, the U.S.S.R., and the Little Entente. They boast of having obtained the support of Poland and of Germany for this system.

"Well, without a second thought we can say, this system has nothing to do with peace. Those who support it would precipitate the very rule of cannons which the masses wish to avert at any cost. Aggression will not be discouraged if the sole risk to the aggressor is the risk of not being actively assisted. Passivity by itself is an encouragement to adventures.

"In the concrete case under consideration, the system invented by M. Laval would limit itself to an agreement that Germany might carry on its Eastern projects, that France would lend no assistance, but at the same time would offer no opposition." (L'Humanite, April 4).

Péri and the C.P. of France, from the point of view of the national interests of the Soviet bureaucracy, and Pertinax from the point of view of the national interests of the bourgeoisie advance, in fact, the same political line.

It, as Thorez has informed us since July 1934, it is the Communists who love their country well, it follows that those who do not love their country, the bourgeoisie, are "the traitors."

This is just what Cachin informs us in an article for April 10, in which he concludes:

"We shall tear off the masks of the exploiters of the country, the worst enemies of the French people, without failing in our duty of defending the peace and bread of their victims."

Cachin, who is a past master when it comes to traitors, is not fully understood by the true patriots as appears from his denunciation of Taittinger:

"Taittinger, the fascist, divulges with impunity official diplomatic and military communications which he receives in his official positions on the various furnishes in parliament. Thus he furnishes Hitler with new arguments for rearmament, and carries coals to the fires of fascism across the Rhine. A 'patriot' who conducts himself in such a treasonable manner, at the same time advocates repression against the anti-fascists!"

From which we conclude that the country, at present under the leadership of the bourgeoisie, does not understand where its real interests lie.

P. Vaillant-Couturier moreover makes no effort to conceal it from the country, he undertakes a crusade "To the rescue of French culture."

"If the proletariat, according to Marx, 'has no fatherland' they have now as internationalists something to defend: that is the cultural patrimony of France, the spiritual wealth, the works of its artists, its workers, its artists, and its thinkers." (L'Humanite, April 13)

In other words: if the proletariat has no fatherland, nevertheless for L'Humanite it has had one for some time—the French patrimony. "Conquer the country" for Cachin and P. Vaillant-Couturier means to reconquer, by means of badtridents in L'Humanite, their positions of 1914.

The Announcement of Treason
From such equivocations can come nothing but treason. Unhappily for the proletariat, the C.I. and its various sections have just advertised their treason, without any equivocation or shame.

The duty of the proletariat in case of war is outlined in the following appeal of the European C. I.'s of April 18:

"We salute the progress made in the military field by the only workers' land, the progress in reinforcing the red army of workers and peasants, a true guarantee of peace, we salute every strengthening of the frontiers of the socialist fatherland; we will support, in case of counter-revolutionary war against the socialist fatherland, the red army of the Soviet Union by every means, and we will struggle for the defeat of every power that engages in war against the Soviet Union.

"We will aid by every means, even by the sacrifice of our lives, the victory of the Soviet Socialist Union in its war against all those who attack the land of socialism."

The proletariat is no longer to struggle for the defeat of its own imperialist government, but for the defeat of "German imperialism and its allies."

In other words: the French proletariat will go to war hand in hand with its own bourgeoisie against German imperialism for the defeat of the latter. That is what is known as national defense.

The appeal of the C.P.F. on the occasion of the municipal elections confirms us (L'Humanite, April 21):

"The most sacred duty of the proletarians of the entire world is the defeat of aggressors against the Soviet Union and the defeat of all the aggressors' allies."

"The communists want the UNIFICATION OF ALL FRENCHMEN, who work in the factories, docks, offices, stores, laboratories, schools, universities, and the workers of all nationalities and races who share the same suffering and the same hopes."

There we are, twice warned. Blind are the workers who do not immediately draw the correct lessons and the consequences thereof.

relentlessly that no resistance is to be offered when war begins. The Social Democrats of Germany and France voted for the war credits of their respective Governments on the Fourth of August, 1914. Following that they became recruiting sergeants for the war.

The Social Democrats carried out their historic betrayal under the slogan, "Defense of the Fatherland." The Stalinists march on the same path under the banner of "Socialism in One Country." The content of the actions and the results are the same.

Lenin in his time denounced the League of Nations as a "thieves kitchen" and the Versailles Peace as a brigands' peace and the breeder of a new war. Stalin joins the League of Nations and pledges the Red Army to defend the status quo established by the Versailles Treaty.

Lenin said: turn the imperialist war into a civil war. Stalin says: Do not interfere with the military operations of your own capitalists.

assembly and organization for the workers: use of public places for meetings and demonstrations without police interference.

Follows an analysis of the Farmer-Labor Party, its inability to fulfill the tasks of the working class, the attainment of the socialist society. "The Farmer Labor Party is not truly a revolutionary workers party, nor can it become one. It will not serve the workers when the big bosses decide to take away the rights which are looked upon by the people as 'constitutional guarantees.' The Farmer-Labor Party puts its faith in parliamentary debate, which the capitalists have shown they will abandon the moment it goes against them."

"Workers of Minneapolis: Elect the Farmer-Laborites to office but watch their every move, do not trust them. They will serve the workers' movement only if the workers' organizations force them to."

The leaflet concludes with an appeal to join the Workers Party, to build the revolutionary party and the revolutionary International.

St. Louis Gas Strike is Solid

The daily strike paper: A certain Republican hack, Mr. Easterday, the City Engineer, decided to cut a gas line with scab labor. He arrived on the day in question at the pit where the cutting was to be made with a carload of police, and a scab plumber, a certain Shaw.

We quote: "Meanwhile the scab had gone down and another Union Brother standing on the opposite side of the ditch tried to persuade Shaw not to scab. Easterday thereupon lost his head, and running around to where this brother was standing, he tried to push him into the ditch. He succeeded in upsetting his balance, but went down into the ditch with him; and whereas this Brother landed on the water main, Easterday flopped right into the mud hole at the bottom of the ditch. A scab made a rush at this Brother and made a pass at him with a sledge hammer. The Brother, sitting astride the water main, saw him coming and let go with both feet, catching the scab square in the face and sending him reeling into the mud hole with City Engineer Easterday. When these two worthless final wadded out of the mud hole they were a sight for sore eyes.

In connection with this question comrade Cannon took occasion to point out again that the trade union policy advocated by comrade Zack is not the policy of the Workers Party. "A party that wants to be taken seriously in the labor movement today," he said, "must raise the slogan: 'Deeper into the A. F. of L. unions!' The policy represented, for example, by comrade Zack, who joined the Workers Party, is not and cannot be the policy of the Workers Party. An impression was sought to be created that Zack's entry into the party signified the adoption of his trade union policy. This is not the case at all.

"I want to take this opportunity to say very decisively that the opinions expressed by comrade Zack in his controversy with the C. P. on the trade union question are not our position. This ought to be made clear if there is the slightest misconception about it, for the trade union question is indeed the key question of the approach of a revolutionary party to the masses. Our conceptions the trade union question are the generalizations of a very extensive experience in the American labor movement, as well as in the international field. The position of the Marxists on this question have been tested a thousand times. No new inventions are needed."

The working masses are searching the political line which will prevent war, or if the war breaks out in spite of the efforts of the proletariat, will accomplish the overthrow of the capitalist regime, which is responsible for war, and substitute the socialist regime for it.

We wish to show merely by quotations from L'Humanite, the daily paper of the Communist Party of France, which can easily be verified by anyone, what is the real political line of the Communist International toward war.

The international line of the 3rd International is thus defined in the sixth condition of admission:

"All parties desiring to affiliate with the III International must denounce not only social patriotism, but social pacifism with its falseness and hypocrisy as well; they must systematically reveal to the working class that without revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, no international tribunal of arbitration, no debate on the reduction of armaments, no democratic reorganization by the League of Nations, can preserve humanity from imperialist war."

That was the line of yesterday. Today, since the C. I. has been reconstructed (after the expulsion of the Leninists) on the dogma of "Socialism in one country," that is to say, independently of the world revolution, the international line of the 3rd International is the following:

Defense of the peace policy of the U.S.S.R., consisting of proposals to disarm addressed to the imperialist nations, and mutual assistance pacts against "any aggressor."

The Peace Policy of the C. I.

The political line is based on the following premise: there are imperialist nations interested in peace, and others interested in war.

"We must know," says Péri in L'Humanite, April 11, 1935, "if the powers who are not interested in war will assure peace through promises of mutual assistance, or if they will fall into line with the plans for a new division of Europe conceived by A. Hitler."

From this flows the whole line of the C. I. Take Péri again in L'Humanite, April 16, 1935:

"What formula alone can make warlike enterprise most difficult under the present system? The best formula, it is evident, would be the general or partial disarmament proposed and defended by the U.S.S.R., but opposed by all the other powers. Failing a general reduction of armaments WHICH THE U.S.S.R. HAS NO INTENTION OF RENOUNCING the Soviet government and the proletariat of all European countries with it believes a system of pacts whereby the signatories agree to boycott an aggressor nation, would place the greatest obstacles in the way of war. We must see things as they are and realize that any other contractual formula is vain or dangerous."

Under these conditions what is the task of the C.I.? To join Soviet diplomacy in an attempt to convince the various imperialisms "which are interested in peace" of the necessity of mutual assistance pacts.

The following shows how the organ of the French C.P. goes about the task (From L'Humanite, April 2, 1935):

"But what then does the National Union Government of France think of the attitude of the National Union Government of Britain? It is no longer a secret that Laval is lending his ear to Hitler's propositions. Does he believe that an accord with the Nazis against the Soviet Union would benefit French imperialism? Is he forgetting that the mass movement against war and for the defense of the Soviet Union is much stronger in France than in England?"

"Has he already forgotten the time, not so distant, when the French imperialist government was able to pacify the mass movement of the workers and soldiers for the dictatorship of the proletariat only by stopping immediately the war against the Soviets?"

In other words, if French imperialism wishes to survive the war, let it lend an ear to the advice of the pupils of Stalin, let it conclude a pact with the Soviet Union.

To help Laval "understand," Péri becomes positively lively and pressing:

"In the name of the Franco-British Entente, Pierre Laval has lent himself to those criminal evasions which we have so often denounced here and which we must denounce today more vigorously than ever."

"Everything indicates that Laval has given up the Eastern Pact and mutual assistance. The Minister of Foreign Affairs has deliberately renounced the only formula capable of preserving peace and putting a stop to armament. His deplorable attitude earned him the felicitations of the Volkische Beobachter yesterday. But it will rouse against him the anger of all those who sincerely

Illinois Workers Plan New Hunger March

HIT SALES TAX Will Fight to Last Ditch Says IWA Leader

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—A call for a mass mobilization of the unemployed and relief workers of Illinois for a march on the state capital, Tuesday, May 21, was issued tonight by the Illinois Workers Alliance.

The instructions issued to 266 units in 81 counties were released following an emergency conference of the state board members held here. The call, issued by the executive board and signed by Edward C. Morgan, state chairman of the Illinois Workers Alliance said that "the unemployed refuse to starve while there are dozens of ways to raise relief funds."

"The state executive board feels that it is absolutely necessary to vigorously oppose the attempts to starve the unemployed and dispossessed of Illinois," the call stated. "The fight against the sales tax and for the reopening of relief stations continues. We will fight to the last ditch in defending the bread and beans of our people."

Calls for National Support
The call of the state executive board of the Alliance was supported by Paul A. Rasmussen, Milwaukee, national secretary of the Workers Alliance of America with which the I.W.A. is affiliated, and Gerry Allard, Springfield, leader of two previous marches staged by the unemployed.

Rasmussen departed for Chicago and Milwaukee today pledging support of the national movement of the jobless in the fight to reopen the relief stations in this state. "The courageous expression of our Illinois membership in its effective resistance against the closing of relief stations and in opposing the sales tax is commendable," Rasmussen said. "It has aroused the membership in all parts of the country. It is our intention to throw the full support of every affiliate and sympathetic group behind the march of the Illinois Workers Alliance."

"The Workers Alliance of America calls upon all trades unions and other labor organizations to support the fight of our state division. It is imperative that an iron front of the jobless and employed workers be effected in this march. This is a fight that will decide whether the common people of Illinois are to be reduced to further exploitation or whether they will bring to a stop the disgraceful and abhorrent program of a reactionary class government."

New Castle Jobless Storm Relief Office

By FRED RAYBURN
NEW CASTLE, Pa., May 13.—Despite attempts of local and state police to break their ranks the Co-operative Workers of America are continuing to picket relief offices here. The C. W. of A. is a local unemployed organization with branches throughout Lawrence and adjoining counties. The picketing started on May 2 with the demand for adequate cash relief and the stopping of evictions.

On Thursday evening, May 9, while Governor Earle was preparing to address the American Legion in the "Cathedral," a delegation of the C. W. of A. demanded his appearance before them. The attempt of his secretary to speak in his behalf was turned down by the delegation. Smoked out, the Governor appeared and arranged a meeting at his office in Harrisburg on May 13.

While the delegation was in Harrisburg interviewing the Governor a mass demonstration took place at the local relief offices. George Papcun of the Workers Party was the principal speaker. In a spirited and timely address Papcun brought the workers a message of struggle.

A mass meeting is planned by the Workers Party, New Castle branch, in the near future on the program of the Workers Party with comrade Papcun as the speaker.

A. J. Muste to Broadcast On Radio May 30, 10 PM

Comrade A. J. Muste, National Secretary of the Workers Party, will speak over station WJZ on an NBC hook-up on Thursday, May 30 at 10 P.M. He will represent the revolutionary point of view of the Workers Party in a symposium in which Norman Thomas of the Socialist Party and Lawrence Dennis, Fascist, will represent opposing opinions. All readers of the New Militant and friends of the W. P. are urged to tune in on this broadcast. It is the first time a leading spokesman of the party has given its position over a nationwide hook-up.

ILGW Pledges To Support Ill. Relief Battle

Prompt action in protest against the stopping of all unemployment relief in Illinois, was taken today by Dressmakers Union Local 22 of the I.L.G.W.U., an organization of 30,000 workers, one of the largest in the American Federation of Labor. In response to the appeal issued by the Workers Alliance, a national organization of the unemployed, Charles S. Zimmerman, manager of the dressmakers union, immediately wired to Governor Henry Horner of Illinois, vigorously opposing the stopping of relief to the millions of jobless in Illinois and pledging the support of his powerful organization in the fight. The telegram follows in full:

"Thirty Thousand Members of Dressmakers Union Local Twenty two, I.L.G.W.U., affiliated with the A. F. of L., protest emphatically stopping relief to Illinois jobless. We place our strength and influence behind Illinois Workers Alliance in its fight against hunger and misery and join them in their demand that relief stations be reopened."

A similar protest has been sent to Harry Hopkins, head of the FERA in Washington. At the same time, the dressmakers union sent a message of solidarity and support to Gerry Allard of the Illinois Workers Alliance in Springfield, Illinois.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—350 union bakers went on strike this morning, demanding a signed contract which guarantees an increase of $1.65 in the weekly wage scale, elimination of compulsory insurance, and a reduction in the number of day-rate hours.

The strike will also affect 400 union bread salesmen, who will have no bread to deliver. Five of the smaller bakeries have accepted the terms of the union bakers.

Wage Levels Hit New Low as FDR 'Redistributes' Wealth

NEW YORK (FP).—$21.86! That's the weekly wage of America's average factory worker after two years of the New Deal. It's the figure for March, 1935, as reported by the U. S. Department of Commerce.

Skilled workers received a little more than that—$24.25. But unskilled found, on the average, only $17.85 in their pay envelopes, and women workers in industry were paid an even smaller amount, $15.47.

The general average has risen since March, 1933. Then it was $14.56. A year later it had climbed to $20.53. In February of this year it reached $22.09, but since then it has slipped again.

This $21.86 represents a monetary wage boost, but only a doubtful gain in real wages. Food prices have jumped at least 35 percent during the same period, government statistics reveal. Clothing and home furnishings cost about 25 percent more than they did when Roosevelt came into office, and rent and other

Youth Confab Swayed by SYL In Minneapolis

By REGINALD L. BURKE
MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Left wing delegates acting in concert with the Spartacus Youth League in a surprise attack on the reactionary sponsors of the Minnesota "Youth Today Conference" succeeded in wresting away control of the conference.

Overriding the "harmless" plans of the Minneapolis Community Fund, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the Junior League, and other individual capitalist and social bigwigs, they passed resolutions favoring the right of youth to strike, opposing militarization, and calling for a solution of the capitalist impasse by the socialist planned economy. A revealing document of the conference was the refusal of Young Communist League delegates to vote for the resolution for a socialist economy.

The Spartacus Youth League of Minneapolis issued a pamphlet which was passed to the five hundred delegates as they entered the Hotel Hotel where the conference was held. The pamphlet pointed out that the conference was part of a nation-wide move "to mobilize the energy and enthusiasm of youth for the upholding of the very social system which today dooms millions of young men and women to a future of impotence and despair."

Purpose of Conference
The real purpose of the conference, said the pamphlet, was to demonstrate to wealth contributors that the various social agencies, such as the Community Fund, fulfilled a conservative function in diverting the youth to harmless pursuits.

"The sponsors of the program have very shrewdly arranged it, so they hope, so as to annul the natural radicalism of youth, which if given free play would bring all their plans to naught."

The pamphlet then proceeded to point out how the conference should be organized so that the control could be wrested from the reactionaries.

The pamphlet created a sensation, both among the youth and among the sponsors. The latter, taken completely at a loss, tried several pitiful tricks to prevent its circulation. Social workers and members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce came to the distributors and said, "These are just the things we want: give us all you got; we want to distribute them in the meeting for you." Their devices failed, however, to stop the distribution.

Nor did any of the parliamentary tricks of the reactionaries in the meeting itself avail them; the convention swung solidly behind the progressive forces, who good naturedly tolerated the presence of Walter Pitkin (famous windbag, author of "Life Begins at Forty," "How to Get a Job," and other humorous works) who was supposed

WINSLOW N. HALLETT

Allentown CLU Backs Teacher In College Fight

N.P.L.D. Organizes Wide Campaign for Reinstatement

ALLENTOWN, Pa., May 22.—Professor Winslow N. Hallett of Cedar Crest College, dismissed for his labor activities by the Board of Trustees, has been joined in his fight for reinstatement in the local college by the Allentown Central Trades and Labor Council and the Pennsylvania Unemployed Leagues.

The central body appointed a committee of four to see the college trustees. If Professor Hallett is not reinstated by May 23, the central body is committed to launching a campaign against the college. Professor Hallett, treasurer of local 359 of the American Federation of Teachers, is a delegate to the Central Trades and Labor Council.

P.U.L. Protests

The Pennsylvania Unemployed League passed a resolution denouncing the dismissal of Dr. Hallett as a move against organized labor and notified its county organizations to take action. Dr. Hallett is active in the Lehigh County Unemployed League.

Florence Curtis Hanson, national secretary of the American Federation of Teachers, has pledged the support of the national organization to Dr. Hallett's fight for reinstatement. The Allentown and Philadelphia teachers locals have condemned the college trustees. Through the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, North Dakota State College local of the teachers has pledged its support of Dr. Hallett and is rallying Northwestern labor organizations to his fight.

President William F. Curtis and the Board of Trustees of Cedar Crest have refused to give any reason for Dr. Hallett's dismissal. The formal notice contained no charges. The American Association of University Professors, the American Civil Liberties Union, and the American Federation of Teachers have all requested a written statement of the reasons for his dismissal but have been met with stony silence by the trustees. In conversations with Dr. Hallett, however, President Curtis definitely stated that his teaching ability was in no way in question, and admitted that his work in the unions and the unemployed organization were the basis for the trustees' action.

Church Considers Case

The Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church, with which Cedar Crest College is connected, is now in session, and liberal ministers have pledged themselves to bring Dr. Hallett's case on the floor of the convention. The Church League for Industrial Democracy, the Non-Partisan Labor Defense and the Committee on Academic Freedom of the Civil Liberties Union have sent telegrams urging the synod to demand Dr. Hallett's reinstatement.

Letters of protest should be sent to the President and Board of Trustees, Cedar Crest College, Allentown, Pa.

HARTFORD, Conn. (FP)—Wage boosts have ended a 17-day strike of more than 1,500 union teamsters in the Connecticut valley.

Central Union Slams Dillon For Settlement

Worse than Hitler Toledo Body Finds

TOLEDO, May 17.—The Toledo Union Leader, organ of the Toledo Central Labor Union, bears sharp witness to the bare-faced treason of Green, Dillon and Co. in the Chevrolet strike. In addition to the story of the settlement, the paper bears a three column editorial headed "Mussolini—Hitler—Dillon."

To quote: "The strikers voted not to allow Dillon the privilege of addressing them until after the vote was taken. When Mr. Dillon came into the meeting hall the animosity felt against him by the workers manifested itself in loud boos from all sides... he flew into a violent rage and told the officers of the union that the charter of the union was revoked... when Taylor tried to pacify him he showed even more plainly his inability to stand the gaff... he left the hall amid the boos of the workers who bitterly resented his autocratic and dictatorial attitude."

Dillon's Dictatorship

"His dictatorship however had the desired effect. The officers of the union, fearing this one man who had the power to take away from thousands of workers the union charter that they had paid for in strife suffering and money, pleaded with him to return."

"Never in the history of the labor movement have I witnessed such a case of domination, such an arrogant disregard of the rights of workers or such a positive dictatorship over free Americans as was shown by this representative of the A. F. of L. who is hired out of money paid into the Federation treasury by per capita tax on the rank and file."

"Dillon was not alone in assisting the writing of an agreement which was 95 percent in favor of the company. J. A. Wilson, ex-president of the Pattern Makers Association of America, was sent here according to reports as the direct representative of President Green."

"The sabotage practiced against the workers by these high hat, well paid and well fed individuals beggars description in polite language."

In Fitting Company

"Mussolini, Hitler, nor any of the present dictators could possibly take a more arrogant stand. The cheap landing of Mr. Kouslen (vice president of the G.M.C.) through the public press by Mr. Dillon had the subversive ring of a political job holder. It is now up to the local union in Toledo and elsewhere to find out from President Green if hired organizers are placed in the field under his instructions to act as dictators, and to force the rank and file to vote as dictated under pain of being put out of the labor movement."

"If that is the policy of those elected as officers in the A. F. of L., the quicker we workers know it the sooner we will be able to start a fight for American freedom by purging the labor movement of dictators who live off the per capita tax of we workers."

COOLIE WAGES Low Scales Will Drive All Union Rates Down

"Fear of Strikes" Disturbs Bill Green — Would Rather Talk

In the days when black slavery was legal in the South, the slaves had security. They were worth something to their owners; and as a consequence were fed, clothed and sheltered, and given medical care, so that they might be strong and healthy.

The work relief rates just issued by "our" President Roosevelt as a part of his "security" program legalize a new slavery in the South, a slavery of starvation and nakedness, without shelter, without medical care, an endless, hopeless, dismal, slavery that guarantees to millions of "free" Americans an existence worse than that of Indian Pariahs.

The Very Minimum

$19.00 per month is not the minimum wage, as the newspapers headline. Unskilled Southern workers may consider themselves lucky to receive $19 a month. Not only has Harry Hopkins the right to vary wages within ten per cent, which immediately sets the minimum at $17.10 instead of $19.00, but the wages are not paid "for time lost because of voluntary absence, illness, completion or postponement of project, or permanent dismissal."

A worker trying to support himself, his wife and his children, to pay rent, buy food and clothes for all on a wage of $19 a month may be excused if he is ill from "undernourishment" or "exposure." But if he is ill his pay ceases, and he must go through the red tape of getting back on relief. The worker fails ill because his wages are too low—according to Roosevelt's "security" program the remedy is to cut his wages, and let the man and his family starve to death while waiting to get on relief.

"The workers' wages depend on 'the completion or postponement of the project.' Every time a job is finished, or postponed by some governmental whim, the worker loses even his pittance during the period when he is neither working nor on relief."

$19 a month is not at all the minimum. It is cut in the provisions of the order itself to $17.10, and will be cut in practice to even lower scales.

Truly the slaves of the old South were fortunate not to live in the era of Roosevelt "Security."

Lower Everywhere

$19 per month is the lowest scale in the lowest zone, the deep South. If the scale will be lower in practice there, it will be proportionately lower throughout the country.

In order to bring every last possible penny out of the unemployed three divisions have been created. The country is divided into four zones, the wages varying according to zone. Labor has been divided into four categories, unskilled, intermediate, skilled, and professional, wages varying according to category. Finally the places of work within the zones are divided according to population, cities of over 100,000, cities of over 50,000, towns of over 25,000, over 5000, and under 5000, wages varying again according to size of the city.

Thus $19 is set for work in zone 1, for unskilled labor in towns of less than 5000.

The highest wage, for professionals, in zone 1, the North, in cities of more than 100,000 is $94 a month.

How Scales Were Determined

The wage scales, say the reports, were determined by checking wage data with other wage information, including civil works earnings, weekly earnings in private industry, construction wage data, etc."

Apparently the procedure followed, was to obtain the lowest possible wage rates from every source, divide the resultant average by two, and proclaim the result as a profound study of the wage levels of workers.

A comparison of wage scales of the Roosevelt relief program with the scales on the PWA shows a catastrophic drop. Under the PWA in the South, zone 4, unskilled labor received 40 cents an hour, skilled labor $1.00. Under the new "security" program unskilled labor receives 19 cents per hour in cities of over 100,000 (12 cents an hour in rural districts), skilled labor receives 42 cents and hour in cities

Key Lumber Plants Walk Out Industry Tied Up on West Coast

SEATTLE (FP).—With the industry's key plants in Longview finally affected by the strike, 35,000 timber workers are confidently holding their ranks firm.

In an attempt to keep workers at the Long Bell and Weyerhaeuser mills at Longview from going out, the operators offered a peace proposal granting 50 cents an hour, a 40-hour week with time and a half, and recognition of the Sawmill and Timber Workers Union, but not the closed shop. This was rejected by an 8 to 1 vote and 3,000 mill workers walked out.

Strikers are demanding union recognition, abolition of the blacklist, 75 cents an hour, and a 5-day, 30-hour week. Refusal of the Longview workers to accept a separate agreement has strengthened the sentiment for a uniform agreement for the whole industry.

Longview pulp, paper and sulphite workers expect to be out by May 29, the present contract expiring on May 26. The local has already sent a resolution to all pulp locally calling for strike action on May 29.

Unemployed organizations in the Pacific northwest are cooperating by taking care of picketing employment agencies and relief stations and by instructing all workers not to take jobs in struck mills.

inevitably arise. What was the leadership and guidance, what the program, what the forces that determined the course of these events? Further, and more significant, what were the means and methods employed by this leadership?

Role of the W. P.

The answer to the first question is generally known and conceded. All competent observers for the capitalist press of the nation, including such an informed reporter as Louis Stark of the New York Times, attributed the leading influence to the Workers Party. It was publicly recognized by Francis Dillon, national A. F. of L. organizer, who fought the progressives and temporarily curbed the strike. It has been openly acknowledged directly and indirectly by official representatives of both the Socialist and the Communist parties in Toledo.

More vital for the future guidance of the American working class, however, is the answer to the second question. That answer lies correctly not merely in the immediate and apparent events preceding and during the strike, but in events which are rooted in the entire course of the labor movement in Toledo for the past two years. It derives entirely from the activities and development of the Workers Party in Toledo.

Toledo Before Auto-Lite

Until the time of the Auto-Lite strike of last May, Toledo to most people was merely a stop-over between Cleveland and Detroit or the place where a boxer named Dempsey gained immortality by successfully pounding with his fists a fellow named Jess Willard. Its only other claim to distinction was the fact that all but one of its ten banks had collapsed two years before Roosevelt stabilized the banking system of the nation by closing all the banks. In 1932, 60 to 70 percent of its formerly gainfully employed population was unemployed.

Toledo was also a notorious cheap-labor, "scab" town. Whatever unions were in existence were weak and ineffectual craft unions among the skilled trades. Year after year they continued in their sleepy and ineffectual way. There was no expansion, vitality or activity.

Latent Power of Workers

For a labor movement built on exclusive and craft lines solely, totally unconcerned about developing genuine power so long as they could fortify the comparative handful in their own ranks, the fact that Toledo was the glass and auto-parts center of America was not even recognized. They did not know, or were unconcerned about the fact that a stoppage of production in even a few plants in Toledo would be sufficient to paralyze automobile production, and indirect-organized protest. We will never get that through the I.L.D. and it is a misfortune that the New Militant, even for a moment, should have given substance to the illusion that the I.L.D. is not without its virtues.

The I.L.D. is the defense arm of the Communist Party, and that speaks worlds for its character. Whole sections of the labor movement, political and economic, which have no defense arm should long ago have united to create a joint defense body including many party and non-party viewpoints. This is the object of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense which is moving steadily toward that goal.

With fraternal greetings,

Tobin Skunk Should Have C P Rat for Pal

Editor, New Militant:
The New Militant recently had a cartoon showing the Citizens Alliance of Minneapolis taking its pet skunk, Dan Tobin, for an airing. Naturally, the cartoonist showed the workers of the city drawing back in disgust. But not everybody has shrunk from the odor given out by Tobin. The Communist Party has launched new attacks on the leaders of Local 574, insinuating that Tobin is justified in kicking that glorious local out of the Teamsters Brotherhood. The cartoonist should show a little Stalinist rat snuggling up close to Skunk Tobin and showing real appreciation of the poisonous odor which all the reactionary cabal hopes will stifle the genuinely revolutionary elements in the Minneapolis labor movement. Hats of course do not go about on leashes, but sometimes they are trained by masters who sit far away when they do their little tricks.

The Party on the Flying Trapeze

Editor, New Militant:
The following is a quotation from United Action, organ of the Communist Party, Minnesota District, offices. Among those who were placed in office was Jimmy Roland, the fighting leader of the Toledo Chevrolet strikers, who from the beginning was a leader of the progressive forces. Progressives were elected to positions on their executive shop committees of the different plants which were organized and were placed upon the general executive committee of the local. The W. P. inside and outside of the union began to expose the policies of Ramsey and Bossler. Its members built up an air-tight case based on iron facts with which to lay open their anti-union activities. When the progressives were organized to sufficient strength, they placed charges against these corrupt leaders, fought them openly on the floor of the union and had them ousted from office.

In Passing

In this connection, a passing word should be given to the stupid charges voiced in the Daily Worker editorial of May 6, titled "Rene-gades in Toledo." This editorial, obviously written in New York by some hack entirely ignorant of the Toledo situation, asserted that the "American Workers Party" was making an alliance with Ramsey, "an A. F. of L. official," to split the strike. This is not merely a deliberate lie, but a silly one, since everyone in Toledo knows that there is no such official as Ramsey in the union, and that it was the W. P. members and progressives in the union who forced his ousting eight months ago.

Following the cleaning up of the union, the progressives pushed forward a program of intensive organization in the union. Plant after plant was organized, signed contracts secured from the employers, and the union's position consolidated and company unionism smashed in all the plants already organized. The militancy which the workers had learned in the Auto-Lite strike held good. Violations of the terms of the contracts by the bosses met with immediate and strong action. Inside and departmental strikes were numerous. The union men were constantly vigilant in the maintenance of their rights.

General Motors Next

One plant alone remained, in particular, to be organized. But this plant was a harder nut to crack than the others had been. This was not the plant of some local capitalists. It was a part of that huge network belonging to the seemingly all-powerful General Motors Corp., the Chevrolet Motor Ohio Company, key transmission plant for the Chevrolet Corp. Workers in this plant had always shunned unionism. They would not even accept leaflets. Not more than a small handful had ever been induced even to attend an open union meeting. The spy-system, the blacklist, the company union reigned supreme. But forces were at work inside and outside of the Chevrolet plant which all the power and intimidation of General Motors could not offset.

"Walter Frank deserves the support of the voters in his ward. He has been known for a long time as an active and militant trade unionist. The bureaucrats do not like his fighting qualities, but these qualities give assurance that he will fight to carry out his pre-election program. He is not a member of the Communist Party, and the Party has had many serious disagreements with him; but there can be no doubt about his sincerity and willingness to serve the interests of the workers, and on this basis the Communist Party endorses his candidacy."

The following is a quotation from the Rank and File Federationist, organ of the Communist Party's A. F. of L. "Rank and File Committee," July, 1934, issue:
"To Walter M. Frank, secretary of the Lathers No. 190, who for years proclaimed himself as leader of the militant rank and file, goes the official credit for leadership in the sellout (of the May drivers' strike in Minneapolis) . . . When Walter Frank, the great 'left-wing' heard of the death of a special policeman, C. A. Lyman, vice-president of the American Ball Co., he rushed to the battleground and announced the truth to take effect immediately though officially it did not take effect till nine hours later. Mr. Frank rebuked the victorious pickets for cheering. He wept for the death of the special policeman."
What do you say, Walter? We are speechless.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LOBE

The battle of the Toledo Chevrolet workers seems to have set off the spark of another strike wave. In the Northwest the lumber workers have succeeded in shutting down operations. The Independent Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, on strike at Camden, plans to spread its fight all over the Atlantic Coast. Philadelphia teamsters tied up the city's food supply in a surprise walkout. And now comes word from Washington that all negotiations for a peaceful settlement in the coal industry have broken down and that a national strike of the men of the picks is on the order of the day. Only passage of the McGuffey Coal Stabilization Act, say the Washington correspondents, can head off a national walkout. That act, supported by a considerable section of the operators as well as by the United Mine Workers, provides for government regulation of the industry. The U.M.W. sees in it a substitute for the price control features of the coal code which have broken down completely.

Newspaper Guild . . .

One of the most interesting and dramatic organizations in the American scene will hold its second annual convention early in June at Cleveland, Ohio. About 125 delegates from various branches of the American Newspaper Guild will gather to face the problems of the professional worker in a declining capitalist world. It is indicative of the nature of these problems that the big issue will be that of affiliation to the American Federation of Labor.

The question arose within the Guild soon after its formation. But only a handful of members then recognized the importance of a tie-up with organized labor. The idea has made giant strides in the past year. With some experience with publishers under their belt and the example of the Newark strike fresh in mind, the issue of affiliation will be the major one. At last year's convention at St. Paul, the question was not allowed to assume large proportions. The newspaper workers had not had the necessary experience. Things will be different at Cleveland.

There is no way of telling what the convention vote on this all-important matter will be. The pro-affiliation forces favor a referendum of the entire membership. A New York membership meeting held early in May endorsed affiliation by a ten to one majority. The Newark Guild, after their experiences in the Newark Ledger strike, are solid in their support for closer ties with the organized labor movement.

Split? . . .

Anti-affiliation forces are talking about the possibility of a split if the proposal carries, but the likelihood of any such action is considered remote. A letter, signed by nine members of the Board of Governors of the Newark unit and printed in the "Guild Reporter," are significant:

" . . . it is our conviction, grown out of the Ledger strike, that the Guild must get into the A. F. of L. . . . We are concerned over an apparent move by a group strongly opposed to affiliation to panic the general membership with the threat, at least implied, of a split in the Guild if affiliation is voted. . . . There is the very real likelihood that at least a few good units will not be able to withstand the onslaught of their employers if we remain out of the main stream of the labor movement. No one questions the right to oppose affiliation. But when that opposition is backed up by the threat to withdraw, the opponent has talked himself out of court."

Copper . . .

In an effort to solve the problem that has been created by the division of the Montana copper miners into craft unions, the Montana State Miners Council has been organized. The Council will embrace under its jurisdiction everyone working in and around mines, mills and smelters in that state. All the various crafts in the industry will have representation on the council.

Here we have another effort to solve the problem of industrial unionism by the council method. In rubber, electrical equipment, manufacturing and many other industries, this shoddy substitute for the real thing, has been introduced to kid the workers into believing that they have industrial unionism. The situation in the metal mines is especially important. At the last session of the Executive Council of the A. F. of L., representatives of the Mill, Mine and Smelter Workers protested the action of the Metal Trades Department in taking all the skilled men out and leaving only the unskilled in the miners' union. Their appeal was rejected. The formation of the Council is an attempt to meet this situation. But as long as the local craft organizations are under the discipline of the internationals, united action in the industry is far from certain.

The Manager's Corner

From the Toledo branch we have been informed that the membership is starting an immediate drive to obtain one hundred subscriptions for the New Militant. Knowing that the Toledo branch means business when it sets out to do a job there need be no doubt that this will also be carried through to a successful conclusion. But there is more to this decision than the good will and the desire of these comrades. They have witnessed by actual experience what it means to have a live organ guiding and supporting their every step in a serious struggle. Their decision is a tribute to the effectiveness of the New Militant.

At the same time it is a certainty that the organ that served them so well in this recent magnificent struggle will prove equally as effective in the task that the Toledo militants now have ahead of them; namely to strengthen the progressive forces in the automobile unions and in this manner to build a much more potent instrument for the struggles still to come. It is because of this reason that other branches should without delay take up and follow the example now set by the Toledo branch.

In the office certain steps have been taken to assure a greater economy of publication and which, we believe, will serve also in the long run to assure greater efficiency. The managements of the New Militant and the New International have been consolidated under one head. With the cooperation of all the supporters of these publications the greater efficiency can be obtained. But remember please, we count on this cooperation. For our part we shall undertake the following: The New International will appear regularly every month. The May issue is now off the press and the June issue will appear the early part of the month and each subsequent issue similarly advanced until we catch up. For the New Militant we shall gradually advance the press date until it will also appear earlier in the week and thus in a more suitable time for distribution.

From our branches and supporters we expect the following: First we require more concentration and more systematic attention to the building up of a greater circulation for our press. Secondly, prompt remittances must be made for all bundle orders received and for all subscriptions due to be renewed. Thirdly, and above all, we must have immediate remittances on all accounts due. There are today entirely too large sums outstanding for both publications and the financial crisis caused by this fact will surely lead to a catastrophe unless action is taken right away. This matter we put up to the branches and supporters. Prompt action on this is the cooperation you must give.

All New Militant builders are asked to get in touch with the office immediately to tell us what they can do on the questions raised above. In this connection we wish to discuss with them also some concrete plans that we are now working on designed to make this organ a much more effective and impressive one in the future. We need more New Militant builders and we expect to hear from all who are willing to give a hand.

We have on hand still a limited number of 25c three months subscription cards sold only in clubs of four or more and paid in advance. Those who are ready to assist in building circulation should forward a dollar for each club of four, for which the cards will be issued. They are printed on regular U. S. postal cards and as the subscriptions are obtained by the builder, one by one, the money invested is thereby returned and the cards can be forwarded to the office for entry of the subscriptions on our mailing list. Please remember, we have only a limited number of these club cards and no other 25c three months subscriptions will be accepted.

On June 1st we are moving into new headquarters. Our new address will be 55 East 11th Street, New York City.

Franco-Soviet Pact . . .

Why was it necessary for the Soviet Union, according to the lackeys of Stalin, to enter into the mutual assistance pact with French imperialism? The Stalinists would have us believe that history began yesterday; that is, with the advent of Hitler to power in Germany. German fascism is the main enemy of the October Revolution. It is preparing, with the aid of Japan and Poland, an imperialist war of intervention. To put obstacles in the way of Hitler and thereby maintain world peace, it was necessary for Soviet diplomacy to make use of the contradictions in the camp of capitalism; namely, the antagonism between French and German imperialism. These "tactics" are falsely compared—after eighteen years of Soviet power—with the tactics of Lenin in the course of the civil war when Soviet Russia was ringed around by white guard armies and imperialist troops.

But history does not begin with Hitler. German fascism came to power with the "permission" of the Stalinist Comintern. It came to power by the defeat of the German workers, due directly to the betrayal of the German and the world proletariat by the Stalinists. Stalinism is capable of resorting to the worst features of capitalist diplomacy, but was and is incapable of practicing revolutionary policies, the essence of which is to utilize the contradictions, not only as between capitalist enemies, but the far deeper ones that exist at all times, and particularly in the epoch of the decline of capitalism, between the classes.

Stalinist Wreckage . . .

The passage of power from the Leninists in the Soviet Union to the Stalinists, took place over the bridge of "socialism in one country." It was over this bridge also that the October Revolution passed from its period of upswing accompanied by the world-wide strengthening of the proletariat, to the period of decline and defeats under the "savior" Stalin. The Third International turned its back on world revolution while the Soviets engaged in building socialism in one country. The October Revolution lost the offensive while Stalin resorted to the theory of "pure defense" in order to protect the gains of the five year plans.

The German Revolution was felt to be a threat to peace, the peace necessary then to "build socialism in one country." Hence the Stalinists gave no guidance to the German workers; hence they failed to use the class contradictions within Germany, refused to enter into the "counter-revolutionary" united front with the social democracy, and "permitted" fascism to come to power as the easier course, the course of lesser evil. Thus Stalinism, itself a major cause of the German debacle, is historically the cause of the "necessity" for signing the pact with France.

But the fever of the anti-united front days in Germany now gives way to the chills of the "popular front" and the "sacred union" in France. Both the fever and the chills are manifestations of the same disease, that cancer that saps the strength of the October Revolution—Stalinism. The Bolshevik-Leninists clearly predicted in advance that if Stalinism persisted in its course in Germany, then Hitler would come to power and become the worst threat to the very existence of the Soviet Union. And now again the Bolshevik-Leninists warn that if the French proletariat are misled into following the betraying course laid out by Stalin in France, fascism will again be victorious there too.

In Germany the Comintern refused to enter into a united front with the socialists, then known as social-fascists. But in France Stalinism enters into a "popular front" not only with the socialists but with the bourgeoisie itself. As the guarantee of French imperialism for its pact, the Stalinists will tie the workers to their bourgeoisie, will bring about the "sacred union" of civil peace, will aid in the building up of French militarism, will advocate that the proletariat aid its own bourgeoisie if that bourgeoisie is the ally of Stalin. Stalinism pursues the policy of the lesser evil for the preservation of French bourgeois democracy, hoping thereby to keep fascism from power. This is the road best calculated to lead the proletariat to bloody defeat. For the sake of maintaining the power of the bureaucratic Bonapartist regime in Russia, a discredited growth on the Soviet system, Stalin would sacrifice once more the interests of the world proletariat.

Rules of Class War . . .

The rules of class war are in many senses analogous with those of war in general. The enemy of the working class is the bourgeoisie at home and abroad. The war should at all times be waged against the enemy. In war no enemy is ever defeated by pursuing a course of "pure defense." The Stalinists would pursue that strategy in defending the Soviet Union; that is, the first stage of the dictatorship of the proletariat. The tactics in France and in connection with the Franco-Soviet pact are not in disagreement but in complete accord with the larger and completely false strategy of the Soviet bureaucracy.

If the workers are to capture and maintain power, then they must pursue the Marxist strategy of world revolution, that of turning the defense at the proper moment into an assault on all the positions of capitalism. Today the decisive field of battle is France. The working class of the entire world must rally to the aid of the French workers and help them arm for the final struggle against French imperialism. That will be the best defense of the U.S.S.R., a defense which cannot be entrusted to the Stalinist betrayers.

The Left Socialist Conference --A Letter and A Declaration

Ed. Note: We publish herewith a letter from comrade Seegers on our previous report on the Paris Conference of the Left Socialist Parties and groups (International Arbeiter Gemeinschaft). It appears to us that comrade Seegers misunderstands the import of the position taken by the German Socialist Workers Party (S.A.P.) on the question of the Fourth International. The declaration of Schmidt and Sneevliet, the leaders of the newly-formed Revolutionary Socialist Workers Party of Holland (R.S.A.P.), which is also printed below, throws more light on the real nature of the dispute.)

Letter of Comrade Seegers

Dear Comrade:

In the issue of March 30 there is an introduction to a translated reprint from De Basnabreker a note on the Paris Conference February 14. In this introductory note you state that the S.A.P. (Socialist Labor Party of Germany) appeared as the chief saboteur of the slogan for a New (Fourth) International. From the reports on the Paris Conference that I have received (and certainly you have or should have the same information) this does not seem to be the case. Against the motion of Comrades Sneevliet and Schmidt voted only the two Scandinavian comrades and the comrade from the I.L.P. The S.A.P. and five other comrades abstained because they wanted to demonstrate that they are for a New International but believe it will be attained in a different manner. As the official organ of a responsible revolutionary party, we should be careful to avoid misleading statements, and I therefore hope you will correct this statement in the next issue, or print this letter instead.

The resolution submitted by the

S.A.P., for which ten of the twelve delegates voted, with only one vote against it (Comrade Schmidt abstaining) is as follows: "In the face of the total failure of the Second and Third Internationals the conference notes that the international revolutionary labor movement is at present without a real leadership having the confidence of the movement and that it is therefore necessary to create such a leadership, i.e. a real, proletarian international. The conference emphasizes that the necessary international revolutionary leadership can develop only as the result of a historic process and only through the co-operation of the revolutionary elements inside and outside of the prevailing Internationals. It further declares that this leadership can develop only on the basis of a fundamental renewal (Erneuerung) of the international workers movement.

"To accelerate the achievement of a proletarian international capable of action (aktionsfähig), which alone can realize the necessary unity upon a revolutionary basis, the parties represented at the conference resolve:

"1. To concentrate with all their power upon initiation of international actions;

"2. To utilize all possibilities for the coordination of the ready-for-action forces in the international frame and at the same time to expand the International Arbeitergemeinschaft."

For this resolution voted 10 of the 12 delegates, against it only Comrade Sneevliet, Comrade Schmidt (O.S.P.) abstaining.

According to the Neue Front, the S.A.P. was ready to sign the motion submitted by the two Dutch comrades, namely: "The conference declares that the proletariat, in order to conduct the international struggle, must create for itself a new international," if it had been submitted as a declaration instead of

III.

It is a short and easy step from an undervaluation of internationalism to a nationalistic attitude—or at least to attitudes and expressions which play into the hands of those reactionary forces which use "patriotism," "Americanism," nationalism, chauvinism, in order eventually to smash the workers' movement and to impose Fascism upon the masses. I am thinking of such slogans as "Advance America."

The hold of patriotic sentiment on the masses and the havoc wrought by capitalists and militarists by playing upon it, have been abundantly demonstrated. Those comrades who insist that we have here a crucial problem and that we must know how to deal with it are entirely correct. Yet for the very reason that we are dealing here with explosive material we have to be careful that the bomb we plan to use against the enemy does not blow up in our own hands!

Borrowing Symbols

The idea that seems to underlie a good deal of the discussion on this point is that if the revolutionists would take over the patriotic symbols and slogans, they would get the following instead of the Longs and Couglights; and attaching new ideas and aims to these symbols they would make the masses fighters for a workers' world. It is a tempting idea to many who foresee the danger of a Fascist triumph and who behold the contrast between the immense following of the demagogues and the handful of supporters of the revolutionary movement. If only we could use their tricks and get the masses to jump on our bandwagon! But, alas, the easy way is not necessarily the right way.

The same eagerness quickly to win a mass following for the idea of a non-profit economy, by the way, leads some to propose that the middle class which seem more rebellious than the workers should be "sold" on the right brand of revolution, instead of looking to the working class as the spear-head of the revolutionary movement. This quick cure Comrade Budenz correctly rejects. Let the middle class organize as a middle class, and the result will be reactionary, to maintain, not to overthrow, the profit system. But "merely threaten a general strike and chills and fever run through the present body politic."

A Deadly Parallel

Equally dangerous and deceptive is the despairing resort to "patriotism." How and why that is the case can be made clear, as one of the comrades has written in about this question suggested, by an illustration from another sphere. Religion, the argument would run, has a great hold on men. It is true that religion, its institutions and symbols, have been used as supports of the existing order. But it is also true that the great prophets of religion have denounced the rich and as a MOTION, and the majority of the delegates probably would have followed that example, according to Neue Front. As it was, only the two Dutch comrades and the representative of the International Youth Bureau voted for their motion.

Whatever the merits or demerits of the conference and the decisions, I believe the revolutionists should be fully (so far as possible) and fairly informed about it. The following parties or groups were represented: 1. The I.L.P. (England); 2. The O.S.P. (Holland); 3. The S.A.P. (Germany); 4. The Independent Labor Party of Poland; 5. The Socialist Party of Sweden; 6. The Iberian Communist Federation (Spain); 7. The "Red Front" (Austria); 8. The S. P. (Maximalists) of Italy; 9. Friends of Workers Unity (Doriot), France; 10. R.S.P. (Trotskyists), Holland; 11. The International Bureau of Rev. Youth (Stockholm); 12. The group "Mot-Dag" (Norway).

Fraternally yours,
WILL A. SEEGERS.

Declaration of Schmidt and Sneevliet

The organ of the S.A.P., "Die Neue Front," in the March 1st edition, in the course of a report on the Paris International Conference in February, presents the Dutch resolution on the new international as an abstract "proclamation" of the new international.

This presentation is false and without foundation.

Both Schmidt and Sneevliet said quite clearly that they realized that a new international could never be formed by a mere "proclamation." Both of them understood the difficulties connected with the formation of the new international. Both of them stated with equal clarity that the first step toward the new international must be the recognition of the necessity for a new international. They refused to add to the confusion surrounding this question by voting for ineffective, compromise resolutions.

The proletariat needs above all clarity and precision on this question. The S.A.P., with its resolu-

powerful, have pictured a world of peace and brotherhood, etc. Let us harness the institutions, emotions, symbols and slogans of religion to the revolutionary movement, therefore, and to carry the latter to victory! The realist, the Marxist, knows that this is a fantasy. Religious institutions are a bulwark of the existing order. Keep the minds and emotions of men bound to religious ideas and symbols, and you keep them bound to the existing economic and political order. The hold of these ideas and symbols must be broken. As one great prophet pointed out, you cannot put "new wine into old wine-skins."

The state, the governmental system under which we live, is likewise an agency and bulwark of capitalism. We have to overthrow the capitalist state. But that means that we must break the hold of the symbols and the emotions that attach to the present state.

A Practical Example

When in the great unemployed convention in Columbus in 1933 hundreds of honest but politically undeveloped workers were roused to fury against us by labor spies and Fascists, and Arnold Johnson was about to be dragged from the platform and lynched on the ground that he was radical and un-American and did not properly respect the flag, we did not "wrap the stars and stripes around us" or make any effort to claim that we were "patriotic." Arnold Johnson stood his ground, pleaded for reason and calm consideration. When quiet was restored, we claimed that those who raised the issue did so in order to serve the capitalists and their political henchmen by breaking up the League and that the waving of the flag, patriotic appeals, etc., were constantly used for precisely this purpose, as "when men were led to slaughter in the war to end war, the war for democracy," etc.

Statements about "serving" the nation, the country, the community, have also to be carefully guarded. The notion that the country is "our country"—i.e. everybody's alike, that there is such a thing as nation or community, a mystic something to which we belong and which protects us, is cultivated by the ruling class for the purpose of hiding the fact of class cleavage, of exploitation for the purpose of making the worker think that when he goes to war he is fighting for "his" country, instead of against himself and for the capitalists.

American Tradition

The same caution holds for an uncritical use of "the American revolutionary tradition." There are, to be sure, revolutionary traditions in American history, to which we shall have occasion to refer again. But the dominant American tradition has been that of capitalist expansion, exploitation, imperialist adventuring. Years of experience in workers' education have demonstrated to my complete satisfaction, and I know that all who attended the classes at Brookwood or similar ones elsewhere, will back me up in this, that outside of the actual experience the American worker gets of injustice the most effective way to make him class-conscious is to teach him the real facts of American history, American imperialism, i.e., from a Marxist viewpoint. And this is by no means to teach him in an uncritical fashion that anyone who opposes labor is a "black betrayer of the ideals of the Founding Fathers" or that "Hancock and Adams slept with a price on their heads."

Quite the contrary, it involves pointing out that Washington with his 30,000 acres of western lands; that Hancock and Adams with their mercantile business threatened with destruction by laws passed by a British parliament in the interest of British merchants, acted in line with their class interests when they engaged in the Revolutionary War and brought the American farmers and artisans into it; that as soon as possible after the war was over they conveniently forgot the "principles" of the Declaration of Independence and in the most high-handed fashion imaginable put over a constitution which protected their property interests against the farmers who had manned the revolutionary armies; and that this constitution has been used ever since as an instrument of class-domination; those provisions in it intended for the protection of the masses either being perverted like the "due-process" clause or simply not enforced like the amendment granting civil and political rights to Negroes.

By this means faith in America, i.e. in capitalism, is broken down, and that is a prime essential for the building of a working-class revolutionary movement.

We have nothing to gain and much to lose from a romanticizing of American history. The unvarnished Marxist interpretation of it is a priceless instrument in our hands. Certainly in an age when patriotism is the dominant emotion upon which capitalism in its decline calls in order to fasten the chains of reaction and terrorism upon the masses, we must not fall into the trap of arousing sentiments upon which the demagogues can in any case play much more effectively than revolutionists can, and which in the end can only be used to destroy the revolutionary movement.

The formation of a Dutch workers' party proclaiming the necessity for a New International is an important event in the life of the international proletariat. It is the second of the same sort, as the Workers Party of the U. S., formed in December 1934, proclaimed even more clearly the creation of the Fourth International as a most urgent task.

International Affiliation

There exists in the heart of the new Dutch party some difficulty on exactly this point. The O.S.P. is a member of the Amsterdam Bureau of Left Socialist Parties and Groups. The Bureau, it is true, is a very loose organization, functioning mainly as an information bureau. Several of the members even recognize the necessity for a New International, although generally hostile to the slogan for a Fourth International. Those that recognize the Fourth International, incidentally instrument of class-domination; those provisions in it intended for the protection of the masses either being perverted like the "due-process" clause or simply not enforced like the amendment granting civil and political rights to Negroes.

By this means faith in America, i.e. in capitalism, is broken down, and that is a prime essential for the building of a working-class revolutionary movement.

We have nothing to gain and much to lose from a romanticizing of American history. The unvarnished Marxist interpretation of it is a priceless instrument in our hands. Certainly in an age when patriotism is the dominant emotion upon which capitalism in its decline calls in order to fasten the chains of reaction and terrorism upon the masses, we must not fall into the trap of arousing sentiments upon which the demagogues can in any case play much more effectively than revolutionists can, and which in the end can only be used to destroy the revolutionary movement.

The Constitutional Amendment

At this point may properly come an analysis of Comrade Budenz's suggestion of "a proposed amendment to the constitution" as a, or the, means to "strike a death blow at the profit system." On the face of the article in question this amendment to abolish private ownership, wage slavery etc. is presented as the fundamental basis for an American revolutionary movement.

If, the amendment, would "safeguard its integrity" (not, e.g., firm adherence to Marxist and Leninist principle); the movement will "give a focal point to the struggle by basing itself" on this amendment.

"The proposal of this amendment, as a basic starting point, is essential for any real revolutionary movement in the U.S."

If this was not intended, if the amendment is proposed as a slogan, the basis for a tactical maneuver at a certain point, then certainly it was a grave error not to make that clear in a serious and formal political document as this article proclaims itself to be.

A "Parliamentary" Revolution

If the expressions describing the proposal are taken at their face value, then it must be said that it is clearly and utterly out of accord with the position of the Workers Party. No indication to the contrary being given, one must assume that the amendment is to be put into effect in the manner prescribed in the Constitution, viz., by action of Congress, ratification by state legislatures, etc. This is certainly suggesting in a most extreme form the possibility of revolution by parliamentary method which Comrade Budenz has often violently denounced. In a country where it is impossible to get an amendment to abolish child labor passed, the profit system is to be abolished by constitutional amendment!

If the idea is to use the proposal of such an amendment as a slogan, a tactical maneuver at a certain stage of political development, then it is a matter of tactics and not of principle which would have to be discussed on its merits and from all angles when it came up as a definite political proposal in a given historical setting. Even so the question whether it fostered a fetishism of parliamentarism would have to be very seriously considered.

As for tactical considerations, in view of the difficulties and delays in getting any kind of constitutional amendment passed in this country, the proposal does not appear to me at least. Nor can I conceive of it as making any appeal to workers or farmers generally. There are quicker ways of getting results, and ways more calculated to build labor militancy, as when in 1916 the threat of a general railroad strike forced the Adams eight-hour law through Congress and got a verdict of "constitutional" from the Supreme Court—which, incidentally, can always have a few judges added to it if the will and the power are available.

If we ever had a situation where passage of a constitutional amendment abolishing capitalism was actually in sight, well, we could then dispense with formalities and write a brand-new constitution for the Workers Republic!

Logic of a False Position

There is one other possibility, viz.: that the idea is that the workers will gain power by revolutionary means and then enact a constitutional amendment. This idea has no merit either. In the first place, when the workers are once in power as a result of revolutionary action, they will not need to stop with an amendment. In the second place, it encourages the notion that in the main the machinery of capitalist government will remain and will serve the needs of a workers' order. That notion is of course a flat contradiction of the position set forth in our Declaration of Principles.

The final article in Comrade Muste's series will appear next week.)

Fourth International Party Formed in Fusion in Holland

From The Bulletin of the International Communist League (Bolshevik-Leninists).

On March 2, 1935, the two Dutch workers' parties, the Revolutionary Socialist Party (R.S.P.), member of the International Communist League, and one of the signers of the "Pact of Four" of August 1933, and the Independent Socialist Party (O.S.P.), also a signer of the pact, which had, however, not immediately started unity negotiations on account of internal divergences, held their last separate congresses before the fusion of the following day.

The conditions on which the fusion took place had been formulated during a preparatory period of several months. The R.S.P. congress accepted the conditions unanimously, whereas in the O.S.P. a small minority was opposed.

The Name of Party

The fusion congress took place on March 3. There were 1,100 delegates, numerous guests and on-lookers. The spirit was enthusiastic, since a revolutionary workers' party was formed which would have nothing to do with the Second International. The R.S.P. had never been a member, but the majority of the O.S.P., as a left wing, had only left the Dutch Social Democracy a few years before. The name for the new party was proposed by the R.S.P.; several comrades of the O.S.P. preferred the more simple and, from the revolutionary point of view, less forceful name of U.S.P., that is "United Socialist Party," which was voted down by a large majority.

The formation of a Dutch workers' party proclaiming the necessity for a New International is an important event in the life of the international proletariat. It is the second of the same sort, as the Workers Party of the U. S., formed in December 1934, proclaimed even more clearly the creation of the Fourth International as a most urgent task.

International Affiliation

There exists in the heart of the new Dutch party some difficulty on exactly this point. The O.S.P. is a member of the Amsterdam Bureau of Left Socialist Parties and Groups. The Bureau, it is true, is a very loose organization, functioning mainly as an information bureau. Several of the members even recognize the necessity for a New International, although generally hostile to the slogan for a Fourth International. Those that recognize the Fourth International, incidentally also a signer of the Pact of Four, recognizes it. Without breaking with the Amsterdam Bureau, the new R.S.A.P. also has delegates to the International Communist League. The attempt of the S.A.P. to exploit, in the January session of the Amsterdam Bureau (in Neue Front, its organ) the adherence of the Dutch Party to two international organizations, and to exploit the fake contradiction between the representative of the R.S.P., Sneevliet, and that of the O.S.P., Schmidt, have been publicly repudiated in the organ of the R.S.A.P., De Nieuwe Fakkel (The New Torch).

Parties in Holland

The formation of a party independent of the Second and Third Internationals has naturally been violently attacked by the parties of these two "Internationals." The central organ of the social democrats, Het Volk (The People) forecasts for the members of the R.S.A.P. that while they have thus far been for "democratic socialism," they will now be transformed against their will one might say unconsciously, into communists—the worst fate imaginable for the Dutch reformists. The Tribune, central organ of the Dutch C. P., declares that the R.S.A.P. is nothing more than an obstacle in the way of the united front in Holland. But in Holland there is no united front between the 90,000 members of the social democracy, the 301,000 members of the independent trades unions under social democratic influence, and the less than 4,000 members of the Dutch C. P., which is entirely without influence in the trades unions.

Not only the international situation but the situation in Holland itself demands the formation of a strong revolutionary workers party. Holland, it is true, is nothing but a small and unimportant country in Europe, but beyond Europe it is master of a large colonial empire. The depression has hit this country of renters, until now prosperous and wealthy, the colonial profits have shrunk, Indo Asia, the colony from which Holland draws its wealth, is the object of Japanese imperialist greed; national separatist movements, and revolutionary insurrections wrack the colony; the mutiny of the cruiser "Seven Provinces" was an alarm signal for the Dutch bourgeoisie, and it is for that reason that restrictions of democratic and parliamentary liberties are undertaken in Holland today.

By A. WEAVER

A. W. HAMILTON—

Question: In his article on April 6, Comrade Muste states: "If, however, any party refuses to face and discuss the issues we raise, such a party is not revolutionary and a true revolutionary cannot remain in such a party." Is this not the same as Stalinist ideology of leaving the mass organizations to the mercy of the reactionaries because the reformists inside them would not listen to them?

Answer: In the first place the organizations used to quit the mass organizations for reasons, theoretical at least, which are other than that which you give here. They merely drew a correct conclusion from an INCORRECT assumption by declaring that the A. F. of L. etc. was "fascist" and that they therefore could not remain inside these organizations.

Secondly, Comrade Muste refers specifically to the revolutionary party of the working class and not to its mass organizations. Different workers have different ideas as to how they are to achieve emancipation and, based on these various conceptions, form themselves into political parties with different ideas and principles (revolutionary, reformist, etc.), so that, because it is contrary to his beliefs, it is obvious that a revolutionary-minded worker cannot remain in an organization which preaches reformism or whose activities lead to revolutionary defeats. This was the essence of Comrade Muste's statement.

The mass organizations of the working class, however (trade unions, unemployed organizations, etc.) are composed of all sections of the class regardless of political or other beliefs because there are economic interests binding the workers together, and the limited framework of such organizations permits unity of the class within them. It is the duty of the advanced worker to stay with the masses at all costs, and to build up the broad organizations embracing them, as means of teaching the proletariat that their emancipation lies beyond these narrow boundaries.

liamentary democracy with a "strong" policy, which it is true is not, nor yet need be, openly fascist, but which, in case the depression in Holland should become more intense, could take on an even "stronger," a pre-fascist, character. For this reason the defense of the political and economic positions of the Dutch working class requires a revolutionary party which can have no community of interest with the bourgeoisie—as have the social democrats—which does not act solely in the interest of the Russian national bureaucracy—as does the C.P. in any case without influence.

Bi-Weekly Organ

The R.S.A.P. has a bi-weekly (The New Torch). The theoretical review of the R.S.P. (The New Way) has been replaced by The International, monthly theoretical review of the R.S.A.P.

The new party has about 4,500 members, that is to say more than the C.P. of Holland.

A Left opposition has formed in the C.P.H. during the last year, most of it leaving the party. However the K.A.P. (German Communist Labor Party, ultra left) tendency in the split-off was so strong that the R.S.A.P. gained little with the exception of Comrade Van Riel, former member of the C. C. of the C.P.H. who was one of the leaders of this opposition (C.P.O.).

A Forward Step

There can be no doubt that the formation of the R.S.A.P. marks a step in advance, not only in the life of the Dutch workers, but in the international arena as well. The danger of war becomes more and more acute. No one of any political development can believe that the Third International in case of war will be any less catastrophic than its collapse in Germany on the eve of Hitler's rise to power. It is even less credible that the social democratic parties will behave in any other way than they behaved in 1914. The task of the Fourth International is to pose and to attempt to solve the problems which no other organization can solve. For that reason the existence of two parties on the same basic platform, the W.I.U.S. and the R.S.W.P. is a great advantage. Let the opportunists ridicule the numerical weakness of the parties, let the centrist "revolutionaries," such as the S.A.P. cook up their recipes for a New International, let the Stalinists boast, as they did in Germany until 1933—"The existence of living parties growing in both America and Holland furnishes a beginning which may perhaps prove decisive precisely in case of war."

Progressives Organize!

An individual cannot successfully cope with a machine. Even a group of individuals getting together in a crisis and agreeing on a program are in the end no match for an old well-oiled machine.

That is the lesson which was hammered into the progressive unionists in Toledo, Cleveland, Norwood and other General Motors centers by the betrayal of Dillon a couple of weeks ago. Already they are taking steps to build the militants in the auto industry into an organized force.

The moment progressives undertake such a move they are met with the objection: "But this means having an organization within an organization. This means that a certain group is going to try to dominate the union. Then another group will start up—The union will be divided."

It is curious to have this cry raised so constantly in a country which works under a party system, where it is an accepted thing that the parties, Democratic, Republican, etc. organize to advance their respective programs. What should be more natural in a democratic organization such as the trade union movement purports to be, than that groups should organize about a program, bring it to the attention of the membership, etc.? Could anything be more educational for the membership? Is there any better way to bring issues into the open and have them decided in an open and above-board fashion?

As a matter of fact, in some of our most respectable and conservative unions such as the typographical, two or more parties have operated openly, put up slates in elections, etc. for years. There are hundreds of unions throughout the country in which groups with different programs have functioned year after year, and this has not meant the collapse of the union.

Honest workers must not be led astray by the crimes and mistakes which have been committed by the Communist Party in the trade unions. It is true that the groups they organized and influenced set out to "capture" unions, often by allying themselves with reactionary and gangster elements in order to get votes. It is also true that the C. P. pursued a disruptive policy in the unions. Today, in a feverish attempt to win back the confidence of the trade unionists which they lost by these insane methods, they actually play the game of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats as they did in Akron.

Progressive unionists, whether they be also members of the Workers Party or not, will seek to influence the unions by working out sound policies for the unions, advocating them openly, doing everything in their power to educate the membership, make them acquainted with the policies they are advocating. If they are defeated they will take the licking and get right to work again in order that the policies they advocate may eventually win the day. They will gain the confidence of the membership by their willingness to work harder for the union, fight more valiantly on the picket line, etc. But they will not be deferred from organizing and fighting with all their might for the policies in which they believe.

What is the alternative if the militants do not organize? That there are then no groups, no "machine" in the union at all? Not at all. The officialdom in the trade unions is organized, openly or secretly. They have their machine, their cliques, through whom by strong-arm methods, by job control, deceitful propaganda, they control the membership, often without the membership being aware of it.

It is these bureaucrats, these Tammany politicians, in the trade union movement who raise the cry, "We must not have an organization within an organization." They do it in order to defend their jobs, to maintain their own policy of collaboration with the bosses. They know only too well that once the militants cease acting as individuals, cease depending on an occasional joint action in a crisis, but make themselves into a permanent, independent, fighting force, the day of the bureaucrats is done.

Progressives, militants, organize! You have a right to organize! You must organize if trade union democracy is to be maintained! You must organize to save the unions from reactionaries, racketeers, and betrayers, to make the unions into mighty weapons of defense and offense for the workers!

Auto International

One of the problems which the militants of the Federal Automobile locals will have to give careful attention in the immediate future is the setting up of an international union with a charter from the American Federation of Labor. At the close of the recent meeting of the A. F. of L. executive council, when the General Motors strike was on, William Green announced that the charter for an international union which had been promised to the automobile workers a long time ago, was to be issued "as soon as things quieted down." Well, thanks to Francis Dillon's strenuous efforts on behalf of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, the General Motors strike had been "settled" and except for a flurry here and there in the automobile centers, "things have quieted down."

The first move of the progressive automobile workers should be to demand an end to delays, to call for the international charter immediately. The Federal locals cannot act together quickly and effectively so long as they are loosely tied together in a council which has no real power. Furthermore, an international union and its locals have, under the A. F. of L. set-up, much more control over their own affairs than the Federal locals which are merely puppets in the hands of the bureaucrats. One of the ways, therefore to make Dillon betrayals more difficult is for the automobile workers to get their own international charter immediately.

In the second place, much may depend upon the way in which the new international is set up. Doubtless the Green-Dillon proposition will be that for a year at least the present council which is dominated by them or some group they appoint, shall serve as the provisional executive board of the new international. Then when this outfit is fairly secure in the saddle it will call a convention and by the methods so well known to the labor politicians, will see to it that "safe and sane," that is, machine, delegates are elected, so that the convention may put the politicians into permanent control of the union.

Doubtless the Green-Dillon outfit has already sent reassuring word to General Motors and the rest of the automobile corporations: "We will take care of everything and see to it that no hot-heads, no wild young men, no reds, have anything to say about the new union. Trust us and you will be safe. See what we were able to do even in Toledo!"

Progressives must insist on a convention of delegates elected by the rank and file of the local unions. The situation in the automobile industry is such that a convention, in which the workers can compare notes and make plans for a national organization and a national strike when conditions are ripe, is urgently needed. At such a convention the new international must be drafted and officers elected.

One other basic consideration must receive careful attention at once. As things stand the A. F. of L. proposes to assign a considerable percentage of the workers in the automobile industry to the machinists and other craft unions. The auto workers have been led to believe that the Federal locals were a stepping stone to industrial unionism. It is reported that when in a recent interview Green was asked whether the new union in automobiles could be described as "industrial" he answered that he could not be sure! In other words, the auto workers can be sure that the new international will not be an industrial union if the genuine sense of the A. F. of L. leaders have their way.

With a dozen or twenty unions in the industry there will be continual bickering and strife between the job-holders in the unions. The employers will assiduously play off the one against the other. In strikes they will be scabbing on each other as has happened so often under the craft union set-up. The workers will be the victims of these conditions. The new international will be seriously handicapped if not crippled from the outset unless it is in the full sense of the term industrial, embracing all the workers in and about the automobile and auto parts plants.

Let the slogan of genuine industrial unionism be raised immediately. Let an educational campaign be set under way among the auto workers, both in and out of the Federal locals. Let the question be raised in the central labor bodies and in all local unions that can be reached. The soil is ready for such a campaign. Let all the militant and progressive forces get behind it, and it will sweep the country.

Union Wages To Go Down

over 100,000 (22 cents in rural districts). For the South then, city relief wages drop from 40 to 19 cents and from $1.00 to 42 cents per hour. The first step into the promised land of Roosevelt security.

Under P.W.A. Rates

In the North P.W.A. wages were 50 cents an hour for unskilled and $1.20 for skilled labor. Under the new scheme they will be 34 cents and 53 cents in the cities (25 and 34 cents in rural areas).

This is the way President Roosevelt goes about "lifting up the underprivileged."

The lack of any provision for prevailing rates in the new bill is of paramount importance. It means, in effect, that skilled workers will no longer work for union scales, as they did under the P.W.A. Whereas they now work five or six days per month at union rates to earn their fifty or sixty dollars, under the new plan they will work the 40-hour week, four weeks a month, to gain the same sum. On the new scale will be played the funeral march of union wages.

Not Isolated—Competing

Many liberal papers deplore the new program as "creating a caste of the unemployed, as isolating a large body of the American people and condemning them to semi-slavery."

But the unemployed will not be "isolated in a semi-slave caste," not at all. On the contrary the unemployed, far from being isolated, will be in direct contact with the employed, and will tend to pull down the wages of all labor to the minimum level of the program.

Workers on "government" projects (frequently let out to private contractors) will work at program wages side by side with "privately" employed workers. It is evident that the interaction of the two wage scales together with employers' greed and government connivance will drive all wages down to the security level.

Instead of creating an "isolated caste of semi-slaves" consisting of the unemployed, the new program will make the whole working class, in time, a caste of semi-slaves. Under the modern wage system there is no such thing as an isolated "caste," for wages of one section of the working class inevitably react on the wages of every other. It is not from idealism that labor organizations proclaim that "an injury to one is an injury to all."

Green's Nightmares

There can be little surprise that even the doddering A. F. of L. officialdom was stirred out of its rosy dreams of peaceful and endless collaboration by the announcement of the new program. William Green is reported to say: "I am fearful

(!) of protest strikes among the unemployed, and I am also fearful that private industry will use these rates to reduce the wages they are now paying."

Bills, Not Action

At present Green and the rest of the A. F. of L. skates are putting their faith in the Wagner Bill. This bill, which would relieve Bill Green of his "fearful" strikes, may pass. Roosevelt having taken two important steps to the right, the work relief program and the bonus, must now cover up with a gesture to the left. The Wagner Bill furnishes him with just the proper cover, nothing more than an empty gesture, it has, nevertheless, the endorsement of the A. F. of L. In practice it will have no more effect than the now half-dead National Labor Board—i. e. it will serve to "arbitrate" workers out of the gains they might make by strike action.

William Green feels the sand running out from under his feet. But it is not from William Green and his fears that workers can expect any aid.

The new program contains a clause which permits the Works Progress Division "to upset the entire scale by exempting projects where necessary in accordance with local wage conditions." This simple clause really invalidates the whole published scale, and leads us to suspect that the scale is nothing more than a "feeder" to see how the people will react. In practice the scale will be even lower if the administration can get away with it.

It Depends on Labor

At the same time workers can force the scale up—anything that can go down, can, in this case, go up—if workers force it up.

The new program provides minimum wages at best 19 dollars a month, and maximum at best $94 a month. It provides that only one member of each family may work for that sum. All food, clothing, rent, furniture, amusement, medical care, etc. for the whole family, no matter what size, must be found in that sum.

The wages are not steady. The work is irregular, depending on the projects in hand. The worker is docked for illness. He is liable to permanent dismissal. The Works division (appropriately named) can cut his wage, paid, as an added insult only monthly, at whim.

The worker is at the mercy of the government for which he toils at slave wages.

There is but one recourse: not votes, not bills, not laws, not labor boards, not William Greens, but direct action, organization and strike action.

Gould Speaks In Kansas City

By JEFF RALL

Kansas City, Mo., May 18.—"The Future of American Youth" was the topic of Nathan Gould's address, delivered to an attentive and enthusiastic audience gathered at the Workers' Modern Library to hear the message of the Spartacus Youth League presented by its national secretary.

"He who has the youth has the army," stated Comrade Gould, quoted from Karl Liebknecht. "The imperative need of rescuing the working class youth from the dangers of fascist demagoguery and mobilizing them behind the revolutionary party was convincingly set forth."

Both the Young Peoples Socialist League and the Young Communist League have conclusively demonstrated their inability to rally the youth for revolutionary action, he said, and the responsibility thus rests with the Spartacus Youth League to fulfill this duty imposed upon them by history.

The belief that the American working class is inhibited with conservatism and a tendency to balk at revolutionary solutions was emphatically repudiated by Comrade Gould, as he pointed to the magnificent examples of heroism and the capacity for self-sacrifice displayed by the workers in recent strike battles. These militant actions prove that the American workers will not accept fascism and the continued assaults of capitalism upon their living standards with folded arms and passive acquiescence. With a vanguard worthy of their allegiance they can and will be led to a revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of a Workers' State. Further, such a vanguard has been created, asserted Comrade Gould—the Workers Party of the U. S. and the Spartacus Youth League.

Youth Sways Mpls. Congress

to summarize the discussion in a "safe and sane" manner.

The most progressive report was made to the conference by the employment discussion group. It included resolutions endorsing the Landrum bill, favoring government operation of idle factories as a temporary measure, calling for equal wages under the NRA for black and white, favoring the right of youth to organize, strike and picket, urging the expenditure of war funds on education, and opposing the militarization of C.C.C. and transient camps. The last of the series of ten resolutions which were passed by a majority of the delegates from all over Minnesota read: "We realize that most present measures for relieving unemployment are palliatives only, we believe that the ultimate solution of the depression and unemployment lies in a socialized planned economy."

Leo Tuuri, communist candidate for alderman, rose on this resolution to say, "Although I am a Young Communist, I do not favor the passage of this motion. We desire unity, and unity can only be obtained on the basis of a minimum program."

Replying to Tuuri, a member of Spartacus countered, "Zero is the minimum program conceivable. Logically you ought to favor nothing, and you would have unity with everyone." A young Farmer-Laborite remarked that "The demand for socialism, after five years of depression, is certainly the most minimum of minimum demands that could be included in a 'minimum' program."

The resolution carried by an overwhelming majority, the Young Communists abstaining to the surprise of all. One youth remarked: "I always thought that the Communists were revolutionaries."

S. Y. L. Fights for a United Protest on Memorial Day

On May 30, the bosses and profit-seekers will hold their Memorial Day services and parades, calculated to whip up the jingoistic and patriotic spirit of the American working class youth. The desires of the class conscious youth to show their determined opposition to the whole spirit and meaning of Memorial Day and to the profit system that gives rise to it, has been repeatedly manifested by the powerful pressure towards broad youth demonstrations and rallies.

Last year the Young Communist League, by its maneuvers to foist its own name and leadership over the united front, and its arbitrary attempts to dominate the demonstration, forced a rupture of the united front and resulted in two separate demonstrations.

S.Y.L. Efforts for Unity

This year again, a genuine united front for May 30 has not been achieved, partly because of the injurious activities of the Stalinist Youth organization. The Spartacus Youth League proposed from the very beginning to both the American Youth Congress continuations committee which was arranging the united front, to the Young Peoples Socialist League and the Y.C.L. respectively, that a broad united front arrangements committee be set up to include the major political tendencies and city wide organizations. This united front committee would include the members and organizations in the continuations committee.

But the Y.P.S.L., capitulating to the pressure of the "Old Guard" and "Militants" in the S. P., decided to withdraw from the demonstration on the pretext that it "could not participate in a united front with the dual unions of the T.U.U.L., which split the labor movement."

The Spartacus Youth League, in a letter to the City Executive Committee of the Y.P.S.L. made it clear that such a stand could not possibly be condoned by a revolutionary youth organization. The letter reads in part:

Letter to Young Socialists

"The argument that the Y.P.S.L. cannot march with the T.U.U.L. unions seems to us as spurious and a specious one, directed against the whole conception of the united front. In the first place, it is rather late in the day to raise this particular issue—where are the T.U.U.L. unions that the Y.P.S.L. objects to? But even granting that they may exist, then in what manner can the Y.P.S.L. reconcile its marching with the I.W.W. unions on May Day and rejecting the Stalinist paper unions on May 30? Moreover, it is inconsistent with your past policy: for some six months T.U.U.L. unions have been affiliated to the American Youth Congress, why only now, when the T.U.U.L. is being liquidated overnight, does the Y.P.S.L. suddenly become conscience-stricken?"

"We are not the apologists for the Stalinists nor for their dual unions. But we stand for a broad and representative united front. There would be no question if the Y.P.S.L. were being asked to work together with the T.U.U.L. to win the working youth into the trade unions, but here it is simply a matter of expressing in a united front action a joint opposition to militarism, to the war program of the imperialists, to fascism. The Y.P.S.L. will be taking upon itself the full responsibility for splitting the demonstration unless it reverses its position of last week."

Opposes Stalinist Disruption

The Spartacus Youth League dissociates itself completely from the position of the Y.P.S.L. But how do things stand with the Y.C.L.?

The sectarian and bureaucratic policies of Stalinism are now reaping their full fruit. The dual paper unions of the T.U.U.L., the ultimate attempts at domination, the tactics of wrecking what they could not control—all those policies that have so discredited Stalinism in the eyes of the labor movement, and have made it possible for the trade union bureaucracy and the Old Guard leadership of the S. P. to reject and refuse the formation of a real united front stand out today as solid barriers in the way of every move towards a united front.

Although it has superficially changed some of its old policies and methods, the Y.C.L. still persists in many of them: in packing the united front conference of May 11, publishing dishonest articles in the Daily Worker calculated to lump the S.Y.L. together with the Y.P.S.L. (May 14), attempting to dominate the demonstration, etc. The S.Y.L. was and is anxious to see as broad and genuine a united front as possible on May 30. But the Y.C.L. is determined to exclude the "counter-revolutionary enemies of the working class."

Refused Speaker

The Y.C.L.-controlled continuations committee refuses the S.Y.L. not only a speaker but even representation on the arrangements committee! We requested this as a guarantee that the Y.C.L. would actually stand by their word for a genuine united front. The refusal of these elementary conditions makes it impossible for the S.Y.L. to participate. We do not intend to fall along in a Stalinist demonstration, without representation and without voice, giving their farcical "united front" the cover of our banner and our name.

For these reasons the S.Y.L. has decided not to take part in either the Y.C.L. or the Y.P.S.L. demonstration or mass meeting. Instead it will call its own mass meeting on the evening and significance of May 30 and explain our stand to the working class youth. The meeting will take place next Friday, May 31, at Irving Plaza. We call on all our readers and sympathizers to demonstrate with us their understanding and determination to fight consistently for a genuine united front of the working class.

French Situation Is Feature of May "New International"

More brilliant, more interesting, and as fundamental as previous issues, is the comment already made of the May issue of the New International, now off the press. It is a special issue, the main body of its contents dealing with the present situation in France and the problems of the French labor and revolutionary movement. "Where is France Going?" is the title of this exhaustive and extremely timely Marxist analysis of French politics. Is it going toward murderous Fascism—or the workers' revolution?

Nineteen solid pages of material make up this article fully on the height with fundamental analyses carried in our press for example during the months and weeks preceding the Hitler seizure of power in Germany. An estimate is given of the existing class forces in France today and the way out, the only way out, for the working class is shown in unmistakable fashion. It is impossible for the thinking worker to understand the present day situation in France without reading this article.

One of our European correspondents contributes an article on the problem of Abyssinia—"A New Nerve Center of Imperialist Lust." For the first time in an English publication its readers may learn about this African native state not yet conquered by the imperialist robber bandits. They may learn about the reasons for the feverish mobilization by Mussolini in what very clearly appears as a planned attempt to make an end to the independence of this native state and to finally and fully subject it to imperialist plunder clothed in the black shirts of Mussolini's hordes.

Comrade Muste contributes an article in this issue: "Labor in 1935—Pessimism and Prophecy." In his usual direct and forceful style Comrade Muste deals in this article essentially with the forces within the labor movement—reactionaries and progressives, and forecasting the prospects of the latter, he concludes: "Then Lewis, Hillman and Green will not be the only ones claiming to represent the workers in Washington, and in any case the decisive events will not then occur in the White House with the smiling Roosevelt presiding as the cigars are passed, but on the picket lines in the steel, coal and automobile towns, as the gas bombs and the bullets fly about."

The May issue of the New International contains also an article beautiful in style and forceful in its analysis dealing with the native question in South Africa, written by R. Lee of Johannesburg. It contains a further installment by R. Gotesky on the discussion of "Marxism: Science or Method?" and other valuable material.

Readers of the New Militant and their friends cannot afford to miss this issue and we shall be glad to accept your order either for single copies, bundles or subscriptions. We take this occasion also to mention in reply to inquiries that we have a very small number still left of the first issue of the New International. The price per single copy is 25 cents.

THE END OF THE BLUE BUZZARD

AN EDITORIAL

By its decision in the Schechter Poultry Case, the Supreme Court has finally signed the death warrant of the NRA. During the past months the once proud structure of the New Deal's major achievement has been gradually picked apart, stone by stone. Little more than a skeleton was left for judicial execution.

What is the central lesson to be drawn from the Supreme Court decision, coming as it does as the last act in the grim farce of the Blue Eagle? Is it, as the A. F. of L. leaders would have us believe, a staggering blow at labor, which is now "deprived of the benefits" of the labor-loving NRA? Or are we to conclude logically from the two year propaganda of the Communist Party that it is a "victory" for labor, since it does away with the "Roosevelt Slave Act"?

It is necessary to review the facts. When Roosevelt took office in 1933, the capitalists were faced with what seemed to them a nearly insurmountable crisis. The banks were closed, and complete financial collapse was threatening. The volumes of production and employment were at their lowest points of the depression. Industry as a whole was operating at a loss. The price structure was weakening under an avalanche of desperate competitive price-cutting. Labor was growing increasingly restless, and moving toward direct action.

Strong arm methods were necessary to pull capitalism out of the ditch and to set it going once more along the road of profits. Only the Federal Government was in a position to apply these methods; and the Federal Government could do so only by departing widely from the traditional Constitutional forms.

Roosevelt took control. Realizing that the ponderous machinery of the courts would only get into the picture many months later, he concentrated the full power of government into his own hands, reducing Congress for the time being to a rubber stamp. By a rapid series of measures, he saved the banking system, stopped the bankruptcies of large corporations, and started U. S. capitalism once more going forward—that is, once more in a position to make profits.

Among the measures he used, the NRA was the most grandiose and the most unusual. It was the NRA that was supposed to usher in the New Age of "fullness of life" for all. This was the Roosevelt solution to the crisis—the most ballyhooed measure ever passed by a U. S. Congress.

Essentially the NRA consisted of two distinct parts: (1) Regulations to secure what was called "fair competition." This phrase covered a multitude of capitalist sins. Under its banner, codes were set up to eliminate "destructive price cutting," "regulate trade practice," "promote cooperative actions among

The actual effect of these regulations, as brought out by the Darrow report, was to increase the domination of trusts and monopolies within each industry, since it was the monopolies that controlled the code authorities.

(2) The second part of the NRA dealt with "labor provisions"—partial prohibition of child labor, regulation of minimum wages and maximum hours, and the famous Section 7a, covering so-called "collective bargaining."

The pretended aim of these labor provisions was to aid "the forgotten man." The actual chief purposes were two: First, the New Deal in its early stages needed the unified support of all classes of the population. The labor provisions, looking on the surface like a concession to labor, were worded in such a way as to soft soap the working class into supporting the New Deal program. Second, they were designed to prevent independent class activities (i. e., strikes) on the part of the workers, by turning the workers' struggles aside into governmental channels. With the cooperation of the A. F. of L. officials, the workers were encouraged to look to Roosevelt for higher wages and better conditions, not to their own efforts; and they were tied up in a complicated system of "neutral" Labor Boards whenever they tried to start actions on their own account.

The NRA, aided by a partial "natural" upswing in the business cycle, did its job. Helped by the "codes of fair competition," the big corporations were once again piling up profits by the end of 1933. Though the labor provisions could not entirely prevent independent working class struggle, they did manage to strangle two strike waves in their infancy, and to keep every large strike from reaching maturity. This was not done without certain real concessions to the workers in some industries. But it should be understood that, with few exceptions, these concessions resulted not from the NRA but from the threat or actuality of militant labor struggles. The business of the NRA as of every capitalist "plan" was to increase profits not along with but relatively at the expense of wages, since that is the only way in which profits can any longer be increased or even continued.

With U. S. capitalism temporarily out of the ditch, a division of opinion set in among the capitalists themselves. During the first months of the NRA, almost the entire ruling class was too worried to ask questions. But as profits returned, more and more bankers and industrialists began to protest against "government interference in business," "regimentation," etc. The ruling class was not unanimous in this protest. The codes of fair competition met with approval, for example, throughout most of the retail trade associations. Again, these codes and also the labor provisions were well liked by the big clothing manufacturers with closed shops, who were helped in their fight against the sweatshops which had been undermining their markets prior to NRA.

But the big shop industrialists and bankers were impatient with "interference." They felt confident of their power to go their own way both against their competitors and on the field of the class struggle. They wanted a return to the pre-NRA structure, at a stage higher of finance-monopoly development.

Wage Slashing Drive Begins

Victory Greeted Efforts of Ill. Jobless Masses

C.P. Rivals Mr. Hearst In Slurs at I.W.A.

By GERRY ALLARD
SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 23.—Over 3,000 jobless workers, from seventy-two Illinois cities and towns, converged on the state capital for the third time Tuesday in defiance of the orders that they were to starve unless the sales tax was increased.

City and state police warned the marchers that they could not march or parade in this city. The jobless did parade. They marched through the heart of the city and passed on the towering state capital building. Weary, hungry and desperate, the throng proudly marched, waving high their Illinois Workers Alliance banners so the political oppressors who had starved them for nearly four weeks could read and take note.

One Marcher Dies

The plight of the workers was clearly shown by the fact that one of their numbers died and several fainted during the march, undoubtedly from the lack of food. Several women from northern Illinois rode a C. & A. freight to get here. Others hitch hiked, commandeered trucks and cars and still others walked for miles. Nevertheless the hundreds of thousands of starving men and women sent their mass delegations to Springfield to tell the capitalist agents that they were not going to starve without a fight.

That afternoon the sales tax was defeated again for the fifth time. Late that night news came out that Gov. Horner would give up the attempt to pass the bill as an emergency measure and instead pass it in the ordinary procedure which requires a majority vote of the legislature. Gov. Horner had a majority from the start but he persisted for weeks to pass the increase in sales tax as an emergency to take effect immediately which required a two-thirds vote of the House. The sales tax increase will not take effect until July 1.

A committee headed by Edward C. Morgan, chairman of the Illinois Workers Alliance, was refused an audience by the Governor. Gov. Horner's secretary stated that the chief was too busy to pay attention to a committee representing thousands of starving workers.

Jobless Make History

The Illinois Workers Alliance put up a militant fight against the sales tax. It was mainly responsible for the six weeks deadlock in the state legislature over the issue. The unemployed made history. They carried their fight for bread to great political proportions. Out of this

N.U.L. Protests Paupers Wages on Work Relief

Demands Adoption of Workers Security Bill

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 22.—Reminding the President of his inaugural promises, the National Unemployed League, with headquarters in Columbus, Ohio, and affiliated organizations in 22 states, today condemned the administration's "starvation wage scale" in a letter to President Roosevelt, stating, "The organized unemployed will refuse to work for the privilege of starving on wage rates which are not enough to live on and just too much to die on."

Quoting the President's statement, "that no business which depends for its existence on paying less than living wages to its workers has any right to continue in this country. By living wages I mean more than a bare subsistence level—I mean the wages of decent living."

The League demands that the President live up to his promises and scrap the entire present program by going before Congress for the Workers Security Bill sponsored by the National Unemployed League.

The Bill provides for the 30 hour week in all industry; a program of public works on a basis of 30 hours per week at a minimum of $30.00 per week; a system of unemployment and social insurance to be paid by the employers and the government through taxation on individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 per year and over, and taxing gifts and inheritances to provide benefits to all unemployed during the total period of unemployment at a rate of $10 per week per person plus $3.00 per week for each dependent. Pending such unemployment insurance, that direct cash relief shall be given on the basis of $10 for a single person plus $3 for each dependent weekly.

The Bill proposed by the Unemployed League combines into one document a complete program "to protect the health and welfare of the workers of the land," according to the communication.

NEW YORK (EP)—With the world, and especially Japan, preparing for war at record speed, the exports of steel scrap from the United States reached a new high at 560,000 tons in the first quarter of 1935—a 66 percent gain over last year's record-breaking total and more than was ever shipped in any whole year prior to 1933.

The proportion of steel scrap exported to that used in the United States has increased four times in four years.

Muste Speaks for Workers' Revolution on Nat'l Hook-Up

Choice Between Fascism or Communism He Declares

NEW YORK, May 30.—In a stirring address over WJZ on a national hook-up comrade A. J. Muste, national secretary of the Workers Party of the U. S., pointed to the fundamental maladies of the modern economic system. He concluded his broadcast by placing before the American people the dilemma that stirs the modern epoch—fascism or the workers' revolution. Comrade Muste represented the standpoint of Communism in a three-cornered debate under the auspices of the League for Political Education, in which the other speakers were Norman Thomas and Lawrence Dennis.

The complete text of Muste's address follows:

"I wish to make it clear that in setting forth the Communist answer to the problem confronting the American people today, I am not representing the Communist Party or the so-called Third, Communist, International, with which I have no connection and of which I have never been a member. I am setting forth the historic Communist position embodied in the experience of the modern working-class and in the writings of its great teachers, which constitutes the program of the United States.

"According to both the popular and the official conception, this nation embodies and was founded to realize certain great social ideals. It was to differ radically from 'the old countries.' There were to be no aristocracies of birth or wealth. No individual or group was to be allowed to exploit and oppress others. Not for a favored few, but for the masses of the population there was to be abundance, security, an equal voice in the government, the opportunity for self-expression and self-development,—a nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

Abundance for All

"The material and technical resources for such a society, unquestionably exist in the United States today. No competent student doubts that insofar as it depends upon natural resources and the productive plant, everybody could have a comfortable and attractive home, abundant food, decent clothing, opportunity for recreation and education, security against accident, sickness, and old age; and the sense of independence and self-respect that goes with these things.

"What we actually have, however, is mass unemployment, widespread poverty, a fifty percent cut in the standard of living since 1929, a society which does not know how to use the thousands of its youth coming out of the high schools and

Bosses Rush To Cash In On Court Decision

Organization Is Only Power In Labors' Hands

By F. FERRY
The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court handed down last Monday effectively killed whatever was still alive of the NIRA.

It may be of some interest, but probably of no great importance, to look into the reasons why the legislation pertaining to the National Recovery, as it is called, was held to be against the Constitution. It is more interesting and also more vital, as far as the working class is concerned, to analyze the situation for the purpose of being able to see the effect of the elimination of the NIRA. Not to be misunderstood—the workers know from their own experience that the NIRA, all and parts of it, was in no effective way helping them in their fight against the so-called principal employers of this country.

They recall it too well, that whenever there was a conflict between the workers on the one side, and Mr. Ford, General Motors, the large coal companies etc. on the other side, and whenever in such a fight the workers in their innocence invoked the help of the NIRA, the result invariably was special consideration given to the large employers; as in the President's automobile decision or in the decision pertaining to the longshoremen and shipping workers.

Anti-Labor Decisions

The lesson learned by the workers in the anthracite field of Pa. was and cannot be forgotten because it clearly showed that the authorities in charge of the enforcement of the NIRA were neither willing nor able, nor at any time ready to challenge effectively the coal barons for the purpose of securing the meager advantages which the NIRA alleged to give to the workers. It cannot be forgotten how flagrantly the decisions of the NIRA board were violated by men of the type and size of Weirton of the Weirton Steel companies, nor did the workers forget the pitiful and cowardly attitude of the government representatives in the recent Toledo strike, or the humiliation which the National Labor Board or Madam Fannie Perkins was exposed to in the controversy with the rubber barons, in which controversy the government and the blue buzzard representing the NIRA came out second best.

There is very little sentiment left among workers for the NIRA; as a

Drive on Pro-Labor Professors Assumes Wide Proportions

With the dismissal of five members of the staff of Columbia University's medical college this week, suppression of pro-labor professors reached the proportions of a systematic campaign.

Two instructors and three technicians were fired at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia without a hearing and no reasons given.

Dr. Lienhard Bergel, instructor in German at the New Jersey College for Women, a unit of Rutgers University, dismissed for his anti-Nazi opinions by the chairman of his department, a Nazi sympathizer, was effectively aided this week by colleagues and students during hearings being held by the college trustees. The hearing, forced by widespread protests against Dr. Bergel's dismissal, heard evidence piled up to prove the Nazi basis for the action against him.

Hicks Dismissed

Granville Hicks, professor of English at Rensselaer Technical Institute in Troy, New York, dismissed by the university on the grounds of "retrenchment," charged that his dismissal was due to a red scare.

Dr. Winslow N. Hallett, professor of psychology and mathematics at Cedar Crest College, Allentown, Pa., was dismissed on May 11.

C. L. U. to Extend Action
Dr. Hallett's case is unique in being fought not only as an issue of academic freedom but also as a straight labor case. The Central Trades and Labor Council is solidly backing his fight. Dr. Hallett is a delegate to the council and treasurer of the American Federation of Teachers local. The American Federation of Teachers is circulating its hundreds of locals for support

Statement on the Franco-Soviet Alliance

By the National Committee of the Workers Party of the U. S.

The military alliance signed between France and the Soviet Union, and the statement thereon issued jointly by Laval and Stalin, Molotov and Litvinov, mark another departure by the present heads of the Soviet Union from the principles upon which it was established.

The Soviet Union is the only land in which the workers, allied with the poor farmers, succeeded in overthrowing their exploiters and oppressors and setting up a workers' republic as the gigantic first step to a free socialist society. Its great advances are a promise of the glorious future which the working masses throughout the world are striving to achieve. As such it is the elementary duty of workers everywhere to guard the achievements of the Soviet working class, and to defend the Union from all attacks made upon it by its capitalist enemies. In essence, this means the extension of the workers' revolution throughout the entire world.

The workers in the capitalist countries, the slaves of imperialism in the colonies, are thus the only true allies of the Soviet Union. Even though the working class of several countries has suffered cruel defeats in the past year, and has been weakened as a result, it nevertheless remains the only reliable defender of the workers' republic against the destructive designs of world imperialism.

It is precisely because of these defeats, however, to which both the Socialist and the Communist parties alike have contributed, that the present leaders of the Soviet Union have considered themselves obliged to seek alliances with one imperialist power or another against the danger of attack which threatens Russia most acutely from the side of Hitler Germany and reactionary Poland and Japan.

This is precisely the principle which was violated by the Socialist parties in the last World War, when they betrayed the working class, supported their imperialist "fatherland" and concluded a "peace" with the capitalist class.

This is precisely the principle which is now being violated by the leaders of the Communist parties in their support of the manner in which the Franco-Soviet Pact is being carried through. The latter are thereby preparing to play the same part in the coming world war that was played by the Socialist parties in the last war!

The preparations for the new world war are being made at break-neck speed. All the preliminary steps have already been taken. Never since 1918 have the military, naval and aviation budgets of the imperialist powers been so big as they are today.

In the Far East, Japan is engaged in a brutal war of aggression against the Chinese peoples.

In Africa, Italian Fascism has launched a piratical war against the Ethiopian people, even though both countries are part of the notorious League of Nations.

Germany is rearming at a furious pace with the openly avowed intention of regaining her former imperialist power.

France is increasing her armaments with the hypocritical assurance that it aims to preserve the peace, but in actuality as part of her preparations for a war with Germany for the preservation of the imperialist robberies she committed at the end of the last war.

England is arming heavily for that next world war, whose coming is inevitable unless the working class first crushes imperialism, in order to safeguard and extend her vast colonial empire.

The United States is in the race with the rest and is even now conducting preparatory maneuvers in the Pacific in rehearsal for the war with Japan.

Everywhere, a decaying capitalist society is proving again that war is one of its inevitable products. Once more it is being shown that war is not prevented by "good" or "peaceful" capitalist powers, or caused by "bad" and "bellicose" capitalist powers—but that it is only one of the most frightful and most natural products of capitalism itself. Only in the Soviet Union, where capitalism has been over-

INSIDE STORY OF TOLEDO STRIKE

Told by a Leading Participant in the Battle with General Motors

By ART PREIS
(Ed. Note: This is the second of a series of three articles by Art Preis on the great Toledo strike. Art Preis was the editor of "Strike Truth," the Chevrolet strikers' bulletin.)

Two-fold were the lessons of the Auto-Lite strike, lessons which quickly permeated the entire Toledo labor movement, and which in turn affected through the Toledo labor movement the Chevrolet strike. The first lesson was that better conditions for the workers are won on the picket lines. Secondly, the Toledo workers had learned that the struggle of one group of workers is the battle of all workers, in which all labor must cooperate if victory is to be assured.

Side by side with the progressive growth and development of the auto workers union, Local 18384, a new spirit began to animate the other unions as well. One of the significant indications of this fact was the increasing participation of the Toledo Central Labor Union in every strike battle and its response to the appeals for assistance from the organized unemployed.

The Organized Unemployed
It was a well established fact that the Lucas County Unemployed League, acting with the assistance of the Workers Party, had taken the initiative and aggression in smashing the Auto-Lite injunction and reviving the lifeless strike. This action on the part of the organized unemployed served to drive home to the union men that the unemployed, instead of being a serious menace to their jobs and wage-standards, a huge reservoir of potential "scabs," might become an invaluable ally on the picket lines. In the Armour and Swift and Larowe Milling strikes, which shortly followed the Auto-Lite, the Lucas County Unemployed League was officially invited to aid the strikers and in actuality formed the backbone of the mass picket lines.

One of the significant contributions of the Workers Party to the Toledo labor movement, and one which has had a vital bearing upon the present characteristic solidarity, was the weapon of the united front. While the Unemployed League was demonstrating the effectiveness of joint action between the unemployed workers on the Auto-Lite picket lines, a united demonstration was secured for increased relief between the Central Labor Union, the Unemployed League and the now defunct Relief Workers Association. A successful united front anti-injunction demonstration, originally proposed by the W. P., was carried through by the Workers Party, Socialist and Communist parties.

The Famous Death March
In the fall of 1934, on the initiative of the Unemployed League, a Joint Action Committee was organized with several other local independent unemployed groups. A continuous fight of several months duration was conducted to better the relief standards for unemployed single men. A series of extremely militant marches and mass demonstrations, culminated by the famous six-day and -night Single Men's Death March and the seizure of the Lucas County Court House, were organized and led by Sam Pollock and Ted Selandar.

During the latter part of February of this year, the Toledo Building Trades Council initiated a strike among the skilled workers on the Federal Emergency Relief projects in Toledo. The Unemployed League soon stepped to the fore in this strike. The program of the Unemployed League for the conduct of this strike was adopted in entirety. A Joint Action Committee, representing the entire Building Trades Council the U. L. and the Workers Alliance, was set up and a general FEERA strike was effected. Mass strike tactics, hitherto completely outside of the experience of the skilled craft unions, were adopted. Again W. P. and U. L. members organized and led the picket lines and a series of splendid demonstrations.

A May Day United Labor demonstration was organized by the Joint Action Committee, endorsed by the Central Labor Union. This was the largest May Day demonstration ever held in Toledo, with A. J. Muste as the principle speaker. It ended in a militant march upon the Lucas County Relief headquarters.

"March of Labor"
While the FEERA strike was reaching its height, four other strikes occurred, the outstanding being the general Milk Drivers strike. An unofficial Joint Board of Strategy was devised, composed of the leaders of all the strikes including Sam Pollock, representing the Joint Action Committee. The forces of the various groups of strikers, under the leadership of Pollock, were combined into a joint picket line, called the March of Labor, which by a series of quick concentrations on various struck plants and projects closed them all down effectively.

It is only on the basis of an understanding of this simultaneous development—the organization of the progressive forces within the auto union and its expansion and achievement by virtue of the militant policies fostered by these forces, and the corresponding development in the entire labor movement of the attitude of working-class unity and mass action, with a weakening of class-collaboration policies—that the subsequent unionization of the Toledo Chevrolet workers, their strike and its unique aspects, can be correctly understood. In the final analysis, what preceded and immediately followed the Chevrolet strike is as significant from a broad perspective as the strike itself.

Showdown Comes in Autos

Following the unionization of the vast majority of the Toledo auto-parts plants by March of this year, the auto workers' union finally approached the last major challenge in its path, the transmission plant of the Chevrolet Motor Ohio Company, employing 2,300 workers. Previous attempts to organize this plant had met with almost total failure. Certain more backward elements and leaders in the union balked at the seeming magnitude of the task, for this was poaching upon the previously inviolable domains of the General Motors Corporation whose illimitable resources would be fully and unhesitatingly used to smash the union. Nevertheless, the progressive forces in the union pressed unceasingly for an organizational drive on the Chevrolet plant. They recognized that all previous union activities had been merely preliminary skirmishes and training for this major onslaught, which carried with it the possibility of a general auto strike and a genuine showdown on the issue of unionism in the automotive industry.

Three primary factors determined the ultimate success of the progressive program for organization of the Chevrolet plant. The first of these was the general atmosphere of unionism which pervaded the air of Toledo and the steady succession of labor battles and victories and partial victories which followed in the wake of the Auto-Lite strike. The Chevrolet worker might have shunned direct union appeals, but he could not avoid the experiences of his friends and neighbors who were in the unions nor the daily evidences of union activities and achievements which constantly forced themselves into the Toledo press.

The Company Maneuver

Secondly, the officials of General Motors connived with the Automobile Labor Board in attempting to put over a crude maneuver to place the official stamp of company unionism upon the Chevrolet workers. This was an "election" called in the Chevrolet plant for April 9, under the supervision of the completely repudiated Board, to determine what agency the workers desired to represent them in collective bargaining. The real union had not even requested such an election, but it was the intent of the company to force through a vote favorable to the company union before the genuine union could secure the slightest foothold in the plant. The obvious crudity and arrogance of this maneuver acted as a boomerang against the company and served to drive the workers in desperate defiance to the union.

Then there was Jimmy Roland. Jimmy was a plain everyday production worker in the Chevrolet plant. He joined the union in its early stages prior to the Auto-Lite strike. In short order, he got the "can." During the Auto-Lite affair he was one of the handful of union militants who fought the injunction. He was one of the real mainstays of the fight. During his period of unemployment he joined the U. L. and became one of its leading members. He likewise established himself as a leading progressive in the union and was elected to the position of trustee on the executive board.

One-Man Picket Line

Despite his inexperience and youth, Jimmy was class-conscious to the core, intelligent and eager to learn, tireless in his efforts to build the union, honest and incorruptible in every fiber and, above all, a bull dog fighter for his principles. He refused to back down before General Motors. When the Auto Labor Board avoided his appeal for reinstatement on his job, he put on his one-man picket line before the Chevrolet main gate. He was rehired in short order—and placed in an office post at his original wage.

With his hand forced by the imminent Auto Labor Board election, the union was compelled to act promptly and decisively. Ten days before the election a meeting of the Chevrolet workers was called. The phenomenal number of 600 showed up. Jimmy Roland was chairman and acting organizer. Other successful meetings were called in quick succession. The union was flooded with applications for membership. When the elections were finally held, despite the fact that the union advised the workers not to participate in it, the vote of the Chevrolet workers went overwhelmingly for the representative of the union, the business agent, Fred Schwake.

Acted Quickly

Once the vote was over, there was no stalling or delay. Moving quickly and decisively, guided by the strong and militant leadership of Jimmy Roland, as chairman of the elected executive shop committee, the new union men acting through their committee drew up a union contract and presented it to the plant executives on April 19. Roland firmly and skillfully directed the inexperienced committee through this first treacherous conference, and indicated thereby the undeviating position he would maintain throughout the strike. The committee refused to discuss anything but the terms of their own contract. They would not accept cigars or non-union brand cigarettes offered by the bosses. They declined to lunch with the bosses or deal with them in any but a formal and business-like manner. The class lines were strictly drawn.

Every significant condition in the union contract was flatly rejected by the bosses. That very night a mass meeting of the Chevrolet workers was held and a unanimous vote for strike taken. A strike committee of nine was elected with authority to call the strike. Jimmy Roland was the chairman.

Trying to Stall

Desperately, General Motors sought to delay the action. Top-notch G. M. C. officials flooded into Toledo from Detroit Monday, April 22, at 5 A.M. and called the shop committee into another conference. General Motors was obviously on the defensive. They knew they were dealing with leadership of a different calibre than that of the weak, vacillating, conciliating type of the A. F. of L. officials, personified by individuals like the national auto union organizer, Francis Dillon. They kept the committee closeted in conference for twelve straight hours so that the strike could not be called that day. The committee held to its demands like the Rock of Gibraltar.

At 6:15 A.M., April 23, Jimmy Roland and his committee went through the plant and spread the word. The power was turned off, the wheels stopped moving. In a disciplined organized line, the workers marched from the plant. The company foremen tried to threaten and cajole the strikers not to leave. Company handbills, calculated to distort the issues of the strike and confuse the workers, were circulated. The company tactics were useless. In short order, the plant was entirely shut down.

At the plant gate, the strikers were met by a group of the union men, headed by Bill Prior. The progressives aided the strikers to organize a solid, effective mass picket line.

Then the strike committee, as guided by Jimmy Roland, sent a number of telegrams. One went to Washington to the surprised and chagrined Francis Dillon, informing him that the strike was on. The others went to all the union locals in General Motors plants throughout the country, telling them of the strike and urging them to take similar action. Every one of these moves had been previously calculated by the union progressives.

where in certain restaurants, waitresses returned to the wage basis of $4.00 for a 7 day week. The American worker cannot fool himself that the result can be anything but a general lowering of wage scales and a still more general increase in working hours.

Prepare for Action

He must be ready now that the decks are clear for action. He must give an answer, and the only possible one, to those who up to now have controlled the life and destiny of 125 million people in this country. The American worker must respond to the coming onslaught of the employers against the living standards by an effective method of organization. Their answer must be: into the unions to fight for higher standards, and to fight effectively as only can be done by strong and all embracing unions.

Censure Silk Workers Board; Fails to Carry Out Decisions

By FELIX GIORDANO
PATERSON, May 22.—The Joint Board of this local of the American Federation of Silk Workers was extended a unanimous vote of censure at a meeting of the Plain Goods Department, held last Saturday. The vote came as a result of an attack against the Stalinist-influenced Board for failing to carry out its own decisions.

At an open hearing of the Mayor's Conciliation Committee held the previous night at Central High School the Joint Board was supposed to present a resolution for public approval, which was then to be forwarded and presented to the open hearing on the silk code in Washington on Tuesday. Such a resolution was not presented and no one represented at the hearing the official view of the union. Tom Morgan, notorious local representative of the U.T.W., was the labor spokesman on the Mayor's Committee, which sanctioned unanimously the passage of resolutions that were very clear in so far as the bosses' demands went, but which became miraculously vague as soon as they began to babble about a standard of wages for the workers.

W. P. Member Speaks

Aud none of the known members of the Communist Party dared get up and protest at the hearing. It was only a member of the Workers Party who demanded that the resolution which read in part " . . . resolved, that we place these craft minimums on the basis of the program adopted by the workers . . . " specifically state the program adopted by the A.F.S.W., which is for a thirty hour week and a $25 minimum for weavers.

Having failed to protest of their own accord, the C. P. carried its program to its logical conclusion and did not even support the demand, with the result that the resolution went unchanged.

Not such was the attitude of the officials of the Federation and of the Local of the Dyers. George Baldanzi made no bones about presenting a resolution of his own, which was carried as a substitute resolution for one presented by the Mayor's Committee.

Union Muffs Situation
At this hearing our union failed miserably. It did not mobilize the membership to attend the meeting, it did not present the official resolution embodying its views, it did not even take the floor to try to give official leadership to the workers. What fight there was, what resistance was offered, was not organized by our union, but was instead organized by the dyers' union, which was not affected by the meeting.

The failure of the local officialdom on Friday was not the end, but the beginning of a disastrous chapter in the history of our union. Where the C. P. left off in Paterson, the infamous national leadership of the U.T.W. took up in Washington on Tuesday, with Gorman and McMahon accepting the standard of wages proposed by the Labor Advisory Board, in open defiance of the standard of wages and other labor provisions demanded by the membership of the union nationally only a scant three weeks ago.

An Alarm Signal

Nor can we be surprised; for, had not Paterson, even Paterson, the city of struggles, allowed the Mayor's Resolution to pass?

The events of last Friday in Paterson and of yesterday in Washington bear a warning and sound the alarm.

The membership of our union needs intelligent and alert leadership. The so-called "Progressive Group" failed when it was in charge, and now cannot do anything better than spread a whispering campaign against individuals, instead of presenting a policy and fighting for it. The Communist Party, grown "respectable" with the right turn effected in the trade union policy, does not dare put up a fight against the reactionary leadership of the A. F. of L. What is needed in Paterson and in every other silk center is a new alignment of really progressive forces, a genuine left wing, established on the basis of a sound program of real militancy, and challenging both the old bureaucrats and the Communist Party for leadership in the locals and nationally.

More Builders Are Wanted

Among the New Militant builders Comrade S. W. Semington of Chicago holds the record for the period of the last fortnight. He sent in a total of six yearly subs and two club subscriptions of four each. But there is another sign of activity in this field from Chicago. More attention is being given to general distribution and Rose Casano also forwarded two club subscriptions of four each.

From Los Angeles A. C. Doughty sent in two club subscriptions of four each. From Philadelphia we received from Norman Penn one such club subscription and from Davenport, Iowa, Betty Rowland forwarded one club subscription and two six months subs. Chester Johnson of Minneapolis forwarded four one year subs and our indefatigable builder among the railroad workers in the northwest sent in a club subscription of four. All in all when this is taken together with a number of single subscriptions turned in notably from New York City, this is not such a bad record, but it is, of course, not sufficient for a real serious extension of circulation.

A practical means of quick results in this respect is afforded by the club subscription cards. They are issued in clubs of four three-months subs for each dollar paid in advance, printed on U. S. postal cards, to be deposited in a mail box as soon as the subs are obtained and the investment thus refunded to the builder. We have only a limited number of these cards and they will be good only for a limited period of time. Some changes by the way of real improvements of the New Militant are now in contemplation, hence the limited period for which these club cards will hold good.

The changes that are contemplated are of a far reaching character and as soon as the plans take on concrete shape the announcement

Next New International To Appear Soon

We are making a serious effort to catch up with the past delays in publication of the theoretical organ. The management of both publications has been brought together under one head and we believe that this will facilitate the matter of appearing on time in the future. The June issue will be off the press on June 10. Following that the date of appearance of the July issue will be further advanced and so on until we have caught up.

Time is short for distribution of the May issue and for settlement of accounts, but the remittances are a very important item in assuring a prompt appearance. The May issue features a fundamental Marxian analysis of the present situation in France. From the Lome front one of the most important developments taken up for a thorough discussion is the Long and Comblin movements. The June issue will carry as one of its outstanding features a new theoretical article on Soviet Russia by L. D. Trotsky.

In this connection let us remind you of the complimentary offer of a one year subscription for the New Militant and the New International both for $2.00. This offer also will be good only for a limited period. The best thing to do for those who are interested is therefore to avail themselves of this offer right away.

Speed Is Most Important Now!

The New Militant is in a very serious financial crisis. Only disaster can follow if this situation is not changed. It will go under unless our alarm signal is heeded.

This crisis is brought about by and large due to the fact of the inexcusable negligence in many instances and the undue slowness in others in making settlements for accounts due for bundle orders forwarded regularly. We do not doubt that the bundles have been disposed of; but the remittances are lacking. To say the least, this is an intolerable situation.

We do not believe that our supporters will want to see the New Militant go under. We feel certain that you will all lend a hand to get it out of its difficulty. But action is required without a moment's delay. The first thing to do for those who owe on bundle accounts is to make an immediate settlement. In addition all subscriptions about to expire should be renewed without delay and the New Militant builders get busy soliciting new subscriptions. If this is acted on promptly we can get out of the crisis and continue in existence.

In this we count upon all the friends and supporters of the

As the French Working Class Approaches the Final Crisis

Lessons of the Municipal Elections — 'Victory' Brings Fascist Danger Closer

GENEVA, May 17 (ICL Press Service).—The Marxists have always struggled against the anti-parliamentary cretinism of the anarchists but they have never ceased their vigorous struggle against traditional "parliamentary cretinism." We are far from the thought of under-estimating the importance of the "victories" won in the municipal elections from the 5th to the 12th of March by the socialists and communists, by the "popular front" for short. It is not our object to minimize the extent of these "victories" thanks to which a large number of municipalities have passed to the hands of the socialists and communists. We must, however, put the proletariat on guard against the boasts of the incorrigible parliamentarians who try to present these "victories" to us as an "impressive defeat" of the forces of the "6th of February," that is the forces equipped for civil war against the workers.

Whoever believes that is deceiving himself and deceiving the working class by lulling them on the electoral results. On the contrary, the forces of the "6th of February," the forces of counter-revolution and coup d'état, will be no less disturbed and no less active after the elections of the 5th and 12th of May. The armed forces of coup d'état and civil war are not defeated by ballots. That is what we learned first from the Italian experience, and then from the German and Austrian, and recently from the Spanish events.

The Italian Experience
In 1921, in Italy, Giolitti dissolved the Italian Chamber, hoping thus to weaken the socialist and communist opposition in parliament. The country voted once more against Giolitti and against Fascism, which at the time of the coup d'état had only 25 out of 500 deputies. After two years in power, Mussolini sought to sanction his coup d'état by new elections in 1924. Once again he was disavowed by the country, especially in the great industrial centers but even in the country. It was after the results of these elections that Mussolini had recourse to a second coup d'état by provoking the assassination of the socialist deputy Matteotti by his bands—it is from this crisis that the present totalitarian state in Italy emerged.

And in Spain? There also, the results of the elections in 1930, evaluated not according to the number of those elected, but according to the real number of votes registered by each party, basically marked a defeat of the forces of the old regime. And in spite of that nothing prevented the forces of reaction from marching to the destruction of the democratic republican conquests.

Disavow "Civil Truce"

Yes: Engels pointed that out long ago. Lenin illustrated it once again: universal suffrage can offer nothing more than a gauge of the forces which are at play in the country; its only value is as an indicator. What then is the meaning of the results of the 5th and 12th of May? The communist "gains" do not signify an approval of the policy of "civil peace" which the communist leadership slavishly following the steps of Soviet diplomacy, practices towards the French bourgeoisie which is allied to the U. S. S. R. Wherever this problem has been posed and despite its being posed in terms disgusting to revolutionary Marxism and to proletarian internationalism ("defeat of the enemy at home") the policy of "civil peace" with the imperialist "allies" of the U. S. S. R. has been clearly disavowed: we are referring to St. Denis. But the communist "gains" as well as those of the "socialists" and of the "popular front" in general signify that even despite the confused and capitulationist policy which was carried on by both socialist and communist leadership, the will to struggle against fascism has taken unshakable roots among the French workers ever since February 12.

A question must be posed to the leaders of the "popular front" after the "victories" of the 5th and 12th of May. What will you do with these victories? How will you utilize this great force which has fallen into your lap in the form of so powerful a net-work of municipalities? Will you continue to prostrate yourself at the feet of Flaminio, Regnier, Laval and others, by pleading with them to come to the rescue of the working class and disarm and disperse the fascist bands? Will you squander the force put at your disposal by the workers of France as you did after February 12? The race to power after May 5 and 12 will be much sharper and much quicker: who will get there first, the working class or fascism? This is what must be understood and be made understood.

The Dilemma

Upon the solution of this unavoidable dilemma—we or they in power?—depends the possibility of maintaining and extending the victories of May 5 and 12, depends the possibility of a real and lasting alliance of proletarian France with the proletarian U. S. S. R., depends the fate and the near future in Europe and the world, the fate of peace and socialism. If on the contrary they rest contented with these municipal election "victories," in the hope of new "victories" in the next political elections in order to continue in this fashion ad infinitum, if they continue to morally and materially disarm the French working class by stupid injections of petty bourgeois pacifism, if they associate themselves with the type of national defense Stalin prescribed in Moscow during Laval's visit while the enemy organizes, arms and trains itself for civil war, the result, the sad result will be that instead of the defeat of the "forces of the 6th of February" they will end up by surrendering themselves to it together with the victories won by the entire working class.

Once more we sound our signal of warning: If the French working class is not to suffer the humiliation and the slavery of our brothers in Italy and Germany; if it is not to suffer the heavy defeats as in Austria and Spain—

Down with parliamentary cretinism!
Down with the disarmers of the working class!

Love live the Workers' Militia!
Long live the united front of struggle, which organizes and embraces all the toiling masses of France for the revolutionary struggle against Fascism and against war.

PHILADELPHIA (FP).—Pay boosts, union recognition and a 40-hour week in a temporary truce ending June 1, have ended a strike of 800 Philadelphia teamsters and helpers.

Resolution of the Bolshevik-Leninists For the Coming Congress of the French SP

Motion of the Bolshevik-Leninist Group for the National Congress of the French Socialist Party, June 9, 1935.

I.
The Congress of the Socialist Party considers that the entire national and international situation imposes on the proletariat the task of immediately placing itself in the forefront of the struggle for power. If the working class and all the oppressed are not ready to seize power and expropriate the bourgeoisie, the militarist reaction—the Tardieus and the Weygands and the fascists—the La Rocques, the Bucards and the Taittingers will inevitably seize it.

That is why the Socialist Party proclaims its will to organize the working masses immediately under the slogan of the struggle for power, which must serve as the axis for action by the party on all fields: political, economic, social, military.

The only path to power is the revolutionary path. Between the reformist methods and the insurrectionist methods there is no third road. Only "force is the great midwife of societies."

II.
The prerequisite of this struggle is merciless action against the Flaminio government of spoliation and war, which far from defending the rights of the workers within the capitalist regime, methodically destroys them with the support of the fascists, the militarists and the church.

The Radical-Socialist party lends its support in this task. For this reason the Socialist Party considers it imperative to break all connections with it in the elections, in parliament and outside of parliament.

From this also it flows that the whole attitude or practice of benevolent opposition towards the government and its policy (votes in parliament, etc. . . .) must be denounced as incompatible with a revolutionary orientation towards power.

The struggle for power demands a break with all promises and all practices of civil peace "even in the case of German aggression" (speech of Blum in the Chamber of Deputies).

ties), even under the banner of the defense of the U. S. S. R. The party must carry on the struggle for the revolution and for the establishment of the Socialist United States of Europe, as the only method of avoiding war. If nevertheless war does break out, the struggle for power must be followed up by the continuation of the class struggle, regardless of the defeat of its own imperialism.

The struggle for power must also be combined with appropriate propaganda to win the toilers under arms for socialism.

III.
The Socialist Party declares that the democratic conquests (freedom of assembly and press) must not be confused with the parliamentary state and the Constitution of 1875, which can only be defended by methods of revolutionary mass action. Utilizing these conquests deriving from the democratic period as the method and point of departure for an action which is not restricted by bourgeois legality, the action of the masses directed by the socialists will lead to the decisive struggle for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

IV.
The program of action towards power will develop on the basis of the program of action containing the important demands (nationalization of the banks and the key industries) connected with demands indigenous to every strata of the toiling population (draw up a list of demands principally for the workers, the women, the youth, the peasants, the unemployed, the foreign-born, the employees, the small storekeepers, the colonials).

The struggle for these demands will take place under the aegis of control by the exploited of production, exchange and credit now monopolized by a handful of exploiters. The Party will appeal to the confederal unions for joint action in order to support the organization and mass actions around the above demands, inscribed in the confederal plan.

V.
The propaganda around the above mentioned demands will be connected with the following slogans as the principal objectives and methods on the road to power:

a) Popularization and preparation of the general strike;
b) Creation of the Workers' Militia;
c) Propaganda for the arming of the people.

VI.
The party emphasizes that the struggle for power can only connote the struggle for the radical destruction of the bourgeois state apparatus (police, administrative, constitutional and military) and its substitution by the workers' and peasants' state, the form of which has been initiated by the Paris Commune, then realized by the Soviet Commune. In the aim of establishing dual power in society the party will begin the creation of the first elements of workers' power (neighborhood committees, workers and peasants committees, factory committees, soldiers circles).

VII.
The party demands the concession of elementary liberties to the natives of the colonies oppressed by the French bourgeoisie (trade union rights, freedom of press and assembly, etc. . . .). The working class of France can conquer power only jointly with the peoples and classes exploited by French capitalism in its colonies.

In the struggle for power an important role will be played by the categories of the most exploited and most oppressed, such as the youth, the women and the foreign-born workers. The Congress of the Socialist Party therefore decides to conduct a campaign which will particularly aim at intensively developing a program of demands, suitable for them.

VIII.
Victory of the workers is not possible without strong cohesion, without the constitution, in the fire of struggle of a revolutionary leadership, that is, in the present conditions of organization of the working class, of a regrouping of its conscious elements in a single revolutionary party constituted on a clear political basis derived from the lessons, the victories and the defeats of the past.

The party decides, in order to hasten this regrouping in the fire of action, to hold regular joint meetings between members of different proletarian parties so as to elaborate a unity platform on a truly revolutionary basis.

SUBSCRIBE TO NEW MILITANT

the furor created among many sections of the population by their propagandizing of the vision of Plenty must not be lost sight of.

Very complex technical problems are involved in the problem of taking political power and likewise in the job of keeping the machinery of production and distribution going after power has been taken, in a highly industrialized nation. The capitalist story is that "after the revolution" chaos, distress and so on are inevitable because unskilled and inexperienced workers will be running the trains and power stations, making plans for bridges and ships, etc. The story is of course, absurd. It fails to take account of the great competence of the masses of the workers themselves.

Who has constructed this country's vast productive plant anyway? Furthermore, this capitalist tale makes no mention of the fact that technicians and scientists are constantly thwarted under capitalism. They are given scanty funds unless immediate profit is in sight from their work. Countless inventions and discoveries go unused because it would not "pay" the private capitalists who own them to put them to use. The revolutionary party will make it clear that it is well aware of the delicate nature of the technical tasks which the workers must carry out, and that so far from standing for inefficiency and anarchy, it is precisely the socialist economy under workers' control which alone will give full scope to science and will effectively plan for human welfare.

Elsewhere the conception of a Leninist, i.e., a disciplined, revolutionary party (not reformist or not parliamentary) which the Workers' Party holds, the role of such a party in the mass organizations today, and in the revolutionary crisis itself, has been set forth.

The Party, standing upon the principles already discussed in this series, must be created of course by the American workers. No one else can do the job for them. The Party must so root itself in and address itself to the conditions under which the American working class lives that they will feel the Party to be their party—concerned about their problems, able to talk their language, intimately acquainted with their experiences, to be trusted in action, more and more to be looked to for guidance.

We heartily agree, furthermore, with the contention that the Party must know how to popularize its message and even more to dramatize the daily struggles of the workers and the revolutionary struggle as a whole. An emotional loyalty to the revolutionary movement must be developed. A movement which does not care or know how to march and sing and fling its banners to the breeze, is already dead.

This involves the use of symbols. The hold of capitalist, unscientific, nationalistic symbols upon the workers must, however, be broken, not confirmed. The revolutionary movement must, therefore, have its own. They must be such as to bring forward the idea and strengthen the emotion of class—the working class against the capitalist—and consequently the idea of labor internationalism against middle class nationalism. To break the hold of false ideas is difficult enough at best. We should be foolish indeed to make the task still more difficult by using symbols which might confuse the workers, which do not clearly and uncompromisingly suggest loyalty to class, loyalty to the world-wide brotherhood of labor, and not to any lesser cause!

The events of each new day, both in the U. S. and abroad, make clear the need in this country of such a revolutionary party as the W. P. More than in any previous period in modern revolutionary history the responsibility for leadership rests upon the American working class and its vanguard. If it is essential that this party have an international outlook and constitute a part of an international revolutionary force, it is equally true that such a party in the U. S., the very stronghold of capitalism and imperialism, will play a mighty role in the freeing of the workers in the Latin American nations, in Europe, throughout the world.

Therefore, for an effective American revolutionary party!
For the Workers' Party of the United States, committed with its sister parties and groups to the building of the new revolutionary Fourth International!

L. Budenz Resigns From Workers Party

Louis F. Budenz has resigned from the Workers Party and his resignation has been accepted by the Political Committee.

Radical differences between comrade Budenz and the party on a number of fundamental questions were the reasons for the resignation and its acceptance. These differences, first indicated in the article published in the Modern Monthly, were further confirmed in several discussions which followed its publication. The party point of view on these questions has been set forth in a series of articles by comrade Muste in the New Militant.

Victory Greeted Struggle of Illinois Unemployed Masses

fight they made their organization a great political force in the state and what is equally important, the Illinois Workers Alliance grew by leaps and bounds.

The jobs fought against the sales tax almost single-handedly. The State Federation of Labor supported the sales tax and condemned the Illinois Workers Alliance. The great mass of partially employed workers remained apathetic in the struggle. Within the ranks of the Illinois Workers Alliance great confusion existed over the sales tax. Especially among some of the members who took the position that "whether its an income or sales tax the workers pay the bill, so what the hell." And then there was the wrecking crew of the Communist party who did everything from the start to wreck the march. Despite these obstacles the unemployed workers staged a truly heroic battle for six long weeks.

Wrecking Crew at Work
The Communist party again revealed their insincerity with their fake "united front" policy. They violated the discipline of the march, boomed militant non-Stalinist speakers, attempted to take over the microphone at the meeting, and in general made a nuisance of themselves to the Nth degree. No more than fifty Unemployed Council members participated in the affair but still the Communist Party wanted to take control of the situation.

Karl Lockner, Chicago Communist leader, was among those who did all in his power to disrupt the mass demonstration. Having done absolutely nothing to make the march a success the Communist Party leaders arrived at the scene of the march and began "united fronting." They took a handful of Illinois Workers Alliance members with Communist Party sympathies and shoved them to the fore asking for a united front. Here was a proposition that was the height of comedy if its reactions were not so tragic. Members of the Illinois Workers Alliance asked the executive board of the Illinois Workers Alliance to make a united front with their own members so Karl Lockner and other Communist leaders could capture leadership of the march! The Illinois Workers Alliance told Karl Lockner and his handful of "leaders" that they could march in the demonstration but under no circumstances were they to attempt to wreck the Alliance as they had the Unemployed Councils.

Charges that the leaders of the Illinois Workers Alliance were made by the Communist Party leaders. Records will prove that in past years the Communist manhandled Unemployment Council did not march in the capital city a single time despite their advanced notice that they would march in defiance of police orders. The Illinois Workers Alliance by its force of numbers marched three times throughout the city in less than two weeks.

While the Daily Worker was in the process of exposing the Hearst press for its lies in regards to the Soviet Union it, too, lied about the Illinois Hunger March. For instance, in the Daily Worker issue of May 22, the day after the march, a front page story stated that there were more than 1,000 marchers. The Associated Press stated that there were more than 2,000 in the parade. In the same item the Daily Worker said that "the marchers were led by the Unemployment Councils." Not one line made reference to the Illinois Workers Alliance, an organization of 150,000 members organized in 266 towns in 81 counties. On the other hand a check-up of capitalist papers from coast to coast revealed that the Illinois Workers Alliance was the organization that led the march. No wonder Karl Radek lauds Adolph Ochs of the New York Times. He, too, has to read the New York Times to find out what is going on in America.

Despite these enemies of labor, despite the array of forces that ranged from the Washington government down to the A. F. of L. bureaucrats and Communist disrupters, the Illinois Workers Alliance led a splendid fight in defense of the unemployed workers. It still continues the fight in hundreds of towns where the organization functions.

The 'American Approach'

(Ed. Note: This is the concluding article of the series of four by comrade Muste.)

By A. J. MUSTE

IV.
Having pointed out the falseness or inadequacy of some of the means which have been proposed for overthrowing capitalism in the U. S., we must now state positively how the Workers Party believes the job can and must be done.

Fundamentally, as we have already pointed out, the W. P. way is the way of Marx and Lenin. We do not believe that we have a new-fangled contraption with a U. S. 1935 patent for achieving the workers' revolution.

The central position among the forces which must be depended upon to overthrow capitalism belongs to the working class, especially the workers in the basic industries. As the capitalist system declines and presently falls to pieces, presents the masses with growing hunger and insecurity, the threat or actuality of fascism and war, the fight of the workers for direct and simple things, about wages and hours, for the right to exist, necessarily becomes more intense. It has to be fought on a broader front. From a fight in a single plant, it develops into a fight against a gigantic corporation, against all the corporations in an industry, against industry, the economic system, as a whole. The government, moreover, takes sides more and more openly against the workers, so in order to exist they wage the fight against the government too, that is, the entire governmental system, the State, which supports capitalism. In the course of these struggles the Workers (or Workers, Farmers, Soldiers) Committees or Councils (Soviets) are compelled to take on broader functions. Under the leadership of the revolutionary party, they presently overthrow the capitalist state and become the basic organs of the Workers State.

Allies of the Workers

By workers we mean the working class. It includes the miners, transportation, factory workers. It includes also the clerical workers, agricultural workers, many technicians and professionals who are also wage earners. These have to organize in their economic organizations, just as the factory workers. They will more and more engage in the same kind of struggles as the latter.

The workers must have the support of other oppressed and exploited sections of the population—the farmers, small business people, the persecuted Negro race, colonial peoples who also suffer under the yoke of American capitalism. A lot of people hold that the middle class cannot be gotten to support the workers in revolutionary action. We must not make the mistake of underestimating the problem. Farmers, for example, do in certain cases oppose the Unemployed Leagues because if relief rates or wages on public works are kept up, it is harder to get farm labor to work for a pittance. Small business people often line up with Big Business interests. This is true. It is the job of revolutionists to carry on skillful propaganda work among these and similar elements. But this is not an impossible task. These groups also suffer, and ever more intensely, under capitalism. Their leaders are as intelligent as are the workers' leaders and some at least can be won to the revolutionary position. There have been many cases in the U. S. as well as other countries, where these groups have given substantial support to workers in strike struggles. We do not have to accept it as foreordained that they are going to line up with Fascism. It has been shown in Russia, Germany and other countries that they were willing in the war and post-war crisis to support or at least tolerate revolutionary workers' leadership. It was only where socialist and communist party leadership had become bankrupt and these middle class elements sensed that the workers' movement under this leadership had "shot its bolt" and offered no courageous and clear way out, that they rallied en masse behind the fascist banner.

Here in the U. S. there is unquestionably among the masses resentment against restraint and regimentation. What fascism, the triumph of capitalist reaction, means in practice in Europe has been seen by the workers and farmers of this country. It would be absurd to assume that they are now immune to fascist propaganda; but it is certain that the European object lesson has made an impression. The country today is not fascist in psychology. In strikes, organizing campaigns, etc., popular sentiment is with the revolting groups nearly everywhere. (Of course there are exceptions.) The revolutionary Marxian knows better than to get panicky, lose his head completely and insist that the following, real or apparent, of a Long or Coughlin means that fascism is going to sweep the country next week and that only by some tour de force, some colossal exhibition of American salesmanship, some clever building up of a rival personality, can we stem the tide and achieve the workers' revolution. We face indeed a hard fight; but the outcome is not yet decided.

Since the country as a whole has not passed through a feudal experience, as well as for other reasons, the American masses do not, as has frequently been pointed out, regard themselves as a class apart, they are slow in achieving class consciousness. This tends to make labor organization work more difficult. It keeps workers voting for republican and democratic tickets, etc. But this also means that at any rate large sections of the American working population do not have any feeling of inferiority. They are not habituated to oppression and servility. It is a fresh, very vigorous working class, capable of bold and defiant action, easily fooled as yet but nevertheless rapidly becoming more hard-boiled and convinced that "the whole thing is a racket." It is, furthermore, a working class which has never suffered a major disaster. It has not lost confidence in itself. All this is to be kept in mind and used by revolutionists working in the American scene.

Nor is it merely that in the case of the American working class there is no feudal tradition to reckon with. The popular concept is that the United States was meant to be different from "the old countries." It was "a nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal"—a nation in which there were not to be rich and poor, oppressors and oppressed, exploiters and exploited; in which not merely a privileged few but all the people should have plenty, security and opportunity for self-expression. This aspiration or "dream" has had a real influence on the thinking and the emotions of the masses of this country. It is not an aspiration which they need to dismiss. It is not only permissible for revolutionists to make use of this factor in American psychology; they would be plain fools if they did not do so.

If, however, we are not to slip into sentimentalism about "the American dream," which would at best accomplish nothing and at worst serve to fan the fires of nationalism, we must point out how the rising capitalist class developed the concepts and slogans of "liberty, equality, fraternity," in its own interest: how after luring the workers and farmers to back them in their fight against British merchants by means of such slogans, American merchants promptly turned around and wrote a constitution based upon Hamilton's idea that "the people is a beast" rather than on conceptions of freedom and equality for the masses, and so on. We must point out that in the pre-industrial era the conception of plenty, security, etc. for large masses was to a great extent an unrealizable dream, that in the Machine-Age the dream can be realized, but only in a socialist economy in which private ownership in the means of production is relegated to the museum of history along with the ox-cart, an economy in which furthermore artificial national boundaries are wiped out and the international brotherhood of labor realized.

The "revolutionary tradition" of American history can also be utilized—not the romantic idea that Americans are inveterate crusaders prepared to shed their blood for ideals; but the fact that the history of the nation is one of constant and severe class-struggle, that the capitalist class did not hesitate to fight for its class interests whenever the situation required as in 1776 and 1861, that the working class today must be prepared to use all means to carry forward the evolutionary process and establish a higher economy and finer culture than capitalism could achieve.

While the growing impoverishment and insecurity under capitalism in its decline, as we have already pointed out, play a decisive role in bringing the masses to the point of revolutionary action, it is also true that the American standard of living has been comparatively high, that the American worker does not usually feel himself a member of "a poor, oppressed class," and that the appeal to him must be based in a considerable degree on his outraged sense of justice over the things he might so easily have in this highly mechanized economy with its fabulous natural resources, and instead of which he is given a five to fifty dollars a month "security wage!" In other words, those who insist that revolutionary propaganda in this nation must paint the picture of what might be, must show concretely what the machine age could do for the masses if the fetters of capitalism were struck off the Machine, are entirely correct. In this connection, it may be observed that the many varieties of Technocrats are indeed vulnerable in their economic and romantic in their conception of the problem of political power—how we are going to get a chance to put a new economic system into effect—but as engineers pointing to the capacity of our productive mechanism they have made a contribution. And the lesson of triumph of the point of view. The question here was not an issue between the capitalist class and the working class, but an issue between two groups within the capitalist class.

The Supreme Court said in effect that the U. S. is not yet ready for the social and political structure foreshadowed by the NRA, even though it might have to make use of it to pull out of an emergency. It invalidated the NRA on the grounds that Congress had unconstitutionally delegated legislative powers to the President and attempted intra-state regulation of the relations between employees and employers. The specific grounds are not important, since the Court can always find legal justification for whatever suits the requirements of the dominant capitalist grouping. Nevertheless, they serve to indicate the still immature character of the developing crisis of U. S. capitalism. Finance capital does not yet need a radically new departure. There is now a breathing space, with the old ways, the "Constitution," for the time being "vindicated." But during the breathing space the historical contradictions will ripen further. The Blue Eagle has not gone forever. Like the phoenix, a new and greater Blue Eagle will begin before long to rise from its ashes. And the new Eagle will conceal beneath its wings the Fasces and the Swastika. For Fascism is the necessary capitalist solution to the historical crisis of the capitalist system.

From a survey of the role of the NRA, the central lesson—or, rather, double lesson—emerges:

The workers must defend their rights and advance their demands by militant struggle, by their own independent class actions. It was the misleaders of the workers, above all the A. F. of L. bureaucrats, and not primarily the NRA itself, who permitted the last two years to pass by without advances on the part of the working class. They put their faith in Section 7a, in Roosevelt, in Labor Boards, in "the government." And—not surprisingly—the government of the capitalist class used every one of these agencies to beat back the workers. That is what the government is for. Now, following the Supreme Court decision, the bureaucrats are once more flying to the government, and "demanding" the Wagner Bill, the Guffey Bill, a "new NRA."

In contrast, the answer of the working class to the decision must be a repudiation of this parliamentary horse-trading, whose only possible effect is to befuddle, weaken, and lead aside the working class from its proper business.

The answer must be: Organization, strikes, discipline, militant struggle. The working class has no friend and no support other than its own organized strength. This is what it must learn from its experience with the NRA.

The second, more fundamental, lesson is in fact the central lesson of our entire historical epoch. The NRA proves once more, openly and dramatically, that there is no way out for the working class other than through the socialist revolution. No capitalist "solution," imposed by the capitalist government, can possibly benefit the working class. All such solutions at the present time can only prepare the way for the final capitalist solution—Fascism. The only government on which the working class can rely will be their own government. The independent struggle of the workers to defend their economic and social rights against the capitalist regime must lead to the political struggle of the working class for state power.

This is the lesson of the Blue Eagle.

A Shady Adventure

The recent attempt of David Lasser, Chairman of the Workers Alliance of America, to gather recruits for his organization in territory in West Virginia where for more than two years unemployed leagues affiliated with the National Unemployed League have carried on effective militant activity, met with a cold reception from West Virginia workers. This does not change in any degree the disruptive character of Lasser's adventure.

When the W.A.A. was founded this winter at a conference of certain state and local officials of unemployed organizations, its leaders insisted that it was in no sense an attempt to build an organization "dual" to the N.U.L. Resolutions looking toward conferences for setting up a single, unified organization of the unemployed were carried. W.A.A. officials have recently called certain conferences to discuss his question of unity and of united action.

When the leader of an organization making these professions runs away in the very midst of the crisis created by the new works relief program, from his own local organization in New York City which has as yet gathered in only a handful of the unemployed of the Metropolis, and apparently carefully avoids the many states and localities in which practically no unemployed organization exists, to attempt an invasion of territory already very effectively covered, he is guilty of playing on the deep-seated desire of the workers for unity for sectarian purposes, and at the same time creating conditions which bring about division and not unity. It would be hard to find in the whole history of the labor movement of the United States a more flagrant and inexcusable instance of "dual unionism."

The Workers Party stands as always for united action of responsible unemployed organizations for special ends by agreed-upon methods. It supports the N.U.L. in its oft repeated demand for a single unified unemployed organization democratically controlled by the rank and file, as against a loose federation created and controlled by a top leadership. Because of our profound concern that solidarity in the face of the common enemy be achieved, we call upon the executive of the W.A.A. as well as the Labor Committee of the Socialist Party, under whose direction we assume Lasser is working, to repudiate the action we have referred to and to see to it that no similar adventures are indulged in in the future. We believe that all unemployed organizations ought to record their condemnation of such tactics in the most emphatic manner.

We agree furthermore with the N.U.L. that it is time for the W.A.A. to make plain whether it has entered into an agreement with William Green and the A. F. of L. officialdom generally, with regard to unemployed work, and if so what are the terms of this agreement. Unity of the workers, employed and unemployed, is not the same as collaboration with the top officialdom of the A. F. of L. which is itself committed to a policy of collaboration with the employing class and the capitalist government.

The Wagner Bill

The Wagner Bill passed the Senate on May 16 and has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Labor Relations. With reasonable certainty it may be assumed that this most bitterly contested proposed legislation will become law before Congress adjourns.

Then what?

Will it meet the same fate at the hands of the nine judges on the bench of the U. S. Supreme Court as did the NRA or will it become one of the means, by virtue of its compulsory arbitration provisions, to help start the American working class on to the road of rebellion?

In the bitter contest that has raged pro and con around this proposed Bill is reflected the great paradox of highly developed industrial America: an retarded political development and union organization of its working masses.

It is true that the Wagner Bill provides for the establishment of an independent labor board; it provides for the outlawing of company-dominated unions and requires collective bargaining in which the representatives of a majority of the workers in any plant would speak for all the workers. These are the provisions that are being condemned by industrialists as a government imposed closed shop. They are not inclined to yield even an inch of ground to labor.

The faint-hearted fraternity of reactionary labor leaders take the opposite stand and hail the Wagner Bill as the Magna Charta of labor while fully understanding its compulsory arbitration features. This is not the expression of the paradoxical position of today for in regard to this point they are heart and soul with the industrialists. They could wish for nothing better than the kind of legislation that would help them put a stop to the prospective strikes which they dread even more than do the hard-headed exploiters who are determined to fight the issues out boldly and brazenly.

The real significance of the Wagner Bill lies not in the provisions that ostensibly outlaw the company union but in what follows. This is the compulsory arbitration features. It provides for the creation of a National Labor Relations Board, composed of three members to be appointed by the President—Section 3 (a)—None are to be appointed by labor. It provides that "the findings of the board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive." In its clause (f) under Section 9 the Wagner Bill provides that labor disputes shall be placed under the jurisdiction of Federal District Courts, and it expressly prescribes that "the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the U.S."

If any more proof be needed of the compulsory arbitration features of this Bill it would be necessary to mention only the provisions for punishment of what is called "unfair labor practice affecting commerce." Translated into common everyday language this could hardly mean anything but strikes.

The NRA has been declared unconstitutional in all its code provisions. Insofar as its celebrated Section 7a is concerned, the collective bargaining clause, chairman Biddle of the present Labor Board has already recommended that it be scrapped because of the Wagner Bill being on the way. This Bill is now about to reach its final reading in the House. To the workers it will represent a contradiction colleges, universal insecurity among industrial workers, farmers, small business people, professionals, curtailment of liberty and the exercise of severe and brutal repression against efforts of the masses to right their wrongs.

This appalling contrast between what might be and what is does not, in our opinion, spring from superficial causes. It arises from the nature of the economic system—capitalism—under which we operate.

"A revolution in technology has occurred since 1789 and is still in process. Steel, automobiles, electric light and power, are produced and distributed not by individuals in individual enterprises, but through socialized, 'cooperative' enterprises. Ownership and control, however, of these enterprises, and with it the right to make profit from them, to exploit the labor of those engaged in them, is still on the same individual basis, operated under essentially the same legal and political system as in 1789. It is just as impossible for this antiquated system of private ownership and profit to function, to supply the needs of the population today, as it was for the feudal slave-holding economy in the Southern states to continue to do so in 1860. The system acts, obviously as a brake upon production so that, as the phrase goes, you have 'want in the midst of plenty.'

"If, therefore, the workers and farmers of the United States under the political leadership of the Workers Party were to come into power, they would take steps to end immediately private ownership and control over natural resources and over the plant for production, distribution and communication which their toil and skill have built. Ownership and control would be vested in society represented by the new Workers' State. The owners, so-called, would not receive 'compensation.' It is the workers and farmers, not the industrialists and financiers who have been coining profit from their toil, who have 'compensation' coming to them! The new state will as a matter of fact take whatever measures may be necessary to make it impossible for the old owning class, the czars of industry and finance, to get back into power. All inhabitants, however, who are not engaged in organizing resistance to the new regime and trying to restore the old order of special privilege, insecurity and war, will have their opportunity to do useful social work and to share in the products of that work.

"Citizenship in the new state will likewise be the prerogative of all who are engaged in useful work, industrial, agricultural, clerical, domestic, technical, professional. The workers of these various categories in the various enterprises will be organized in Councils or Unions democratically controlled. They will elect representatives to the higher governing bodies and eventually to the National Council or Congress.

"A National Planning Commission, with subordinate and cooperating commissions in various industries and localities, will be established. Its business will be to plan for the most efficient production of goods and services of all kinds, to utilize fully the many inventions and discoveries already available but held out of use by their owners because no private profit can accrue from them at present, to set the scientists and technicians to work freely and with adequate resources in order to plan for still greater efficiency in the use of our resources and thus for greater abundance of leisure as well as goods. It should be added that the Workers' State will envisage not only national but international planning. National boundaries are as artificial and restrictive today as state boundaries had become in 1789, and socialism is in essence an international, a world economy. Every effort to establish 'planned' production under private capitalism breaks down, since the warfare between rival capitalists in a nation and capitalist groups in different nations disrupts such efforts.

Obliterating Insecurity

"The removal of the brake of private ownership which shuts down factories, plows under raw materials and stifles the scientist and technician, and putting in its place the social, that is, scientific, use of natural resources and the productive plant, will mean an immediate and substantial improvement in the standard of living of the masses. That improvement can be continuous. The specter of insecurity will be removed. The undemocratic economic domination of the few over the many will be at an end. No one can predict the cultural advances which may follow this release of the human spirit. On no other economic basis can the 'American dream' of liberty, equality and fraternity be realized under the conditions of modern life.

Like every ruling class, the present capitalist class will seek to maintain its power. In the period of its rise and expansion capitalism could accumulate profits and also raise the standard of living of the masses. In the present period, as is clear enough on the face of it, it can no longer do this. Profits can be made only by fiercer exploitation, cutting down the living standards of the masses, taking away even such concessions as were previously made.

"Since capitalism must keep pushing the standard lower and lower, it must eventually seek to destroy every vestige of democratic rights, every means of resistance that farmers, workers, small business men, etc. may have. For obviously no matter how meek, peaceful, conservative an organization of these elements may be, at some point it will try to resist the imposition of further impoverishment and distress. To maintain their system, the capitalists will then seek to destroy any such organization in utter disregard of law, constitution and bill of rights. In other words, capitalism can save itself in the present period only by the resort to Fascism. Under these circumstances to assume that democratic processes will be maintained is an ostrich policy. Unquestionably the struggle and strikes of the workers against impoverishment and injustice which now goes on daily will have to be waged ever more intensely and on a broader front, becoming eventually a struggle against the economic system as such and against the government which resists even moderate adjustments as witness the Supreme Court decision on NRA and becomes more and more openly an undemocratic agency of oppression. The choice is between Fascism and revolutionary action for a new social order.

The Choice for All

"To those elements in this country who are well aware from their own experience that something is radically wrong but who hesitate to face the clear and drastic alternatives, we point out what has happened to similar groups and classes in Germany and elsewhere. They espoused Fascism because they wanted an improvement in their standard of living; they are being beaten down to the level of bare existence. They desired security; and they have insecurity. They wanted national self-respect and peace; they are being rushed down the precipice to war. They wanted freedom and recoiled from the 'regimentation' which they were told would obtain under socialism or communism; they have gotten the extreme of regimentation. They wanted a life based on the old virtues, and recoiled from the march forward to a new culture; they have gotten all the indecencies of Hitlerism. They wanted to go back to the 'good old days' before the war; they are being swept back to the middle ages, to barbarism, to savagery. Capitalism today means retreat, reaction, Fascism, war, the collapse of civilization. The one road to security, to peace, to freedom, to cultural advancement is the road of the workers' revolution.

"This is your choice—capitalism which means reaction and chaos or a Workers' World which means a higher level of civilization and culture."

Drive on Pro-Labor Professors Spreads

of Dr. Hallett. The local unions are requesting their international to take action. If Dr. Hallett is not soon reinstated, the Central Trades and Labor Council will appeal for aid to the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor.

The Pennsylvania Unemployed Leagues, in which Dr. Hallett is also active, announced today that if Dr. Hallett is not reinstated before June 10, graduation day at Cedar Crest, the Unemployed Leagues of Lehigh, Northampton and Carbon counties will throw a mass picket line around the college. Dr. Hallett has asked the Non-Partisan Labor Defense to rally support of labor organizations nationally.

by the fact that while it presumably recognizes their right to collective bargaining, outlaws company unions, etc., it attempts to shift the fate of all the conditions of the workers in industry and in union organization from the field of battle in strike struggles, where the workers have their real strength and where militancy counts as an important asset, to the decision of labor boards and judges of the capitalist courts.

Needless to say the final decisions by the courts will be properly backed up by policemen's clubs and steel helmeted soldiers. In this is concealed the attempt to completely disarm the workers. Hence the joy of the reactionary leaders who prefer this means of taking off from their shoulders the responsibility of the old time crude betrayals which are becoming increasingly dangerous to their salaried positions.

But if and when enacted, this Bill will reflect a yet greater contradiction in the American scene. The workers have already learned some bitter lessons of what they can expect from industrial disputes referred for settlement to labor boards and to the capitalist courts. The cleavage that is developing out of these experiences between the working masses, who have nothing to lose but their chains, and their union officials who try to sit on the safety valve to prevent an explosion, is bound to increase with an ever growing speed.

More conclusive proof will be at hand to convince the former that regardless of the latter it will be necessary to rely only on the kind of relations with the employers that they can establish and enforce through union organization and through the welding of their strike weapon. Not the reliance on governmental legislation but on their own militant action should be the watchword.

thrown, is no imperialist policy pursued; only there can and does a natural policy of peace exist.

The task facing the workers in the capitalist countries, therefore, is an enormous intensification of their efforts against the coming imperialist war. The only preventive for war is the extermination of imperialism itself. Nothing short of that can be effective, and all phrasemongering about "disarmament," the League of Nations, "arbitration" and the like is so much dust in the eyes of the masses calculated to facilitate the work of the warmongers.

To exterminate imperialism, however, the working class must follow a policy of intransigent class struggle against its classic enemy. It cannot for a moment relax its vigilance. To every militaristic and war step of every imperialist power, the working class must consistently reply: "Not a man, not a penny for imperialist war!" In every war that breaks out despite the efforts of the working class, the latter must be prepared to utilize the crisis of the capitalist rulers in order to change the imperialist war into a triumphant battle of the workers against the exploiters, for their overthrow and for the establishment of the workers' republic which will truly bring an end to war and suffering.

This is the position taken by the Workers Party. It is identical with the position taken by all those parties and groups throughout the world with which our party is associated in the work of welding together the vanguard of the working class into a new and genuinely revolutionary world movement—the Fourth International.

The position of the Socialist parties, and of their International (the Second) is just the opposite. Just as in 1914, they are now talking about supporting the so-called "democratic" capitalist countries in the coming war with the Fascist countries. And just as in the last war, they will sit by quietly while the democratic rights of the workers—the right to free press, free speech, free assemblage, to organize, to strike—are destroyed by the very "democratic" governments which they are supporting.

The argument of these Socialist parties, now as then, is a lie and a deception, because whatever the ostensible and apparent reason for entering the war, the fact remains that in it every capitalist country, "democratic" or otherwise, pursues purely reactionary and imperialist aims. For all of them, wars are wars for new banditry and conquest or for the preservation of yesterday's banditry and conquest.

In the early period of the Communist parties and their International (the Third), that is, in the period of Lenin, their position was identical with the present position of the Workers Party. In the period of their degeneration, that is, in the period of Stalinism, their position has drawn steadily closer to that of the Socialist-patriots.

In the joint statement issued in Moscow on May 15, 1935 by Laval, Stalin, Molotov and Litvinov, it says: "Above all, the duty falls upon them, in the interest and maintenance of peace, not to allow the means of their national defense to weaken in any sense. In this regard, M. Stalin understands and fully approves the national defense policy of France in keeping her armed forces at a level required for security."

In a speech in the League of Nations on April 18, Litvinov declared in the name of the Soviet Union: "Our standpoint is that of the equality of the nations and their indisputable right to security and to all the means of guaranteeing themselves this security. All the peaceful states have the right to arm themselves in order to protect their security."

By these declarations, the spokesmen of the Soviet Union and the Third International are depriving the Communist party of France of the possibility of conducting an effective struggle against the militaristic armaments measures of French imperialism. With these declarations in the hands of the French capitalist class, the French Communist party is henceforth able to argue only as to what measure of armaments and militarization is best calculated to "protect the security" of French imperialism.

In other words, it must now consistently assume the fundamental position of defense of the capitalist fatherland. With these declarations, the spokesmen of the Third International covers up the fact that the army of imperialism ("democratic" or not) is not only, basically, an army for imperialist aggression against other imperialist powers, but that it is used to subjugate the colonial peoples of France, and the militant working class of France itself!

Just as the Socialist and Communist parties were jointly responsible for the catastrophic defeat of the German working class at the hands of the Hitlerites, so they are now jointly preparing for the new social-patriotic betrayal of the masses in the coming war!

The Workers Party reaffirms its uncompromising opposition to imperialist war and the imperialist powers—be they represented by Fascist Italy, Imperial Japan, Nazi Germany, Republican France, Monarchical England, or Democratic United States. The Workers Party calls upon the workers in every capitalist land to concentrate all their forces, all their forces, all their blows, against the real enemy: the capitalist class at home. The Workers Party renews its pledge of unreserved solidarity with the Soviet Union and will continue its work of rallying the American workers to form a bulwark of support and defense of the first workers' republic.

Down with imperialism and its wars!

Strengthen the lines of struggle against exploiter and oppressor!

Hail the fighting solidarity of the international working class!

Hail the workers' revolution and the workers' world—the only real and lasting guarantee of peace, freedom and security!

N. P. L. D. to Appeal Criminal Syndicalist Case in Sacramento

NATIONAL ISSUE

Campaign Planned in Labor Movement of Entire Country

First steps to raise the recent Sacramento criminal syndicalism convictions to the level of a nationwide fight with broad, aggressive labor backing, were announced yesterday by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Termed a national "test case" by the Hearst press, and hailed by the California reactionaries as a "model for all states," the Sacramento convictions have become the basis of a drive for new anti-labor laws. The N.P.L.D. has called a conference for Monday afternoon to seek united labor action on behalf of the eight Sacramento prisoners and against the type of prosecution which convicted them.

The N.P.L.D., representing Norman Mini, who refused probation and is now serving a 1 to 14 years sentence in San Quentin, has invited to the conference the International Labor Defense, which represents Mini's seven fellow-prisoners; the National Labor Secretary of the Socialist Party, charged with the S. P.'s defense work; the American Civil Liberties Union; and the General Defense Committee of the I. W. W. The Workers Party, of which the defendant Norman Mini is a member, and many trade unions have already endorsed the work of the N.P.L.D. in the Sacramento case.

If progress is made at this meeting and basis for cooperation laid, expansion of the united defense movement should be relatively easy to achieve, the N.P.L.D. announcement states. Thus far acceptance of the invitation to the conference have been received from the A.C. L. U. and the Socialist Party. The G.D.C. has not yet reached a decision but has acknowledged receipt of the invitation. The I.L.D. alone has not answered the invitation.

Socialist Party Reply
In replying to the N.P.L.D., Paul Porter, National Labor Secretary of the Socialist Party, underlines the N.P.L.D.'s view of the Sacramento fight as one on behalf of trade union and democratic rights which can be won only by a combined legal and mass defense. After outlining S. P. activities in support of the trial defense in Sacramento, Porter goes on to say:

"Despite the fact that we have no political agreement either with the members of the Communist Party or the one member of the Workers Party among the defendants, we are prepared to participate in joint action to aid their appeal against the infamous verdict of Sacramento. Whether or not practical arrangements satisfactory to your organization (N.P.L.D.), to the I.L.D., to our party and to the other organizations you mention, can be made, remains to be seen. Our California comrades, after their experiences in the Sacramento trial, are very sceptical of the possibility of joint work with the I.L.D. We are not without such scepticism ourselves. So important is the issue at stake, however, . . . that we do not wish to close the door on the possibility of joint action. Only a conference such as you suggest can answer the question practically."

Porter's letter concludes by asking the N.P.L.D. to convey the greetings of the National Labor Committee of the S. P. to the Sacramento prisoners, and by naming as delegates of the S. P. to the joint conference Murray Baron, New York trade unionist, and Jack Altman, Business Manager of the Socialist Call.

The N.P.L.D. provided the trial attorney, Albert Goldman of Chicago, and a complete defense for Norman Mini, who was convicted along with the seven others due to the superior pressure on the jury of the labor-hating forces of the state. The N.P.L.D. also bailed out two Communist Party defendants, after the I.L.D. failed to do so for six months; got wide publicity and considerable union backing for all the defendants; built a unified defense movement in California, including the state organization of the S. P., which was soon disrupted by the I.L.D. and C.P. The N.P.L.D. after the trial obtained from a

Radio Symposium Brings Thousands of Letters

Thousands of letters commenting on the symposium between Thomas, Dennis and Muste have been received by the offices of the League for Political Education under whose auspices the radio broadcast was held. Comrade A. J. Muste defended Communism against his Socialist and Fascist opponents. In a brilliant address, printed in the last issue of the New Militant, Muste pointed to the glaring defects of capitalist society and the need for communism. Workers from many parts of the country have written in, displaying keen interest in the program of the W. P. and commending him on his masterful treatment of the subject.

Slug Pickets in Brutal Sally on Packing Strike

Mayor Praises Police After Attack in Columbus

(Special to New Militant)
COLUMBUS, Ohio.—Eight weeks of grim picketing of the Columbus Packing Co. were climaxed Friday, May 31, by one of the most disgusting instances of flagrant strike-breaking ever perpetrated by any police force.

The meat cutters, members of Local 346, struck when the company refused to sign a new closed shop contract to replace the one which had expired. Conditions in the plant had driven the workers to a state of desperation. Even under the closed shop, the maximum wage had been about $8.00 per week, a terrible speedup had been instituted, and many had been forced to apply for supplementary relief.

Immediately, Truck Drivers Local 413 went out on a sympathy strike. The picketing lagged at a slow pace until the entrance of the Franklin County Unemployed League revitalized the strike. Arthur Wedemeyer and James Van Meter, members of the Workers

Mass Picket Line For Hallett Defense

ALLENTOWN, Pa., June 7.—A mass picket line thrown around Cedar Crest College campus on Monday, June 10, Commencement Day, will be the answer of the trade unions and the Unemployed Leagues to the summary dismissal of Professor Winslow N. Hallett. Plans were completed today for a mobilization of a thousand workers to confront the college authorities and demonstrate to graduates and visitors the indignation of organized labor against the college's refusal to reinstate Dr. Hallett.

ALLENTOWN, Pa. June 6.—With impressive backing from the trade unions, a mass protest meeting was held last night to defend Dr. Winslow N. Hallett, recently dismissed by Cedar Crest College authorities because of his pro-labor activities. Professor Sidney Hook, chairman of the Department of Philosophy of New York University, and Felix Morrow, secretary of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, were the chief speakers. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Hallett Defense Committee, on which the Central Trades and Labor Council and the leading unions of Allentown are represented.

Earlier in the day, the Cedar College Board of Trustees held a meeting and refused to permit Dr. Hallett to appear to defend himself. The trustees issued a resolution denying that Dr. Hallett was dismissed because he organized the Allentown Local of the American Federation of Teachers and was active in the Pennsylvania Unemployed League, but giving no other reasons why he was fired. To date requests of various professional and labor organizations for a statement of charges against Dr. Hallett have not been answered by the trustees.

Drive Begins for Eight-Page New Militant by August First

Interesting Features and Educational Articles Will Be Attraction in Enlarged Paper; Members, Sympathizers Urged to Support

Beginning August first, Anti-War Day, the New Militant will appear as an eight page publication in an enlarged eight-column format.

With this change we will make a new and a great leap forward. Double space will be available for more news from the field of the class struggle, about the activities of the trade union militants, and for new features as well as for analytical and theoretical articles. The New Militant should become doubly effective—in reality a popular paper and fundamental in character.

The need for this change is obvious. Throughout the country the workers find themselves today face to face with new attacks upon their standard of living and new attacks against their organizations. Momentous battles are on the order of the day. Great events are in the making on an international scale where the extension of Fascism is threatening and the imperialist powers are rushing headlong into another world war. To us this can mean only a much greater responsibility necessitating first of all the strengthening of our party press. This we have accepted as a duty that brooks no delay.

To measure up to this responsibility we will need the most complete cooperation from every party member, from every friend and from every supporter.

Our plans call for a two months campaign to strengthen the party press and to lay the foundation for the eight page weekly. Comrade Swabeck has been placed in charge of carrying this out. During the campaign we aim to accomplish the following:

1. To establish a SECURITY FUND through pledges of monthly payments for a period of one year or six months, with the first installment payable when the first issue of the eight page weekly appears. The goal for this security fund is to be $50.00 monthly for the first six months at least.

2. Collection of $2,000 cash contributions for launching the eight-page weekly, including the acquisition of needed additional machinery. To help us reach this goal we make the following requests:

a. That each Party member who is employed contribute a DAY'S PAY to the eight-page weekly.

b. That all our readers and supporters solicit ADVANCE SUBSCRIPTIONS for the eight-page weekly at $2.00 for a yearly sub, $1.00 for six months and 65c for three months. One feature of the advance solicitation will be a special three months subscription in clubs of four, purchasable at $1.50, prepaid, and selling at 40c each sub.

c. Solicitation of GREETINGS TO THE EIGHT PAGE WEEKLY to be printed in the first issue at 25c per name and $1.00 per column inch greeting adv.

d. Solicitation of specially increased bundle orders of the first eight-page issue with efforts for effective distribution made accordingly and followed up by increased bundle order sales. The price for single copies will be 5 cents and in bundle orders to agents 3 cents a copy.

e. Special affairs to be arranged by the party branches to greet the appearance of the eight-page weekly and with proceeds to go to the New Militant.

f. Systematic efforts to obtain regular advertisements for the eight-page weekly.

Plans are now being worked out for the establishment of a first class editorial staff and for proposals for the contents and the new and additional features to be carried by the eight-page weekly. Announcements of these plans will be made during the progress of the campaign.

There will be premiums, in the form of valuable books, offered for the best sub getters during this campaign and special inducements for the prospective subscribers as well as for those who send in the most greetings to the eight-page weekly or otherwise carry on particularly effective work for its realization. Announcements will be made in respect to this aspect in future issues.

Material for this campaign will be in the mails within the next couple of days. Meanwhile those of our comrades, readers and supporters who are especially interested in seeing the greatest possible speed applied in reaching the goal set for the eight-page weekly, do not delay! Get to work right away and forward your contributions. Send in your suggestions for the campaign. From this end we shall meet our promise. We feel sure that we are in a position to produce an eight-page weekly that will become a worthy and an authentic spokesman for the revolutionary forces in the United States—a real weapon in the class struggle and an effective organizer for the American and world revolution!

Forward your contribution to lay the foundation for the eight-page weekly. Make all checks and money orders payable to the New Militant, 55 East 11th Street, New York, N. Y.

Ohio Jobless to Meet on June 7

Protest Splitting Move by W.A.A. Chairman In State

(By Special Correspondent)

COLUMBUS, Ohio.—The Executive Committee of the Ohio Unemployed League, in pursuance to a proposal by President Wm. R. Truax, has called a state-wide conference to meet here on June 7-8.

The chief business will be the consideration of the new work relief set-up and the most effective way to combat the latest attempt of the Roosevelt administration to break down wage standards. The last conference of the O.U.L. in March of this year brought over 400 delegates from all parts of the state.

The O.U.L. office reports that it is receiving indignant protests from leagues throughout the state over the announcement that the Workers Alliance of America, David Lasser, chairman, is to hold a state "convention" in Columbus later in June. "What is the idea," writes one county U. L. secretary, "of the W.A.A. coming into Ohio where a state league with tens of thousands of members has existed for over two years and a hundred militant struggles have been fought by the workers under its leadership? Is this promoting unity among the unemployed? What is the difference between the tactic of the Socialist Party leaders of the W.A.A. and the tactic of the now defunct Unemployed Councils who talked united front and practiced disruption? The W.A.A. will no more be able to serve the workers or even to survive at all on this false basis than were the Councils."

Local leagues in the mining section of the state, where Bill Green is well and not favorably known, the asking what kind of an understanding there is between Lasser and Bill Green!

Proposals for a state-wide strike for union rates on relief jobs and for a mass convention of thousands of unemployed and relief workers in Columbus next month, will be considered at Saturday's conference of the Ohio Leagues.

BOSTON (FP).—A New England regional council of teamsters' unions looms as the result of the recent successful strike which tied up motor transportation in western Massachusetts, Connecticut, etc.

N. C. of W. P. to Hold Plenum

The second regular Plenary Session of the National Committee of the Workers Party of the U.S. will be held in New York City, June 14-16.

The meeting will be devoted chiefly to the discussion of fundamental political problems which confront the working class today. Among these are the relations of the Party to the parties and groups in other countries standing on the same program and what steps can and should be taken, in view of the war danger, toward building the Fourth International; developments in the Communist and Socialist parties and the relation of the W. P. towards these organizations; the meaning of recent events in the Soviet Union with special attention to the Franco-Soviet pact; the collapse of the NRA and the perspectives before the American working class.

The work of the party in the trade union field, the unemployed movement and in labor defense will be evaluated and the policy of the Party in these fields elaborated. On the basis of the political decisions, the organizational problems before the party will be dealt with and plans for the summer period outlined.

In this connection careful attention will be given the campaign to make the Party's weekly organ, the New Militant, an eight-page paper by Anti-War day, August first. The Political Committee has already approved this proposal and the National Office is giving the fullest support to the editorial and business staff of the paper in carrying it into effect.

LUMBER STRIKERS WIN INITIAL VICTORY

BREMERTON, Wash. (FP).—The strike of 40,000 men in the logging and sawmill industry in the Pacific northwest got its first taste of victory when the McCormick Lumber Co. settled on a 40-hour week and 50c an hour minimum scale. The previous rate was 45 cents. It has mills in Washington and Oregon.

The strike is still spreading. Federal mediators and union higher-ups are having a hard time in negotiations because there are 1,500 employing firms and because the men, having taken a lot of dirt the last ten years from the bosses, are in no mood to settle unless they get real gains.

Terror Is Used Against Bakers

Solidarity Will Win Strike, Union Leader Says

The third week of the strike of Local 50 of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers International Union finds organized labor pledged to help the men carry on. Financial aid has already come in from many locals in the International. Other A. F. of L. locals have also voted similar aid. The strike is directed against the Gottfried Baking Co. plants of Manhattan and the Bronx. The Baking Trust is lined up solid to smash the strike. Plans for a mass picketing demonstration are now being worked out as an answer to the attacks of the company's thugs on strike pickets. Such attacks coupled with arrests, police intimidation and fake advertisements in the boss press are the means employed by the company in an effort to overcome the splendid solidarity and spirit of the strikers. On May 22, two strikers, Irving Bach and A. Mueller were first fired on and then brutally attacked with blackjacks by a gang of gorillas led by two of the Gottfried brothers.

Face Smashed In
Bach whose face was smashed beyond recognition is still in the hospital. In other cases where the strikers were not so badly outnumbered the Gottfried gangsters met with such a reception that they will think twice the next time before attacking the fighting men of Local 50. Several strikers have been pinched on cooked-up charges.

Herman Gund, manager of Local 50, interviewed at his office at 799 Broadway, stated that the spirit of the strikers was not only not dimming in face of the boss's terror but rather that it was increasing. Workers throughout the city are refusing to buy the scab bread and many stores, after being picketed, are refusing to handle the scab made products of the Gottfried Baking Co. Mr. Gund paid high tribute to the solidarity of the men on strike. Aid from other sections of the labor movement is coming in, and, he added, "With a continuation of this spirit and solidarity plus the support of organized labor we will be sure to win."

Toledo Edison Strike Is Called Off After Paralyzing Industry

Article on Franco-Soviet Alliance on Page Three

On page three of this issue of the New Militant we print a lengthy analysis of the Franco-Soviet Alliance by the International Secretariat of the International Communist League. The impending war will place all working class parties to the highest test. But even today these organizations are laying the groundwork for their future position. The Stalin-Laval communique has definitely committed the Communist parties to a position of social patriotism, i.e., defense of their capitalist fatherlands. We recommend the careful, deliberate study of this article to every revolutionary worker who wants to know how to cope with the problem of war when it comes.

A.F.L. Leaders Split Ranks of Canton Strike

Succeed After Bosses Guns, Clubs and Gas Fail

By JACK WILSON

CANTON, Ohio, June 3.—After successfully resisting for over a week the ruthless terrorism of the Republic Steel Co. here to break up the picket lines, nearly 7,000 steel workers at six plants found themselves split by a more insidious force than the clubs, guns and gas bombs of company thugs—the treachery of A. F. of L. bureaucrats whose misleadership was directly responsible for the "go-back-to-work" vote passed by over half the strikers.

Although 75 workers were sent to hospitals, victims of five brutal provocative company thugs attacks, the determination of the pickets to win union recognition was undaunted and firmer picket line was established after each attack than before. Public sympathy was entirely with the strikers as even bourgeois journals criticized the terrorism of the company.

Instead of crystallizing the anti-steel baron sentiment and building a more solid strike movement which spread spontaneously for two days to four plants, the A. F. of L. sent the notorious Akron rubber organizers, who betrayed the rubber workers, into the scene and they permitted the city officials to hold an "independent" vote of workers on the question of returning to work, giving the company ample opportunity to propagandize for "peace" and thus breaking the back

New Castle WP Gains In Intensive Drive

NEWCASTLE, Pa., June 1.—After several weeks of intensive activity the Workers Party Branch of Newcastle held a mass meeting May 28 on the "Purpose and Program of the Workers Party." It was enthusiastically received by a good crowd of workers present. The speaker at the meeting was Comrade George Papcun, Akron branch organizer. Comrade Papcun became known for his activities in Newcastle when he helped in the picketing of the relief office by the unemployed who are organized in the "Co-operative Workers of America."

The mass meeting by the Workers Party was a culmination of a series of mass meetings and demonstrations held by the unemployed of this city at which he spoke. As a result of this meeting and the work of the branch in Newcastle, the Workers Party succeeded in organizing a Spartacus Youth Club and has taken into the Party several new members with prospects of gaining more. The workers who came in were some of the most active and advanced from the picket line. The branch expects to open a headquarters in Newcastle this week.

Comrade Slavin of Youngstown came down to help in the organization of the Spartacus Youth Club, and he busied himself with the details necessary in putting the Spartacus Youth League on the Newcastle map.

PRESS FRANTIC

Enormous Pressure Causes Cave-In of Strike

BULLETIN
As we go to press news comes from Toledo that the power strike which threatened to shut down power in a radius of 800 square miles and affecting twenty-three cities in three states has been called off pending negotiations on their demand for a 20 percent increase in wages. It is understood that these negotiations are to start Monday with officials of the Henry L. Doherty Company in New York, parent company of the Toledo Edison. Oliver Myers, business agent of the union, attributed the sudden termination of the strike to pressure "from many sources." The union workers voted 237 to 22 to end the strike. The men are to be paid in full for the day of the strike.

TOLEDO, Ohio, June 5.—A strike of employees of the Toledo Edison Co., which supplies the electrical power for Toledo, northwest Ohio, northeast Indiana and southeast Michigan, including a score of communities, began at 7:00 A.M. this morning. 500 maintenance, production and technical workers, members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 245, were the first to walk out. 125 office workers also struck and picketed the Toledo Edison Building. Plans for the strike, announced by Oliver Myers, business agent of the local, indicated that it will not be totally effective until tomorrow morning, as the shut-down will be progressive, only a portion of workers having been called on strike today.

Hysteria has struck the local press, as well as all the other agencies and groups of the capitalist class of the city. Operation of industrial plants, street cars, street lights and other major sources of electrical consumption has not as yet been seriously curtailed.

Frenzied Attack on Strike

There is a strong possibility that the strike may be suspended or terminated before morning. Terrible pressure is being exerted from every side, press, government, "outstanding citizens," business and church groups—and the international officers of the union—upon the local strikers and their representatives to suspend the strike for arbitration or pending negotiations. A meeting of striking electrical workers will be held at midnight tonight to act upon the suggestion of the international officers that the strike be suspended pending further negotiations.

The striking office workers have already voted in meeting tonight to return to work if the maintenance, production and technical workers decide to accept the proposal of the international officers.

There is a strong feeling in organized labor circles here that such a move may prove to be disastrous for the strikers, as arbitration or negotiations without picket lines will mean another shell-game settlement which will give the workers nothing. Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, and notorious government strike-breaker who did such effective work here just three weeks ago in the Chevrolet strike, is expected on the scene momentarily.

Press Demands Violence
The company has already announced its intentions of operating the power and transmission plants in the face of mass picket lines. The newspapers are openly calling for police force and demanding that the plants be operated under any conditions. Should the strike continue and go into full effect, a certain amount of power will be brought into the city from outside Ohio communities. This will be sufficient only for emergency maintenance of electric power for hospitals and similar institutions, it is believed.

The question of the maintenance of the strike rests largely at present upon the position taken by Oliver Myers, in whom the almost sole leadership of the strike now rests. While Myers has been known to

JOIN THE WORKERS PARTY.

INSIDE STORY OF TOLEDO STRIKE

Told by a Leading Participant in the Battle with General Motors

(Ed. Note: This is the last of a series of three articles by Art Preis on the great Toledo strike. Art Preis was the editor of "Strike Truth," the Chevrolet strikers' bulletin.)

By ART PREIS

From the outset of the Chevrolet strike, the line-up of opposing forces was clear-cut and marked. On the one side were the strikers, a minority of the strike committee and the progressive forces in the union local. On the other, were General Motors, the organized commercial and industrial interests such as the Chamber of Commerce and Merchants and Manufacturers Association, the capitalist daily press, the "leading citizens" including prominent socialites, university and school officials, ministers, public officials, etc., the government, and finally, certain union officials themselves, particularly those representing the national leadership of the A. F. of L.

The strategy of the union progressives was first of all to maintain the Toledo strike on a militant, mass action basis, to keep the leadership of the strike in the hands of the elected strike committee, and to prevent the settlement of the strike by Francis Dillon and the A. F. of L. officialdom over the heads of the strikers. Further, the progressives realized the necessity of spreading the strike to every General Motors plant and, if possible, to inspire a general auto walk-out.

No Try at Scabbing
For the first four days of the strike, under the aggressive leadership of the progressives, the strikers pushed forward with irresistible power. Apart from the newspaper propaganda—anti-strike stuff thinly disguised under a veil of impartiality—and misleading advertisements on the strike paid for by General Motors and the Chamber of Commerce, no effective counter-attack was launched. No effort was made by the company to run scabs into the plant, for memories of the Auto-Lite strike still provokes sleeplessness among the industrialists in Toledo.

Mass picket lines kept a 24 hour vigilance about the deserted plant. Plant managers and officials were forced to beg the permission of the strike committee to enter upon their own premises. The company was compelled to pay the strikers off the property and while on the picket line. By keeping one step ahead of the company, by taking the aggressive, the strikers prevented the company from carrying through a co-ordinated counter-offensive. The company simply did not know how to deal with progressive labor leaders of the caliber of a Jim Roland.

Combating Company Propaganda. Moreover, from the standpoint of demoralizing propaganda, the strike committee began to show the "public relations counsels" of General Motors a thing or two. When the company issued lengthy statements to the public through press channels, the strike committee promptly replied through the same channels with equally lengthy but extremely devastating prepared statements that quickly forced the company to change the substance of its propaganda. Further, the strike committee issued a strike bulletin, "Strike Truth," which had wide-spread distribution among the Chevrolet workers and workers in other auto-parts plants. The militant tone, the factual material and the clear-cut analysis of the strike issues contained in this single bulletin tremendously strengthened the morale of the strikers and laid the basis for the progressive principles which strongly directed the further conduct of the strike and the negotiations.

One primary consideration motivated the union progressives as they mapped out their tactics. They understood well enough that in this particular situation the most dangerous forces they had to combat were within their own camp. They knew they were dealing with inexperienced, uneducated (from a working-class standpoint), inarticulate workers, fearful of "public opinion," subject to confusion in the welter of rumor and misleading propaganda, raw with indoctrinated prejudices against "radicalism," suspicious of everything they could not understand—but nevertheless anxious for competent guidance and willing to make a stand-up fight. The real enemy they would have to combat would be the A. F. of L. top officials, Bill Green and his lieutenant, Francis Dillon, whose policies were opposed to strikes and militant action, who believed in asking favors of the bosses and keeping on friendly terms with the labor exploiters and the government. In every major industry these elements had succeeded in curbing necessary militant action by reliance on compromising methods of arbitration and the diversion of action into the deadening channels of endless conferences and government boards and agencies which were promptly converted into instruments for the protection of the interests of the employers.

The Negotiations

From the outset, the progressives put forth the idea of direct negotiations between the elected committee of the strikers and the employers. They impressed upon the strikers the dangers of permitting the government to direct the terms of the strike settlement, or to allow other than those from their own immediate ranks to have final authority in negotiations.

The first move of the company had been to proffer counter-proposals to those contained in the union contract. These proposals were in effect the acceptance of company-unionism, the notorious "merit" and "proportional representation" clauses of the now defunct Automobile Labor Code, "conditional" promises of slight wage increases, all hidden behind neat sounding phrases. Francis Dillon did not arrive in Toledo until four days after the strike was under way. Even had he desired to, he could not have forced the company's proposals down the strikers' throat. For the time being he had to appear to go along with the sentiment of the strikers, in order to gain their confidence by a display of militancy and to seize in his own hands the leadership of the strike. At a mass meeting of the strikers, held on the day of his arrival, he urged them to vote down the company's offer. This they did unanimously.

Conflict Sharpens

Once Dillon arrived on the scene, the conflict of forces within the union ranks, between the reactionaries and progressives, became more sharp. The company refused to deal further with the strikers' representatives or to negotiate until the men returned to work. This left the situation in Toledo at a complete stand-still. It was obvious that the strategy of General Motors (and Francis Dillon, who was equally anxious to have the strike terminated) was to keep the strike isolated, undermine the morale of the strikers through propaganda and the threat of permanent closing the plant and starting operations elsewhere, demoralize them through inaction and subversive methods and, if possible, starve them out.

The next move of the progressives was to spread the strike. On the day of Dillon's arrival in Toledo, a group of Chevrolet strikers had gone to Detroit where copies of "Strike Truth" were circulated at the Chevrolet plant there, and the office building of General Motors was picketed until the group was arrested by Detroit police. Although the closure of the Toledo plant threatened shortly to stop production throughout the entire Chevrolet Corp. because of shortage of transmissions, every effort was being made by General Motors and the press to keep news of the strike from reaching outside of Toledo. Francis Dillon had safely concealed and ignored for some time the vote of numerous auto union locals throughout the country in favor of strike action. The nation's auto workers, speeded up and exploited to the hilt, wanted action. Telegrams had been sent by the Illinois Workers Alliance to numerous other locals telling of the strike and urging them to take similar action.

Strike Spreads

Dillon moved north, following his first mass meeting in Toledo, to confer with the Detroit union officials. The strike committee and the Toledo union progressives went south, to Norwood, Ohio. They succeeded in persuading the workers in two General Motors plants there to strike, without benefit of Dillon. At the same time, plants in Cleveland and Atlanta, Ga., were shut down by company officials just prior to strike action. Other strikes threatened, involving important key plants. Each day reports of plant closures due to lack of parts were received. The next move of the progressives was to Flint.

While the representatives of Bill Green were moving in on the strike from the outside, there were numerous elements within the local union, particularly the executive board members and the business agent, Fred Schwake, who were opposing the progressives and attempting to undermine the influence of Jimmy Roland and the strike committee. Under the pressure of Dillon and T. N. Taylor, another of Bill Green's organizers, they began to obstruct progressive moves. They withheld funds from the strike committee and prevented the further publication of the strike bulletin. In the mass meetings and on the picket-lines they attempted to edge the strike committee out of the leadership. A red-scare was started by Schwake who induced a small group of the more backward strikers to chase individuals distributing literature of other working-class organizations. Representatives of the Communist Party received the brunt of this attack, due in large measure to the stupidity and tactlessness of some of the statements contained in an initial leaflet.

Welcome W. P. Literature

Members of the W. P. reported these reactionary actions to the Joint Action Committee which immediately sent a strong protest to the strike committee and the union executive board. The W. P. members continued to distribute leaflets in the name of our party which were widely accepted by the strikers and read with keen interest. The strikers shortly made a distinction between W. P. literature and that of other groups, and always welcomed the distinctive appearing leaflets of the W. P. which contained a positive program of action explained in clear terms and which fearlessly and factually exposed the policies and maneuvers of Dillon and his machine. Thousands of New Militants, containing uncompromising attacks upon Dillon, Taylor and Schwake, pointing out the correct tactics to be used, the role of the government, etc., were distributed on the picket lines and at the meetings. This literature of the W. P. had an incalculable effect in molding progressive sentiment and arming the progressives against the influence of the reactionaries.

During the second week of the strike, the company started to open its attack. It began the swift setting-up of a transmission plant to replace the Toledo one in Muncie, Ind., which the newspapers played up to frighten the Toledo workers back to work. A strike-breaking agency, hiding behind the spurious name of "Independent Workers Association," was organized by the company officials and foremen. Government "conciliators," including the Department of Labor's chief strike-breaker, Edward F. McGrady, were sent into Toledo.

The "Independent Workers Association" claimed to have sent a request to the G.M.C. officials, together with a petition containing the signatures of a majority of the Chevrolet employees, asking for a vote on the company's proposals under the supervision of the Department of Labor.

Dillon's First Trick

Dillon, persuaded by a superficial show of strength on the part of this strike-breaking outfit that a majority of the workers were in favor of returning to work, urged such a vote in hopes that the union forces would be outvoted and the strikers forced to capitulate in a manner which would not put the finger of betrayal upon him. After terrific pressure had been brought upon the strike committee, all but Roland and two others agreed to the vote. The following night, Sunday, Dillon went to the Buick local in Flint. This local had previously voted to go on strike the next morning at a meeting held several days before when a delegation of Toledo union militants headed by Jimmy Roland had visited the Flint local. Dillon influenced the Flint workers to postpone strike action until after the vote by misleading statements regarding the courage and strength of the Toledo strikers. The progressives, once the vote had been called for, started a drive to defeat the company's proposals. A huge mass meeting of Toledo labor was held. Another issue of "Strike Truth" was published, under a different editor, somewhat weakened, but following the general form of the first one. When the vote was taken three days later, the union won hands down.

Turn Down Proposal

Dillon did not cease his stalling tactics. He came to an agreement with the G.M.C. representative, through the agency of McGrady, for another line of attack. The company agreed to meet with the representatives of the strikers for further negotiations. Dillon used the pretext of the negotiations to again restrain the Flint Buick local from striking until after the negotiations. During the negotiations all but one member of the strike committee refused to accept the company's second proposal, which included only some minor concessions and no guarantee of union recognition or seniority rights. The one member of the committee who fought on the side of Dillon, McGrady and the G.M.C., was Ben Bonner. This is the same Ben Bonner whom the Daily Worker described on May 13, the day of the betrayal, as a leading "militant" and "progressive."

The progressives began to organize the strike militants in preparation for the meeting on May 13, when the question of the company's second proposal was to be presented. Dillon, breaking an agreement made with the strike committee, issued a widely featured statement to the press telling the strikers to accept the company's proposals and, by indirection, denouncing the loyal members of the strike committee as "reds." The newspapers put on an extra heavy barrage urging the strikers to follow Dillon's advice. On May 12, A. J. Muste addressed an open meeting on the strike, in which he vigorously scored Dillon, Schwake and the other reactionaries, and urged the strikers not accept the company's terms. Many of the leading strikers and picket captains attended the meeting.

Stalinists Disrupters Routed In Ill. Meeting on Hunger March

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—Contrary to the reports in the Daily Worker under date of May 18 to May 25, the Communist Party and the Unemployment Councils had nothing to do with the hunger marches recently held in Springfield, Ill. The marches were led by the Illinois Workers Alliance and to deny this is going W. R. Hearst one better.

The Stalinists, who faltered so badly in their conspiracy to "capture" the hunger marches, have resorted to the old tactics of united fronting from below. Monday, May 27, Stalinists from several parts of Illinois converged at the meeting of branch 128, Illinois Workers Alliance, of Springfield. They came there boldly with a resolution proposing to censure Gerry Allard and Kempton Williams and the whole leadership of the Illinois Workers Alliance for rejecting a treacherous united front offer.

Stalinist Scalping Party
The Stalinists tried their best to provoke physical combat as one of their number was reported to have possessed a pistol for that purpose. The riot squad of the police department appeared at the meeting when some unknown person turned in an alarm. The police left shortly. Not having sufficient forces in Springfield or any other one spot of southern Illinois the Stalinists came in from Thayer, Chicago, Franklin county and other parts. Few of them were I.W.A. members. They were given the floor anyway to start their offensive of getting Gerry Allard's scalp.

The Stalinist offensive was soon turned into a defensive because the rank and file voted overwhelmingly to reject the resolution. A counter motion to condemn the C. P. and their defunct Unemployment Councils for disruptive tactics was unanimously carried when Stalinists left the hall completely routed, both in the logic of arguments and in voting strength.

Solid Support

Tuesday, May 28, the Auburn, Ill., branch of the I.W.A. met and voted unanimously to endorse the policies outlined by the Alliance at the demonstration. Allard and Kempton Williams were given unanimous votes of confidence. The branch has 420 members.

The role of the Stalinists in the Illinois relief crisis practically ended that group among the Illinois unemployed. Where they previously connived to gain the favor of the Workers Alliance by glib phrases their treachery was exposed at a time when sincere deeds were necessary. Desperation seems to have suddenly gripped the Stalinists in these parts. They pussyfooted for a couple of months only to break themselves to pieces because it remains an evident fact that they continuously follow the tail of the kite in the enormous struggles that are taking place in strategic southern Illinois.

come against Dillon, that at the May 13 meeting the strikers first voted to refuse the floor for discussion on the company's proposal to anyone but the strikers and members of the strike committee. Dillon went into a tantrum and stormed from the hall, loudly declaring that he would withdraw the union charter. The subsequent developments of the meeting, with its disquieting results for the strikers, can be attributed solely to the inexperience of the strikers and the inarticulate-ness of the members of the strike committee.

The executive members of the union local, fearful that Dillon had power to carry out his threat and still largely under conservative influences, induced Roland and the other committeemen, from the standpoint of union loyalty, "fair play," "free speech," etc., to secure a vote permitting Dillon to speak. Dillon spoke, using every device of cajolery, alarm and threat to induce the strikers to accept the company's terms. He was roundly booed during the entire course of his speech, and it is generally admitted that his remarks carried insufficient weight to capture the strikers. But when Fred Schwake, whom the strikers considered one of their own and whom a great number still had confidence in because of his public appearance of militancy, spoke in favor of acceptance while the voting was going on, a great number of the strikers, who shortly thereafter bitterly condemned their own capitulation, became discouraged and confused and voted, against their own desires, for acceptance. The vote resulted in favor of acceptance and the strikers returned to work the next day.

Role of Parties

One of the important and significant phases of this strike was the role of the various working-class political parties. The Socialist Party was conspicuous by its complete absence from the strike. As Tim McCormack, one of the local S. P. leaders, exclaimed on the day of the settlement to the organizer of the Toledo W. P. branch, "Jesus Christ! The S. P. hasn't done a goddam thing during this strike."

The same can be equally said of the Communist Party. Aside from the usual passing out of leaflets which were largely illiterate and illegible and usually making suggestions on policy three days after the progressives of the union had already taken steps to put them to effect, the C. P. had neither direct nor indirect influence on the strike. Officials of the S. P. and C. P. came to representatives of the W. P. on the afternoon of the settlement and for two hours begged and pleaded with the W. P. for a "united front." When the W. P. pointed out that this was a rather belated step in view of the imminent crisis and that these other groups were in disrepute with the strikers and the W. P. was not, the representatives of these groups agreed that such a "united front" would act to hurt the progressives rather than help them.

The final consideration of the effectiveness of the organization of the progressives has come since the strike. The night following the settlement the Chevrolet union members again met in full force. There was no demoralization. Dillon and his machine were denounced by the entire body. Representatives of the Central Labor Union spoke at this meeting and likewise denounced Dillon.

Progressives to Meet Soon

Today the union is stronger than ever in the Chevrolet plant. The progressives in the entire local are more influential and organizing more strongly than ever. A conference of auto union progressives from all sections of the country will be held definitely in the near future. Local 18384 passed a resolution last week, which all the locals in the country will be asked to adopt, demanding that Dillon be fired as an A. F. of L. organizer. Schwake's star has dimmed and he will undoubtedly be deposed from his position in the union very shortly. The Chevrolet workers have conducted several inside strikes since their return to work, all of them completely successful.

The Chevrolet strike must be regarded as merely the preliminary skirmish of a greater battle to come. The progressive program, which the W. P. has been advocating, the militant policies, are becoming more strongly ingrained in the union. From the standpoint of the immediate gains secured in the strike, the strikers suffered a partial defeat. From the standpoint of the development of the progressive forces, the strengthening of the union, the splendid fight that is being made against the union reactionaries, the Chevrolet strike must be regarded as a magnificent victory.

At the end of 18 years of glorious fascism in Italy under the direction of that greater leader of men, Benito Mussolini, the Italian Debt had increased 32,000,000,000 lire.

Progressives Map Plans for Strike in Silk

Ed. Note: Below is the substance of a resolution to be presented by progressive workers in the Paterson local of the American Federation of Silk Workers. The importance of the set of proposals contained therein cannot be understated. They merit careful and deliberate study on the part of every member of the union in view of the coming strike which promises to be a long battle. Victory can only be won if the union pursues correct and militant policies. The resolution follows:

Fellow-workers:

The Supreme Court ruling that found the NRA unconstitutional is bound to have tremendous repercussions in our industry. It is now necessary for the union to appraise the situation and prepare to act.

It is our opinion that, taking the cue from what they consider to be a tremendous victory, the manufacturers throughout the silk industry and especially in Paterson are going to launch a concerted drive, in order to increase the hours of work, lower our wage standards, shatter and destroy the power of our union. Already the first signs are here, and the first attempts are being made to feel our strength before launching the campaign against us.

In such a situation the union can only take one of two possible stands. Either wait for the offensive of the manufacturers to get in full swing, thus reducing ourselves to a position of defense; or else courageously assume the leadership and the offensive ourselves, keep one jump ahead of the manufacturers, and force them into a defensive position.

Assume Offensive

There is no doubt in our mind as to which stand the union must take. The defensive is at best a losing game, and we should not consider even for a moment the possibility of playing it. We must assume the offensive.

We must, on the other hand, analyze the situation so as to know what we are going to do before-hand, and in order to have a clear perspective of the situation in the coming months.

This is manifestly a slack season in our industry. The number of employed union members is falling steadily, while many of those still working are only working part time. We must therefore not delude ourselves with any thought of a swift strike and of an early settlement. We must prepare ourselves for a long siege, and for a real test of strength.

It is obvious that the manufacturers are going to make of the coming struggle a well organized attempt to get rid of the union once and for all time. We must make of the coming strike a well organized struggle to establish and entrench the union firmly and solidly. Actual, not only nominal, recognition of the union must be our basic slogan.

But if we are to have an even chance of success, we must organize for it. The struggle that we foresee cannot be local in scope.

Immediate organizational steps must be taken immediately to mobilize the workers throughout the industry. We therefore recommend that our local request the national office:

Proposals

1. To call a series of mass meetings and membership meetings with a view to organize the sentiment of the workers;
2. To secure the support of all organized labor for our coming struggle;
3. To launch a vast organizational campaign in the unorganized districts, to take place immediately;
4. The establishment of local, regional and national strike committees elected directly from the membership and acting in conjunction with local, regional and national officials;
5. Preparation for the issuance of a daily strike bulletin, to offset the influence of the boss-controlled press;
6. Immediate steps for the raising of a war chest of $500,000.

As for demands, we propose to stand by the demands already submitted to and adopted by the membership: union recognition locally and nationally, the 30-hour week, the $25 average wage for weavers, with other wages graduated accordingly.

In view of the extremely changing and shifting situation in Paterson we advocate as a measure for keeping tabs on the situation as well as to keep high the morale of the workers the calling of shop-chairmen's meetings every week. We must in the meantime enforce the prevailing standards and resist all attempts on the part of the bosses while we prepare for the national strike.

Stalin Has Signed the Death Certificate of the Third International Open Letter

To the World Proletariat

Ed. Note.—Turbulent conditions in France occasioned by the fall of the cabinet, new aggressions by Italy against Abyssinia, generally the growing tension in the world, daily driving humanity nearer to the new imperialist holocaust, make it imperative that the working class be armed with a revolutionary policy before its outbreak. The following appeal of the International Secretariat of the International Communist League with which the Workers Party has established fraternal relations is in basic agreement with the statement of the National Committee of the W. P. on the Franco-Soviet Alliance printed in the last issue of the New Militant, and sheds valuable light upon many of the questions being asked by the workers in connection with these epoch-making events.

Stalin together with the renegade Laval has signed the death certificate of the Third International. Today, there is not a single worker, even the most politically backward who is unaware that the Soviet bureaucrats have just publicly, decisively betrayed the international proletariat. For the first time Stalin has openly said what is, i.e., in full view of the entire world he has repudiated revolutionary internationalism and passed over to the platform of social patriotism. He has informed his lackeys in France of his open betrayal through the medium of a bourgeois minister, who is himself a traitor to the working class in his own country. The hired bureaucrats of French Stalinism have immediately drawn from it all the necessary conclusions, and Vaillant-Couturier (an editor of l'Humanite, organ of the French C.P.—Ed.) in his article adds ignominy to betrayal.

While the proletarian masses mobilize themselves on the revolutionary road, while the peasant strata are seething and are vigorously intervening in the political struggle, while the petty bourgeoisie, directly hit by the economic crisis which is steadily deepening, is becoming radicalized as a whole, this bureaucracy has the audacity to write that there is no longer any room for the independent activity of the proletariat in its revolutionary struggle against its own bourgeoisie, that all efforts are to be averted and that to stave off the invasion of the U.S.S.R. nothing remains except to place faith in French imperialism. Crawling on his belly he consummates the betrayal of his master.

In the eyes of everyone the Third International has become the diplomatic agent of Stalinism loaded down with blunders and crimes, which has just openly taken the decisive step on the road to civil peace.

Let us review the facts.

Brest-Litovsk and the Franco-Russian Pact

The Stalin-Laval pact rests on the same plane as the Brest-Litovsk peace. The Soviet government enters into a military alliance with an imperialist government not at its own whim, but in order not to be annihilated. In any case, that is its only justification. The Brest-Litovsk peace was a defeat; while the Franco-Russian pact has been proclaimed for all those who care to listen a great victory for the U.S.S.R. It is unnecessary to attempt a comparison between the relation of forces in 1918 and at the present time. The facts speak for themselves. Whatever the differences in the world situation and in the relationship of forces, the Franco-Soviet treaty from the standpoint of principles and politics rests entirely upon the same plane as the treaty of Brest-Litovsk. Should, then, the Communists and Socialists vote in parliament for the ratification of the Franco-Soviet agreement? And this too regardless of the question of whether or no Soviet diplomacy was really forced to sign this treaty?

Let us recall the historic example of Brest-Litovsk. The German Social Democrats voted in the Reichstag for ratifying it, claiming that since the Bolsheviks had accepted it there was no reason whatever for their opposing it. The Bolsheviks replied to them, "You swine. We are objectively compelled to negotiate in order not to be annihilated, but as for you—you are politically free to vote for or against, and your vote influences whether or not you place confidence in your own bourgeoisie."

If we allowed that the Soviet Government is really compelled to conclude a military alliance with French imperialism, the proletariat of the latter country does not at all have to do so. By their votes in parliament the Socialist and Communist deputies are not called upon to express themselves upon the reason and motives for the action of the Soviet government but solely upon the reasons and motives of the Stalin-Laval government. If they vote confidence in it, they are the same swine as the German social democrats of 1918.

Only yesterday, Thorez and Co. (leader of French C.P.—Ed.) swore that "We love our country, but we cannot countenance national defense under the capitalist regime." If this formula has any meaning it implies that we cannot confide to the hands of our bourgeoisie the task of defending "our country" (which besides is not "ours"). Today we are told, "with throbbing hearts we shall make common cause with our bourgeoisie in the defense of the U.S.S.R." We want to know, "how is it that the French bourgeoisie which is not good enough to defend 'our deeply loved country,' proves itself good enough for the defense of the U.S.S.R.?" This is the nub of the question. There can be no middle-of-the-road. The very same people will be obliged to proclaim, "with throbbing hearts we shall make common cause with our bourgeoisie to defend our people against the barbarism of Hitler, because the French people has the right to call for the same sacrifices on the part of its heroes as the Russian people."

There is nothing new in the new position of the Communist Party. It is social-patriotism.

Has the War Danger a National Address?

"But the immediate danger comes from German fascism," it will be said, "so it is necessary to make a bloc against it." Such an argument suffices for this or that diplomatic combination of the Moscow government. But this conception has nothing in common with Marxism. We have always maintained that the danger of war is the inevitable product of world imperialist antagonisms. German fascism as well as the dangers of war are the products of the colossal productive forces of German capitalism that seek for outlets, and that must seek for outlets, whatever the political regime of the country. The most progressive capitalist regimes of Europe are stifling within the framework of the national state. France is marching hand in hand with fascist Italy and with quasi-democratic England against fascist Germany.

Have we forgotten that the revolutionary activity during the last war consisted precisely in denouncing the propaganda of the allies who spoke in the name of democracy against the Prussian junkers and the Hohenzollerns? The old catchwords are being refurbished to camouflage imperialist antagonisms by means of sham conflicts between political systems.

On this road one quickly arrives at the idealization of French democracy as such counterposed to Hitler Germany.

Here again, there is no middle-of-the-road. We repeat: "It is the policy of social patriotism."

The conception of the "aggressor" is very handy for the mendacious work of diplomacy, but it is fatal for the orientation of the proletariat. To checkmate the alleged aggressor France protects Mussolini, allowing him a free field for action in Abyssinia, and also as regards Austria. And it is precisely the tightening grip of Italy on Austria which may fan to white heat German nationalism and lead to the outbreak of the war. Involved here are the permanent antagonisms which are deepening and sharpening. On the other hand their inevitable explosion and the preventive measures of the capitalist states can and must cause the catastrophe.

Social Patriotism Is Driving the U.S.S.R. to Ruin

We will be told in answer, "All this may perhaps be true, but isn't it necessary all the same to save ourselves from the most immediate danger which is the very same Hitler Germany?" Let us observe first of all that only yesterday the Comintern advanced in Germany the slogan of "national liberation" which is impossible without a war. Today the Communist International wants to defend the Versailles status quo in order to escape war. He is lost who abandons the position of the class struggle and of the international revolution and who begins to seek safety outside of the revolutionary struggle against one's own government in one's own country. Today the betrayal will be covered by the plea of the need to "save peace," tomorrow when war breaks out nevertheless, the betrayal will be perpetuated in order to save democracy or to save the U.S.S.R. But neither peace nor democracy nor the U.S.S.R. can be saved by the surrender of the French proletariat.

If after Germany has been annihilated for the second time, France, Italy and England turn against their temporary ally, does anyone believe that it will be possible on the spur of the moment to sever at a single stroke the proletariat from the bourgeoisie which, with the aid of the working class parties will have succeeded in raising itself as the master of the nation, and that has gagged and demoralized the Announcement of Betrayal!

"And now I answer a question that has been put to me: 'In case of such a war launched by Hitler against the U.S. S. R., would you apply your slogan: transformation of the Imperialist war into the civil war?'"

"Well, no! because in such a war it is not an imperialist war that is involved, a war between two imperialist gangs, it is a war against the Soviet Union."

Extract from a speech by Maurice Thorez, leader of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of France, delivered in Paris on May 17, 1935, and reproduced in the party's official organ, l'Humanite of May 24, 1935.

working class through civil peace?

To fritter away the only capital we possess, the revolutionary independence of the proletariat, in return for precarious, equivocal, and unstable diplomatic combinations would be tantamount to walling up the avenue to the revolutionary future. The basic crime of reformism lies precisely in the fact that chasing after the shadows of reforms, it castrated the proletariat by class collaboration. This policy is ten times, one hundred times, a thousand times more criminal at a time when it is a question not of a peaceful period of parliamentary combinations but of a war which concentrates all the instruments of oppression and destruction in the hands of the bourgeoisie and leaves the proletariat only its sole and only weapon: its political independence, its hatred of the bourgeoisie, its revolutionary will.

Moreover, who has the right to declare that the docile submissiveness of the French proletariat to its own bourgeoisie must inevitably frighten German fascism and force it to retreat? Not only would this be a gratuitous assertion but just the contrary would prove the case in the long run.

Hitler has not yet morally crushed the German proletariat. In order to succeed in this, his propaganda revolves around the weighty argument, "we are encircled, we are hated, they seek our destruction." It is a question of the race struggle. Already the fact that the workers' state was compelled to fraternize with the French bourgeoisie against Germany has strengthened the position of the Nazis against the German working class. Should the French proletariat deliberately participate in this alliance by surrendering its class independence the theory of the race struggle will make great headway in Germany to the detriment of the theory of the class struggle. Driven by the irresistible national spirit which he has himself incited, Hitler may be compelled to unleash the war.

On the other hand the open, irrefutable, thunderous opposition of the French proletariat to its own imperialism will be a disavowal of racism and will give a powerful impetus to the German revolution.

The Betrayal of Stalin And the Crises in the U.S.S.R.

The U.S.S.R. participated actively at Geneva in the elaboration of measures against terrorism and terrorists. The assassination of the King of Yugoslavia was the reason for this incident. We, Marxists, have always been the opponents of individual terrorism, but we have also assumed the defense of national terrorists against imperialist oppression. This elementary tradition has now been abandoned, the U.S.S.R. has taken its place in the sphere of national struggles as the pillar of the established order and of the status quo.

In the light of the Stalin-Laval communique, the international working class is beginning to gain a better understanding of why Stalin undertook a new persecution of the Bolshevik-Leninists and of the Zinoviev group. Before finally delivering the Kremlin to the bourgeoisie he found it necessary to overwhelm and exterminate all those who might raise their voices in protest.

Stalinism to the Rescue Of Social Pacifism

The enemy is Stalinism! But the point in question is not to forget or overlook reformism. The treacherous policy of the Stalinists provides them with tremendous support. From now on Blum and Paul Faure (leaders of French S. P.—Ed.) openly spread the idea of the defense of the "national soil" because these philistines themselves, likewise, do not approve of "unconditional" defense. This stupidity of wishing to "condition" the defense of the national bourgeoisie or of the proletarian state is clear to everyone. If our country as it is, is worthy of being defended, it must be defended no matter what the origin of the war may be: it would be absurd to punish "our country" for the idiocy of Laval and his colleagues. To us, it is the class character that is decisive and not the policy of the government. We are committed to oppose the war budgets of the most democratic governments of the bourgeois states, and we are pledged to defend the U.S.S.R. despite and against Stalin and his infamy.

But the absurdity of the "conditional" defense of the bourgeois state, bears, nevertheless, a grave political meaning. Were Blum to render to the bourgeoisie all that the latter demands, he would be unable to differentiate himself from Herriot, or even Louis Marin. He would lose the confidence of the working class, and become a cipher. By resorting to pacifism right up to the outbreak of the war he retains the possibility of rendering a double service to the bourgeoisie during the war: a large section of the working class will say to itself: "If this tried and true pacifist now joins the ranks of 'civil peace,' it is because the war has been foisted upon us, it is because the defense is just." In order to be able to achieve this mission Blum must reject as invalid the orders of Stalin. This perfidious game is enormously facilitated by the social patriotic turn of the Stalinists.

The League of Nations And Blum's Faith

Leon Blum and Co. lament that the communists do not sufficiently conform to the statutes of the League. Yet the C.A.P. (National Committee of the French Socialist Party—Ed.) as early as January elaborated its famous program which proclaims the necessity of destroying the bourgeois state and of opposing to it the interests of the working people including the interests of the country. What is the League of Nations? It is also the mechanism of the bourgeois state, or of several bourgeois states, acting jointly, and at the same time antagonistic to one another. If the mechanism of the bourgeois state deserves only to be destroyed how can anyone stake the hopes for a better future upon the League of Nations which is the by-product of this very same mechanism?

It is the doctrine of Jauresism that democracy or the democratic state ("the bourgeois mechanism") envisages constant improvement of its fate and advances slowly but surely toward socialism. Viewed in this perspective the League of Nations must naturally have its place to regulate the international relations of the democrats.

Today not only Pivert and Zyromsky (prominent "lefts" in the S. P.—Ed.) but also Blum and Paul Faure are obliged to recognize the necessity to overthrow and destroy the mechanism of the bourgeois state. Under these conditions how can they maintain their faith in the League of Nations?

The same question presents itself on the subject of disarmament. Zyromsky expresses his regrets at the sight of his newly acquired friend Litvinov abandoning the slogans of disarmament in favor of collective security. The very same Zyromsky refuted in his last article, "social pacifism" in domestic politics, i.e., the hope of settling the social question amicably. Zyromsky is unable to understand that external social pacifism is the reverse side of the coin of internal social pacifism. If the bourgeoisie allows itself to be disarmed in order to secure peace it will be at the same time disarmed in the struggle against the proletariat. We find here the same contradiction as in the question concerning the League of Nations.

We have at least the verbal recognition of the need for the proletariat to arm itself and to gain powerful strongholds in the bourgeois army in order to lead to the victory of the internal class struggle. At the time one busies oneself with securities under the capitalist regime through general disarmament. Why then make a revolution against a humanitarian bourgeoisie which will be disarmed through a covenant of the League of Nations?

The solution of this enigma is quite simple. These people haven't the slightest confidence either in a revolution or in the destruction of the mechanism of the bourgeois army. Moreover they demonstrate this by reiterating the slogan "disarm the fascist leagues." Zyromsky is unaware that this famous revolutionary demand is the most stupid incarnation of social pacifism.

Must We Support Alliances Useful to the Workers Gov't?

In refutation it will be said, "Yet you Bolshevik-Leninists yourselves recognize the right of the Soviet government to conclude alliances with imperialist states for its immediate safety. Is it then not our duty as the French workers to support these alliances insofar as they are useful to the workers' government?"

No, never! We have already pointed out why the German socialists were duty-bound to fight against the Brest-Litovsk peace although it was absolutely necessary for the continued existence of the Soviets at the given moment.

Let us take this very same question more concretely and more practically. Revolutionary defeatism doesn't at all imply the sabotage of the sham national defense by an active minority. It would be absurd to attribute to revolutionary workers the idea of blowing up bridges and railroads, etc. etc. in case of war. The revolutionary workers, insofar as they are the minority, participate in the war as the slaves of imperialism who are conscious of their enslavement. At the same time they prepare through agitation the transformation of the imperialist war into a civil war.

Should the U.S.S.R. succeed in securing the military assistance of the French bourgeoisie in the event of aggression on the part of German imperialism (which is by the way by no means certain) this assistance supplied by the bourgeoisie in power will in no way be hindered by the fact that the revolutionary minority will continue to fulfill its duty in incessantly preparing for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie, whatever may be the military assistance of the imperialist general staff (and it will always be precarious, equivocal and perfidious).

The revolutionary repercussions which will be engendered in Germany by the revolutionary movement in France will provide another sort of effective assistance for the salvation of the U.S.S.R. as well as for the development of the world revolution.

Should the revolutionary movement in France, in the event of war, gain such force as to directly threaten the military machine of the bourgeoisie and imperil its alliance with the U.S.S.R., it would imply that the French proletariat is capable of seizing power at the height of the struggle. Should they perhaps be restrained in such a situation? Let them say it. Will we run the risk of defeat? Obviously. Revolution, like war, carries risk with it since danger is the essential element in it. But only wretched element in it. But only wretched from an international situation which is bristling with mortal dangers without incurring any risks whatever.

Thus revolutionary defeatism does not prevent the Soviet government on its own responsibility from profiting by such and such a pact or this and that imperialist military assistance. But these fleeting transactions cannot and must not in any way commit the French and the world proletariat whose task is, above all during the time of war, to prepare for the liquidation of imperialism through the victorious revolution.

The Pact is the Consequence of the Defeats Of the World Proletariat

The pact indicates weakness and not strength on the part of the U.S.S.R. This new treaty is the product of the defeat in China, in Germany, in Austria and Spain.

Since the world revolutionary factor has been weakened, the government of the U.S.S.R. found itself forced to adapt itself to the imperialist factor. That is the only correct formula for the Franco-Soviet treaty.

The Kremlin bureaucrats, who see only the strengthening of the U.S.S.R., thereby posit the independence of the workers' state from the world working class movement: the more defeats the latter suffers the stronger becomes the international position of the U.S.S.R. These are the statements of charlatans—they must be nailed to the pillory.

But if because of annihilation of the proletariat in a number of countries the Soviet government is compelled to fraternize temporarily with the oppressors of the French working class—this cannot be the ground for further weakening the latter by demoralizing it and thus still further worsening the international situation, of forcing the revolution to retreat and consequently placing the U.S.S.R. directly in danger.

Safety Lies in the Revolutionary Policy of the Proletariat

When events of world-wide importance are at stake, the revolutionary party has no right to permit itself to be motivated by secondary, episodic, conjunctural and always problematic considerations. It is necessary to be far-sighted, persevering and accumulating the revolutionary strength of the class; it is in this manner that one can also best exert influence on all secondary questions: revolutionary policy is always the most practical. The enemy is Stalinism! It weakened the U.S.S.R. because it delivered the Chinese workers and peasants to the bureaucracy of the Kuomintang, the English workers to the bureaucracy of the trade unions, etc. etc. Frightened by the consequences it sought to play the card of adventurism, "third period." The results proved themselves even more fatal. Today Stalin and Co. have lost all confidence in the revolutionary forces. They resort to pure diplomacy, that is to say, to the filthiest sort. They refuse to see anything except combinations with this or that imperialism against some other. They are above all afraid lest the French workers compromise their combinations. Thorez and Co. subscribe to this disgraceful attitude. They also deem the revolutionary movement to be an obstacle to the safety of the U.S.S.R. They accept the order to penalize and hamstring the revolution.

They openly become the Stalinist police over the French proletariat, and what is more, the Stalinist police become at the same time the police of French imperialism.

Socialism in one Country Ends in Civil Peace

When we, the Bolshevik-Leninists, began our struggle against the theory of socialism in one country it may have seemed that only an academic question was under discussion. Today the historical function of this formula may be clearly seen: it has for its task to cover the fate of the U.S.S.R. from the fate of the world proletariat. It has created a national base for the Soviet bureaucracy which allowed it to concentrate all the power in its own hands. The new law which extends capital punishment to children 12 years old reveals with fearful eloquence not only that the U.S.S.R. is still at a considerable remove from socialism but that under the domination of the omnipotent bureaucracy the social decomposition of wide strata of workers and peasants has attained formidable proportions despite all the technological conquests bought so dearly by the workers and peasants. And it is precisely at the moment when the war danger threatens the state founded by the October Revolution that the Government of the U.S.S.R. draws the final conclusions from the theory of socialism in one country, prostituting the A B C of Marxism and degrading the Comintern to the role played by Scheide-mann, Noske, Renauld, Vander-velde and Co.

The Third International Is Dead! Long Live The Fourth International!

When after the capitulation of the Communist International before Hitler, we proclaimed: it is the "August 4th" of the Third International, we met with not a few protests. "August 4th" we were told was a conscious betrayal while the capitulation before Hitler was the inevitable consequence of false policy. Today we see how superficial are such purely psychological evaluations. The capitulation was the expression of the internal degeneration, a consequence of accumulated blunders and crimes. This degeneration implied in its turn the capitulation to imperialism war and a prelude to the capitulation before the imperialist bourgeoisie which is preparing for war. That is why the "August 4th" of the Third International was already lodged in the capitulation to Hitler. It is the great merit of the Bolshevik-Leninists that they stated this in time.

Leninism is betrayed and vilified by Stalinism.

The urgent task of the hour is to reconstitute the ranks of the vanguard of the international proletariat. For this a banner and a program are necessary, and they can only be the banner and the program of the Fourth International.

The Third International is dead. Love live the Fourth International! —International Secretariat of the International Communist League.

Pickets Slugged in Brutal Police Sally

Party and Ohio U.L. were among those on the strike committee and a written agreement was signed between the union locals and the League. The morale of the strikers rose; evidences of militancy broke out despite the pacific attitude of the Columbus Federation of Labor.

Bosses Understand

If the tremendous importance of the strike was not apparent to the labor leaders of Columbus, it was certainly clear to the Chamber of Commerce. They realized that if the strike could be broken, union labor in Franklin County would be smashed. Therefore, every resource of the police force was placed at the disposal of the plant.

The fighting spirit of the strikers mounted to a furious pitch that forced recognition from the union leaders of the demand for action. It was decided to stop all trucks and scab cars on Thursday night. Over 200 cops and plain clothesmen were massed to meet the pickets. However, the 150 workers, Unemployed Leaguers, and sympathetic students who were on the picket line managed to stop and smash every scab car that tried to enter. Arthur Wedemeyer led the picket line all through the night.

When it seemed that the plant would be effectively throttled, the hired thugs, masquerading under the name of police, decided to step in. A police cruiser bore down upon the strikers, knocking a picket down. Instantly, the police charged from all sides. Clubbing and black-jacking indiscriminately, the police slowly forced the strikers back. Many women were dragged to the ground; strikers were badly beaten. No resistance could be offered by the unarmed and unprepared workers. The workers of the Columbus Packing Co. learned from the end of a club what is the role of the police. They learned that the police, the entire city administration were tools of the Chamber of Commerce who were trying to crush

Mayor Whitewashes Police

A march to the City Hall was organized and a delegation visited the Mayor and Safety Director Pealer. Mayor Worley, former member of the Socialist Party, who still carries a union card, stated, "As far as I am concerned, the strikers have forfeited their right to picket. From now on, only 12 pickets will be permitted at the plant." Mayor Pealer "impartially" exonerated the police and lauded the remarkable "restraint and good judgment" they employed.

What must be done by the militants of the Columbus Packing Co. now? The lessons of Toledo must be followed. A strike bulletin must be issued immediately; street corner meetings must be organized to acquaint the workers of Columbus with the true facts of the strike; pressure must be brought to bear upon the Columbus Federation of have strong progressive and militant tendencies, it is felt that his long association with the old-line A. F. of L. officialdom may influence him to agree to suspension of the strike under this terrific pressure.

The strike was called following lengthy negotiations with the Toledo Edison management, when union requests for a 20 percent wage-increase were flatly turned down. The Toledo Edison Co. is one of Henry L. Doughterty's holdings. It has been making enormous profits and has been exacting terrifically high rates from the consumers.

Failure of the strikers' representatives to issue statements or a strike-bulletin or leaflets to offset the unrestrained lies and frenzied distortions of the press has been a distinct weakness of the strike tactics so far.

Labor to actively support the strike; mass picketing of an effective character must be resumed; the power of the Chamber of Commerce and its hired strike-breakers, the police, must be smashed.

The Sacramento Appeal

Six weeks ago our comrade, Norman Mini, refusing to accept the mercy of the court, was sentenced to San Quentin for the crime of organizing workers into a union. Along with seven members of the Communist Party, he has been imprisoned for one to fourteen years. The Judge refused to set bail pending appeal, and Mini is now prisoner 57606 in San Quentin. His conviction was the result of an illegal horse-trade in the jury room, forced upon jurors who wanted to acquit him and other defendants, but who succumbed to the pressure of reactionary propaganda and reactionary fellow-jurors. The conviction is not simply "illegal" in a technical sense: it is a crime against labor's right to organize and defend its economic interests, and against the democratic rights of the people at large.

Reactionary elements are delighted with the verdict. William Randolph Hearst sees it as an example for other regions to follow, and is advocating the adoption by every state of laws which will make it possible to imprison union organizers just as Mini and his fellow-workers were imprisoned. Labor should show no less consciousness of the meaning of this verdict than do the anti-labor forces: reaction has won a victory and a fight must be made to regain the lost ground.

Through the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, which handled his trial fight, Norman Mini is going to appeal his conviction. An able attorney, armed with the affidavit given to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense by Juror McIntire and revealing the illegality of the verdict, can make a powerful argument for a reversal. If he makes his argument against the sounding board of a great mass movement of protest, the appeals court of California will think twice and three times before it sustains the railroad-verdict of the Sacramento court.

At this time there comes news both good and bad about developments in the appeal struggle. The trial fight was carried on almost entirely as a California issue. For a long time the Communist Party and its instrument, the I.L.D., had sole control of the defense. During that time, the prisoners were kept in the county jail although bail was readily available, and publicity about the case was sabotaged. All this because a number of the prisoners were guilty of disputing the authority of Sam Darcy, District Organizer of the C. P., and one of them, Mini, even challenged the authority of the Communist International.

Not until the N.P.L.D. entered the case, hiring a lawyer for Mini and providing bail for Jack Warnick and Caroline Decker, did the Sacramento case become known outside California to any wide extent. When the New Militant began to print a series of articles about it, the Daily Worker was compelled to give the case some publicity.

The N.P.L.D. held Sacramento defense meetings in New York, Chicago and Boston and won trade union backing for the defense in a number of cities. Nevertheless, the struggle was largely confined to California.

It is heartening, therefore, to learn, as is reported in our news columns, that the N.P.L.D. plans to make the Sacramento appeal a national issue. It properly should be: Hearst has proclaimed it to be one and nobody can deny that the imprisonment of workers for organizing and holding certain political beliefs is an action which calls for nationwide resistance of all workers and honest democratic elements. The fact that the N.P.L.D. has called a conference of national organizations will be good news to all real friends of the Sacramento prisoners. The Workers Party, of course, will support the struggle on a national scale. The fact that the Socialist Party, through its National Labor Secretary, has appointed delegates to the forthcoming conference is additional reason for hoping that a really broad and powerful defense fight can be developed.

On the other hand, the attitude of the I.L.D. while no surprise to anyone acquainted with C.P. policies at this stage is far from being good news. These wreckers apparently are not through with their sabotage of the Sacramento struggle. They have studiously ignored invitations to the forthcoming conference, and give every reason to suspect that in the appeal fight they will follow the same splitting tactics which they introduced into the trial fight. True, the West Coast Stalinists, who for months denounced Norman Mini as a stool-pigeon, now have been forced to back-water to the point where they characterize him as "an honest, misguided class prisoner." But these vandals kept class prisoners who were in their own party in the county jail for six months, and they certainly will not hesitate to wreck the whole appeal struggle if it suits them to do so.

The record of the I.L.D. in the Sacramento case is thus far one of the most shameful in all labor defense history. Its splitting of the united front in California hamstringing the statewide campaign, as has been testified by the Northern California Civil Liberties Union, the California Socialist Party and other elements which aided the defense. Its treachery to Mini called forth the earnest protests of Jack Warnick, union leader and acquitted defendant who has now been expelled from the Stalinist swamp for the crime of "Trotskyism," i.e., for refusing to knife in the back a fellow-worker and fellow-defendant.

If the I.L.D. wrecks the possibility of building a nation-wide, multi-partisan, aggressive defense movement on behalf of the eight Sacramento defendants, it will bear the responsibility for whatever disasters may follow. The Workers Party pledges itself to fight to the finish for a unified movement and a militant struggle for liberation of the eight victims of the California plunderbund. We call upon all party members to publicize the Sacramento case in their localities and to stand by for directives for concrete work to build the defense movement.

Letters to the Editor

When Gold Turns to Mud or a Letter
The Daily Worker Failed to Print

Editor New Militant:

The other day Mike Gold wrote a whole column in the Daily Worker telling all about the letters he receives, there is one he didn't mention. Maybe the New Militant can use it.

—G. A.

March 9, 1935

Mr. Mike Gold

c/o Daily Worker

50 East 13th Street

New York, N. Y.

Dear Mike Gold:

Your series of articles in current issues of the Daily Worker in re Trotsky prompts me to write these lines.

I have been following your stuff for several years, both in the Communist press and books. Politically I've always thought you were a second grader. Since I read your articles in the Daily Worker in answer to a "young Philadelphia worker," I know you are politically haywire.

What are you trying to do? Make good for the "mistake" you made in stating that the Communist Party had little to do with the San Francisco general strike? Does the spanking you received from the Daily Worker editorial board compel you to make good by becoming the foremost literary assassin of Trotsky and Trotskyism?

Broken Bone Stuff
You're swell when it comes to writing about broken bones, blood, heroic breasts and thunder, but when you enter the field of polemics you sound like George Bungle explaining Einstein's theory of relativity.

Your recent faux pas in regards to Scott Nearing only goes to prove that you are very glib. There you had to eat 46,000 copies of your column. Perhaps it is not too improbable to predict that you will one day retract a lot of the things you are saying about the analysis and program of the Left Opposition.

What you said about the San Francisco general strike and the G. P. is true. The same admission can be found in the June 1934 issue of the "Communist," in an article by Sam Darcy. You who pretend to be so courageous, silently accepted the falsity of the Editorial Board's statement. To date you have failed to state whether the Board is correct or not. The Communist Party did not have one single member on the water front, stated Sam Darcy. This is just prior to the general strike. Not that it makes any difference, but I still believe that Lenin was right when he said: "Less bourgeois sophistication, more proletarian honesty."

Mike's Union Sq. Miners

When I started out as a kid in the coal mines of Illinois some Jugoslavians Communist presented me with a copy of "The Damn Agitator and Other Stories." The Agitator story was good, but the "Breaker Boy" was a pile of junk and rot.

At that time you insinuated that adult miners were a bunch of morons who tried to seduce a young miner by having him spend his first pay on booze and whores while his mother wept at home. I've lived in a coal mine and near one all my life. I know the cultural backwardness of the mining folks. But I've never seen the morals of coal miners descend so low as the spectacle I've observed at New Masses balls and other bohemian revelries. Probably when it comes to morals and plain decency coal miners handle young people with more decency than your type.

A case in point: I was going home the other night accompanied by the president of my local and his 16 year old son. We stopped to get a glass of beer. While we went in the boy refused to enter. His father stated that he should not enter the saloon. We came out five minutes later, the father had a nickel bar of candy for the kid. This proves that coal miners in their primitive ways don't want their kids to go into saloons any sooner than they have to.

Learn a Few Things, Gold

Now on this Trotsky business and "A young Philadelphia worker." You write as if he were the only young man in the United States who has guts enough to doubt the correctness of Stalin's role. In the Illinois coal country you can go into scores of towns and meet young coal diggers who probably know more about Stalin's socialism in one country, the Chinese experience of 1927, etc., than you do, despite the fact that you have all the facilities to research at your disposal.

We have seen the policies of Stalin and his American counterparts work out in the field of struggle. We tried for years through countless methods to get rid of Lewis and his cohorts. We tried to build a clean union. Many times we were on the verge of doing the job only to be stifled by the bureaucracy of the C. P. in New York and Moscow. Countless numbers of us who were members of the C. P. were expelled without trials or the permission to issue a statement. We were expelled with the same dirty work a la Lewis.

Just Not Recognized

Since then we've gone out and kept up the struggle. We've seen several of our fellows shot down like dogs. Six of them, all young men, are now in prisons of Illinois serving life. The Daily Worker has never mentioned one line about this. Anything that is connected with Trotskyism is condemned irrespective of how great the struggle is.

In the Illinois coal fields, Minneapolis, Toledo, etc., the bosses called us sons of bitches. The Communist Party seconded the motion all the way through.

You are on the wrong road, Mike Gold. Your devotion to the cause is not questioned. But you are doing the work of retarding progressive revolutionary action.

Something Fishy Here

While you're at it you might as well feel sorry for about five hundred young Illinois coal diggers who feel the same or perhaps are more enlightened than the Philadelphia comrade. The tide is going to turn. The switch of the C. P. over night, from trade union isolation to "build the A. F. of L.," and the policy from "a labor party is counter-revolutionary," to "a labor party will expedite the road to revolution," is fishy. It proves more than anything else that the C. P. membership today is new and inexperienced and that the remaining old guard are nothing but a bunch of goose steppers. This is rightly proven by the fact that the repercussions within the C. P. over such a crazy policy has been null and void. Were it a real Communist Party built on and living up to the Leninist tradition there would be plenty hell within the C. P. over such a shift.

When labor fakers juggle the hell out of funds and public responsibilities, when the trade union movement refuses to join the C. P. in a L.P. venture, all you'll have left is a mess of pottage.

Yours in disgust,
GERRY ALLARD.

Leaders Split
Canton Strike

of the strike. This development came after a week of militant struggle by the workers whose heroism was unexcelled by that of any strike group since the inception of the NRA.

When the first strike was called at the Berger Manufacturing Co., a subsidiary of the Republic Steel, 350 out of 400 workers answered and formed picket lines which company thugs and armored trucks tried to smash, sending 40 workers to hospitals last Monday. Grimly determined to win, the strikers reformed their lines as soon as the tear gas cleared away.

Five plants walked out in sympathy strikes during the next two days of last week as indignation arose over the continued company attacks. The workers came out under the slogan of "Avenge the Massacres." So strong was sympathy with the strikers following the outrages, that city police arrested four thugs one morning and fired at a company car when the strike breakers began the fifth assault on the workers.

Then city authorities proclaimed a virtual martial law on the strike scenes and declared they would hold a vote for the strikers to see if they wanted to continue. Meanwhile influence of the rank-and-file was isolated to two "outlaw" lodges of the A. A. under Clarence Irwin's control and while they boycotted the vote, other unionists went to the polls with tacit permission of the leaders who criticized the strike as a "wildcat" since official A. A. approval hadn't been asked or given.

In this manner was labor's forces split since today found more than half the workers going back into the plants while others who maintained a picket line were herded about by heavily armed police. Attempts of local union leaders to set up a general strike committee had been foiled by the bureaucrats and this marked the beginning of the split. The division of the "leadership" on boycotting the vote, further widened the breach and now the return of many strikers to work has apparently broken the back of the strike.

FRANKFORT, Ky. (FP).—The seven Harlan miners, framed for the murder of mine guards in 1931, are still in prison although Gov. Ruby Laffoon has paroled several hundred men in the past few months on the recommendation of the department of public welfare. Among the pardoned men were some convicted of murder, manslaughter and robbery, but Kentucky's governor seems to think that striking is the greatest crime.

'THE FUTURE BELONGS TO THE YOUTH'

With the above slogan as its watchword the Spartacus Youth League has launched a movement which is rapidly spreading from Coast to Coast. Since the National Convention of the S.Y.L. in December, 1934, the membership of our organization has more than doubled! New branches are cropping up everywhere; others are gaining steadily.

The task before us is indeed colossal. No less is involved than the dangers of war and fascism. How can they be coped with except by a revolutionary youth organization which will vacillate the youth of the nation against this virus of capitalism? This is the goal of Spartacus whose revolutionary clarity stands out against the bankruptcy of the other working class youth organizations.

Most vital of the needs of the S.Y.L. in this regard is a newspaper which appears regularly. Shortage of funds has prevented the regular issuance of "Young Spartacus," the 8-page monthly of the S. Y. L. Every month missed and every issue skipped, let us remind our friends, is another opportunity lost.

We appeal to the readers of the New Militant to transform their certain moral support into actual contributions for "Young Spartacus."

We are confident that you will respond to the call of our growing movement. Friends, don't delay.

ILLINOIS WAGES SAG IN APRIL

CHICAGO (FP).—Jobs in Illinois went up 1.3 percent in number during April but total wages went up only 0.1 percent, making a net loss in wages, according to the Illinois department of labor's monthly report. Women's wages actually dropped 1.3 percent.

Weekly earnings averaged $22.67 for men and women. In manufacturing the average was only $21.94 a week, of which men got $24.03 and women $14.42.

Illinois has been operating under both a state and federal NRA but wages in some industries remain very low. The average in men's shirts and furnishings was $13.96 in April. In fruit and vegetable canning it was $13.45 a week.

In coal mining employment was 44.7 percent of normal, compared with 72.3 percent in April 1934. Wages were at 17.9 percent of normal, compared with 17.6 percent in 1934, figuring total payrolls in each case.

Progressives
To Meet in N.Y.
Needle Trades

NEW YORK.—A conference of progressive groups in the needle trades is called on June 8 for the purpose of organizing a progressive center. Such a conference that could lay down the main lines to be followed by the various progressive groups, and a center that would coordinate the work of the progressives, are long past due.

Situation in the Industry

What we have now in the needle trades is an offensive of the bosses. This offensive has been developing gradually. The appetites of the bosses have been whetted by the almost unbroken chain of defeats suffered by labor throughout the country as a result of the cowardly and treacherous conduct of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy. With the revocation of the NRA the bosses have gained enormous self-confidence. The best illustration is the attitude of the cloak bosses. They demand a revision of the agreement negotiated in 1933 in face of the rising cost of living and unabated unemployment.

They challenge the workers openly and, shaking a finger, they say: "This is not 1933, my boy."

Situation in the Unions

The big gains in 1933 not only transformed the unions and made them what they are today but also rehabilitated the old leadership which had been discredited by its expulsion and splitting policies. Their glory is now waning. In face of the stubborn opposition of the bosses they will not be able to hide their impotence.

Confronted with the offensive of the bosses what do these worthies do? They go back on their memories. "In 1933 we used to call NRA meetings. Everything was rosy then. So let us call an NRA meeting in 1935. Maybe the good old days will come back!" They call a meeting for a bigger and better NRA. They enact a cheap show. They threaten, plead; they fool themselves and fool the workers. Dubinsky, the president of the Ladies Garment Workers Union, who is introduced as a man with Napoleonic traits, said "we won collective bargaining through a strike. Must the workers continue to strike or should the community take the responsibility? We say the community should take the responsibility," etc.

Six days later the news comes that the NRA is dead. The situation in the industry making the failure of class-collaboration policies more obvious from day to day, calls for a new leadership.

Progressive Leadership

The progressive group can be this leadership if they develop an uncompromising struggle against the bureaucracy. The Stalinist "left wing" groups are discredited and isolated. The progressives should steer in a clear independent course. They must organize and develop the struggle against the class-collaborationist leadership. The consolidation of the progressive movement is on the order of the day. —B.F.

S. Y. L. Takes Leap Forward
Mid-West Conference Shows

CHICAGO, Ill., May 14.—Inaugurating a Spartacus Youth League district in the middle west, 22 delegates, representing 125 members in four Spartacus branches and one nucleus, convened in Chicago on May 11 and 12.

The main task before the conference was the setting up of a district apparatus in the form of a Regional Committee and a Chicago Resident Committee. The Resident Committee elected at the mid-west conference is composed of Irving Bern, Al Garber, Yetta Barshefsky, Sid Scott, Karl Kaspi, Nathan Brown, Sam Shapiro, Dave Graham and Ben Goldberg. The out-of-town members of the Regional Committee are Jim Cross from Gillespie, Hermann Beck from Detroit and Herbert Passin from Champaign. Alternates to the committee are Dan Golden, Marion Landau and Ily Stone from Chicago and Baxter from Gillespie.

That the Spartacus Youth League is rapidly transforming itself into a mass organization was clearly pointed out by the delegates to the conference. Chicago was represented with 17 delegates, Gillespie with two delegates, Detroit with one delegate, Champaign with two delegates, and the Indiana Harbor nucleus with one delegate. Minneapolis and Waukegan with Spartacus nuclei were absent.

Grows in Outlying Territory

In the report on the district Irving Bern stated that the Chicago organization gained over 35 members since the first of the year; added another club to the Chicago branch, which now has six clubs in the city; and was directly responsible for the creation of the branch at Champaign as well as the Indiana Harbor group. The discussion showed that 103 members are enrolled in Chicago, 6 in Champaign, 8 in Gillespie, and 8 in Detroit. Three months before no branches existed in Champaign, Gillespie, or Detroit.

The opening report was delivered by Nathan Gould, National Secretary, who recorded similar growth of the Spartacus nationally. Comrade Gould pointed out that the S.Y.L. has had a 144 percent increase in membership since January 1 and that an active National Committee, which issued bulletins and circular letters, now exists. The delegates greeted with enthusiasm the information that the National Committee initiated a call for an international youth conference of youth organizations moving toward a new youth international which is to be held in December in Paris.

Table R.O.T.C. Motion

On the most important political point confronting the conference, the endorsing of the National Committee slogan "Abolish the R.O.T.C.," the delegates decided to table the question until they would be in a position to commit themselves on the point. The majority of the representatives felt that there was inadequate information and inadequate discussion on the question. Instead the conference recommended that the National Committee set up a commission to do some research on the R.O.T.C. and that a wide-spread discussion follow in the Spartacus.

Joe Giganti, the Workers Party representative to the SYL, made the report on the relation of the Party to the youth. After an inspirational report on the situation confronting the youth internationally, Comrade Giganti pointed out that the Party must pay particular attention to the youth. In the Chicago local of the W.P., he stated, the Party has correctly reacted to the necessity of building and assisting the Spartacus Youth League.

Report from Gillespie

Jim Cross, a member of the National Committee who has built a union of the youth working on relief jobs in Gillespie, reported on the unemployment situation. Tremendous possibilities for the Spartacus open themselves in the Illinois Workers Alliance. A limitation of time, however, prevented any discussion on the point which was turned over to the incoming regional committee.

To the tune of the "International" the conference ended.

Aside from the regional conference the Spartacus Youth League recorded the most active week-end of activity in its history. On the evening of May 11 an affair was held to welcome Comrade Gould back to his home town and to provide sufficient funds so that he would be able to continue his tour across the country. Over seventy-five people attended the affair at the West side headquarters where twenty dollars was raised. Fifteen dollars was given to Comrade Gould and the remainder was used to pay the expenses and to feed and house the out-of-town delegates.

Gould Speaks at "Y"

The following evening, after the adjournment of the conference, Comrade Gould spoke at a mass meeting in the Central Y.W.C.A. on the "Future of the American Youth." The meeting was the largest in the history of the Chicago S.Y.L.; over one hundred twenty-five attending.

raised, Gould receiving $27.50. Arrangements are being made for another affair when Nathan Gould returns in the middle of June.

Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins got $10 a minute for a talk near Chicago. He will pay unskilled workers near Birmingham

Lovestonites Dampen and Dominate Conference

Decisions to set up a "Council of Needle Trades Progressive Groups," publish a paper and engage in a drive to set up and strengthen progressive groups in all locals was made at a conference called by the "Progressive Group" of Local 22 of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and held at Manhattan Opera House, last Saturday afternoon.

Representatives from eight progressive groups in the I.L.G.W.U. and one group in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were seated as delegates. Representatives from a number of groups were not seated on the grounds that they were not known to the sponsors of the conference. They were however allowed to remain as fraternal delegates. A large number of individual members from locals of the A.C.W., I.L.G.W. and Millinery Workers Union were present as observers taking no part in the proceedings. Two local unions were represented by two sets of delegates each. In local 1 the group controlling the administration as well as a smaller opposition group had delegates seated. Cutters Welfare League, a progressive group of local 10 were seated. Delegates from a Socialist group in the same local were present as observers.

Max Bluestein, a business agent of local 22 and representative of the progressive group of that local was elected chairman. Chas. Zimmerman, manager of the same local, made the keynote speech. He strongly condemned the class collaboration policies of the Hillman administration of the A.C.W., contrasting with it the "record" of the I.L.G.W.

J. Brandon of the Progressive Unionists, present by invitation, told of the great need of a city and nation-wide organization of progressives. He congratulated the delegates for the step they were taking and pledged the support of himself and his organization for progressive action. His speech was well received.

The report of the Credentials Committee caused a bit of debate, a number of delegates protesting against their non-seating. In reply Zimmerman and others argued that since these representatives were not known to them they could not be seated as regular delegates. It was stated, however, that if the groups represented by these delegates were properly introduced to the officials and found kasher they will be accepted as part of the center.

A complete program was presented to the conference by Murray Gross, office manager of local 22, in the name of the progressive group of that local. This report which had not previously been presented to any of the groups, not even that of local 22, was accepted in total with only one slight addition. One amendment was proposed and ruled out of order by the chairman on the grounds that he knew that Zimmerman also supported the view expressed in the amendment and therefore there was no need to accept it in the constitution. One addition was made. Will Herberg, of the Lovestone group, who is educational director

Green Acts to Stall New Rubber Union

AKRON, Ohio.—Despite requests from major local rubber workers unions, William Green, A. F. of L. president, has delayed calling a convention to organize an international until July.

His rubber organizer, Coleman C. Claherty, explained that Green was sending questionnaires to all locals to determine their attitude. Then a convention will be called. Since all the unions have voted for the International, the A. F. of L. bureaucracy is simply trying to postpone the progressive move.

The question of whether the International will actually be an industrial union, including all employees, or whether the craft workers will maintain their seven international is the focal point of dispute in arguments on forming the international.

Last year when the United Rubberworkers council was formed Claherty, aided by the crafts, obtained control. Of course, he will fight to keep them separate and continue the council, if possible.

Progressives Unite to Fight Expulsion in Teachers Union

Split Threatens as Right Wing Socialist Administration Moves to Comply with Green's Demand for Red Hunt

The Teachers Union of New York City, Local 5 of the American Federation of Teachers, is now facing the most serious crisis in its history, with the panic-stricken right wing Socialist leadership driving full speed ahead for the expulsion of a large, growing left wing movement.

Two weeks ago, by a vote of 14 to 9 in the Executive Board the Administration put through a motion calling upon the Executive Council of the national organization to investigate the local. The investigating committee, consisting of the president, the secretary-treasurer and the legislative representative of the national body, conducted its hearings in New York on June 8 and 9.

Second Expulsion Attempt
This is the second attempt in recent years on the part of the Administration to answer the challenge of the left wing, which for years has been fighting its backward policies and bureaucratic practices, by expulsion.

In 1932 it appointed a Grievance Committee headed by Professor John Dewey to consider expulsion charges against five left wing leaders. The proposal of the Committee to expel was defeated; so was a subsequent proposal to suspend. The Administration then "compromised." It pushed through a constitutional amendment abolishing substitutional meetings with the power to decide policy. A Delegate Assembly, roughly corresponding to a shop chairman's body, was instituted to replace the membership meetings.

The opposition forces, adapting themselves to the new situation, made steady progress. At recent Delegate Assembly meetings it defeated the Administration on a number of crucial questions. In the elections just held for members of the Executive Board and for officers, it gained over 40 percent of the total vote.

New Frame-up
The investigation is a clear

frame-up of the left wing. The administration is climaxing a series of flagrant abuses of democratic practice by attempting to pin a red label on the opposition and kicking it out. Rallying against this policy of split, the left wing groups formed a united front, the first since the 1932 expulsion drive. A mass meeting to protest the investigation, attended by nearly one thousand union members, was held on June 7. At the last Delegate Assembly meeting on June 12, the vote on the question of the investigation was demanded as 80 for 17 against. The demand for a recount was ignored by the chairman, and the meeting was hastily adjourned.

The situation at this writing is extremely tense. The investigating committee, having completed its hearings, will make its recommendations in August, after the national convention. In the meanwhile, the united front is continuing its fight, the success of which depends upon its ability to solidify a program extending further than the mere plank against expulsion.

SOUTHERN TENANT FARMERS UNION EXPANDS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (FP).—Reaching out into Texas and Oklahoma, the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, which has been the target of the lawless violence of Arkansas planters, is increasing its influence and power. The executive council at its June 3 meeting in Memphis received charter applications for locals with over 11,000 members.

Most of these are already organized locally but want the benefit of the strength and experience of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union. In southeastern Oklahoma and northeastern Texas the American Farmers and Farm Laborers Union with headquarters in Madill, Okla., 19,000 strong, applied for membership. The American Agricultural Workers Union with headquarters in Bonham, Tex., 2,000 strong, also applied.

Furriers Unite In One Union Police Destroy American Flag

'Red' Union Dissolved Joins A. F. of L. International

After years of fighting, of mutual scabbery, the two unions in the New York fur market, the Joint Council of the International and the Fur Workers Industrial Union have merged, the latter joining the International on terms which made possible a genuine unity.

This unification on the basis of reinstatement of all members without discrimination, elections within forty days, with all members eligible for office, etc. is a victory for those who fought for unity on a progressive basis. Progressive forces within the International, particularly in Toronto, plus the about turn in Stalinist trade union policy made the merger possible. The rise of a progressive group in the Fur Workers Industrial Union, fighting against the bureaucratic excesses of its leadership, helped to push the latter to accept, after a lot of bluff and blustering, the terms offered by the International.

The final terms of settlement are virtually identical with those voted at the International Convention held in Toronto last May. The entry of the industrial members of the International into the affairs of the International previous to the election and the election itself, will be under the jurisdiction of the committee of seven elected by the International Convention. So far this committee has fulfilled its tasks with admirable skill.

A meeting of about 2,500 furriers called by the F.W.I.U., recently renamed the Independent International Fur Workers Industrial Union, held in Cooper Union last Wednesday, voted unanimously to accept the terms offered by the International Convention through the Committee of Seven. Already at this meeting the line to be followed by the Stalinists after entry into the International, was indicated. An attack was launched against the progressives, the Fur Workers Unity Group while right wing members of the International were praised and applauded.

The tasks of the progressives are

Assault Mass Picket Line for Hallett Reinstatement

ALLENTOWN, Pa.—Pickets from the Unemployed League and trade unions of Allentown were attacked by police as they attempted to picket Cedar Crest College, a girls school near Allentown, in protest to the recent dismissal of Prof. Winslow N. Hallett for his activity in the Unemployed League and American Federation of Teachers.

City police and state troopers guarding public streets leading to the college brutally attacked the pickets as they attempted to march. The American flag at the head of the line was torn to shreds by the police and thrown into the shrubbery at the side of the street. Wayne Morton, leader of the line, was arrested on charges of "disorderly conduct."

Later in the day, General F. D. Beary, Commissioner of Police, realizing the public indignation aroused by the act on the part of the police, permitted the pickets to march peacefully on streets near the college. This was in direct violation of a proclamation issued during the 1934 textile strike by Mayor Fred Lewis limiting picket lines to 10 persons.

Pickets in Cap and Gown
After the commencement exercises, which were in progress during the picketing, Professor Hallett, in cap and gown, joined the line. Also on the line was Rev. Paul Cotton, recently ousted from the pastorate of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church because of his activity in the Unemployed League.

When Dr. Cotton presented a petition signed by the picket line to Dr. William F. Curtis, President of the College, he was ordered off the college grounds. "Get out and stay out," said Dr. Curtis, losing his academic dignity.

The following organizations were represented on the picket line: The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, Local 119; the American Federation of Silk Workers, Local 10; the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, Local 111; the Shirtworkers Union, Local 128, all of Allentown.

NPLD Pushes Campaign for Mini Freedom

Copening Will Be Banquet in N. Y. On June 26

NEW YORK CITY.—The Non-Partisan Labor Defense, leader of the fight for Norman Mini against the labor-baiters of California who are now keeping him in San Quentin Prison, will open a campaign for his liberation with a cold-plate dinner in this city on June 26. As in the trial, the N.P.L.D. will make its fight for Mini a fight on behalf of the eight Sacramento criminal syndicalism defendants and against the criminal syndicalism law used to railroad them to prison.

Among the speakers at the dinner will be A. J. Muste, National Secretary of the Workers Party; Herbert Solow, who spent four months in Sacramento directing the N.P.L.D.'s work during the trial; Murray Baron, leading Socialist and trade-unionist of New York; Carlo Tresca, well-known anti-Fascist; and Louis Berg of the Executive of the N.P.L.D. Sidney Hook, Professor of Philosophy at New York University, will preside.

The dinner will be held at Irving Plaza, 15th Street and Irving Place, at 7 P.M. Tickets costing 50 cents each are being sold by members of the N.P.L.D. They are also available at the following places: New Militant office, 55 East 11th St.; Socialist Call office, 21 East 17th St.; Il Martello office, 94 Fifth Ave.; League for Industrial Democracy, 112 East 19th St. Admission at the door will be 75 cents. Proceeds will be used for the Mini defense fund.

N.P.L.D. for Unified Defense
In response to the call of the N.P.L.D., delegates from the National Labor Committee of the Socialist Party, defense arm of the S. P., and the N.P.L.D. held a preliminary conference Monday at which the possibilities of building an aggressive unified defense were discussed. It was decided to postpone activities a week, in view of the absence of delegates from the I.L.D., which represents Mini's seven co-defendants, and from the General Defense Committee (I.W.W.). Since the meeting, the N.P.L.D. has announced, the G.D.C. has appointed an observer. An observer attended from the A.C.L.U. also.

A new invitation has been sent to the I.L.D. and the conference will be rescheduled in a few days to take practical steps toward expanding itself, and beginning the appeal fight, both through an attorney for Mini and a mass protest campaign against all the Sacramento convictions.

Opinions of a number of lawyers consulted recently by the N.P.L.D. are that the affidavit given by a juror to Herbert Solow and Jack

Bakers Strike Ends After Fierce Battle

After three weeks of militant picketing, marked by violent clashes with company thugs and arrests of pickets, the Gottfried Baking Company's strike is over.

An agreement carrying a substantial increase in wages and partial recognition of the union has been reached.

On Wednesday, the strikers voted by a majority in favor of the terms and later in the day the agreement was signed by Jack Chick, president, Herman Gund, secretary, and Theodore Wharton, organizer, for local 50 of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers International Union, and by R. Gottfried, vice-president for the company.

The agreement provides for the firing of strike breakers hired during the strike; immediate reinstatement of strikers; sharing of work during slack seasons and arbitration of disputes during the life of the agreement. Though full union rates were not secured, wage increases were from 20 to 50 percent. Gained. Wages will now range from 41 cents and hour for women helpers to 90 cents an hour for oven men.

Interviewed in his office, Herman Gund, secretary of local 50, declared that he did not consider the settlement a victory as it did not provide for full union wages and a closed shop. Considering the situation in which a good section of the inside workers remained at work, and the lack of finances, they were the best must," said Gund, "be considered as the first step in our fight for complete unionization, not only of the Gottfried plants, but for all baker factories in the city.

Unemployed Leagues Hold Mass Conventions

Shoulders to the Wheel—Everybody Behind the Eight Page New Militant

We all want it!!

The Workers Party needs it!!

We're going to get it!—The eight-page NEW MILITANT.

On August 1 the first enlarged paper is due to appear.

The increase in size will mean far more than a 100 percent increase in the efficiency of our party organ and organizer. The big job we have to do demands a bigger and a better paper.

Are we going to get it? Will we be able to forge a really effective weapon against war and fascism? It depends on every party member, every sympathizer, every worker who realizes the need for reaching the American masses with the clear voice of the Workers Party.

We have plans.

We have a print shop, comrades to work, comrades to write news and articles.

WE NEED CASH!!! And we need it right away.

The Workers Party is due for another big step ahead. The establishment on a firm basis of the eight-page NEW MILITANT will be such an advance.

Send in your contribution. Begin sub-gathering. Put your shoulders to the wheel. The enlarged NEW MILITANT is the most important job before the party at the present time.

131 Delegates Participate in W. Va. Jobless Convention

Class Struggle Measures Accepted; Fighting Executive Elected

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., June 8.—

In an inspiring two day session the state convention of the West Virginia Unemployed League marshaled the lessons of the recent past before it and cast an eye on its prospects for the future.

131 delegates were in attendance, taking an active part in all the proceedings and viewing with a critical eye all measures proposed for the development of the organization.

A real organization patriotism was manifest throughout all the sessions. The unemployed workers, having many sad experiences with their officials, were clearly resolved to see to it that only those of the highest integrity and representing the rank and file should be their new leaders.

The principal speaker at the convention was Arnold Johnson, secretary of the N.U.L. In his address he pointed out that the workers must cease relying on Greek gifts such as they had been presented by Hoover and Roosevelt, and begin applying their own power as the only effective means to rescue them from the slave conditions imposed by capitalism. Such a struggle alone, he declared, could bring freedom and victory.

"War Only for Freedom"

The high point of his address dealt with the approaching war in which, "workers in one country are called on to kill their fellow workers of another capitalist country only for the profit of the bankers and profiteers. Now is the time to take a firm stand against imperialist war and to use the weapons of war only for the freedom of workers."

Then followed the regular business of the convention, with President Biddle the leading reporter. Reviewing the progress of the League during his short tenure of office, he reported that nine old branches had been revived and 11 new ones organized. In one case he had trekked twenty-six miles through snow and mud to get to a League meeting.

Brant Scott, chairman of the Executive Board, followed with a brief history of the West Virginia Unemployed League since its foundation on May 7, 1933. He took the League through the various presidents who have come and gone. "But the League is still on the march," he declared. "It has gone through many tough disappointments, but nobody can sell out the League. The W. Va. U.L. will keep going when all other organizations fold up. And the thing that will keep us going is the militant action of the rank and file."

Other officers supplemented his report with graphic descriptions of the actions of the League in strikes, demonstrations and action at relief offices.

Resolutions Adopted

Resolutions were passed calling for a regular rank and file conference every three months, demonstrations against the Roosevelt relief scale, against fascism, against imperialist war, for the Workers

Security Bill proposed by the N.U.L., for the freedom of class war prisoners, Tom Mooney, the Harlan miners, the Scottsboro boys, etc. A resolution of greeting to the Pennsylvania Unemployed League, in session simultaneously, was also passed.

The convention adjourned with the election of officers and an executive board. Brant Scott, militant, veteran miner was elected president. L. C. Dean, another ex-miner and staunch fellow-worker of Mother Jones, was elected first vice-president. George Harris, Negro militant, was voted in as second vice-president. Joe Blankenship was re-elected secretary-treasurer. A new executive board of 15 tested militants was voted in.

News Men's Guild To Join A.F. of L.

By JACK WILSON

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 10.—After a bitter five day fight, progressives in the American Newspaper Guild, having 7,000 members, swung the Guild in action as another progressive force in the American labor movement during the second annual convention held here.

The 120 delegates fought for hours over the question of A. F. of L. affiliation. Three definite forces presented points of view for adoption.

A "right wing" clique fought against affiliation because it would make reporters trade unionists. Another group insisted that affiliation to the A. F. of L. would mean approval to the reactionary betrayal of Green, Lewis, Dubinsky and other labor misleaders.

Affiliate Industrially

The correct position of affiliating as an industrial international but dissociating themselves from the bureaucrats was advanced by the New York delegation and certain middle-western groups aided by a few scattered guilds.

The third group gained a 72 to 57 majority to have a resolution with its policy succeed in passing as a recommendation to the general membership for a referendum vote on the question.

A "for A. F. of L. affiliation" slate of candidates was elected as progressives took command of the convention. Heywood Brown was re-elected president; Jonathan Eddy, national secretary and Carlard Ashcraft, treasurer.

On the question of labor legislation, the convention voted by 80 to 40 to support the Wagner Labor Bill, despite sharp attack of it and the advocacy of a class struggle policy by militants.

An attack of the now extinct New Deal and of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats were other high points of the convention which saw the complete submergence of "professionalism" to the attitude of trade unionism.

A favorable referendum by the membership on the affiliation question seems assured as previous surveys indicated a preponderant majority for it.

Whether the A. F. of L. will give an international charter to the guild is another question, on which opinion is divided.

P.U.L. MEETS

Militant Stand Is Adopted on Burning Issues

Labor Party Rejected; Favor Revolutionary Action

ALLENTOWN, Pa., June 10.—Three hundred and fifty delegates, representing more than 25,000 organized unemployed, met here Saturday and Sunday, June 7 and 8, at the convention of the Pennsylvania Unemployed League.

The delegates, representatives of unemployed organizations in more than a dozen counties of the state, heard reports of increased activities and continual growth in the course of the last year. Their unmistakable seriousness and their business-like procedure gave evidence to the fact that the majority of them were seasoned labor spokesmen, trained organization men with wide trade union experience.

Plan Against Relief Rates

After the opening address by President Larry Heimbach and the report of Secretary Lester Heckman, the convention settled down to the task of laying plans for organized action against the scandalous $19-$24-a-month work relief program of the Roosevelt government; for prevailing wage rates on relief jobs; for an increase of 50 per cent in present direct relief allowances; for the representation of the unemployed on project complaint boards as well as other urgent needs of the jobless.

Organizationally, the convention marked progress in deciding on the establishment of district offices in Harrisburg and Pittsburgh, to extend the scope of the P.U.L., and in setting up an Organizational Department, whose task it will be to penetrate into every corner of the state with regular organizers working according to a systematic plan, under centralized direction. The convention also set up an Educational Department, instructing it to form a series of circuit schools by means of which to train active league workers for the maximum effective action in the struggle of the unemployed.

Reports from the county organizations indicated a steady growth in membership since the last convention as well as tremendous opportunities for advancement in new fields. A large sum was pledged by the delegates present, to carry on organizational work.

Reject Phony Unity

The convention went on record in favor of the Workers Security Bill introduced in Congress by the National Unemployed League calling for a 30-hour $30 week on relief work; for cooperation with the trades unions on the work relief projects; for the active support of Mass Action, the official organ of the National Unemployed League.

A resolution presented by Communist Party delegates for "united front action" with the sectarian Unemployed Councils was emphatically rejected by an overwhelming majority. Speaker after speaker pointed to the sad experiences made by the Leagues with the Unemployed Councils in the past. They recalled that the C. P. controlled Unemployed Councils had time and again broken faith in the course of united front action, that they had continually striven to disrupt the Unemployed Leagues, that they had thereby proven themselves unworthy of confidence. It was further pointed out that the Councils had dwindled down to an insignificant number while the Pennsylvania Unemployed League had established itself as the bona fide organization of the unemployed in the state, in spite of their disruptive tactics.

The convention, while voting down the fake unity proposal of the Stalinists, went on record endorsing the unity negotiations of the National Committee of the N.U.L. carried on with bona fide unemployed organizations on a national scale, calling for a rank and file merger convention based on a militant, class struggle program.

Comments On Life, Liberty and Pursuit of Happiness

The World Do Move...

A convention of the unemployed, numerous mass meetings (one, of women organizing to stop the rapid rise in the cost of living), and a picket line for the cause of academic freedom—these are some of the events that have prevented the usual sly items from Oshkosh, Timbuctoo and Tulaheese. Instead of recounting the inane drive of captains of industry, bank presidents and ward heelers risen to high position, the entire column this week is devoted to episodes from lives of workers.

Two years ago at the convention of the National Unemployed League a riot almost ensued when the organization's loyalty to the American flag was brought into question. Last week at the Pennsylvania U. L. convention the audience cheered such statements: "The National Unemployed League stands for the complete destruction of capitalism and we know this can't be done except by revolutionary action of the workers under the inspiration and leadership of a revolutionary political party!"

The cops ordered 70 year old Mother Kimmel to stop distributing leaflets announcing a workers' meeting. "I've picketed the White House in Washington. Hundreds of police tried to stop me. Why should I be afraid of you?" she remarked as she continued to pass out the bills. She was not arrested. What a movement we would have if the young folks were as active as Mother Kimmel! She never misses a picketline, eviction, demonstration or committee meeting. At the P.U.L. convention an intense quiet fell over the hall as she told in simple but dignified language of her faith in the power of the workers.

Who Respects the Flag?

PREACHER PICKETS—PROFESSOR HEADS PICKET LINE—COPS DESTROY AMERICAN FLAG—WORKERS UNITE FOR ACADEMIC FREEDOM... I'm referring to events in the case of Dr. Winslow Hallett, recently dismissed from his position at Cedar Crest College because of his activities in behalf of labor.

Labor unions, professional men and the organized unemployed united on the picket line in his defense. Headed by the Stars and Stripes, the flag of the Christian Church, various union insignias and the rat-tat-tat flag of colonial days (now the banner of the Unemployed League) the picketline began to wend its way in protest to the dictatorial control of education by bank presidents and businessmen.

State troopers, county sheriffs and deputies, and city police were present to defend the status quo. They attempted to stop the procession. "Why can't we walk peacefully on a public highway?" asked the crowd. Angered that their authority should be questioned, the cops charged the line, seized the American flag and tore it partially from its pole. An angry roar arose from the enraged pickets and a general melee resulted for several seconds. "You tell us to respect the flag but you tear it up and toss it aside," cried the workers to the cops.

The flag of the Christian Church is white with a red cross set in a blue field in the upper right hand corner. It was carried by Rev. Paul Cotton, recently ousted from his church because he cast his lot with the working class rather than with the barons of Bethlehem Steel. Rev. Cotton received a new insight into the meaning of academic dignity when he presented a petition for Dr. Hallett's reinstatement to Dr. Wm. F. Curtis, President of the school. Dr. Curtis, thinking Dr. Cotton a commencement guest, greeted him cordially. When he recognized the contents of the petition, however, he asked like a madman, ordered Dr. Cotton from the building and pushed him out when he did not move fast enough.

"Don't Worry Your Little Heads"

A cheer arose as Dr. Hallett came from the commencement exercises and joined the pickets. He carried a large placard: TEACH THE TRUTH TO AMERICAN YOUTH. Workers rallied around him. Earlier in the morning one of his faculty colleagues refused to walk in the commencement procession with him.

Charm School: "You poor little kittens, worrying about problems that bigger minds than yours cannot solve!" remarked Miss Esther Engle, teacher at the college, to girls sympathetic to Dr. Hallett.

At a student meeting called to counteract a petition being circulated among the students for the reinstatement of Dr. Hallett, one of the teachers said: "During the eight years I've been at Cedar Crest, ten teachers have come and gone. All have done so with dignity. Had Dr. Hallett done likewise, new and beautiful pastures would have opened before him."

get representation from one or two leagues, called for the creation of an "Anti-Capitalist Labor Party." Conferences to establish such a labor party on a state scale were to be held within a month!

Delegate Slinger, 8th Ward, Allentown, speaking for this resolution, stated in effect: "I am a Communist. I am for a Labor Party because such a party will vote us workers into office (1). Against the parties of the bosses the workers need a party of their own, a Labor Party."

Delegate Ed. Moser, speaking against the resolution, said: "I am a member of the Workers Party. My experiences in the Unemployed Leagues have convinced me that against the bosses and their parties the workers can be effective only by revolutionary mass action, not by the false hope of voting capitalism out. I do not at this time call upon the P.U.L. to join with the Workers Party but I wish to take this opportunity to express my views just as members of other political parties have the right to express theirs. The previous speaker is a member of another party which claims to speak for the working class. Now, he proposes that we should form a new party, aside from his own—a labor party. That party is supposed to be for the rest of us, a party for second class citizens, so to speak. What sort of sense does that make? We have seen Labor Parties in action before. In Minneapolis last year, during the truck drivers' strike, the Labor Party governor sent out the troops to shoot down the strikers. That sort of party the workers have no use for. We need a party that will not act as a strike-breaker, a party that will act to overthrow capitalism."

For Revolutionary Action

Delegate Spencer, of Easton, also took up the cudgels for the Labor Party. In his opinion, a Labor Party was needed to "abolish the miseries of capitalism." Ernest R. McKinney, vice-president of the N.U.L., replying to this speaker, pointed out in the course of a brief but pungent address, that the N.U.L. itself, in its constitution rejected the idea of abolishing the "miseries of capitalism."

"The constitution of the National Unemployed League," McKinney stressed, "stands for the complete destruction of capitalism. We know this can't be done except by revolutionary action of the workers under the inspiration and leadership of a revolutionary political party."

He urged that the reformist Labor Party resolution of the C. P. be voted down. It was. Instead, the convention went on record reaffirming the stand of the P.U.L. for independent political working class action, based on the experiences of the workers in the course of their struggles.

This bid for support of their reformist venture netted the Stalinists a lesson in revolutionary conduct. The Unemployed Leagues proved themselves too well tempered in the class struggle to fall for the bogus Labor Party campaign of the bankrupt C. P.

New Officers Elected

The convention concluded its sessions with the election of officers and of a state committee. Those elected for the coming year are: Walter Weldon, President; Andrew Budhas, First Vice-President and Organizational Director; Mike Demchak, Second Vice-President; Louis Breier, Third Vice-President; Edwin Zeller, Fourth Vice-President; Lester Heckman, Secretary; Ralph Weaver, Treasurer; Bill Reich, Educational Director.

A stirring speech of excellent revolutionary and educational value, made by the National President of the Unemployed Leagues, Anthony Ramaglia, brought the program to a close.

NPLD Pushes Drive for Mini

Warwick, one of the acquitted prisoners who has since been expelled from the Communist Party for defending Mini against C.P. charges that he was a "stool pigeon" should have great force in the appeal. In a statement issued yesterday, Felix Morrow, temporary secretary of the N.P.L.D., said:

"With all the legal ammunition at our disposal, we need only a powder charge of sufficient force to blow down the prison walls and get these innocent workers out of San Quentin. The charge must come in the form of a great protest movement. Such a movement can be built, and the N.P.L.D. is beginning to build it.

"The failure of the I.L.D. to attend the first conference is far from encouraging. They will tend to paralyze the mass movement if they persist in splitting it by branding as a stool-pigeon a worker whose only crimes are that he helped organize a union, and that he disagrees with the C.P. The fact that the C. P. organ, the Western Worker, brazenly drops Mini's name from the list of applicants in this case, indicates the probable attitude of the I.L.D. That organization disgraced itself during the trial and if it persists in its present attitude, it will do so again."

C. P. Opposes Unity

During the trial, the N.P.L.D.'s Sacramento fight had the endorsement and backing of the N.E.C. of the Socialist Party; the California Socialist Party; the Joint Boards of the I.L.G.W.U. in New York, San Francisco and Boston; the United Hebrew Trades of New York and many other labor organizations. It provided Mini with an attorney. It rescued the Sacramento issue from the obscurity to which the I.L.D., annoyed with the anti-bureaucratic tendencies of some of the prisoners, had consigned it. It forced the I.L.D. and C.P. into a united front defense committee. The C.P. smashed this front within a few days, and thereby did untold damage to the defense movement, driving away all elements except those in political agreement with the C. P.

After pretending for some time that the smashing of the united front was the "fault" of the Workers Party and the Socialist Party, the Communist Party has at last let the cat out of the bag. A current issue of the Western Worker contains a long screed denouncing Charles Gordon, San Francisco I.L.D. organizer, for "opportunism."

One of the chief instances of such opportunism cited is that Gordon signed a united front pact for the defense of all the Sacramento prisoners along with the N.P.L.D., the W. P. and what the Western Worker calls "certain other organizations" (S.P., American Civil Liberties Union, Shipyard Workers Industrial Union, etc.). Thus the C. P., which is simultaneously begging the S.P. for a united front, admits a principled objection to such a united front in defense of class war prisoners!

According to Herbert Solow, who has corresponded with Mini on the matter, the I.L.D.'s refusal to consider the possibility of joint action even to the extent of having a single, joint legal staff, would compel the N.P.L.D. to undertake an entirely separate appeal for Mini. The N.P.L.D. opposes leaving the entire matter in the I.L.D.'s hands, a suggestion made to Mini by Leo Gallagher, I.L.D. lawyer.

Mini Rejects I.L.D.

"Our opinion is that an appeal subject to the sole control of the I.L.D. might very well turn out to be worthless. The manner in which the I.L.D. conducted its trial fight, the often disastrous tactics of Leo Gallagher, the I.L.D.'s isolation from the organized labor movement, give no grounds for hope for such an appeal.

"In the interests of all the defendants, we must fight to force the I.L.D. into a joint appeal if that is possible. If not, we must go on independently. This is not simply our view. Norman Mini writes us as follows:

"After my experiences with I. L.D. 'honors' and with their legal and political abilities, I'd have imagined that no one would think me naive enough to turn my fate over to the I.L.D. unconditionally."

"In view of the situation, we call on all friends of the labor movement to support the Mini Appeal Dinner and our future activities."

Mini's requests to the N.P.L.D. for literature have been filled in part. He is now receiving the New York Times every day, and The Nation every week. He has been sent "Manhattan Transfer" by John Dos Passos. His request for the New Internationalist was filled also, but the prison authorities confiscated the theoretical organ of Mini's party. A protest against this action is being organized by the N.P.L.D.

clear. Those already in the International and the Unity Group must merge their forces and carry on the fight to make the Union a democratic, militant one, and to banish from its ranks any recourse to the "splitting squads" and other questionable methods of the Gold leadership as well as the autocratic and class-collaboration policies of the reactionaries.

With the unification of the fur workers, a campaign of organization in preparation for a struggle to bring union conditions into the fur industry of New York is on the order of the day.

COPPER MINERS STRIKE AT PHELPS-DODGE

LOWELL, Ariz. (FP).—Firing of eight copper miners for union activity by the notoriously anti-labor Phelps-Dodge Corp. has led to a strike of the Bisbee Miners Union. The strike was about 75 percent effective at the start.

Dunne Blasts C.P. in Debate

After Complete Rout Stalinists Apologize For Disruption

MINNEAPOLIS. Minn.—Representatives from the C. P. and the Workers Party met on the platform of the Labor Lyceum on May 29 and debated the municipal election policy of the two parties. V. R. Dunne of the Workers Party upheld the position of the W.P. and Harry Mayville spoke for the C.P. The debate was sponsored by the District Executive Committee of the Workmen's Circle, with Ruben Latz of that group acting as chairman.

Tiala Ducks Out

Alfred Tiala, district organizer for the C.P., was scheduled to speak for the negative, but failed to appear. As a matter of fact the Stalinists arrived in a body, with a noisy clique all organized, and obviously had no intention of going through with the debate, though it had been widely advertised on the North Side for some days in advance. Their plans called for branding the whole affair a fake and then taking over the meeting and disbanding it. But Harry Mayville, a leading Stalinist here, insisted on going through with the debate as scheduled and agreed to speak for the C.P.'s position on the municipal elections.

V. R. Dunne led off by posing the tasks of the revolutionary party, giving the history of the Workers Party of the United States, and then proceeded to evaluate the relative importance of the municipal election. He was careful to point out that the Farmer-Laborites in office are not to be trusted; that such a reformist party could never make any lasting gains for the workers. He showed that by supporting the Farmer-Labor ticket in the coming election, the W. P. was simply showing its readiness to go with the workers who want to deal a blow to the bloody Citizens Alliance regime which had ordered the shooting of workers in the Truck Drivers Strike last year. With the issue so clearly drawn it would be a mistake for the revolutionary party to risk the defection of enough votes to permit the Citizens Alliance candidates to win.

Mayville then took the floor and expounded the Stalinist position, exhibiting all the weaknesses and flaws in their distorted "theory." He urged the workers not to support the Farmer-Laborites as they had voted machine guns, pay for the deputies, etc., in the city council. Yet in the next breath he would insist that "the Farmer-Labor Party can be transformed into a class struggle party." Instead of one Olson, the Stalinists would give us a thousand.

Dunne on Stalinism

In his second speech, V. R. Dunne went into the disasters of Stalinism on an international scale—the British General Strike, and the infamous bloc with Purcell and Hicks; the complete subordination of the Chinese C. P. to the petty bourgeois Kou Min Tang, with the subsequent blood-letting of the revolution; the C. P.'s tragic behavior in Germany; its non-appearance in Austria and Spain; its milk and water position in France. "The Communist Party today is no more the party of Lenin than is the Republican Party the party of Lincoln," stated Dunne.

Mayville's tongue was covered with hair when it came to answering our charges. Social fascism, the united front from below, the C. P.'s recent stand against a labor party, the participation of Russia in the League of Nations—not a word about this monstrous bouquet from Mayville. "You still read about the bandit armies in China," he said. "I guess that looks like the Chinese revolution is sunk eh?"

It should be stressed that Mayville's pitiful theoretical armor is certainly no exception among the Stalinists—rather is he better prepared than his other comrades. Yet he either does not know the facts of international politics or he does not know Lenin. For him, for instance, the Chinese revolution can come about without the leadership of the city workers. For him the Chinese revolution can come about even though the revolutionary parties lie crushed and bleeding from a thousand wounds, or as yet weak and impotent. And so on, down through the list.

Old Slanders Answered
All the old charges were brought up against us during the question period. We "Trotskyites" had urged the truck strikers to beat up the Stalinists; we had not gone on the picket lines; six years ago V. R. Dunne had hit this Stalinist and sent him to the hospital; had broken that man's jaw on Bridge Square; Grant Dunne had voted in the Central Labor Union to offer Governor Olson a vote of thanks for his use of the militia in the truck strike; we had called Mayville and the rest of the Stalinist "United Front" candidates "tools of the Citizens Alliance"; we had not exposed Olson in the Organizer, the daily strike bulletin; Trotsky was kicked out of the Soviet Union because he called for production of consumers goods

Letters to the Editor

From Comrade To "Disrupter", C.P. Style

WACO, Texas.—How the Communist Party "protects" class-war prisoners is shown by its final betrayal of Dr. John Greenberg. Dr. Greenberg, who is being deported to Roumania for activities in behalf of the Communist Party, has been denied a visa to the Soviet Union—upon recommendation of the Communist Party.

Three years ago, Greenberg, a local dentist, began to organize the workers and farmers in this vicinity. Although many lynchings have occurred in this plantation area, Greenberg preached inter-racial equality and unity from the public square. To the Communist Party at that time, the Jewish dentist was "Comrade Greenberg." But when he was seized by the Immigration Department, he immediately became a "disrupter."

This was a most convenient method to free the organization from its elementary obligation of defending a man who had risked his life for its principles. Greenberg was arrested three years ago. The International Labor Defense has never issued a mass appeal for a struggle in his behalf. The Daily Worker has barely mentioned the incident. Instead of arousing support for a man whose theoretical knowledge is very valuable, the members of the Communist Party in this state engaged in a whispering campaign.

While the charges were still pending against Greenberg, the International Labor Defense and Communist Party withdrew entirely from the case. The district organization of the C.P. served notice that Greenberg was no longer to be recognized as a comrade. The dentist had offended the Party by criticizing the inadequacy of his defense. Greenberg was in no danger, anyhow, so the district organization said.

Suddenly and without warning, the Department of Labor issued a warrant of deportation for the dentist. In desperation, Greenberg applied for a passport to the Soviet Union. The district organizer of the Communist Party came here several weeks ago, made inquiries, looked wise, and said nothing. That his report upon the matter was unfavorable is obvious. John Greenberg goes to Roumania and the gallows. The fascist government of King Carol may congratulate itself upon possessing such sincere and uncompromising revolutionary allies.

The campaign for the eight-page New Militant is on. August first is the time for its appearance.

All preparations are now on the rush order list. In the office steps are being taken to build up a staff of capable writers and to work out the general character and the type of contents for the enlarged issues. Our readers may rest assured that there will be a good many new and valuable features added. Detailed announcements of this phase of our efforts will be made as we go along with the campaign.

The next step we now leave up to the New Militant supporters. That should be expressed concretely. In last week's issue various ways of realizing the funds necessary were proposed. At this time suffice it to emphasize only the fact that the first response should be a direct cash contribution. Such matters as obtaining pledges for the security fund, soliciting advance subscriptions and sending in greetings to the next eight-page issue should follow next. But as a whole the various means proposed can be made use of.

We shall forward the necessary material to follow up in the campaign to all Workers Party branches and to all supporters of our press. Meanwhile there should be no delay in taking the first step and forward the cash contributions.

Let it be clearly understood that we have essentially one subject in view by the proposed enlargement of the New Militant: namely to build up a much more effective party spokesman, educator and organizer; to afford a much more effective champion of the cause of the working class now faced with momentous struggles. This is the objective. This is how we propose to face the working class problems of the future. It is for this rather than capital goods; etc., etc. These lies and slanders were each one, branded for what they were by our representative. We have answered them a hundred times before, yet they will undoubtedly be hurled at us a hundred times in the future. It is only in this way that Stalin and his bureaucrats can retain their "monolith."

Complete Rout of C. P.

Unquestionably, many of their representatives were astonished to hear from a Workers Party spokesman what the Workers Party really stands for, what our stand is towards the Soviet Union, etc. When the debate was clearly turning into a complete rout for them, the C. P. leaders and their sympathizers resorted to disruptive tactics. They took the floor for speeches instead of questions, they refused to sit down. They refused to permit our questioners to get at Mayville. Several times the meeting threatened to end up in a free-for-all. At the hint of violence the more timid Farmer-Laborites quickly left the hall. The chairman finally established order and the meeting came to a close.

It is interesting to note that a couple of days later, a committee from the Stalinists called on Latz, the chairman, and apologized for their behavior during the debate. "But after all, how did you expect us to sit there and hear our Party criticized so?" A Baptist deacon hearing a few facts about God feels much the same way.

Rubber Barons Begin Offensive

New Line Is Pretext for Firing Active Progressives

By GEORGE PAPCUN

AKRON, Ohio.—The NRA Castigation by the United States Supreme Court had its immediate repercussions in Akron rubber plants. The rubber barons wasted but little time in calling the meeting of the board of directors of the rubber manufacturers association, which started its meeting in New York City on June 4.

The unions in their weakened position have not been combated openly by the rubber manufacturers, but rather through soft-soaping which disarmed them in the matter of grievances since their betrayal in April. And there is no doubt in any of the rubber workers' minds today in Akron that under the pretense of seasonal lay-offs in the rubber industry that the manufacturers, especially in tire, are taking steps to rid the plants of the militant trade union members within.

Second Offensive

This will be the second offensive of the rubber barons against the rubber workers since the betrayal. The first was when the India Rubber Co. was forced to lock out its workers until they agreed to an open shop in the entire country. This is no secret, as everyone in and around Akron was well aware of it. And after being out several weeks, picketing the plant 24 hours of the day, the open shop was put over with the help of Colman C. Claherty who shadow-boxed against the India Rubber Co. but took no measures to put up a real stand against the drive of the rubber manufacturers.

The dirtiest part of the whole fake fight of Claherty was that he refused to declare a strike, and got the workers to believing that they merely should try to show the public that it was the India Rubber Co.'s fault, without any real fighting measures to combat the company. This company, which is a small tire building concern, could have been combated even through the weak sabotage methods of asking the members of unions not to buy union made tires. In the main this is the way that the company's trade has been built up throughout the entire country. And once a bankrupt concern, it was able to build a big business and begin to show a profit on the basis of its trade among union members and the strength of its union label.

Lay-Off Begins

The same thing is happening in this present attack on the rubber workers, which the officers of the rubber manufacturers call a seasonal lay-off. It will be merely a means to get rid of the fighting trade union members, to starve them into submission, or to completely eliminate them. In this of course, the rubber barons are helped by the fact that they have huge stocks on hand remaining from the preparation for the strike last April. The leadership of the unions in public statements are refusing to attach any significance to the meeting in N. Y. where all of the leading officials of the Big Four Tire Companies will be present. This despite the fact that the Supreme Court decision on the NRA is expected to be discussed, and the semi-secrecy in which the meeting was called. It was only accidentally that it leaked out in the local press. In spite of the denials of the rubber company it is agreed by most people that the meeting will take up the question of hours and wages. This is especially important because even in view of the price war that has broken out among the tire companies.

Progressives Active

The NRA was used to prevent strikes in the rubber industry during the last 18 months when rubber workers could have gained something through a struggle which was prevented by the cooperation of the officials of the rubber workers' union and the government. And now the weakened condition of the unions no doubt encourages the rubber barons to get rid of the last vestige of unionism in the rubber plants.

The rubber barons, however, are not taking into account the reaction of the workers, who have had a lot of experience, and this may be the beginning of another attempt on the part of the workers to establish a real union in Akron. Workers are already talking about an International. Attempts are being made to mobilize a progressive group to combat Coleman C. Claherty and other enemies inside the organization. This is a slow and tedious process.

MINNEAPOLIS (FP).—Tom Latimer, lawyer long identified with Farmer-Labor and radical movements in Minnesota, was elected mayor of Minneapolis June 10. He was endorsed by the Farmer-Labor organization. The reactionary Mayor Bainbridge, who conducted a bloody attack on the teamster strikers last summer, was snowed under in the primaries.

Imperialist Objectives...

The Hearst yellow press expresses most openly and brazenly the aims and objectives of American imperialism. Ever since Roosevelt's recognition of Soviet Russia, dictated by the Japanese seizure of larger and larger slices of China and the futile attempt of American capitalism to call a halt to this process of political pressure, Hearst has been engaged in a vicious counter-propaganda to bring about the breaking off of this recognition. The recent decision of the boss class to push Japan into a war of intervention against the Soviet Union, as manifested by the withdrawal of consuls and military aides from Russia and the serving of notice for all the imperialist world that America did not contemplate a military alliance with Russia against Japan, was hailed by the yellow press as a first step in the right direction. Such articles as those of Representative Tinkham of Massachusetts attempting to prove the "repeated breaking" of the Litzovitz pledge not to aid or foster any organization having as its aim the overthrow of American capitalism or the American government, were designed to press for still further reactionary steps against the Soviets. And now to climax the black wave of chauvinism set in motion by the imperialists, there appears the article by the American imperialist admiral, formerly commander of the Hawaii Naval Base, Yates Sterling. Every worker should read carefully this epitome of the major objectives of the American capitalist class in the coming war.

The Call for War...

In essence Sterling issues a call to arms to capitalism against the menace of Bolshevism and the proletarian revolution. This is the fundamental conflict of our epoch, the international outcome of the class struggle—the victory either of communism or of capitalism. In terms of this basic issue Sterling appeals to the nations of Europe—that is to the capitalist ruling class—to close the ranks, to present one united front against the Soviet Union. It would be a terrible blunder, he feels, for the capitalist nations to permit themselves to be divided into two camps by their relatively minor clashes of interests. "Soviet Russia remains an important, if not the most vital factor in any plan for the stabilization of Europe, yet the doctrine of Bolshevism ever remains a menace to all capitalistic nations." Will the rest of Europe divide against itself and give Russian propaganda an opportunity to drive a Red wedge between the divisions? The American admiral then indicates how capitalism may revive its waning strength at the expense of Russia and China. Germany must convince the rest of Europe, in particular France, that her arming is solely for use against the Soviets.

"If Germany can make Europe believe that her rearming is against Russia, and that Russia is a great danger, might not the Little Entente fly asunder and realign itself with Germany against a common enemy—Communism? Where then will be the Franco-Russian pact? Where indeed? Stirling hopes fervently for the appearance of a leader (Hitler) with the driving power to unite capitalism under a single banner. "In the guise of such a great crusade, maybe yet inartunate in men's thoughts, cannot one see the outlines of a daring plan, not only forever (forever, Admiral!) laying the ghost of Bolshevism but for opening up the fertile lands of Russia to a crowded and industrially hungry Europe?" The Marxist could set forth no more clearly the way in which capitalist hopes to issue from its general world crisis—by the method of war and plunder, the subjugation of the peoples of the Soviet Union and Asia. This is the only method known to imperialism in its desire to maintain the system of exploitation. The imperialists look with greedy eyes on the one-sixth of the globe under the banner of the Soviets, thereby cut off from capitalist exploitation and the making of profits. Stirling shows how the war will start the wheels of industry going—for the purposes of human and material destruction. The tens of millions of lives that will be sacrificed in this "crusade" will be counted well spent by the imperialists if they are shed for the preservation of a system rapidly decaying towards barbarism.

American Preparation

The United States is preparing just as feverishly as the other capitalist nations for the next world war. These preparations are not merely of a military technical nature. Stirling shows clearly the preliminary arrangements of capitalist objectives in the coming catastrophe. It is no accident that Stirling writes in this fashion at this time. The American ruling class is preparing internally also for the conflict that will determine its future in Asia, its life or death. The scrapping of all pretences that the government seeks the "betterment" of the masses, the casting aside of the shams of the NRA, the open and more and more brutal attack on the working class in this country, are all preparations also for the next war. The ruling class shows its mailed fist internally and externally to its greatest enemy, the world proletariat. And first and foremost to the American working class.

How the Stalinists Ruin The Morale of the Red Army

By ALPHA

In recent months, the Kremlin has set about—with enviable zeal!—to revise the history of the Red Army. The aim of this revision is to demonstrate, if not in form then in content, that Trotsky fought in the camp of the White Guards against the Soviets. We are not exaggerating. Trotsky, they aver, introduced "nests of white guards" into the Red Army at the Eastern Front, who would unfailingly have ruined the cause of the revolution if Stalin had not intervened in the nick of time and cleansed the army of Trotsky's agents. At the same time Trotsky shot communists, who fought courageously in the ranks of the Red Army, and the affairs would inevitably have ended in catastrophe if once again it had not been for the salutary intervention of Stalin, who personally prefers to shoot Communists in peace time.

These exceedingly interesting and in a manner of speaking, "sensational" revelations raise several questions.

Pertinent Questions

First: Why are these revelations so belated? Is it because the young soviet savants have dug up a number of unexpected discoveries from the archives or because a new generation has grown up which knows nothing of the past?

Secondly: What relation have these recent revelations with previous ones? At the close of 1923 they accused Trotsky of underestimating the peasantry and of favoring the "permanent revolution." Now, they declare that since 1917 Trotsky was in reality an agent of the Whites in the Red Army, which was created by Stalin. Then why have they dined into the ears of all humanity over a period of years about "under-estimation of the peasantry" and other trash of the same gender, if it concerned not a revolutionist but a counter-revolutionist?

Thirdly: Why did the Bolshevik Party for seven years (1918-1925) keep at the head of the Red Army a man who might have destroyed it and not nominate Stalin who created it? It is impossible to explain that only by the well-known modesty of Stalin, for what was involved here was the life and death of the revolution. It is also impossible to speak of the sparsity of information in the party: Stalin knew what he was doing when he cleansed the Red Army of the counter-revolutionary nests introduced in it by Trotsky and when he stopped the execution of communists, which right he reserves exclusively for himself. And since Stalin could not have acted without the authority of the Political Bureau, this also means that the Political Bureau was informed of the affair.

What About Lenin? Certainly the Political Bureau of that time was composed in its majority of counter-revolutionists or of candidates for the counter-revolution (Trotsky, Kamenev, Zinoviev). But Lenin? Let us grant that he was a bad judge of things and people (his "testament" allows us to come to such a conclusion). But Stalin himself? Why did he not pose before the Central Committee and before the Party the question of the insidious work of Trotsky in the Red Army at the time of civil war?

The Red Soldier who knows how to read and to reflect, in remarking the old pamphlets or magazines, must say to himself:

"For seven years Trotsky was at the head of the Red Army and the Red Fleet. They named him the leader of the armed forces of the Soviet Republic. Trotsky received the oath of the Red Soldiers. He has shown himself to be a traitor. His criminal acts caused hundreds of thousands of superfluous victims. Who has deceived us? The Political Bureau with Lenin at its head. That is to say, there sat in the Political Bureau traitors and men who shielded traitors. But perhaps they will deceive me again? They speak to me of the treachery of Trotsky only ten years after his retirement. And when will they speak to me of the treachery of Stalin and Voroshilov? Who can one believe? That is what the young reflective Red Soldier would say. The old

Behind The Rearmament Of Germany

(By ICL Press Service)

The re-establishment of compulsory military service in Germany, on March 16, 1935, marks an important stage on the road to the second imperialist world war. But of still greater importance is the fact that the other European and international powers have accepted this fact, almost without any resistance whatsoever on their part. This reaction characterizes perfectly the entire present situation: the contradictions of imperialism have already attained to so great a tension that every imperialist action can lead only to the outburst of a new war. War, however, bears with it dangers to the bourgeoisie itself: the German bourgeoisie, wracked by the fever of colossal crises, and with its imperialist wings considerably clipped by the defeat in the Great War, suffered particularly under the blows of the world economic crisis.

The internal tension in Germany continued to become aggravated up to the breaking point, and it posed the alternative: either the abolition of the capitalist system, or the installation of the Fascist dictatorship. And the latter implied that the German imperialism would actively, consistently and purposefully resume the struggle for its "place in the sun," that is to say, the tenacious political and military preparation for war.

"Drang Nach Osten"

This preparation had to occur in stages, of which the initial and most important stage is the destruction of the working class movement, and the enslavement of the entire German proletariat. A disarmed proletariat is not only the necessary prerequisite for intense exploitation, but it is also, at the same time, the necessary guarantee for the possibility of preparing war without being fettered internally, so that the outbreak of the war does not meet with any organized resistance on the part of the proletarian masses. After having hurdled this first stage, with more than adequate success, Fascism is actually proceeding to concentrate its attention upon the military and ideological preparation for war. Compulsory military service is the symbol of it.

Let us briefly review once again the European and international scene. We have already sketched in the background the instability and the force of the imperialist contradictions which do not allow any check to be exercised upon the aggressiveness of German imperialism. While the Fascist dictatorship in no way hides its "Drang Nach Osten" (the Drive Eastward), while it flaunts the obstacles on this road, such as the "Eastern Pact"—so many times discussed and so frequently modified—and while it openly refuses to conclude a "non-aggression pact" with Lithuania, the avenue for the invasion of the U.S.S.R., but poses instead as the "bulwark against the world danger of Bolshevism"—all the efforts of other imperialist powers (with the exception of Japan and Poland, the allies of Germany) are aimed towards maintaining the international and European status quo. This is not a solution, but merely the protraction of the solution. The only solution possible for the imperialist contradiction is, as always, war.

No Solution at All

All the efforts to maintain the European status quo, and all the results achieved on this path are only of a provisional and temporary nature.

When they accused Trotsky of "under-estimating the peasantry" I thought it might probably be true: the question was complex and difficult to figure out. But when they tell me that Trotsky introduced nests of white guards in the Red Army then I say squarely: the present leaders are lying! And if they lie so impudently on the civil war, then truly they also lie on the matter of the "under-estimation" of the peasantry.

The result of the new campaign of sensational revelations can only be the following: ruining confidence in the leadership. In the old and the new, in all leadership.

"Killed" Again

One has then to ask oneself: why then does the Stalinist clique find it necessary at the present time—1935—to embark on such double-edged revelations, which at least, are 50 percent self-revelations? Trotskyism was killed in 1925, then killed again in 1927, irrevocably killed in 1928 (deportation of Trotsky to Alma Ata) the "last remains" of the "miserable debris" were once again exterminated after Trotsky's expulsion from the country where he was conclusively "unmasked" as an agent of imperialism. It seems that it would be time to pass to the order of the day. But no, messieurs, the leaders cannot remain at peace; they find it necessary to wrack their brains: it would be possible to invent something else, stronger, more powerful, and truly kill this Trotskyism that has already been killed at least seven times.

Consequences of Hitler's Program for The International Working Class any nature; they are based solely upon an agreement to do nothing except maintain the condition of stability. This situation received its classic illustration, just recently, at the Stresa Conference.

What is the important aspect in this situation as regards Fascist Germany? From the diplomatic standpoint, the leading role claimed by Germany in its campaign against the U.S.S.R. is not yet an accomplished fact—but with regard to political power, Germany is able to gain the time, the occasion and the possibility to deploy and strengthen its positions, and to prepare carefully for its invasion of the East, and at the same time to increase its importance as a leading or an allied factor.

Such is the situation as it actually shapes itself on the political horizon. The question of war is posed, and it stands; the question of "when, how and where?" does not bear a decisive importance. It may well be that the Archduke who will this time go travelling to Sarajevo has not packed his trunk yet. But there is indeed another, and a very burning question: it is the necessity for preparing the international working class for the coming military conflicts, and for forging all its forces into a solid front of international resistance against a new world slaughter.

In Germany Proper But how does this question pose itself in Germany, the pivot point of the drive towards the imperialist war?

The German working class still finds itself in an atomized and disoriented condition. The Fascist dictatorship has accomplished in a thoroughgoing manner the job of destroying the workingclass organizations, and even bourgeois and reactionary organizations which could become the centers of opposition. Only recently the "German Labor Front," a concoction of the Nazis, a concoction of the labor of frontist trade unions, underwent another transmutation, being "incorporated" with the capitalist exploiters and white-collar slaves. There is not a vestige left of a purely working class organization.

The militarization of daily life has proceeded still further, of recent days. The life of the entire population has been clamped within the military framework. The forms may differ, but the essence remains the same. Already the school children are compelled to receive military training, and in the train there follow military exercises, compulsory labor, extra-curricular military sports, rounded out by forced labor for the unemployed. Work in the industrial enterprises has assumed more and more open military forms, particularly since the establishment of the so-called "Law of Labor," in accordance with which the boss is entitled "the chief" of the enterprise, and the workers the "followers." All these varieties of military forms are now crisscrossed with compulsory military service.

Labor Passive

This militarization of all the phases of national life cannot pass without consequences. The masses of the population are under the permanent press of Fascism. The absence of any serious possibilities for resistance must act to extend the feeling of submission to the Fascist hangmen, superimposed upon the realization of the grave defeat suffered in 1918. At present the outstanding characteristic of the masses of the population is passivity, and the widest strata are already plunged into complete apathy. To this must be added the fact that the youth, who are the prime material for militarization, lack political experience, and their manifestations of discontent are for the most part merely lost in the void. The revolutionary proletarian cadres are still too weak and few in Germany, and they are in no condition to intervene everywhere they should. Disintegrated in the past by the reformist and Stalinist schools they still lack today the political orientation, and by this very fact, likewise the possibility of applying the necessary and corresponding tactics.

According to reports coming from Germany, there prevails among the widest strata a spirit of fatalism as regards the war danger. The outbreak of the war, its inevitability, appear to them to be a certainty. This reveals not an enthusiasm for war, but rather fatalism and apathy. The compulsory military service implies the further strengthening of the Fascist dictatorship; it assuredly meets with the approbation of wide strata of the population, particularly among the petty-bourgeoisie who aspire to new posts, and who hope for a boom in their affairs, and it acts to strengthen the feeling of impotence among the rest: "Hitler can do whatever he pleases."

The Double-Edged Sword

Conscription has bound the German proletariat more firmly in its chains, and it poses new and colossal tasks before the revolutionary elements. Anti-militaristic work has become the principal task ahead. Compulsory service opens up new anti-fascist and revolutionary possibilities but it also presents new and onerous duties. The fate of the impending Fascist war against the U.S.S.R. depends above all on the success of the anti-militarist work in Germany. Universal military service is a double-edged sword for the Fascist dictatorship, as well. Our task must consist in seeing to it that the weapons which are now in the hands of the German proletariat be turned in the last analysis against the Fascists themselves. This requires tenacious and systematic work.

It is impossible to conceive of genuine success in revolutionary and anti-militarist work in Germany except from the standpoint of the formation of a new communist party. But the starting point for the latter is not as yet very favorable. It is true that here and there revolutionary cadres obtain new possibilities to carry on work and at times even the opportunity to assume the leadership of isolated actions, above all in the enterprises, and in the forced labor camps; but these successes are very small indeed. They do not at all imply the transition of the working class to the offensive. The Stalinists continue to pursue their old methods of action at any price, without taking stock of the possible consequences. Up to now, this method, as has been amply demonstrated, does more harm than good. And it is precisely the work under new conditions that demands a complete break with these old methods. With the war drawing closer, the question of the new communist party assumes an ever increasing sharpness.

International Support Vital

But the question of raising the class conscious power of the German proletariat is, primarily, an international question. In Germany the best forces await the assistance of the international working class. An active struggle against the war danger in other countries would have a revivifying repercussion upon the German proletariat. On the other hand, the policy of "national unity" in countries outside of Germany could not fail to augment the disorganization and the disorientation of the German working class. Just as the question of the new communist party poses itself in Germany in all its sharpness, so the question of the Fourth International is posed before the international proletariat. A serious step forward taken in this direction would have important repercussions in Germany. Today, more than ever the German proletariat depends upon international solidarity and the international class struggle.

British I. L. P. Marks Time Report of Conference Shows

We reprint the following account and analysis of the conference of the British Independent Labor Party from the Vanguard, bi-weekly organ of the Workers Party of Canada.—Ed.

The 43rd Annual Conference of the British I.L.P. held at Derby during Easter week-end was looked forward to with keen interest by all sections of the revolutionary working class movement. The party's participation in the conferences of the independent revolutionary socialist parties, its united front activities with the C.P.G.B., its estimation of the international situation were expected to provide lively and interesting debate.

No decision however of a definite character regarding future policy was made, unless we are to consider an endorsement of the policy of the present leadership as such. But this was more an endorsement of a lack of policy than otherwise.

Compared with past conferences the debate brought out the fundamental tendencies reflected in the international movement more sharply and clearly than ever before, and indicated that despite the expressed desire of the National Committee, "to preserve an even keel among all the stormy currents" (Maxton) the I.L.P. membership is being forced by the pressure of international events to make up its mind in which direction it must travel.

Stalinists Bailed

One thing stands out from the proceedings—that the hope of the Stalinists to "capture" the I.L.P. or win it for affiliation to the Comintern is now a dead issue. This was clearly evidenced in the debates and in the waning support given to the spokesmen of this tendency. The decision on the Guild of Youth (I.L.P.) means the affiliation of the Guild to the Young Communist International is now definitely broken and although a small minority of the youth will probably go home to Stalinism, the main body are earnestly seeking a revolutionary orientation particularly internationally, which will lead them away from Stalinism onto the path of a New Youth International. In this respect they can render a great service to the I.L.P. in exposing and undermining the centrism against influence of the N.A.C.

While the United front with the C. P. remains on the books there was much denunciation of the "uselessness" of these activities. McGovern referred to the C. I. as a "bogus international," and when Stephen said in effect that there must be something far wrong with the C. I. when it continues to characterize one of the world's foremost revolutionists and thinkers, L. D. Trotsky, as a "counter-revolutionist," there took place one of the most demonstrative ovations of the whole conference.

Three Main Lines

Benjamin Brockway writes in the New Leader, that three main lines of thought or policy manifested themselves at the conference. To quote from his article:

"They may be described broadly as the 'Communist' line, the 'Trotsky' line, and the 'Revolutionary Socialist' line. The I.L.P. Conference proved that the vast majority of the I.L.P. accept the 'Revolutionary Socialist' line, and only fractions the 'Communist' and 'Trotsky' line."

He describes these "lines" as follows:

"The 'Communist' line would join the I.L.P. and the Communist Party together in a United Communist Party affiliated to the Communist International. The 'Trotsky' line would form a New International. The 'Revolutionary Socialist' line sees that the future revolutionary movement, both in this country and internationally must be something much bigger than a union of forces between the I.L.P. and the Communist Party or the Revolutionary Parties and the Communist International."

"It (the R. S. line) recognizes that revolutionary Socialism thought and spirit is growing in all sections of the working class. It is inevitable that under the present conditions in the world it should grow everywhere."

"The time must come when this common thought and spirit will leap over all organizational barriers and create the united revolutionary movement which alone will be equal to the task of winning workers' power and establishing socialism."

"To join the Communist International or to form a Fourth International under these circumstances is to postpone the coming of revolutionary unity."

Brockway then offers his criticism which has no principled political or theoretical basis.

The Third International is "top heavy." It embraces millions of Russian workers and only thousands in other countries. "This unbalanced condition of the Communist International," he writes, "has resulted in mistake after mistake—dual unionism, the theory of social fascism, the Communist-Nazi alliance on the German referendum, the over-riding of majorities in Communist Parties and the imposition from above of new leaderships. These mistakes have had such a disastrous effect upon other sections of the working class that there is no hope of the growing revolutionary movement outside the Communist International going into it to redress the balance."

"The United Revolutionary International of the future," he continues, "will not grow out of the present Communist International, will be a coming together of all the revolutionary forces within the present Internationals and outside them. This is the Revolutionary Socialist line."

So there is the "line" which Brockway is pleased to term the Revolutionary Socialist line. A typical centrism opportunist line; a line which declares that the Second International "can be of no effective service to the working class"; a line which rejects affiliation to the Third International; a line which records the growing revolutionary thought and spirit outside the Internationals, but which refuses to openly proclaim the need for a New International, but endeavors to steer an even keel in the stormy international waters.

As the I.L.P. leadership with Ramsay MacDonald at the helm, in the days when true revolutionary parties had to decide their attitude towards the New (third) International after the ignominious collapse of the Second steered and maneuvered for some harbor in between—a two-and-a-half International, so the present leadership is looking for some three-and-a-half International. It vaguely talks about eventual unity of all revolutionary forces.

The Present Need But the working class makes its own history. Furthermore the question here is not of merely forming, in some narrow mechanical manner, a New Fourth International, but

By A. WEAVER

Question: Would it be best in the U.S.A. if production were so carried on that only "simple reproduction" took place?

Answer: Under capitalism "simple reproduction" could take place only if the capitalists personally consumed all the surplus value which they extract from the workers, so that no accumulation takes place. In general this is an impossibility under capitalism, and while space does not permit us here to go into a detailed analysis demonstrating this, suffice it to point to the fact that "simple reproduction" would require today the scrapping of most of heavy industry, since it is the latter which produces the means of production by which the greatest portion of capitalist accumulation takes place.

The question of reverting to "simple reproduction" is of course only a pure abstraction. Who is there to accomplish this? The capitalists? It is precisely they, whether they like it or not, who are forced by the laws of motion of the capitalist society to accumulate. The government? Whose government is controlled by the capitalists and will protect the interests of the latter, who require that accumulation continues.

If the government is that of the workers, i.e. if the proletariat seizes the power, expropriates the capitalists and organizes production along socialist lines, there is no need of curbing accumulation. To do so would be reactionary, since the problems of humanity can be solved only by expanding its MATERIAL means even higher than was accomplished under capitalism. Under capitalism the misery of the masses grows with the increase in wealth of the ruling class, whereas, under the rule of the workers, and further, under socialism, the greater the increase of the social wealth, the more will society, as a whole, benefit.

H. B. NEW YORK

Question: Does not the bureaucracy of the Soviet Union constitute a ruling class?

Answer: "... THE CLASS has an exceptionally important and more scientific restricted meaning to a Marxist. A class is defined not by its participation in the distribution of the national income alone, but by its independent role in the general structure of economy and by its independent roots in the economic foundation of society. Each class (the feudal nobility, the peasantry, the petty bourgeoisie, the capitalist bourgeoisie, and the proletariat) works out its own special forms of property. The bureaucracy lacks all these social traits. It has no independent position in the process of production and distribution. It has no independent property roots. Its functions relate basically to the political TECHNIQUE of class rule. The existence of a bureaucracy, in all its variety of forms and differences in specific weight, characterizes EVERY class regime. The bureaucracy is indissolubly bound up with the ruling economic class, feeding itself upon the social roots of the latter, maintaining itself and falling together with it. ...

"A bureaucracy devours no small portion of surplus value. It might not compute what portion of the national income is devoured by the Fascist locusts in Italy or Germany! But this fact, of no small importance by itself, is entirely insufficient to transform the Fascist bureaucracy into an INDEPENDENT ruling class. It is the lashing of the bourgeoisie. ...

"MUTATIS MUTANDIS (changing what should be changed), what has been said above can be applied to the Stalinist bureaucracy as well. It devours, wastes, and embellishes a considerable portion of the national income. Its management costs the proletariat very dearly. In the Soviet society, it occupies an extremely privileged position not only in the sense of having political and administrative prerogatives but also in the sense of possessing enormous material advantages. Still, the biggest apartness, the juiciest steaks, and even Rolls Royces are not enough to transform the bureaucracy into an independent ruling class. ...

"... the privileges of the bureaucracy by themselves do not change the bases of the Soviet society, because the bureaucracy derives its privileges not from any special property relations, peculiar to it as a 'class,' but from those property relations which have been created by the October Revolution, and which are fundamentally adequate for the dictatorship of the proletariat."

To put it plainly, insofar as the bureaucracy robs the people (and this is done in various ways by every bureaucracy), we have to deal not with CLASS EXPLOITATION, in the scientific sense of the word, but with SOCIAL PARASITISM, although on a very large scale. ...

Corroboration Of Betrayal

"In the event that the Czechoslovakian army will fight consistently against German imperialism, the Czechoslovakian Communists will support this struggle and come out in favor of the army. We are for preserving the independence of the Czechoslovak nation which can be guaranteed by means of a strong army cleansed of Fascist elements and in which the workers enjoy all political liberties. We demand that the members of the army be granted the right of suffrage again... We will support the Socialist parties in the government in all the measures which are designed to combat fascism and to produce concrete benefits to the workers. In foreign policy we will advocate everything that is designed to support the peaceful foreign policy of the Soviet Union and to beat back the war plans of Hitler Germany."

The Socialist Call and Social Patriotism

The Stalin-Laval Communique is arousing the widest interest among the politically organized workers and, following the attacks of the revolutionary Marxists on this shameful announcement of the social-patriotic betrayal of the Stalinists, has now brought important repercussions in the socialist ranks. The Socialist Call, organ of the S. P. "militants," devotes an article in the June 8 issue to this question and mimes no words in its denunciation of Stalin and his French lackeys who are transformed into lackeys of the French imperialist bourgeoisie.

The Socialist Call quotes the notorious statement: "In this respect Stalin fully understands and approves the policy of national defense undertaken by France of maintaining her armed forces at the level required for security," and the prompt response of l'Humanite to the effect that "We are resolved in case of war to carry out our obligation of revolutionary defense even if it coincides with so-called national defense. . . . Revolutionary defeatism demands that we should struggle for the defeat of the Hitlerian counter-revolution."

To this the Call quite properly replies:

"So 'revolutionary defense' is to be put at the service of French imperialism! And 'revolutionary defeatism' which always meant the defeat of your government is perverted to mean the defeat of the enemy of your government!"

"This is the most vulgar national chauvinism, no matter in what fine sounding terms it is clad."

So far so good. The expression of the Socialist Call is an indication that the Socialist "militants" are overcoming the false and dangerous illusion that Stalinism is something "left" and "revolutionary." It shows that the Socialists are already to a certain extent "vaccinated" against this disease. That is a prerequisite for their further development on the road of revolutionary Marxism, and is a sign that events have served to confirm the educational campaign which we have conducted for a long time now on this question. All the more significant is it that this enlightenment occurs on the question which determined the regroupment of the revolutionary forces once before and which will do so again—the question of war.

But something more fundamental is involved here. The question under consideration is social-patriotism, and the Stalinists, unfortunately, are not the sole exponents and practitioners of this treachery to the working class. The original, and present, carriers of the poison of social-patriotism in the labor movement are the Social Democratic reformists. We condemn the Stalinists, not because they have introduced something new but because they have sunk down to the old platform of Social Democracy! It is not enough for a socialist paper to confine its denunciation to the Stalinists. Such a limitation does not clarify but confuses the issue for the socialist workers. It is one-sided, and therefore false and deceptive. All the more so since the Social Democratic leaders stand today where they stood in 1914.

Leon Blum, the leader of the French Socialist Party, in a speech in the French Chamber of Deputies on March 15, announced:

"I am convinced, gentlemen, and I say it weighing my words, that in replying to aggression by Hitlerite Germany, all the workers of this country will rise to a man together with all other Frenchmen."

Why doesn't the Socialist Call speak about this when it deals with French affairs? Surely the speech of Blum is known to the editors. It was called to their attention in the May 11 issue of the New Militant.

Or, to come closer home, the New Leader often praises the policy of the right wing socialists in the bourgeois government of Europe, who stand frankly on a program of civil peace and national defense. This paper, in its issue of May 18, endorses the Franco-Soviet pact and espouses the "international fight on Hitlerism" in company with the bourgeois governments in the "democratic" countries.

Why doesn't the Socialist Call answer and denounce these expressions when it deals with the subject of social patriotism? To fail to do so is to fail to arm the socialist workers against social-patriotic betrayal in their own party and international. More correctly, it is to disarm them.

We advise the Socialist Call to continue its campaign against the "vulgar national chauvinism" of the Stalinists. And the next time they write the editors should remember the excellent watchword of Karl Liebknecht: "The main enemy is in our own country!" The socialist "militants" will never approach the great German revolutionist until they translate his words to read: The enemy is in our own party!

"Finally, we may add for the sake of complete clarity: if in the U.S.S.R. today, the Marxist party were in power, it would renovate the entire political regime: it would shuffle and cleanse the bureaucracy, and place it under the control of the masses; it would transform all of the administrative practices, and inaugurate a series of capital reforms in the management of economy; but in no case would it have to undertake an OVERTURN IN THE PROPERTY RELATIONS, i.e., A NEW SOCIAL REVOLUTION" (L. Trotsky, "The Soviet Union and the Fourth International," all emphasis in original.)

One Flight Up

Industrial Unionism and the A. F. of L.

By KARL LORE

Remorse of serious division in the leading circles of the American Federation of Labor run thick on the labor movement grapevine. Louis Stark, the cautious and well-informed labor correspondent of the New York Times has even written of the possibility that the United Mine Workers, the Metal Miners, clothing, brewery, and printing tradesmen might take the initiative in setting up another federation. Unlikely as it is that the near future will see any such development, there is no doubt that real differences exist and that they center around the historic and basic issue of industrial unionism.

The Federation executive is reaping the harvest for its unwillingness to take a stand on the issue. It has been straddling the fence ever since the organizing drive began in the basic industries. No policy had been worked out to meet the situation which arose when the workers in their thousands, flocked into the ranks. But these men and women newly organized into the Federal Labor Union wanted to know: Would they be allowed to retain an industrial structure or would a later division into crafts be forced upon them? The organizers had no answer. The A.F. of L. was handling dynamite and no one knew it better than the labor moguls of its executive council. An outright declaration against industrial unionism meant the loss of thousands of the new recruits. To grant such a structure on the other hand, meant to sweep the ground out from under the feet of some of the most powerful national units in the Federation.

In The Old Unions
Nor was the issue confined to the new unions. The Brewery Workers Union which had come back with a bang after prohibition repeal, was fighting the teamsters and engineers organizations who claimed jurisdiction over these labor categories in breweries. The Machinists Union and the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers were quarreling about machinists who worked in steel mills. The issue was there, it was inescapable and growing worse constantly. At the 1934 convention held in San Francisco, the Executive Council brought to meet this new situation the Executive Council is directed to issue charters for National or International unions in the automotive, cement, aluminum and such other mass production and miscellaneous industries as in the judgment of the Executive Council may be necessary to meet the situation. This resolution, unanimously adopted, was almost universally regarded as an industrial union move. It was interpreted as the decisive straw which pointed the path of an industrial organization goal.

What has happened since the delegates went home? Have industrial unions been set up? Has the trend in the Federation been in that direction? Unfortunately, it has not. In fact, the trend has been all the other way. There is a very real danger that the present path of the A. F. of L. may wipe out all the organizational gains that the past few years have made. Let us look at the facts.

Warfare Against Brewery Union
A fierce fight is on against the Brewery Workers. Two successive conventions of the A. F. of L. ordered them to give up crafts claimed by other internationals. The brewers rejected the decision by a referendum vote of 24,161 to 170. The craft unions have begun a war to the death. In a number of cities they made deals with the brewery bosses to split the workers' ranks, in others they ousted the Brewery Workers from Central Labor Unions. A dispatch from Spokane, Washington (where union brewers are on strike or are locked out as a result of this fight) quotes Harry Dahl, district representative of the Teamsters, as saying: "We are organizing a new affiliated union called the Brewery Inside Workers to which all employees inside the local breweries must belong."

Truly an unprecedented situation! Dual unionism has always been considered a cardinal crime by Federation officials. Yet here, in its efforts to smash an industrially constructed Federation affiliate, another A. F. of L. organization goes to the length of organizing a dual union. No word of protest has come from Federation headquarters although these tactics are being used in a national fight to dismember one of its oldest bodies.

The "Campaign" in Steel
The last convention of the A. F. of L. voted with great enthusiasm for a widespread organization campaign in the steel industry. Plans were drawn up and presented to the Executive Council at its last session. But the drive never got under way. What happened is fairly well known. The old guard killed the campaign by insisting that it be conducted on a craft basis and that Wharton of the Machinists head the organizing committee. The whole idea was shelved. The industrial unionists on the Council knew that it would be a grizzly farce to approach the men of the mills on that basis.

At the same session the International Union of Mill, Mine and Smelter Workers appealed against the action of the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L. and its president, the astute John P. Frey, in dividing the workers in the Butte, Montana copper mines among a number of craft unions. Only the semi-skilled and unskilled had been left in the miners' organization. The appeal was rejected and the position of the Metal Trades Department—composed entirely of craft organizations—was approved.

The Oil Contract
The Metal Trades Department has just signed a joint agreement for twelve of its affiliated crafts with the Sinclair Oil Company, an agreement which runs out in March 1936. Last June a contract was signed by the Sinclair Company with the Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers which expires in June 1935. The boiler-makers have still another agreement. Certainly by now the unions should have learned the necessity of writing contracts expiring simultaneously for all divisions of the industry. The present situation in oil means that power to act, instead of being concentrated in one strong union, is divided in three directions. Contractual relations with the employer are not coordinated. Unified strike action will be very difficult if not impossible of achievement.

The Federation's real problem, however, lay in the newly organized industries. The Federal locals had been largely the work of rank and file elements and Federation organizers had little influence in them. The unions thus set up were completely industrial in structure and suggestions that crafts be split off met with stiff resistance. It took all the skill of the practiced trade union politicians of the A. F. of L. to turn the trick but in one place after another the pressure has been too great and the splitting off process began.

Splitting the Federal Locals

Today every possible craft worker is being squeezed out of the Federal locals. In the rubber industry, for example, the locals are composed almost entirely of the production men. All others are in the craft locals and under the discipline of the craft internationals. The International Association of Machinists has recently taken the machinists and tool and die makers out of the mass unions of the Remington Rand Company. The A. F. of L. regards the crux of the problem of organizing the great electrical and radio equipment factories to be "the application of a general policy which would result in the organization of the many skilled mechanics in their respective craft organizations and a coordination of these organizations by plants. . . ." At its convention held some months ago in Buffalo the Radio and Allied Trades National Council which had been organized on an industrial basis voted to "reorganize upon a foundation to meet the requirements which will allow it to be chartered under the American Federation of Labor as an International Union. The aluminum workers have been obliged to give up craft workers. In automobiles and many others, a similar process is under way. When the Independent Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of Camden, N. J. applied for affiliation, it was denied a charter because of its refusal to sacrifice a unified structure.

No Change Envisaged

The picture that emerges is a far from happy one. The high hopes for real industrial unionism at the present time, have gone glimmering. Large slices have been cut out of the Federal locals. Instead of the united front against the bosses, labor must rely on forms of cooperation which all too often fail to work. In the great Toledo auto strike of 1934, for example, the machinists, organized in a separate local, failed to come out and lend their support in the fight.

The Federation can conceive of no change in its basic craft structure and orientation. It regards craft unionism based on the skilled worker as the backbone of its strength in the future as in the past. It realizes that such narrow lines are impossible for the semi-skilled and unskilled production workers in the basic industries. These elements according to this scheme of things, would be lumped together into national unions for their industries. A report on the "Field for Unionization" made to a conference of presidents of international unions early in 1934 shows quite clearly the A. F. of L. conception of the role that the new unions were to play. It estimated that of 30,000,000 organizable workers in the United States, over 17,000,000 or about 58 percent were eligible to membership in the existing internationals. Three chief categories make up the remainder as follows: "the clerks and kindred workers where there are nearly 5,000,000 organizable but not eligible to existing internationals; the semi-skilled workers with a corresponding figure of over 3,000,000; and the unskilled workers with nearly 4,000,000—a grand total of more than 12,000,000 organizable but with no place in the existing international union structure."

Separating Unskilled Workers

It is a great advance of course, that the less skilled elements have been organized in greater numbers than ever before. There can be no doubt that their presence within the organized labor movement will make a profound impression. But to separate them organizationally from the vitally important skilled workers who are so often the key to victorious strike movements is extremely dangerous. The joint councils which are being set up in most industries to provide for some measure of united action are at best a shoddy substitute for a genuine industrial structure. Only the future can tell whether such makeshift construction will withstand the attack of industry.

The leaders of the great craft unions have been traditionally scornful of the mass of the unskilled. This attitude cropped out at the 1934 convention when Dan Tobin of the Teamsters referred to the "rabble" that had recently come into the trade union movement. His remark was notable for its frankness but it only expressed what too many other labor chiefs, who see in the avalanche of new members a force which may eventually sweep them from their high places, are thinking. Constant and unpredictable strike waves are not to their liking. They fear the new and aggressive elements who, rising from the mills and factories of America, are challenging their policies, their lack of militancy and their right to leadership.

Issue For Progressives

This raises a serious question in regard to the new mass unions of semi and unskilled workers. They are not yet firmly established. The membership and leadership is, by and large, untrained. They have no adequate treasuries to sustain them in their fight. For some time to come they will require a good deal of help from the Federation and from its affiliated organizations. Will they get it? It is tragically significant that in the great textile strike, the most widespread labor battle in the history of America, not one red cent was donated by the craft union cohorts. It is entirely possible that those die-hards, once they have blasted loose and absorbed the craft workers from the Federal Unions, will lose interest in the problems of the masses in the basic industries. The craft moguls are fighting for their lives. They know that the trend of the times is against them and that the ground they stand on is shifting under their feet. But they control the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor and, in the cause of self-preservation, they seem prepared to leave the less skilled masses whom they despise and fear, holding the bag.

It is unfortunate that there has been as yet, no consolidation of the progressives in the trade union movement to take the initiative against these tendencies. Certainly without such a crystallization no effective opposition may be expected. The fight for genuine industrial unionism has just begun and is by no means a hopeless one. The rank and file has come through the fire and the blaze of the industrial conflict hardened and more sure of itself, its desire for labor organization which can face up to the job heightened manifold. A united progressive movement can carry forward the banner of organization on the great industrial battlefield of America.

of local 22, noting that no clause on race discrimination was included in the program, corrected the oversight.

Shelve Industrial Unionism
On the question of industrial unionism and amalgamation, delegate Schiff, moved that a committee be authorized to draw up a resolution covering the steps to be taken in reaching our objective of one industrial union of all needle workers. This proposal was ruled out as "impractical" on the grounds that the committee could not report back to the conference. Zimmerman spoke to this effect. An addition proposed by the Levy (member of local 1) group opposed "mechanical party control of unions." Zimmerman moved to refer this clause to the incoming executive committee.

Two points in the program were subject to debate: the labor party and dual unionism.
Bill Green's Position
The clause on dual unionism reads in part: "For any union to stand outside the A. F. of L. means to stand outside the labor movement. . . . In the interests of unity we firmly oppose dual unionism of all brands and varieties. Dual unionism destroys solidarity and breeds demoralization and conflicts among the workers, leading to strikebreaking and scabbery, to paralysis and disintegration. . . ." As no reference was made in this clause to the progressive attitude in cases where unions were expelled on account of militant leadership or where workers were compelled to organize outside the A. F. of L. due to the refusal of officials to allow strikes, etc., some delegates thought an addition on this was in place. The chairman ruled this amendment out and a barrage of attack was launched against its sponsors as "dual unionists."

Sleight-of-Hand

Charles Zimmerman endeavored to back the label "dual unionists" upon the Workers Party by reading a leaflet which advertised a meeting of the W. P. on the question: "Is an Independent Federation of Labor on the Order of the Day?" That the answer given to this question by the W. P. is a decisive "No" was well known to Zimmerman. But that made no difference. The energy which was not displayed by an attack on Dubinsky and Co. was utilized for a typical Lovestoneste slur on the Workers Party. In this he was seconded by other well known Lovestoneste who were present in abundance.

While some delegates from Progressive groups were seated only as fraternal delegates and had their amendments ruled out of order, Will Herberg of the Lovestoneste group who was neither delegate nor needle trades worker, wrote out an addition to the program, handed it up to the reporter Murray Gross, and had it accepted by the latter with the readiness of one long used to accepting suggestions.

The constitution provides for an executive committee of 15, three from local 1, four from local 22, and three from knit goods local—all of these being locals where the progressives are the administration.

I.L.P. Confab Marks Time

proclaiming before all the imperative necessity for such working towards and for its consummation. At the Paris Conference of Independent Socialist Parties held in February of this year, which is briefly reported elsewhere in this paper, the British I.L.P. played a leading and important role. This influence has undoubtedly been exerted to prevent a clear declaration for a New International. Delegate C. A. Smith, a prominent worker and writer in the I.L.P., drew attention at the Derby conference to the fact that within the Left Parties group, the I.L.P. has been responsible for the prevention of steps towards the formation of a Fourth International.

The perspective of a New International in the dim and distant future must be energetically rejected. Such an attitude in this deep crisis of capitalism, with rapidly approaching war, with the alarming growth of fascism and fascist tendencies.

The "poor relations"—progressive groups in opposition in the balance of the I.L.G.W., the military workers and the A.C.A.—are to divide four delegates between them. There will be one representative from the Furriers union.

A delegate who pointed out the discrepancy of representation between administration groups and groups in opposition, was pounced on by Zimmerman, Gross and others.

ences in all countries, with the open rejection of all vestiges of revolutionary working class internationalism by the C. I. is little short of a betrayal of basic interests of the international working class.

The British I.L.P. has within its ranks some of the best elements of the British working class. Compared with it the C.P.G.B. is a moribund and decrepit outfit. The I.L.P. is called upon to give a fearless, honest, open revolutionary lead to the British workers. On its decision depends whether as an organization it will flourish and grow in revolutionary strength and activity or miserably disintegrate in the centrist morass of indecision and vacillation. The conference for the first time posed the question openly before the organization and the British workers. Let us hope that the lead given by certain delegates and the obvious desire of many others to meet the problem openly and honestly will spell a speedy end to the past policy of tacking and veering in the stormy currents and that a course will be set for a Fourth International capable of leading the international working class to victory and to Socialism.

MEXICAN RAILWAY, MINE WORKERS FORMING PACT

MEXICO CITY (FP).—A pact of solidarity is being discussed between two of the strongest and largest unions in Mexico—the Railway Workers Union and the Mining and Metallurgical Workers Union. The pact involves close to 100,000 men and will probably be signed before July 1.

The action is of marked importance since it is the first case of such united action by industrial unions in Mexico.

S. P. Congress Meets Amid French Crisis

Blum Speaks; He Hails Social Patriotism of The Stalinists

Leninists Alone Hold Aloft Banner of Revolution

By Special Correspondent

PARIS, June 15.—On the evening of June 12 the 32nd national congress of the French Socialist party finished its work. Let us review its actions and draw up a balance.

Has any new word emerged from this Congress, any word truly capable of mobilizing the masses, of pointing out to them a concrete goal, precise and clear in the present crisis of French society and of the Third Republic? One will search in vain the decisions of the Mulhouse Congress for an answer to this question. To understand this Congress we must review the days preceding the latest ministerial crisis brought on by the fall of the Flaminio government.

Why Was Flaminio Defeated?

Following the results of the recent municipal elections which showed important gains for the so-called "peoples front" (bloc of the Communist party and Socialist party including the Radicals) there was a fight of gold from the reserves of the Bank of France. The franc was endangered by speculation. Thus the capitalist class decided to create a panic in the country which would enable it to put over a "strong government," following the classical maneuvers formerly successful, from Poincare to Doumergue. This time, however, the maneuver did not yield the results they counted on. Flaminio received only a minority of votes when he demanded extraordinary powers from the Chamber of Deputies. The ex-socialist, Blum, president of the Chamber, met with the same fate. Despite the promise the latter received from the Radicals that they would give him a vote of confidence, the ministry of National Union, formed by Blumson with the participation of renegade socialists (Frossard, Lafont), fell on the critical question of extraordinary powers, a large fraction of the Radicals (70-80) voting against.

Stalinist Parliamentarians

A new situation arose. It appeared that the Radicals, captives of the National Union since February 6, 1934, wished to retrieve their liberty. The Stalinists in the "Humanite" shouted about the victory of the "Peoples Front" which had overthrown two ministries in the course of 24 hours. They even took the initiative in calling together the "left" parliamentarians in order to explore the possibility of re-establishing a "radical" government as a solution of the ministerial crisis. It would be interesting to expand on the maneuvers of the Stalinists among the workers and the Radicals. Let it suffice for the moment to emphasize that the new element of this crisis was the conversion of the Communist Party to the policy of "parliamentary support" offered to the Radicals. From social-patriotism to parliamentary collaboration: such is the latest chapter of Stalinism in France. The Communists (Stalinists) were less "contrary" than the Socialists themselves. The Communists said they favored a government which extended as far to the right as the Neo-Socialists (expelled from the S.P. for reactionary views!) and the moderate liberal Bonnevay. How far removed from the tactic of "social-fascism!"

The Radicals Capitulate

The new Communist policy of parliamentary collaboration was very embarrassing to the Socialists, who were playing at intransigence. A "choice morsel" of this latest ministerial crisis was purveyed by Leon Blum in Le Populaire, June 11, in which he informs us of the proposals made by several Radical "friends": "Observe, Socialist delegates, how prudent and politically-minded your Communist comrades are. They limit themselves to voluntary agreements, to suggesting leaders, and enunciating general formulas. They refrain from presenting a detailed program and of elaborating any positive proposals precisely over which the voluntary (Continued on Page 4)

Eight-Page New Militant First Step to Daily Paper

By A. J. MUSTE
National Secretary of the W. P.

Two kinds of complaints about the New Militant come into the national office. Some comrades write to this effect: "The New Militant does not carry enough news about strikes and organizing campaigns. There are too few articles analyzing these practical class struggle activities and illustrating effective tactics which can be used in similar situations. We also need articles in simple language presenting the Marxist point of view on the Roosevelt program and contrasting it with our revolutionary solution of the problems confronting the American workers." Such comrades go on to say that both in the new unions and in the old, young militant workers are coming to the front who will constitute an important part of the developing revolutionary movement, although they still know very little about Marxist theory. Unless the New Militant contains plenty of material directly tied in with the experiences of these workers and adapted to their stage of development, it cannot be sold and is not read.

Other comrades write: "The New Militant does not contain enough theoretical material. Many important international developments occur and there is no comment or analysis, sometimes not even a passing reference to them. There is too little news and interpretation of events in the rival parties, no criticism of the false positions they are taking."

These comrades point out that the revolutionary party cannot be built simply out of new and as yet unpolitical elements, that we have to win to the W. P. the advanced workers who are already members or under the influence of other parties and that this can be done only if we are constantly demonstrating in our organ the superiority of our party's theoretical position. They argue likewise that unless we impart a solid education to our own members and give them directives and long range perspectives in their work they cannot carry on their practical work effectively either.

Interestingly enough, similar complaints come from sympathizers of the party. Some of them are interested in the W. P. primarily because they believe that it is based upon a correct Marxian program, because they have been convinced by our analysis of developments in the Soviet Union and in the international revolutionary movement. They look to us to provide them regularly with full information on these subjects. Other sympathizers have been attracted by the practical effectiveness of the party in great struggles such as have occurred in Toledo and Minneapolis and in the development of imposing mass organizations such as the National Unemployed League. They desire to get information about these matters and feel that they can "sell" the New Militant to their friends mainly on this basis.

Perkins Hunts Troops Smash Reds in Akron

Government "Survey" Trick to Avert New Strike

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio.—New and delicate problems confront the Workers Party and all class conscious elements in the rubber industry here as the department of justice began a secret investigation of "subversive" activities under orders of Francis Perkins, secretary of labor. This announcement aided conservatives in the General Tire Co. local of 1,000 to avert strike sentiment which had led the workers to vote by a 75 percent majority to walk out if the company didn't agree to negotiate on seniority.

The prime purpose of the federal investigation is to answer the question, "Is there a radical element in control of the A. F. of L. in Akron and Ohio which is acting independently of the national officers and the executive council," Miss Perkins admitted.

This latest move completes the offensive of the rubber barons to smash all progressive elements among the workers and enforce an open shop policy through terrorization.

The Government "Survey"

The government intimidation of the workers was first revealed in veiled hints by Hugh Friel, federal conciliator, when he spoke before the General workers, and he succeeded in temporarily frightening the union leaders.

Of course, when pressed for further explanation Friel attempted to add that a government survey of profits etc. was also part of the probe but this didn't fool anyone.

The fact remains, clearly and openly, that the federal government is taking overt steps to crush the growing influence of the revolutionary elements among the increasingly class-conscious workers.

Unfortunately, many rubber workers do not yet realize the insidious attack can seriously cripple the recovery of the betrayed unions through the possible damage to the only hope of the workers, the party and the progressives.

It scarcely needs to be added that the A. F. of L. bureaucrats will join hands with the government in this dangerous attack.

Troops Smash Illinois Strike

Captain Honors "Forgotten" Men by Tear Gassing Them

By LEIGHTON RIGBY

DIXON, Ill., June 18.—Aided by Henry Horner, smooth-tongued governor of Illinois, officials of the Stover Manufacturing and Engine company, of Freeport, Illinois, were able last Sunday to smash the strike which had kept the plant idle since May 7. Four companies of National Guardsmen, called to the Illinois city after rioting broke out last Friday, broke camp soon after the conference.

Although the 400 members of the International Molders and International Machinists unions had demanded restoration of two 10 percent pay cuts and the right to bargain collectively, picket lines have been withdrawn and 750 employees are back to work after gaining only a 5 percent wage boost. The unions waived their demand for a closed shop. The agreement on wages will be in effect until Sept. 1.

Following the conference, union officials jammed the agreement through to approval by the strikers at a meeting presided over by Chester Sample, vice-president of the International Molders Union. The workers, weary of pleading with grocers for credit during the six weeks without income, accepted the agreement half-heartedly.

Troops were dispatched to Freeport by Acting-Governor Thomas Donovan in response to a telephone call from Sheriff Aurand who stated his inability to control the situation. 200 guardsmen swooped down on the Stover plant.

Tricked Again

On at least two occasions during the strike, company officials announced their immediate intention to meet the strikers' demands. Pickets were disbanded only to find that they had been tricked into allowing scabs to ship out goods, unobserved by members of the unions. Last Friday, Sheriff Aurand and a band of deputized strike breakers attempted to enter the plant. They were blocked by 200 strikers and sympathizers. The sheriff himself fired the first tear gas projectile, aimed directly at the head of Charles Reedy, a union worker. A (Continued on Page 4)

500 in New York Pledge Support To C.S. Victims

Bitter Attacks of I.L.D. Fail to Shake Mini

Almost 500 workers and enemies of reaction attended the Mini Appeal Dinner held in New York City Wednesday night. A message to the Sacramento appellants pledging an unending fight for reversal of their sentences was unanimously adopted. The speakers of the evening included Murray Baron of the Socialist Party; A. J. Muste, Secretary of the Workers Party; Arnold Johnson of the National Unemployed League; John Chamberlain, literary critic of the New York Times; and Carlo Tresca, editor of Il Martello. Professor Sidney Hook of New York University presided. Announcement was made by Herbert Solow of the N.P.L.D. of progress made in the formation of a united defense committee, which now includes the W. P., S. P., N.P.L.D., N.U.L. League for Industrial Democracy and several other organizations. Words of greeting from labor organizations in various cities were hailed with cheers, as was a message from Norman Mini, Prisoner 57606 of San Quentin.

Steps have been taken here and in Chicago to launch a nationwide, broad, militant defense movement which can rescue the Sacramento case from oblivion and fight the infamous anti-labor verdicts. The I. L. D., which represents Mini's seven co-defendants, has deliberately failed to answer invitations to confer with the N.P.L.D. and the National Labor Committee of the Socialist Party on these steps. This week's Socialist Call will carry an interview with Murray Baron, one of the S. P. delegation to the temporary Sacramento appeal committee, in which he says that "the provocation offered by the I.L.D. in ignoring repeated appeals for a united defense will not be accepted; we will stay in this fight until the infamous horse-trade verdict of Sacramento has been set aside."

According to an announcement by Herbert Solow, who spent four months in Sacramento directing the N.P.L.D.'s work there, and who is acting secretary of the temporary national Sacramento appeal committee, a call for cooperation signed by the N.P.L.D., the Socialist Party (through its National Labor Committee representative), the W. P. and the League for Industrial Democracy (which aided the N.P.L.D.'s trial fight), has been sent to the Workers Circle, National Unemployed League, Workers Alliance (Continued on Page 4)

Woll Opens Drive on AFL Progressives

NEW YORK (FP).—The American Federation of Labor will expel local unions that admit Communists, according to an announcement in New York City by Matthew Woll, third vice-president of the A. F. of L., speaking for President William Green.

Local unions and even international ones that admit Communists may have their charters withdrawn, Woll stated. The statement was made in connection with the situation in the fur industry, where a movement is under way for amalgamation of the International Fur Workers Union, A. F. of L., and the left-wing independent Fur Workers Industrial Union. In this industry, the independent union, which has followed aggressive policies, controls the New York market. The A. F. of L. group was faced either with being a negligible factor in the New York market—the largest and most important in the industry—or of accepting the left-wing union's offer for a merger and controlling the industry. The recent Toronto convention of the I.F.W.U. authorized the amalgamation.

The statement's indication of similar action against all A. F. of L. affiliated bodies, however, was seen as the answer to the restlessness pervading the entire federation. The rapid growth of the A. F. of L. in the last few years has brought a new aggressiveness and a swift growth of rank and file sentiment which has expressed dissatisfaction with the leadership's policies, particularly in the steel, auto and rubber industries. It has been estimated that the coming A. F. of L. convention will have from 100 to 200 of such aggressive, left-wing delegates as compared with 15 in the last convention.

Sergei Trotsky Jailed By Stalin Bureaucrats

Students at Edinburgh Offer Trotsky Rectorship

June 7, 1935.
To the Students of Edinburgh University

Dear Sirs,
I am indebted to you for your so unexpected and flattering proposal: to put me up as a candidate for the rectorate of your university. The freedom from any nationalist considerations which you show is a great tribute to the spirit of the students of Edinburgh.

I appreciate your confidence all the more since you, as you yourselves say, are uninfluenced by the refusal of the British Government to grant me a visa. Nevertheless I do not feel that I have the right to accept your proposal. The elections to the rectorate, you write, are conducted on a NON-POLITICAL basis and your letter itself is signed by representatives of every political tendency. But I myself occupy too definite a political position; all my activity has been and remains devoted to the revolutionary liberation of the proletariat from the yoke of capital. I have no other right to responsible posts. I would therefore consider it a crime toward the working class and a disloyalty toward you to appear on no matter what public tribune not under the Bolshevik banner. You will find, I have no doubt, a candidate much more in conformity with the traditions of your University.

I wish you with all my heart the greatest success in your work.

Sincerely yours,
—L. TROTSKY.

Deploy Militia in Omaha Strike

Fire at Pickets and Public but Morale Holds Strong

By PAT MURPHY

DAVENPORT, Iowa, June 21.—The militia took over Omaha Sunday, June 18. The state's entire military forces converged on the city fully equipped to intimidate the strikers of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Railway Company who walked out on April 20 when their demands for higher wages, shorter hours and full recognition of their union was refused. The troops are under the command of General Paul who is an old hand at beating down the workers. He boasts that in 1922 he helped beat down the strikers in Nebraska City, Nebraska when the packing house workers were on strike.

June 15 the police department turned their riot guns on a crowd of strikers and sympathizers at 24th and L streets. Rioters fell at each blast. One was killed and 50 wounded. Among the injured were several women. A check of the injured disclosed that 30 were suffering from gunshot wounds and the remainder hurt when clubbed by police. Later Saturday night the police opened fire on another crowd at 35th and K Streets. During the rioting six cars were burned and several overturned. Several hundred spectators, gathered at a tram company depot on the outskirts of South Omaha, were dispersed by police and guardsmen.

The strikers and the company were ordered, by Governor Cochran of Nebraska, to arbitrate. The strikers are willing, and appeared at the designated hour with their arbitrators. But the company refused. In Council Bluffs no cars have left the barn since the strike was called. The strikers in Omaha and Council Bluffs have the sympathy and support of the citizens. Little patronage has fallen to street cars since the strike began.

The morale of the strikers is holding strong. They are determined to win their rights to organize.

WHY WE SKIPPED THE LAST ISSUE

The press of work and the consequent lack of forces occasioned by the recent plenary session of the National Committee of the W. P. compelled us to skip the last issue of the New Militant. The primary cause, however, was the sudden illness of the editor.

AN ACT OF VENGEANCE

Mother Asks for Investigation of Latest Series of Persecutions

By NATHALIE I. TROTSKY

Recently rumors have circulated widely among comrades to the effect that this time Stalin has chosen our youngest son Sergei as the object of his vengeance.

Friends keep asking us: is this really true? Yes, it is true: Sergei was arrested at the very beginning of this year.

If at first one could hope that the arrest was accidental, that in a day or two he would be freed, it is clear now that the jailers have far more serious designs. Since many of the comrades are deeply concerned by the new blow struck at our family it would possibly be best if I stated the entire case in a letter intended for general information.

Never in Politics

Sergei was born in 1908. At the outbreak of the October revolution he was a nine year old boy. He grew up in the Kromlin. In families whose elder members are absorbed by politics the younger ones are often repelled thereby. Such was also our case. Sergei never occupied himself with political questions; he was not even a member of the Communist Youth (Komsomol).

In his schooldays he was absorbed in sport, the circus, and he became an accomplished athlete. In the university he concentrated on mathematics and mechanics. As an engineer he received a professorship in one of the higher technical schools and in the last couple of years he carried on there an extensive pedagogical activity. With two other colleagues he published recently a special work entitled: "Light Gas Generators of Automobile-Tractor Type." The book published by the Scientific Automobile Tractor Institute was warmly received by the most outstanding specialists in the field.

During the last week the mill owners have mobilized an army of strikebreakers, thugs, police and National Guard in an attempt to open the mills at any cost.

In Tacoma, Wash. six mills were reopened on Monday after militia had dispersed large crowds of strikers and sympathizers, as many as two thousand at one time, at the point of bayonets. The same methods are planned in Portland, Ore., where seven mills are to be opened on Wednesday.

The strike is led by a committee as a subsidiary section of the Brotherhood of Carpenters. So far the men have resisted all attempts to put over empty "arbitration" settlements and to break the backbone of the strike by settling one plant at a time.

What Will the Army Do?
Tuesday the more or less barefaced declaration of the governors and the employers of the three states provoked the union leaders into demanding the intervention of federal troops.

While federal mercenary troops might be better behaved than the inexperienced militia, they will just as decidedly take the cause of the employers. The history of federal interventions, beginning with the great railroad strike in the last century is a sad one for labor. The appeal for federal intervention shows a decided weakness in the leaders.

The strikers demand a thirty-hour week, seventy-five cents an hour and union recognition.

The magnificent traditions of the lumber workers, who engaged in many stubborn labor battles in the days of the old I.W.W. point the way to the lumber workers in their struggle today.

Don't depend on troops, fight it out on the picket line.

TWO KILLED IN SOUTH CAROLINA MILL STRIKE

UNION, S. C. (FP).—Supt. T. M. McNeil of the Monarch textile mill in Union has been charged with being an accessory before the fact in the killing of two men during a strike at the plant. Witnesses disagree on who murdered the men—one a constable, the other a foreman—but a special mill police officer and the son of the slain foreman have been arrested.

The trouble occurred during the first day of strike at the mill, after members of the United Textile Workers of America had objected to the hiring of a non-union worker. Gov. Johnston of South Carolina has come to Union to attempt to work out a settlement.

ALBANY, N. Y. (FP).—Fatal industrial accidents reported to the New York state department of labor during May totaled 127. This is six more than in April and 27 than in May, 1934.

Is it possible to conceive that under the influence of events my son became involved recently in opposition activity? I would be happy for his sake if I could think so because then Sergei could bear up much easier under the blow that has been dealt him. But such a supposition must be considered absolutely out of the question. From various sources we knew that Sergei was just as much removed from politics in recent years as before. I personally had no need even of these testimonials as I know only too well his psychological make-up (Continued on Page 2)

Death of Blue Eagle...

Besides declaring the NRA unconstitutional, the Supreme Court in the past 25 years has had to decide on the following momentous issues: the regulation of Chinese laundries, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, unripe lemons, kosher meat and boric acid; the size of a loaf of bread in Chicago; chain store profits, regulation of chiropractors, junk dealers, New Orleans prostitutes, Greek letter fraternities, ticket scalping in New York and oyster planting and bird-shooting by aliens. . . . "It breaks my heart to see what has been done to the NRA," sobbed General Hugh Johnson. . . . Garment workers at the Hupp Brothers factory at Macon, Ga., must pay back in small installments the wage increase granted under the NRA. . . . When the NRA became operative in 1933 the following conditions prevailed on the basis of a score of 100 per cent in 1926: factory production 84, employment 78, wages 89. When the NRA stopped the following conditions prevailed: factory production 84, employment 81 and wages 68. Practically all the increase was due to the spending of government relief money. . . . Delivering what he termed "the greatest speech in history" and which lasted 15 hours, Huey Long failed to prevent the passage of the new NRA bill. Among the topics discussed were: cheese dressing for head lettuce, himself, grave robbing, cheaper coffins, share-the-wealth, pot-luker, James A. Farley, mixing drinks and how to fry oysters. . . .

Advice to Graduates...

"I am one who does not believe that some soft-handed fatted down in Washington can run my husband's business," roared Mrs. George B. Simmons, wife of a Missouri farmer, at the "grass root" conference of the G.O.P. No substitute platform was adopted because all farmers present were drawing AAA benefits. . . . A recent study by the Brookings Institute states: "Neither results nor promise of the AAA program justify indefinite continuation of the experiment." The study further states that wheat prices increased because of the drought, the influence of the tariff and to some extent by dollar depreciation. . . .

Cops...

In the recent strike disorders in Omaha, General J. J. Paul substituted "stinking gas" and "knock-out gas" for tear gas which he termed "ineffective." A man was killed and several women injured when "knockout gas" was hurled into a group of bystanders. . . . Passaic, N. J. police must attend church every Sunday and take a Monday quiz on the service. . . . Twenty persons were injured by shotgun slugs, schoolchildren were gassed, as cops and company thugs charged a picketline at the Canton, Ohio, Tin Plate Co. . . . "The government attempts to meddle too much with business. I'll make a million cars next year if they just let the police run the country. And I don't mean the Federal police, I mean the local police," says Henry Ford as the 2,000,000th V8 is run off the assembly line. . . .

Agricultural Adjustment

Herbert Hoover at the Stanford commencement tells about bosses: "Both in the stalls of manual labor and professional work, I missed the discovery that I was a wage slave. I at least had the feeling that it was my option that if I did not like a particular profit taker I could find another one somewhere. I found then a cheery and helpful lot of folk who took an enormous interest in helping young people get a start. And you will find that is the case today." . . . Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia explains the class struggle: "The perfectly baseless notion that society is organized into fixed, definite and mutually antagonistic classes, each of which should be intent upon putting barriers and limitations upon others is in large responsible for the prevailing immorality and unreasonableness which, unless quickly conquered and rejected, will end by destroying all incentive to human effort to reach the highest type of accomplishment and service." . . . President S. Jarrett of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, from which Granville Hicks was recently discharged because of his radical ideas, clarifies the meaning of academic freedom: "We have recently been attacked on the ground that we have stifled academic freedom and abridged free speech. You all know the charge is false. We adhere to an unwritten regulation of long standing that there shall be excluded from all classrooms all controversial discussion about politics, sociology, etc. We cannot permit the excessive academic freedom which must be stigmatized as academic license." . . .

Letters to the Editor

Furrier Hails Unity Achieved in Union;
Tells of Progressive's Role

Editor, New Militant:

After many attempts and after ten years of suffering we have finally succeeded in creating one Furriers' union and in putting a stop to the seemingly interminable inner struggle which has had no equal in the history of the New York trade unions.

After many preliminary meetings the question of one union in the furriers' trade was discussed at the Cooper Union meeting of June 12. This meeting will undoubtedly remain, and will be referred to, as one of the most outstanding events in the history of inner labor troubles. Thousands of furriers, members of both unions, filled the hall to capacity. After a long discussion on the floor, in which many members as well as the leaders of the Industrial Union actively participated, the proposals for creating one strong union, made by the "Committee of Seven" which was elected at the last convention of the Furriers' International, was unanimously adopted and acclaimed with great enthusiasm.

The long inner struggle of the furriers should be of great interest to all organized labor, especially to the workers in the needle trades. Almost all the energy of the workers was exhausted in the needless struggle to fight one another. Due to the false tactics of the furriers' leaders, the bosses had a good chance to undermine conditions in the trade, bringing them down to the lowest possible level.

Conditions Degraded

It has long been clear to every class-conscious furrier that the only solution and remedy for his troubles is one strong union. During the time when the two unions existed, conditions in the trade went from bad to worse. The workers, having lost confidence in their leaders, lost one position after another. Big shops were subdivided into smaller units with the result that the workers suffered the consequences of lower wages and long hours. Contracting was at its height. As a result of their practice of giving out work to the contractors, the workers in many instances lost their jobs altogether. Over time work was established in practically all shops and all agreements as to the scale of wages were universally violated. In fact, there was no scale of wages.

At this moment, at the threshold of unity, it is worth while referring to the inhuman conditions of the past so that we may correct our wrongs and learn our lesson from past experience, and so that the miserable conditions under which we have labored may never see the light again.

There is no doubt that the reactionary leaders of the A. F. of L. were greatly responsible for the inhuman conditions that prevailed in the trade. They ruled with an iron fist. Every leading member who was honestly and sincerely interested in helping to build one strong union for the interests of the workers, and who dared to speak his mind, and criticize the leadership with its false tactics and methods, was immediately expelled from the union, ruthlessly persecuted and deprived of all means of earning a livelihood.

The Role of the Stalinists

On the other side of the picture, the official leaders of the left wing (Stalinists) and their contradictory and inconsistent tactics brought about by their desire to create at all costs and under all circumstances "revolutionary" unions, were no less responsible for the split of the workers. Is it not a known fact that any union which was not a part of the "Red Trade Union International" was considered a fascist organization? Who cannot recall the so-called "third period" when the aim was to split the membership of the A. F. of L. Thus the topsy-turvy politics of the Stalinists accelerated the split of organized labor and helped the reactionary leaders of the A. F. of L. to rid it of the most militant elements in their unions. Indeed, the purpose of such policies was more to serve the bureaucratic interests of the Stalin group than to serve the interests of the workers in their trades. However, the change of the C. P. line, in regard to trade unionism, to disband its red revolutionary unions and to join the A. F. of L., which became on a moment's notice, the law of the Communist Party, changed the attitude of the furriers' "left" leaders and truly revealed the character of the C. P.

It is a known fact that the "left opposition" (Trotskyists) and later the "Workers Party of U.S.," which has been advocating unity on the basis of democratic rights in the A. F. of L., long before the Stalinists changed their policy to dissolve the "T.U.U.L." was regarded as counter-revolutionist and as treacherous to the working class. Progressive elements in the furriers, took a similar position as that of the W. P. despite the torrent of abuse hurled at them by the Stalinist bureaucracy.

Struggle of Progressives

Thus, the Industrial Union which came into existence because of its opposition to the bureaucratic methods of the A. F. of L. later on resorted to the same bureaucratic tactics and ruthlessly persecuted every worker whose opinion was out of line with the policies of the leadership of the Industrial Union. Fortunately, however, a group of rank and file workers of the Industrial Union, which came to life in opposition to the bureaucratic methods of their leaders who ruled in disguise under the name of Communism, pushed a fight for democratic rights in the union, and for unity. Now, when one union has become a reality, we must not forget that credit must be given to the progressive members of the International, especially those from the Toronto local whose honest leadership truthfully served the interests of the workers, by fighting out at their last convention in Toronto the principle which paved the way and laid the basis for unity.

It is high time now that we discard the old and familiar methods and arrive at the convention that the way for American workers to free themselves from exploitation is not to follow the past footprints of the official leadership—right and "left"—the result of which was to split the ranks of the workers, but to march forward, all united in one great union.

—J. KAMINITSKY.

Sacramento Case and Agricultural Union

The Editors have received a copy of the following letter, which The Nation has not yet seen fit to print. We give it space because of our comrade Norman Mini's inability to deal properly with such questions from inside prison walls.

April 30, 1935.

To the Editors of The Nation: In recent issues of your magazine, Norman Mini and Caroline Decker, former active leaders of the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union, expressed differing views as to the responsibility for the collapse of the Union. Mini attributed the collapse to the policies of the Communist Party which led the Union; Decker, in answer to Mini's article and in defense of the Communist Party, tried to show that the workers have not suffered a defeat, and this last in the face of the fact that the Union has been wrecked, which she does not deny.

Being that Mini, as well as Decker, is now in San Quentin serving a term for "criminal syndicalism" and cannot lay his hands on a document which casts a glaring light upon Decker's defense of the Communist Party, I take it upon myself to defend him against the impeachment of some of his statements.

On December 18 Caroline Decker wrote: "I'm not prepared to say that the criminal neglect of the Union by the D. C. was 'oppositional.'" She, like all the other active unionists, knew that the District Committee of the Communist Party had wrecked the Union. . . . the only problem being, was it by neglect, opposition, disruption, wrong trade union policies, or whatnot.

Not long ago I published a poem in the New Masses dedicated to Caroline Decker. I am not without hope that some day the courage I praised in that poem will return to her and she will say openly what she still believes: that the policies of the Communist Party wrecked the Union and all helped to build, and that it bears no small share of the responsibility for the fact that she, Mini and six others are now in state prisons.

Sincerely,
PAUL COURTNEY.

Criticizes Article on Franco-Soviet Pact

To the Editor:

The "Open Letter To The World Proletariat," featured in the June 8 issue of the "New Militant," furnishes the reader with ample evidence that Lenin has not lived in vain. The letter carries in the opening paragraph a statement, however, that must be termed an irresponsible assertion, to say the least. The second sentence reads: "Today there is not a single worker, even the most politically backward, who is unaware that the Soviet bureaucrats have just publicly, decisively betrayed the international proletariat." This statement is so entirely out of harmony with the letter as a whole that the reader has just reason to think it originated with an ambitious but ill-advised translator.

If this statement were true, the Stalinist parties would immediately lose all of its members save possibly those put there by Stalin himself. The facts are that the spokesmen for the Soviet bureaucracy hail the Stalin-Laval pact as a great victory for the Soviet Union directly, and indirectly a victory for the international proletariat. And accepting the creed of "Stalin Infallibility" the members and sympathizers of the Stalinist parties, in true Catholic fashion, embrace as valid everything that Moscow has put its stamp of approval upon. And yet, members of the C. P., be they American or French, are not "the most politically backward," for they are at least convinced of the fact that society is divided into classes and that a struggle is raging between these classes. If these workers were not class conscious, their revolutionary illiteracy notwithstanding, they would not be members of the C. P. or any other party having for its aim the overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

Now, let us proceed one step further: if hundreds of thousands of class-conscious workers fail to see in the latest Stalin maneuver a betrayal of the international proletariat, how are we to look upon this statement as applied to the non-class-conscious workers numbering millions? How many workers are there in these supposedly enlightened United States who have never as much as heard of the Stalin-Laval pact? How many more are there whose knowledge of this infamous betrayal is limited to a vague memory of having seen something about it in the headlines of an ordinary capitalist newspaper? Their numbers are great!

Our tactics in the class struggle vary to suit a given condition. A false evaluation of conditions as they really are leads to incorrect tactics. If we were to take the statement referred to above seriously, we would at the same time be compelled to take measures that in idiosyncrasy would outstrip the worst brainstorms of the Stalinists during the so-called "third period."

The Open Letter, as a whole, is a masterly analysis of the Stalinist degeneracy, and it would be better still if the statement in question were stricken out altogether.

The Manager's Corner

Full Steam Ahead Now in Drive for Eight-Page New Militant!

Our campaign for the eight-page weekly New Militant suffered a serious delay due to the plenary meeting of the party National Committee which was held in New York last week. This was unfortunate but it was unavoidable. More regrettable yet is the fact that because of the same reasons we were compelled to skip last week's issue. However, skipping on such occasions is the rare exception, not the rule, and insofar as the campaign is concerned we suggest that it be taken up with redoubled energy and with redoubled speed.

During this intervening fortnight we have received the following contributions toward the eight-page weekly:

L. Berg, New York City	3.00
A. Konikow, Boston	25.00
S. Harrison, N. Y. C.	5.00
H. Gund, N. Y. C.	1.00
W. J. R. California	2.00
Flatbush Branch, N. Y. C.	13.00
Katherine Smith, N.Y.C.	5.00
Total	$54.00

This is a very small beginning but with the interference accounted for it is understandable. There was a certain delay in forwarding the material necessary to go ahead with the work. Now this is in the hands of all the party branches and similar material will be forwarded to our numerous friendly contacts. Nobody will be left out of consideration. Everybody is invited to help put the campaign for the eight-page weekly over the top before August first.

Previously we suggested the various ways in which help can be given. First of all is the matter of a cash contribution. Secondly, a new subscription to the eight-page weekly will be similarly appreciated and incidentally it will help to extend our circulation. If the method of club subscription cards at the three months reduced rate is preferred $1.50 forwarded will secure four such cards. Thirdly, where subscriptions prove too difficult to obtain solicit greetings at 25c per name to the first eight-page issue. Fourthly, those who are ready to pledge a certain monthly contribution to maintain the security fund please forward their name and address with the monthly amount indicated.

The delay that already occurred imposes the necessity of more speed in the carrying on of the campaign. Let us have your response right away. Watch next week's issue for rules of contests and prizes in this campaign!

The club card system has been made effective use of by the New Militant builders during the last two weeks. The Minneapolis branch topped the list with 20 club subscriptions. Rose Cassano from Chicago secured 8. J. Gregory, Chicago, secured 4; Cyrus Rigby, Utica, N. Y., 4; Larry Cohen, New York, 4; Freda Charles, New York, 4; Leon Goodman, Philadelphia, 4; and Davenport Branch, 4. This makes a total of 52 club subscriptions.

Force Yipsels Resign Posts

Alex Retskin, City Organizer, and Ruth Oxman, City Secretary, of the New York Y.P.S.L. have resigned their posts under pressure for signing a Left wing statement. No sooner had the four-page mimeographed statement been distributed than the fourteen signatories, all leading Yipsels, were taken to task by Norman Thomas. In both the New Leader and the Socialist Call the young comrades were condemned as "romantic insurrectionists."

The ostensible reason for issuing the Left declaration is to present the views of revolutionary socialism to the Yipsels in preparation for their national convention to be held next month. The signers who it appears, have not worked as an organized group, either for any time before the appearance of the statement or since, call for the building of the Y.P.S.L. "into a revolutionary organization based on revolutionary principles."

The Proposed Program

They propose a program of revolutionary socialism. These principles are a statement of the general Communist position on the state, dictatorship of the proletariat, workers' councils, armed insurrection, reformism and the vanguard party. The declaration is therefore extremely abstract, leaving aside the question of an attitude toward the factions in the Socialist Party and Y.P.S.L., a position towards the Internationals, a position on the Soviet Union, attitude towards other workers' parties, war, fascism and the immediate problems of the working class. Likewise the specific role of the Y.P.S.L. is glossed over.

These omissions can be explained on two grounds: first the desire to "begin with the fundamentals" and second, and in all likelihood the more important, there is no agreement among the signatories on these questions. Most of them are associated with the New York "Militants." Others have been members of the Revolutionary Policy Committee.

"Militants" Embarrassed

The statement has embarrassed the leaders of the "Militants." Issued without consultation with the caucus it puts clearly before the leaders the task of accepting a clear position on the problem of the road to power. Nothing is more distasteful to the "Militant" leaders than the adoption of an unambiguous position on this question since it would lead to further separation both from the left or the right.

The task of the young Socialists who accept the "principles of revolutionary socialism" is to further clarify their position regarding the concrete application of revolutionary principles in the present epoch and involve the membership in the discussion. Clarity on all the fundamental questions of the revolution is the indispensable prerequisite for revolutionary action.

K.C. Battery Workers Strike

KANSAS CITY, June 18.—Two weeks after union organization began in the plant of the National Battery plant here the summary firing of 11 of the most active union men forced the issue of a strike. About half the plant including the major part of the production staff walked out at the call of the A. F. of L. United Auto Workers Union. The spirit of the strikers was high and the men remaining in the plant were sympathetic.

An injunction was issued against the pickets on a trumped up "dynamiting threat" charge. Martens, President of the local, backed down, failed to support the strike, called off the pickets with a statement that he was "acting like a gentleman."

His "gentlemanly" tactics rapidly discredited Martens with the strikers, who are determined to stay out and eager to fight the issue on the picket line. A progressive group is getting under way, planning to put pressure on Martens, contact other organizations in the city, and set up a mass picket line. If the proper steps are taken the strike runs a good chance, as the busy season begins in July.

The National Battery Co. has plants all over the U. S., the largest in St. Paul, Chicago Heights, and New York. Attempts will be made to contact the workers in the other plants. A protest to the government, one of the largest customers of the company, is contemplated.

Sergei Trotsky Imprisoned By Stalinist Bureaucrats

and his intellectual bent.

An Act of Vengeance

Why, even the authorities, from Stalin down, were well aware of it: Sergei, I repeat, grew up in the Kremlin, Stalin's son was a frequent visitor in the boy's room; the G.P.U. and the university authorities kept a redoubled watch over him first as a student, secondly as a young professor. He was arrested not for any sort of opposition activity (which did not exist and under all circumstances could not exist) but exclusively as the son of L. D. with the aim of wreaking vengeance upon the family. This is the only explanation possible.

All comrades remember the attempt of the G.P.U. to link up the name of L. D. with the Kiroff assassination: the Latvian consul who gave money for the terrorist act offered at the same time to the terrorists to transmit a letter from them to Trotsky. This whole scheme, however, fell through and served only to compromise the organizers of the trial.

A New Amalgam

But precisely because of it we repeated frequently in our family circle after the trial: "They will not stop at this, they will have to prepare some new case to cover up the failure of the amalgam with the consul." The same thought was also expressed by L. D. in his articles in the Russian Bulletin.

The only thing that we did not know was the method the G.P.U. will choose this time. But now there can not be even a shadow of a doubt. By arresting the absolutely innocent Sergei and by keeping him in jail for months Stalin clearly and indubitably pursues the aim of creating a new "amalgam."

For this purpose he must force from Sergei some sort of suitable confession, even if only a "renunciation" of his father. I will not speak of the methods by which Stalin obtains the confessions he requires. I have no information on this score. But all the circumstances speak for themselves. . . .

An International Committee

It would be very simple to verify the facts stated in this letter. It would be sufficient, for instance, to establish an international committee consisting of authoritative and sincere individuals, of course, well-established friends of the U.S.S.R. Such a committee would have to examine into all repressions in connection with the Kirov assassination, among other things it would throw the necessary light also on the case of our son Sergei.

This suggestion has nothing exceptional or unacceptable. When the Social Revolutionaries, the organizers of attempts on the lives of Lenin and Trotsky were being tried in 1922, the Central Committee under the leadership of Lenin and Trotsky afforded Vandervelde, Kurt Rosenfeld and other adversaries of the Soviet government the right to participate in the trial as defenders of the accused terrorists. This was done precisely in order to dispel in the mind of the international proletariat any doubts as to the fairness of the trial.

Could not Kiroff, Kolland, Charles Gide, Bernard Shaw and other friends of the Soviet Union assume the initiative to establish such a committee in agreement with the Soviet government? This would be the best method of checking on the accusations and the suspicious widely spread in the working masses.

The Soviet bureaucracy cannot place itself above the public opinion of the international working class. As regards the interests of the workers' state, a serious verification of its actions could only serve to its advantage. I, for one, would submit to such an authoritative committee all necessary information and documents concerning my son.

This letter of mine is therefore a direct appeal to working class organizations and friends of the U.S.S.R. abroad, not to interested attorneys of the Soviet bureaucracy, of course, but to sincere and independent friends of the October revolution.

If after prolonged hesitation, I raise openly the question of Sergei it is not only because he happens to be my son. This reason would be more than sufficient for a mother but insufficient to arouse political initiative. But the case of Sergei represents a clear, simple and indisputable case of conscious and criminal self-will, a case which can be very easily verified: the bureaucratic upper-crust crushes and torments a highly qualified Soviet worker who is known to be loyal and absolutely innocent—only in order to satisfy the base instincts of revenge without any political justification: for is it not absolutely obvious that physical suffering inflicted on the son could have no influence whatever on the direction of the political activity of the father, an activity to which Sergei was never in any way related?

That is why I permit myself to think that the case of my son deserves public attention. At any rate, whoever wants to act must act immediately, because given silence and impunity the vengeful acts of Stalin may soon assume an irretrievable character.

1,087 Vote for Bolshevik-Leninists in Paris S. P. District

Preliminary results of the voting in the provinces for delegates to the Congress were as follows: MOROCCO—

Out of a total of 301 voting at the federal congress on May 30, the motion of the Bolshevik-Leninist group received 185 votes as against 117 for the motion of the Bataille Socialiste. 10 mandates from Morocco will be cast for the B.L.G. motion at Mulhouse.

MARNE—

Out of 700 votes cast at the Congress at Verus the B.L.G. motion received 120 votes, thus giving them 5 mandates.

FINISTRE—

Thanks to the work of Comrade Behel one-fourth of the Carhaix section voted for the Bolshevik-Leninists. The work had been carried on for scarcely a month.

RIEON—

15 percent of the votes were won by the B.L.G., thus giving them nine national mandates.

VAUCLUSE—

The Avignon section gave one national mandate to the B.L.G.

TARNE-ET-GARONNE—
The B.L.G. gained three mandates as against four for the Bataille Socialiste, and at YONNE—

Two mandates were received by the Bolshevik-Leninists.

Just before going to press we received the information relating to the results of the second ballot taken at the Federal Congress of the Seine District. In this vote the Bolshevik-Leninists of France received 1,073 votes for their motion, over a fifth of all the votes. Three delegates, Balay, Molinier and Naville were elected to the Mulhouse Congress.

The main point on the agenda of the Federal Congress of the Seine district, on the eve of the National Conference of the S.F.I.O. (Socialist Party of France) at Mulhouse (June 9) was the "Struggle against the Crisis and the Seizure of Power."

The division of the votes on the first ballot was as follows: Bataille Socialiste resolution (the left-Centrist group, who have the majority in the Seine district—2,581 votes; Lebas-Severac resolution—1,366 (the leadership of the party); Resolution of the Bolshevik-Leninists—805.

Action Socialiste resolution—125. Constructive Revolution resolution—132.

Abstentions—445.

The resolution presented by the Bolshevik-Leninists has already been printed in the New Militant. And it need only be added that the speeches of the Trotskyists in defense of their positions were in sharp contrast to the vague "leftism" of the other delegates, without a shade of the false optimism which pervaded the "leadership" as a consequence of the latest municipal elections.

We reprint below a summary of a report of the Congress, from the May 25 issue of La Verite (organ of the Bolshevik-Leninist group in the S.F.I.O.):

The Bolshevik-Leninist Position
In his speech Comrade Molinier stressed the only possible revolutionary concrete measures which must be undertaken by those who really want to take to the road of revolution. He aimed his attack at the motion of the Bataille Socialiste which speaks of the seizure of power without recognizing the need of the general strike or of creating the embryonic organizations of the workers' state (the Mass Committees). Also, the latter motion lists some excellent prescriptions for the struggle, such as general armament without so much as hinting at the actual and concrete link toward that end: the workers' militia.

Comrade Gerard followed by emphasizing the typical contradictions of centrism which pervaded the motions presented.

It was quite in the nature of things that the motion of the Bataille Socialiste could have as its signatories at one and the same time those who were the partisans and those who were the opponents of direct revolutionary action. This motion, said Comrade Gerard, was a colored screen, on which anyone could project his own particular color.

Comrade Naville devoted himself to the exposition of the concrete implications of the seizure of power, linking it up with the actual situation (the Flandin government, the state of the party and of the working class). He pointed out that the policies of the leadership of the party were incompatible with a real struggle for power.

Speaking of parliamentary illusions, Naville took as an example, supporting it by facts, the experience in Italy. The Italian Socialist party despite its considerable electoral successes was none the less annihilated by Fascism, which was weakest in the electoral field. His speech created a profound impression.

The experience in Belgium had dealt a serious blow to the supporters of de Man. So that, tired whom

First Battalion of Workers Militia Marches in France

On June 19, a monster demonstration took place in Paris. In commemoration of the Commune, some 250,000 workers paraded and demonstrated before the Mar de Federes, at the Pere Lachaise cemetery.

The demonstration took place, so to speak, under the sign of the Stalin-Javal Communique. As reported in L'Humanite and the Pravda practically the entire demonstration was devoted to expressions of love to Stalin. What neither the L'Humanite, nor the Pravda dared to report was that thousands upon thousands of workers, the left wing of the S.F.I.O., syndicalists, anarchoists, Doriotists, and, of course, the Bolshevik-Leninists expressed themselves in no unmistakable way about the "great Leader's" consummate betrayal. This time the import of the "leader of the world revolution" was all too clear. And such slogans as "Down with National Defense!" "Civil Peace is War!" "Down with the renegade Stalin!" "Stalin sac au dos!" (Kick Stalin out!) plentifully punctuated the line of march.

By no means the least, vociferous, was the detachment of the first workers' militia, 300 strong that participated in the demonstration, carrying on high its own proletarian version of the Mosaic code: "For one eye, both eyes, for one tooth, the whole jaw."

This first detachment comes as the result of the vigorous propaganda and work of the Young Leninists, who formed the initial nucleus of the present detachment.

The beginning is always the most difficult. Having achieved the first step, it will be much easier now to build and drill subsequent detachments. Other iron detachments will come on the morrow.

spoke in the name of Constructive Revolution was compelled to dissociate himself from the traitors in the P.O.B. (Belgian Labor Party).

He exposed the true depths of the reactionary nature of his tendency by condemning as wild-eyed romanticism all the formulations relating to the arming of the workers.

The Centrist Verbiage
Zyromski took the floor as the spokesman for the motion of his tendency, the Bataille Socialiste.

He began by stating that very rarely he had found himself in so complete and close agreement with a motion. There is no doubt of it. The motion of the Bataille is the best possible specimen of centrism. It faces on the one side toward reformism and on the other towards revolutionary ideas. It deals with reformism in the vaguest and most cautious manner possible, clothing itself with the vaguest formulations, and then deals a blow straight at the heart of revolutionary ideas. It is in essence a collection of phrases that blinds those voting for it to nothing.

La Verite, in commenting on Zyromski's speech, observes that after listening to Zyromski speak so much about "revolutionary force" it could not but recall Pivert's criticism (which had appeared in the La Verite in a previous issue, as an answer to an open letter to him) of those who bubble in general about arming, without envisaging the actual, concrete link in the Platform of the Bolshevik-Leninist Group in French S.P.

1. Pious struggle against the ideas and methods of reformism, a complete and final break with the advocates of collaboration with bourgeois parties (Neos, Gradualists, etc.) in France and throughout the world. The struggle against reformism does not exclude, but demands the struggle for reforms. The reformists who stand on bourgeois legality betray the struggle for reforms. Condemnation of the method of the German Social-Democracy, "The Lesser Evil," which led to the worst possible evil, Fascism.

The Struggle for Power
2. Necessity of revolutionary struggle for power, of armed insurrection for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, as the only method of transforming capitalist society into socialist society.

The struggle against bourgeois democracy does not exclude but demands the struggle for the defense and extension of workers' rights in the democratic period. This struggle becomes all the more pressing as against the various forms of the dictatorship of finance capital (Fascism, Bonapartism, etc.).

Condemnation of the method of Austrian Social-Democracy in attempting to gain 51 percent of the electorate, a method of passivity and gradualism which can only lead to defeat.

Recognition of the soviet of workers, peasants, and soldiers as the form of the dictatorship of the proletariat: a form historically established by the experiences of the Russian revolution of 1905 and the revolutions at the close of the war.

3. Recognition of the international, and by the same token the permanent, character of the proletarian revolution, corresponding to the imperialist nature of the present epoch of capitalism. Condemnation of all deviations of a nationalist character in the policy of the proletariat ("France is not Germany or Italy")—"We love our country," etc.)

Revolutionary Defense
4. Intransigent opposition to national defense under a capitalist regime. Recognition of revolutionary defense as the only consistent proletarian policy. Denunciation and complete break with hypocritical and false social-pacifism as well as social-patriotism. The necessity of systematically pointing out to the workers that without the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, no international tribunal, no conference on the reduction of armaments, no "democratic" reorganization of the League of Nations, will save humanity from imperialism.

5. Revolutionary defense against imperialism and against internal counter-revolution in the Soviet Union, which remains a proletarian state because of its social basis and the predominant form of property.

Necessity of mercilessly unmasking the false methods of the Soviet bureaucracy and especially its foreign policy. The utilization, for the defense of the U.S.S.R., of the contradictions between the various imperialist states must not in any case mean capitulation before the bourgeoisie of the proletariat of an imperialist state temporarily allied with the Soviet Union.

Illegal Work
7. The revolutionary struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat demands secret, systematic and persevering propaganda in the army.

8. Necessity of supporting, not in words but in deeds, every movement for emancipation among colonial peoples or oppressed nationalities up to and including the right of these peoples to secede from the mother country. The right to self-determination of the peoples of Alsace-Lorraine, including the right of secession from France if they wish.

Systematic propaganda among the French workers against all national and anti-foreign sentiment.

total lack of understanding of the situation in a single phrase which threw the assembly into convulsions. "Haven't we still got plenty of liberties?" asked Severac. Severac can only propose to "continue" and wait. Carry on propaganda. Undoubtedly Severac prefers the sanatorium to the concentration camp, but if he is permitted to "continue," it will be the concentration camp. Nevertheless, contrary to what occurred during the last Federal Congress of the Seine District, the impression was obviously conveyed that Severac this time did not rush to attack the vague motion of the Bataille, which smacks of the Toulouse self-defense motion which Severac had himself voted for. It was against the concrete proposals and methods which find expression only in the motion of the Trotskyists that Severac aimed his fire. Severac's attitude once again testifies to the fact that two policies are confronting one another, one the policy of catastrophe and pacifism, the other, the policy of the Bolshevik-Leninists, the policy of revolution. The motion of the Bataille Socialiste seeks to balance itself in the middle; it is only a screen being erected to cover up the gulf between reformism and revolution.

Pivert on the Tightrope
Pivert provided the "surprise" of the conference. He did nothing more or less than defend the Bataille motion by means of the slogans in the motion of the Trotskyists. It was with considerable astonishment that those who applauded Pivert during his speech heard as his conclusion, that he was supporting the Bataille Socialiste motion. After everything he had said and written to the contrary: after he had written and stated that he for one wanted a concrete and actual motion, that it was necessary to tie up the seizure of power with the war (against national defense); that one must not throw phrases about arming in general, but build the real link in the chain: the workers' militia—after all this, and more, Pivert signed and proclaimed his adherence to the motion which is in flat contradiction to what he has said and written, and he refused to vote for that resolution which was fully in accord with his expressed ideas. . . .

In other words, one advocates the concrete road of revolution, but while waiting, one takes to the road that runs half-way and in between. This attitude on Pivert's part is all the more damnable because it serves to screen from the eyes of the workers the real problems facing them.

Abusing a Good Example
2. Duclos comes next. He reminds us that when the hangman Kornilov waged his offensive, Lenin practiced the tactic towards the Kerensky government, not of supporting the latter but directing all forces against the main enemy.

We popularized this example during the Red Plebiscite and throughout the entire course of events in Germany: at that time the German Communist Party, instead of conducting against Hitler the tactic of Lenin against Kornilov, chose rather to make a united front with the German fascists against the sorry socialist government of Braun-Severing in Prussia. This meant victory for Kornilov-Hitler.

But today it is Duclos who resorts to the example. It is no longer a question of the united front with the "social-fascists" of yesterday upon the common class front, but of an improbable construction in which a Hitler is always tantamount to a Kornilov, but where the Kerensky "to be supported after a fashion," becomes Laval-Weygand. That is, not the puny reformist Kerensky of the democratic revolution who was smeared by history but mighty French imperialism.

Lenin's "Conditions"
It must be added that the wretched humbug remains triumphant to the end. He continues with the quotation: "Allowing for necessary changes, Lenin wrote, we equally push to the foreground at this time the rebuilding of the agitation for what may be called 'partial demands' (there you see you have the immediate demands, etc. . . .)"

But the quotation does not end there, and here are the partial demands that Lenin listed: "arrest Millukov, arm the Petrograd workers, call in the troops of Kronstadt, Vyborg and Helsingfors, dissolve the Duma, arrest Rodzianko, legalize the transfer of the landed estates to the peasants, establish workers control over food supplies and industry."

Thus it is that Lenin, who goes on to exhort the soldiers to rise against the generals and officers who had declared themselves for Kornilov, rises to fling in Duclos' face the call for a "workers' militia."

3. Thorez, Duclos and Gitton keep repeating to anyone who listens to them: "we are no deserters. As Lenin called upon us, we shall participate in every war, no matter how reactionary it may be." As a matter of fact, Lenin declared that the communists and the workers will participate in wars imperialist may unleash. Upon this point we must discuss with our comrades of the left wing of the Socialist party who declare themselves for "the launching of an insurrectionary strike in reply to the war."

General Strike Against War
If the Marxist-Leninists reject this slogan it is assuredly not on the grounds of principle. But the mechanism whereby wars are unleashed by imperialist powers and their material and moral preparation result unfortunately in the fact that at the moment when war is declared (if there is a declaration) is the very moment when the proletariat and its organizations are least apt to bring into play the instrument of such a scope as the insurrectionary strike. Thus the slogan proves barren and consequently dangerous. The example of Jouhaux and the French anarchists reveals what betrays the slogan of the "insurrectionary strike" and its subsequent transformation.

Lenin said that the communists and the workers will participate in the imperialist war like the slaves they are. But they will participate as implacable opponents of national defense in order to continue the class struggle and work for the transformation of the imperialist war into the civil war.

That is not at all the way in which Thorez and others give proof of not being deserters. At the general membership meeting of the C. P., Thorez made the following reply: "And now I answer a question that has been put to me. 'In case of a war launched by Hitler against the U.S.S.R. would you apply your slogan: Transformation of the imperialist war into the civil war?' Well, no! Because in such a war it is not an imperialist war that is involved, a war between two imperialist gangs, it is a war against the Soviet Union."

4. Thus the conclusion remains the very same: involved here for the workers is the question of "revolutionary defense." In the name of this defense they must participate in an imperialist war in the service of French imperialism.

Here we are not even discussing the dubious unstable and peridious character of the alliance between French imperialism and the U.S.S.R. What is under discussion is not the final end pursued by the French bourgeoisie as well as by every other bourgeoisie in Europe or elsewhere in the impending slaughter which will be unleashed by the capitalist crisis.

As it stands the leaders of the C. P. are pledging themselves to rivet the proletariat to the chains of their bourgeoisie up to and including all the slaughters of war, throughout all the crises of the war. And all this in the name of what kind of revolutionary defense? Of the French proletariat, of their revolution which is or will be accomplished? No. It is in the name of the Russian Workers' State which the French bourgeoisie means to strangle.

But will matters rest here?

The Logical Conclusion
Once on this road, it is foredoomed that the Communist leaders will proceed much further: at Prague, Severac declared that the Communists would defend "the independence of Czechoslovakia." In Paris the expert P.V.C. writes: "the communists do not plant their banner over a dung heap. They do not condemn the army as such. They do not disown the idea of the fatherland (no, since the time of Marx, they know that the workers have no fatherland). They want to conquer for the toiling masses the right to their own banner, the right to their own army, and the right to their own fatherland."

And, WHILE WAITING, they want to safeguard all the material and cultural wealth of the country. "WHILE WAITING," that is to say while under the present domination of the imperialist bourgeoisie, of the bourgeois fatherland. Thus, revolutionary defense leaps over the chasm which divides it from social patriotism.

The policy of "revolutionary defense" pledges the proletariat to war and to counter-revolution. It is as inevitable for the French proletariat as it is for the Soviet Union. And all this in the name of a "realistic" policy.

There is nothing more "realistic" for the proletariat than Marxism. For ten years we have fought the theory and practice of "socialism in one country." Now more than ever we call upon the proletariat to join us in the struggle for the regeneration of proletarian internationalism.

DETROIT (EP).—Preparations are being made to charter an international union of automobile workers within the near future. Questionnaires will be sent to the various locals of the United Automobile Workers of America to ascertain whether these organized workers now desire an international union and feel capable of the responsibility of directing its affairs.

The response will be for the immediate establishment of an international, the Detroit office of the American Federation of Labor assumes. In anticipation of a large affirmative vote, preparations are now under way to call a convention in Detroit, starting August 26.

Rotten Arguments for a Rotten Cause—the Road from Class Struggle to Civil Peace

At the present time as during the war when Lenin denounced them, swarms of theoreticians rise to the theoretical and scientific defense of the fact that the Communist International has accepted national imperialist defense.

The first ones to date are not worth much.

1. In his long speech at the general membership meeting, Thorez wrapped himself in the mantle of a "great historical example, comrades." That is to say, the attitude of Marx and Engels who supported up to September 4, 1870 the war against the French Empire. And consequently the Communists may support the war against German fascism.

Social-Patriotic Disfrags

The trouble with this threadbare argument is that it has already been worn to shreds in the hands of Vailant, Guesde, Scheidemann and Kautsky during the war of 1914. And it is a fact that in the joint articles in "Against the Stream," Lenin and Zinoviev proved that the war of 1870 was a national war, resulting from the bourgeois national movement of the German people, which was democratic, national and progressive. It is the class content of the war, its significance in the history of the emancipation of classes that dictated the attitude taken by Marx and Engels toward the close of the historical period of continental national wars. But what is the class content of a war of French imperialism? If Thorez wants to use this argument in support of his position, it is only fitting that he should follow Guesde and Scheidemann. Even Cachin can explain that to him.

Moreover, in this war of the pre-imperialist epoch, Marx and Engels supported Bepel and Liebknecht in their refusal to vote war credits to Bismarck, not to be compared with Laval or Wiegand.

2. Duclos comes next. He reminds us that when the hangman Kornilov waged his offensive, Lenin practiced the tactic towards the Kerensky government, not of supporting the latter but directing all forces against the main enemy.

We popularized this example during the Red Plebiscite and throughout the entire course of events in Germany: at that time the German Communist Party, instead of conducting against Hitler the tactic of Lenin against Kornilov, chose rather to make a united front with the German fascists against the sorry socialist government of Braun-Severing in Prussia. This meant victory for Kornilov-Hitler.

But today it is Duclos who resorts to the example. It is no longer a question of the united front with the "social-fascists" of yesterday upon the common class front, but of an improbable construction in which a Hitler is always tantamount to a Kornilov, but where the Kerensky "to be supported after a fashion," becomes Laval-Weygand. That is, not the puny reformist Kerensky of the democratic revolution who was smeared by history but mighty French imperialism.

Lenin's "Conditions"
It must be added that the wretched humbug remains triumphant to the end. He continues with the quotation: "Allowing for necessary changes, Lenin wrote, we equally push to the foreground at this time the rebuilding of the agitation for what may be called 'partial demands' (there you see you have the immediate demands, etc. . . .)"

But the quotation does not end there, and here are the partial demands that Lenin listed: "arrest Millukov, arm the Petrograd workers, call in the troops of Kronstadt, Vyborg and Helsingfors, dissolve the Duma, arrest Rodzianko, legalize the transfer of the landed estates to the peasants, establish workers control over food supplies and industry."

Thus it is that Lenin, who goes on to exhort the soldiers to rise against the generals and officers who had declared themselves for Kornilov, rises to fling in Duclos' face the call for a "workers' militia."

3. Thorez, Duclos and Gitton keep repeating to anyone who listens to them: "we are no deserters. As Lenin called upon us, we shall participate in every war, no matter how reactionary it may be." As a matter of fact, Lenin declared that the communists and the workers will participate in wars imperialist may unleash. Upon this point we must discuss with our comrades of the left wing of the Socialist party who declare themselves for "the launching of an insurrectionary strike in reply to the war."

General Strike Against War
If the Marxist-Leninists reject this slogan it is assuredly not on the grounds of principle. But the mechanism whereby wars are unleashed by imperialist powers and their material and moral preparation result unfortunately in the fact that at the moment when war is declared (if there is a declaration) is the very moment when the proletariat and its organizations are least apt to bring into play the instrument of such a scope as the insurrectionary strike. Thus the slogan proves barren and consequently dangerous. The example of Jouhaux and the French anarchists reveals what betrays the slogan of the "insurrectionary strike" and its subsequent transformation.

Lenin said that the communists and the workers will participate in the imperialist war like the slaves they are. But they will participate as implacable opponents of national defense in order to continue the class struggle and work for the transformation of the imperialist war into the civil war.

That is not at all the way in which Thorez and others give proof of not being deserters. At the general membership meeting of the C. P., Thorez made the following reply: "And now I answer a question that has been put to me. 'In case of a war launched by Hitler against the U.S.S.R. would you apply your slogan: Transformation of the imperialist war into the civil war?' Well, no! Because in such a war it is not an imperialist war that is involved, a war between two imperialist gangs, it is a war against the Soviet Union."

4. Thus the conclusion remains the very same: involved here for the workers is the question of "revolutionary defense." In the name of this defense they must participate in an imperialist war in the service of French imperialism.

Here we are not even discussing the dubious unstable and peridious character of the alliance between French imperialism and the U.S.S.R. What is under discussion is not the final end pursued by the French bourgeoisie as well as by every other bourgeoisie in Europe or elsewhere in the impending slaughter which will be unleashed by the capitalist crisis.

As it stands the leaders of the C. P. are pledging themselves to rivet the proletariat to the chains of their bourgeoisie up to and including all the slaughters of war, throughout all the crises of the war. And all this in the name of what kind of revolutionary defense? Of the French proletariat, of their revolution which is or will be accomplished? No. It is in the name of the Russian Workers' State which the French bourgeoisie means to strangle.

But will matters rest here?

The Logical Conclusion
Once on this road, it is foredoomed that the Communist leaders will proceed much further: at Prague, Severac declared that the Communists would defend "the independence of Czechoslovakia." In Paris the expert P.V.C. writes: "the communists do not plant their banner over a dung heap. They do not condemn the army as such. They do not disown the idea of the fatherland (no, since the time of Marx, they know that the workers have no fatherland). They want to conquer for the toiling masses the right to their own banner, the right to their own army, and the right to their own fatherland."

And, WHILE WAITING, they want to safeguard all the material and cultural wealth of the country. "WHILE WAITING," that is to say while under the present domination of the imperialist bourgeoisie, of the bourgeois fatherland. Thus, revolutionary defense leaps over the chasm which divides it from social patriotism.

The policy of "revolutionary defense" pledges the proletariat to war and to counter-revolution. It is as inevitable for the French proletariat as it is for the Soviet Union. And all this in the name of a "realistic" policy.

There is nothing more "realistic" for the proletariat than Marxism. For ten years we have fought the theory and practice of "socialism in one country." Now more than ever we call upon the proletariat to join us in the struggle for the regeneration of proletarian internationalism.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

Question: Can we not get rid of booms and depressions merely by putting all taxes on land and not on the products of the workers?

Answer: There are several fallacies in this conception, which is held chiefly by the Single Taxers. The first consists in assuming that it is, ever has been, or will be, possible to tax anything which is not the product of a worker. Land, without labor, produces practically nothing for human use and it is only when the energies of man are combined with nature that articles of use are created. When the State, be it Slave, Feudal, Capitalist, or Proletarian, applies taxes, it merely appropriates that which has been created by the work of humans whether this tax is assessed in money or in kind, on land, incomes, inheritances, or any other form of wealth. Placing taxes on land alone merely affects a change in the form of tax and therefore in the share of this burden which the different classes in society must bear. Nothing else.

The second fallacy lies in the assumption that taxation can level out the economic cycles of capitalism. Taxes are merely part of the wealth which is created, and, merely appropriating this portion in no way changes the mode by which wealth is produced. Tax as you will, under capitalism, the anarchy, competition, and economic cycles will and must continue. Otherwise capitalism cannot exist.

It may have been argued that the intention is to tax the capitalists so heavily as to practically force the system out of existence. Here we come to the chief fallacy implied in the above question. Who will do the taxing? The government? But the present government is the instrument of the capitalist class, which has no intention of using its own weapons to commit suicide nor to permit others to use it in dealing it a death blow.

It is therefore indulging in useless abstractions to attempt to figure out how to get rid of capitalism by means of a capitalist government. There is only one way: The capitalist state must be destroyed and be replaced by the workers state.

E. V. ST. PAUL—

Question: How do you account for the fact that the state of Ohio seems to be the center of strikes whereas these only seem to be flaring up spasmodically in other parts of the country?

Answer: We can only here advance a supposition since it is impossible to gauge at any particular time all the molecular processes that are generated by the class struggle. In all probability the tempo of the struggles in Ohio, relative to the rest of the country, flows from two chief factors:

1. The objective factor, i.e., the concentrated nature of Ohio industry. If we take 1929 statistics as a basis, 24.2 percent of the workers in the manufacturing industries of this country worked in establishments employing each over 1,000 people. As compared to this, 32.1 percent of the workers in the manufacturing industries in Ohio were concentrated in such large industries, and this figure is exceeded by only three states in the Union: Michigan, with 43.3 percent, Connecticut, with 34.2 percent, and Indiana with 34.1 percent.

2. The subjective factor. People with revolutionary consciousness, particularly members of the Workers' Party, have taken leading positions in the struggle.

In this historical period, the entrance of Marxism into the class struggle is, of course, the decisive element.

Question: Where can I find the statement, attributed to Stalin, in which it is stated that the Social Democracy and fascism are twins?

Answer: In the pamphlet "What Is Happening in Germany?" by Fritz Heckert, published by the Workers Library Publishers in June 1933. Heckert states as follows (p. 20): " . . . As early as 1914 (?) Comrade Stalin gave a definition of the development of social democracy into fascism that in its exactness and its clear-sightedness is unsurpassed (!!), a definition that was made the basis of the Comintern and the policy of the C.P.G.:

"Fascism—said Comrade Stalin—is a fighting organization of the bourgeoisie, an organization that rests on the active support of social democracy. Social democracy is objectively the moderate wing of fascism. . . . These organizations do not contradict each other but complete each other. They are not antipodes, but twins. . . ."

Further on in the pamphlet, Heckert, ranting against Trotsky, says: "The facts (!!!), then, have in a cruel fashion unmasked the counter-revolutionary meaning of the 'platform' of the social-Hitlerite Trotsky, who has striven to prove that social democracy and fascism are not twins, but antipodes." (p. 28) agreement runs the risk of disruption. The Radicals, however, despite the encouragements of the Communists and the promises of "support" from L'Humanite, balked. They quit cold and capitulated to Laval who was finally able to form the new ministry, now in office, having obtained the extraordinary powers previously refused Flandin and Buisson. What lesson must be drawn from this "choice morsel"? For us it is simple and clear. The Radicals revealed what they are and what they are capable of when they are in power on Feb. 6, 1934, during the attempt to capture the Place de la Concorde by the reactionary troops. Faced with the danger of civil war the Radicals capitulated to Doumergue, to the mutinous forces, and to the reactionary coup d'etat. This attitude of the radicals flows logically from their class policy. Could they, would they, ever break with this attitude by involving themselves with the Socialists and the Communists in the struggle against the armed forces of reaction? That would be tantamount to their committing themselves to the road of civil war, which is precisely what the Radicals do not want. And that is why, after many hesitations, the Radicals who refused extraordinary powers to Flandin and Buisson, perceiving where this road led them, turned tail once more, by granting Laval the extraordinary powers against which they had just voted twice in succession. Once more, the threat of armed gangs, of extra legal forces organized by fascism, called the cards in the parliamentary game, demonstrating the complete impotence of the parliament which has outlived itself.

The Mulhouse Congress

The Mulhouse Congress, convened on the morning of this ministerial crisis, should have been a tribute to broadcast to the country, to clarify the country on the difficulties of the hour, to give the working masses the solution of these difficulties. On the contrary, the Mulhouse Congress took note only of the past, giving no directions for the future. The report of the parliamentary group was approved by 2384 mandates against 427, abstaining. In the course of the discussion on this report Leon Blum made a speech which, as usual, was canonized as a "great" speech, but whose greatness, again as usual, consisted in its absolute emptiness, and its complete lack of directives and perspectives.

What did Leon Blum, the "leader" of the S.F.I.O. say? L'Humanite gave his speech the most prominent display, as if he were a leader of the Communist Party itself. In reality both centrism, one stemming from social democracy and the other from Stalinism, complement one another and merge in an amorphous hash, so that it becomes more and more difficult to tell them apart.

National Defense

But now we come to the question of national defense. This is the question which should have revealed a clear differentiation between communism and social democracy. But at the present time the position of Leon Blum is no different from that of Thorez, the Stalinist leader. L'Humanite rejoices in the rapprochement of the two points of view, Socialist and Communist; but it fails to perceive that by this very fact it avows the increasing alienation of the Stalinist parties from Leninism and from revolutionary Marxism. Let Blum speak for himself:

"The attitude of the party (on the question of national defense) conforms to that of the Socialist International and the trade union international. We are ready to do everything in our power to avoid war. But this preventive attitude no longer suffices when war becomes a fact."

"The parliamentary group takes its stand upon the position of the Tours congress of 1920. We declared then that we, Socialists, believed that, under given conditions the national and international duties coincide. Under what conditions does this coincidence exist? When there is a flagrant aggression and invasion of the national soil."

"When this thesis was first presented, Maurice Thorez (Secretary of the Communist Party) rose to the tribune and declared his opposition to it. But since then things have changed..."

Stalin Changes Thorez' Mind

We know what this change is. Following the Stalin-Laval communique the Communists also supported the idea that "National Defense" can coincide with international obligations. But let us allow Leon Blum to continue:

"Shortly after my speech there appeared a series of articles in L'Humanite which designated Hitler as the hereditary enemy. From this time on the theory of revolutionary defeatism was no longer strictly maintained. ... I said that in case of aggression by Hitlerite Germany the whole proletariat would rise, together with the rest of the country. Now I say that on the day of Hitlerite aggression, Russia would be threatened and therefore the proletariat of the world will rise. My statement was nothing but sort of a prophecy and events have vindicated it."

"What events? The declarations of Stalin, naturally!"

"Have you noticed," Blum kept shouting at the Congress, "the direction of the Communist formulations? Isn't it obvious today that Valentin Coururier employs almost the identical formulas which I used at Tours in 1920?"

And L'Humanite, its heart leaping with joy, applauds Blum for having "said what we say!"

"I believe," Blum went on to say, "that we should welcome the explanations given by the Communists as a result of our united action and as something which will facilitate organic unity. Common formulations are possible."

Thus, on one of the most important problems which have divided the revolutionists from the opportunists and centrists of all shades, the problem of national defense, the "rapprochement" between the Stalinists and social democrats becomes not only possible but has in fact taken place. And not as Blum pretends "as a result of our united action" because the contrary is true, but rather because the sham "unity of action" is only a consequence of the latest evolution of Stalinism on to the positions of social-patriotism.

But on another question of the same gender a similar rapprochement between the "Socialist" and "Communist" point of view is to be observed: the question of "parliamentary collaboration." What did Leon Blum have to say on this subject? "The Communists were much more interested than we in getting the Lefts together. Nobody as much as they pushed for the constitution of a 'Left Government' in which the Radicals would take the leading role. When Maurice Thorez said to the Radicals: 'Go there,' the Radicals asked: 'Will the Socialists come with us?' In a word: the Communists pressed for a situation which would require our participation." (Whence the great embarrassment of the Socialists.) "What would we have done if the Radicals had not evaded our proposals? I have lived," Blum continued, "through some very difficult days."

Naturally, for fear of his being called to assume direct responsibility. But the Radicals, by cutting the matter short, freed Blum and his Communist colleagues from the fears of revolutionary hazards, from the fears of taking power.

What did the Mulhouse Congress say and what did it do in the face of this problem which is the central problem posed by the situation in France? It is already more than a year since the question of power has been posed in the sharpest manner following the coup of "February 6th." On February 12, 1934 the tolling masses at the call of their organizations replied by a general strike all over France. But the Socialists and Communists, instead of making a bid for power, quit cold, capitulating before Doumergue who was placed in power by the forces of the reactionary coup d'etat. Doumergue, finally had to make room for Flandin and once again the Socialists and Communists sighed, relieved of the fear of being the successors, and they consigned themselves to demanding from Flandin the dissolution of the fascist bands and the guaranteeing of "democratic" rights. Flandin, in turn, fell. But despite the electoral victories of the "Peoples Front" in the municipal elections in May and June, the Socialists and the Communists agreed to do nothing, pushing the Radicals to take power, who in their turn quit cold. In the meantime the fascist bands did not cease from equipping themselves, from taking to the road of civil war.

The Bolshevik Leninists

But, the Mulhouse Congress not only had nothing concrete to say on these questions but it revealed the desire to hear nothing about them, when a single voice and a single force took the floor to remind it of its duty: the voice and the force of the Bolshevik Leninists.

Nothing reveals better the character of the Mulhouse Congress than the reaction of the parliamentary high priests to the speeches of the delegates representing the Bolshevik-Leninist tendency, the so-called Trotskyists. For the first time, since the split in Tours in 1920, this tendency appeared on the tribune of a Socialist congress. It was represented by over a hundred mandates. But its real force rested in the ideas defended by it. The Stalinist degeneration, is proved, among other things, by this mutual approbation, by this feeling of mutual and compatible understanding which implies the reciprocal pardon for past errors between the Socialist and Stalinist leaders. At the present time they rest on the same centrist positions. On the other hand it is the Bolshevik-Leninists on whom falls the honor of raising the banner of proletarian internationalism, the banner of communism, the banner of those principles on which the Third International of Lenin was founded. When Paul Faure appealed to the congress for unanimity, he exhorted all the delegates, save the Bolshevik-Leninists "who remain true to the 21 points of Moscow," that is to say, true to the principles which gave birth to the Third International. And when the "Trotskyist" delegates heckled Blum's speech, calling the Stalin-Laval communique a betrayal, Blum in a fit of anger replied: "Should unity have to leave your small group outside the reunified party, I will take my party into it." Naturally, and we are also ready. Blum warns us that the wanted organic unity is the unity of the two bureaucracies against the revolutionary current. But the "small group" which Blum would like to leave outside the unified party, has already won an important place for The Mulhouse Congress is proof of itself in the French labor movement.

The only clear and definite slogans; the only true and possible solutions for the working class were presented by the delegates of the Bolshevik-Leninist tendency. National defense? No national defense as long as the bourgeoisie is in power. Revolutionary defeatism is the only working class policy against imperialist war. The defense of the U.S.S.R. is the problem of the socialist revolution; is the question of the struggle for power. And for the conquest of power: mobilize the masses for revolutionary action (against all collaboration with the class enemy). The struggle for power is the immediate problem and not merely an object for discussion at a congress. Workers government (Socialist-Communist government), that is the slogan of the hour. Ballots and parliamentary action will not bar the road to fascism and lead the masses to power. Weapon against weapon: workers' militia. That is the task which falls on the working class parties at the present moment.

These slogans, broadcast from the Mulhouse tribune, distorted by the corrupt Social Democratic and Stalinist bureaucrats, will make their way into the hearts of the workers, will create new and grandiose opportunities: the only opportunities for salvation. Numerical weakness is a good argument only for Blum; but the "small group" in the turbulent conditions of today can become the nucleus around which all the revolutionary forces will be regrouped. The progress achieved by the Bolshevik-Leninist tendency in the course of seven months inside the S.F.I.O. proves how great are the possibilities of development for a genuine revolutionary current in the impending great working class struggles and the civil war. Days of stress are inexorably approaching for France as well. And the struggle for power remains the only way out for the working class. Which however it will not be able to find without a party genuinely poised for this revolutionary struggle. That party will be created in the very fire of the struggle. It cannot raise any other banner than that of the Fourth International. Without that, the merger of the reformism of Blum with the bureaucratic centrism of Thorez will lead the working class only to new defeats. It is the grave task of the Bolshevik-Leninists to avoid this catastrophe.

Mexican Labor Movement Unites Against Reaction

MEXICO CITY (FP).—Sudden threats of a violent capitalist offensive have quickly jerked labor in Mexico into unified action, producing almost overnight the formation of a permanent united front group known as the National Proletarian Defense Committee.

The recent sharp menace to organized labor came in the wake of a heavy strike movement since the first of the year. During this time, 1,200 strikes have been called throughout the country, including sympathetic strikes.

Because many of these have been directed against foreign capitalists who control Mexican industry and commerce, insistent pressure has been brought on all governmental departments by employers' organizations which have been trying to inject a "red scare" into the situation. They have been aided by sympathizers of the clergy opposed to the government's church policy.

Growing dissension within the ranks of the official government National Revolutionary Party recently came to a head in a political crisis which produced resignation of the Cardenas cabinet and incorporation into it of elements regarded as favorable to certain conservative groups.

The crisis, which on the surface was a split between followers of Pres. Cardenas and Political Dictator Plutarco Elias Calles, former president and "strong man" of Mexico, developed around the capital-labor issue. To the uninformed observer it appeared that Calles was attacking labor and that Cardenas was defending labor.

Mexico's "New Deal"

Labor spokesmen, however, pointed out that the situation was in reality one which might be compared with an open declaration of hostility between progressive Republicans in the U. S. and New Dealers. The issue, labor leaders said, was whether labor should be treated openly as a factor which opposed capitalist encroachments or whether it should be "given greater doses of demagoguery in order to make it appear that the government is really a labor government."

The situation showed plainly that labor will not retreat, and that it does recognize a common class menace requiring unified action. Calles assailed the recent strike wave, citing by name strikes which he considered unjust, such as those against the telephone company (U. S. capital) and the Huasteca Petroleum Co. (U. S. capital), and added that labor should show itself more grateful for the concessions gained in the past and should not "seek to embarrass the government which is working in their interests."

Organized labor was not particularly interested in the fights among the politicians, but it certainly talked in plain language about those aspects of the fight which might affect workers. The united front immediately issued the following statement after Calles' declarations had been made public:

"The organized labor and peasant movement of Mexico energetically protests the declarations of Gen. Calles, and declares that it will defend the rights of the working class, such as strikes without restrictions, association in unions, and others; and will not cease fighting for the economic and social betterment of wage earners. Strike movements, assailed as due to collective uncaness and to a state of social injustice, are phenomena spurred over only by those who represent capitalist interests.

"Strikes will end when there is achieved a transformation of the bourgeois system in which we live. The organized labor and peasant movement of Mexico, aware of the historical moment in which it lives, declares that it will oppose all transgression of its rights, utilizing, at the proper time, the general nationwide strike as the only means of defense against the possible implantation of a fascist regime in Mexico. And facing the threat of seeing its interests jeopardized, declares its firm intention of maintaining class unity."

The united front which signed this statement represented the majority of organized labor, ranging from the radical Unitary Confederation of Mexico to the more powerful but less radical General Workers and Peasants Confederation (headed by Lombardo Toledano and generally characterized as syndicalist-reformist). This was the first time that this important confederation joined the united front movement in Mexico.

Among the points in the pact of solidarity signed by the National Proletarian Defense Committee are: 1. One representative from each organization forms the committee. 2. The member groups will mutually respect their integrity and abstain from attacking one another. 3. Difficulties between labor organizations will be referred to the committee in an effort to settle them without attacking each other and thus hurting the workers' movement. 4. No interference in autonomy of member groups. 5. Ample basis for solidarity action. 6. Agreement that upon appearance of any fascist or similar organizations threatening workers or peasants or their fundamental right to strike, liberty of association, liberty of expression, right to public demonstration, or "if the state tolerates or foment organizations whose aims or tendencies are openly against such rights, the member organizations of the committee will declare a general strike in opposition to a tyranny of this nature." 7. Convocation of a National Workers and Peasants Congress. 8. The signatory groups declare that "they are opposed to collaboration with the capitalist class and will adjust their acts to revolutionary tactics and under the principle of the class struggle."

of America, Spartacus Youth League, Young Peoples Socialist League and Communist Party Opposition (Lovesonites). The American Civil Liberties Union and the General Defense Committee (I.W.W.) have already appointed observers.

A meeting will be held shortly in this city to add these organizations to the temporary committee. Steps will be taken immediately thereafter to add trade union delegations, and there will follow the work of providing Mini with appeal counsel and launching a militant protest campaign against the eight convictions and the criminal syndicalism law. The appeal argument will be very substantial due to errors made by the trial judge and also due to the affidavit obtained from a juror by the N.P.L.D., which impeaches the entire verdict as an illegal horse-trade. With active popular backing, the defense will have a fighting chance.

More I.L.D. Sabotage

According to an announcement by the N.P.L.D., Mini, "placing political integrity above legal expediency," to use his own words, has flatly rejected attempts of the International Labor Defense and the Communist Party to bribe and threaten him into becoming a silent partner in their efforts to make of the Sacramento criminal syndicalism appeal fight a political football.

The I.L.D., the Western Worker (mouthpiece of the C.P.), and other Stalinist institutions have made a united front in playing down the Sacramento appeal fight. Ignoring William Randolph Hearst's challenge that the Sacramento convictions constitute a national test case, the C. P. is playing up, not the Sacramento case, but the Gallup affair, in order to publicize Bob Minor, one of its leading bureaucrats.

The I.L.D., which, during the trial, slandered the youthful Mini as a "stool-pigeon," was compelled to back down at the time of his conviction. It then characterized him as "an honest misled class prisoner." I.L.D. attorney Leo Gallagher proposed a joint defense. The C. P. set on foot a rumor that Mini had "repented" of his political "errors," and that he was "no worse than Jack Warnick," the solitary C. P. Sacramento defendant who had the moral courage to defend Mini against the malicious onslaughts of the Darcy-controlled Stalinist machine.

Now the C. P. has expelled Warnick because he refused to back down on his support of Mini, and discovered that Mini is no less intransigent, the C.P. has also turned on him again.

The Western Worker, which for a few weeks urged readers to send comradeship letters to Mini, has turned its back on him. Endeavoring to escape in advance the blame due it for dividing the appeal movement, the C. P. now "charges" that Mini has "decided to go it alone" on the appeal.

I.L.D. Tries Terror

Nevertheless, the I.L.D. is collecting funds in Mini's name without authorization and without accounting to anybody. This is revealed by a number of documents, including the mimeographed program of a "benefit dance" held at Eagles Hall in San Francisco on June 8th by the so-called State Conference for United Action, a C. P. "united front." For a while after its flattery failed to win Mini over, the C. P. endeavored to silence him by terrorization. The organization which withheld bail from its jailed members in Sacramento because some of them had dared challenge the bureaucratic regime of the C.P., did not hesitate to try to terrorize Mini into a fear that if he did not knuckle under to them, he would have no defense at all. The I.L.D. sent to San Quentin Leo Gallagher, its trial attorney whose court-room tactics were such a miserable combination of opportunistic backsliding and provocative nonsense, to state that Mini could ride along on the I.L.D.'s appeal for his seven co-defendants, only on condition that the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, which handled Mini's trial defense and in a score of ways aided the whole defense movement, have no part in the case.

Mini Stands Firm

Mini was informed that the alternative would be renewed ostracism by the I.L.D., and his abandonment to the "shady characters" of the N.P.L.D. who are "impotent, counter-revolutionary" etc. A rumor was set on foot and peddled to Mini through his fellow prisoners and otherwise, that the N.P.L.D. was "abandoning" him. When Mini proved as impervious to this panic-appraisal as he had to flattery, the unprincipled C.P.-I.L.D. bureaucrats turned on him venomously once again.

In a letter to Leo Gallagher, Mini has stated his position in unmistakable language as follows:

"... At the time when the question of joint appeal first came up, I took it for granted that an agreement for close collaboration between the I.L.D. and the N.P.L.D. could easily be worked out. But apparently this part of the question was never considered by members of the I.L.D. ruling group; and the idea became general that the N.P.L.D. had 'abandoned' the case, and that I had turned over my defense to the I. L.D."

"This was a mistake, of course. How could anyone be so naive as to believe that I would entrust my entire defense to the I.L.D.? Especially after the four months display of the honesty and political ability I had just seen in Sacramento?"

"You can see that with me it is a question of placing political integrity above legal expediency. If the I.L.D. refuses to acknowledge that an organization that I belong to exists, then it seems logical that they should ignore my existence also since I believe in the principles and policies of the organization. Under those circumstances, any gesture by the I.L.D. to let me in, while leaving my political beliefs out, must be classed as hypocritical opportunism. And I cannot be part of it."

"From now on, then, to avoid any misunderstanding, any legal actions on my behalf must have the approval of the N.P.L.D."

I.S.U. STRIKES CITIES SERVICE
BOSTON (FP).—With 10 Cities Service oil tankers already idle in five ports from Boston to Port Arthur, the International Seamen's Union looks forward to a complete tieup of the company's 14 ships.

The strike was ordered to force the company—the only oil company of importance still unorganized to accept a union contract. Wages on its ships are some $15 a month lower than on other tankers, union officials state.

basis. A propaganda group might conceivably go along with a four page paper, reaching its readers once a week and confining itself to some particular phase of revolutionary theory or activity. A party, which in the nature of the case assumes responsibility for theoretical education of the advanced workers and also for leadership in the daily struggles of the working class, simply cannot begin to meet its obligations with a four-page paper reaching its readers only once a week.

As a matter of fact, we should aim at a daily paper at the earliest possible moment. That in a country as large as the United States and in such a period as this there should be only one general working class daily, and that a Stalinist one, is nothing short of tragic. A daily paper issued by the Workers Party of the U. S., raising aloft the banner of the Fourth International, and presenting a truthful report of national and international events and an analysis of them based upon an uncompromising revolutionary internationalism, would have a national, and in fact, international significance.

The first step toward the achievement of this goal is to carry out the proposal of the Political Committee to increase the weekly New Militant from four to eight pages by Anti-War Day, August 1. All the various types of readers of the New Militant will thus receive more of the material for which they have been asking. New readers can be enrolled by the hundreds, possibly even thousands. An immense stimulus can be given to all the organizational activities of the party itself and of the mass organizations in which it exerts influence.

Funds for the small amount of additional machinery needed in the print shop and to guarantee the steady issuance of the enlarged weekly for a period must be in hand before the change is inaugurated. To proceed in any other way would be to act irresponsibly. Hence the financial campaign for the eight-page New Militant which has been inaugurated in recent issues and about which the branches of the party have been informed. Unquestionably the members and friends of the party, the workers who have seen the party in operation in many a struggle, can by united efforts make the realization of this new forward step possible. We call upon the party members and branches to carry out swiftly and enthusiastically the directions which have been sent them. We call upon all our sympathizers and friends to send in their contributions, large or small, without a moment's delay.

No more appropriate day could be found to carry the banner of revolutionary internationalism a long step forward than Anti-War Day, August 1.

sharp battle ensued in which several workers were hurt after overturning two trucks bearing deputized "company guards." Reedy's injuries are grave.

The first to leave the county courthouse, where the Governor's conference was held, was Sample, who told the workers to gather at Labor hall for a meeting within an hour. Several hundred strikers had waited four hours in the rain outside the courthouse for news of the meeting.

Next came the Governor, flanked by national guard officers, including Captain Sherwood Dixon, Democratic Central committeeman, of Dixon. Captain Dixon had the loudest voice in Lee county during the campaign of 1932, shouting promises of a new deal for "the forgotten man."

Horner, after posing for two pictures, was whisked away in his waiting automobile, accompanied by Roy Bennethum, president of the Stover organization. The Governor said before leaving that he was going to place a wreath on the grave of Jane Addams. Bennethum didn't announce his destination, but as the car sped away some of the workers said they hoped he would go to hell.

Britain Joins Hitler Against Soviet Union

Smashes Versailles Pact by Treaty with Germany

Great Britain's open support of German rearmament, as marked by the recent Anglo-German naval agreement, has strengthened the hand of reaction in Europe. New realignments of imperialist powers in preparation for an impending war is taking place. Peace in Europe has been maintained in the last few years due to Hitler's failure to obtain a strong ally on the continent and the collaboration of England and France. Both conditions now appear to be destroyed.

England's new policy, a culmination of years of hardly concealed material support to Hitler's rearmament, has a two-fold purpose: first, to disrupt the Franco-Soviet pact, if possible to win France to an open anti-Soviet policy and second, to collaborate with Hitler so as to insure itself against possible Nazi military adventures at England's expense, for example in Austria.

England has held the balance of power in Europe for the last few years. Now it has openly thrown itself to the side of Germany in Europe. Its agreement with Germany sanctions an increase in the latter's navy to 35 percent of Britain's or a "maximum" of 429,000 tons as compared to France's 650,000 tons. In addition an air agreement between the two countries is now contemplated.

Blow at France

France is bitter over the agreement. Not only does it strengthen Germany, but the fact that it was arrived at without the sanction of the French government makes the French imperialists uneasy. The British, at first, refused to divulge Hitler's naval program to Paris. A few days ago, however, Hitler, under advice of London, informed the French government that his naval program for the next eighteen months calls for the construction of new ships totalling 107,000 tons, inclusive of two battleships of 25,000 tons each.

The first breach in Anglo-French collaboration over the Italian-Ethiopian dispute, immediately followed the signing of the Anglo-German naval agreement. Until then, despite the friendly relations established between France and Italy last January, Paris and London acted concertedly in relation to Italy.

Mussolini now has a free hand in Abyssinia. He has rejected the offer of Anthony Eden, British Minister for League of Nations Affairs to settle the Italo-Ethiopian dispute by giving Ethiopia a strip of British Somaliland to compensate the Africans for concessions to Italy. All correspondents agree that Italy will go to war with Ethiopia in October.

Fear for Colonies

The reaction of the French government to the offer of Eden is not provoked solely by its bitterness over the Anglo-German agreement. France has its own imperialist interests in Africa.

As a Paris dispatch to the New York Times of July 2 states:

"Loyal as France may be to the principles and text of the League of Nations covenant, the leaders and citizens are far from approving the British suggestion to placate Italy and Ethiopia by handing over to the latter the port of Zella, which might become a direct rival of the French port of Djibuti. If Mr. Mussolini had accepted the suggestion, says the Temps, it would have been to the detriment of France and an open violation of Article IX of the treaty of 1906 by which Britain and Italy undertook to refrain from competing with Djibuti."

However, the realignment of the imperialist powers is far from fixed. Diplomats are making hurried trips from one leading capital of Europe to another. There are rumors of tentative Franco-German parleys which if confirmed may mean a disruption of Franco-Soviet relations.

Workers' Russia cannot be defended by imperialist France. Peace cannot be maintained by the "thieves kitchen," the League of Nations. The defense of the Soviet Union depends upon its Red Army, the Soviet workers and peasants, and above all on the international working class.

Protest Stalin Jailings in N.Y.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Over 300 workers attended the Irving Plaza Hall to protest the recent persecutions in the Soviet Union, the latest evidence of which was the imprisonment of Sergei Trotsky and others. Max Shachtman, editor of the New Internationalist, and A. J. Muste, National Secretary of the W. P. were the speakers.

The cases in history of persecutions by the Stalinist bureaucracy were ably presented by comrade Shachtman. Comrade Muste concluded the meeting by stating the position of the Party on events in the Soviet Union and their relation to the movement in this country.

By a unanimous vote the following resolution was adopted by the workers present:

We, the workers assembled at a meeting in Irving Plaza Hall, Sunday, June 30, on the call of the Workers Party, protest most vigorously the new wave of persecution against Bolshevik-Leninists and worker revolutionists in the Soviet Union.

We consider the arrest and imprisonment of Sergei Trotsky, who it is known has not participated in any political activity, as an act of brutal vengeance, as an act of Stalin against Leon Trotsky. We endorse the call of Nathalia I. Trotsky for a commission of Andre Gide, Roland and G. B. Shaw to investigate the matter. We are particularly alarmed by this new wave of terror against revolutionists since it can only weaken the revolutionary forces inside the Soviet Union and undermine the prestige of the S. U. in the eyes of the advanced workers in the capitalist countries. These persecutions are particularly criminal in view of the acute danger of war against the Soviet Union.

We delegate the comrades A. J. Muste and Max Shachtman to bring our protest to the attention of the Soviet embassy in this country.

TOLEDO, Ohio (FP).—Averting a strike of the Mechanics Educational Society of America, the Rathbun-Jones Engineering Co. of Toledo has granted a new agreement providing pay boosts from 3 to 5 cents an hour and maintenance of the 40-hour week.

NEW YORK (FP).—Tom Mooney has won what may well be the battle that is the turning point in his long fight for freedom. The California supreme court has reversed its 18-year-old attitude and has granted Mooney's lawyers a writ of habeas corpus, which means that the state must answer the great volume of evidence of perjury committed during Mooney's trial or release the famous labor prisoner.

New York Pledges $1000 in Drive for 8-Page New Militant

One of the first responses to our campaign for the eight-page weekly came from S. Harrison, New York City ($5.00 contribution listed in last issue) and carried this message: "Read about the eight-page New Militant while in Philadelphia last week. It truly gladdened my heart to hear the good news. There are great perspectives ahead of us—the enlarged issue may well contribute a whole lot in the case. . . . Wishing you once more all the success required for such an undertaking."

This is encouraging, and we agree, there are great perspectives ahead of us. We have undertaken a big job as behooves a revolutionary movement, but we set out with the conviction that we can carry it through.

It has never been easy to produce the New Militant week by week. Funds have never yet been plentiful. As a matter of fact we have managed on a shoestring basis. To produce the New Militant today requires an outlay of $162.00 per issue, all expenses included. At least that is the amount we should have. The truth is that we did not get it and we were compelled to make up in some other way, most often by reducing the economic rations for all the comrades who carried the burden of the active work.

The New 'Magna Charta' for Labor

As soon as Senator Wagner can get to Washington to participate personally in the ballyhoo connected with the attachment of Roosevelt's signature, the much touted Wagner Labor Disputes Bill will have become law. Thus, according to Green, Hillman and the other A.F. of L. bureaucrats who "look to the President" to save labor, another Magna Charta, Charter of liberties, for labor will have been established. What will happen then?

The steel barons and other employers who do regard this bill, which (on paper) "outlaws" company unions and directs employers to bargain collectively with a union which gets the vote of a majority of their employees, as an outrageous concession to labor, have given notice that they will carry the issue of its constitutionality to the Supreme Court. The workers have had bitter experience with such delays over section 7a of NRA which was also a Magna Charta of labor according to Green et al.

Under this bill a National Labor Relations Board is to be set up to "enforce" collective bargaining, etc. Thus the way is paved for eventual greater control of government over the unions. Apart from that, bitter experience has taught the workers how slowly the machinery of these Boards operates even when "friends of unionism" sit on them, and that the employers have numerous devices for evading their decisions or crippling their operations. Besides, under a capitalist government, which necessarily is concerned about keeping the wheels of industry (i.e. capitalist industry) running smoothly, the basic concern of these government agencies is never that of enforcing the rights of the workers, but that of maintaining "industrial peace," in other words, preventing strikes or if they break out somehow, "settling" them, getting the workers back to work as quickly as possible.

Thus these government boards become in effect strike-breaking agencies even under the best conditions.

The workers will not get salvation from the Wagner bill. They must now as ever fight the entire system for which it stands. They will get nothing except that which they can take by their organized strength and militancy. They must prepare more rigorously and thoroughly than ever, not for an easy way to improved conditions via labor boards, etc. but for a battle to the death against the employer drive against unionism, against the rising cost of living and the accompanying lowering of the standards of living.

It is possible that the initial psychological effect of the passage of the Wagner bill on some sections of the workers will be similar to that which occurred when the NRA was first proclaimed—to create the impression, namely, that unionization will get government support and so to stimulate organizing campaigns and strikes. It is a fact that capitalism in the U. S. does not yet have to resort to the most extreme repression. A "liberal" administration can seek to allay labor unrest and to buy off trade union leaders by concessions, by preventing the most reactionary employers from carrying out immediately their most extreme plans. Militants will take advantage of the situation, and especially of any organization sentiment which may develop among the workers, not in order to strengthen the mistaken impression they may have of friendly government support, but precisely in order that in the struggle to get what the government purports to give them, they may learn the true nature and function of all capitalist governments. Police, militia, soldiers, with clubs, tear gas and guns, will meet the workers who strike for the rights "granted" under the Wagner bill, as they met workers who struck for similar rights under the now defunct NRA. And the lesson will sink in deeper and deeper.

Akron C.L.U. Head Backs Green Red Drive in the Unions

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, July 1.—Joining hands with William Green and other A. F. of L. bureaucrats in their latest "anti-red" drive, Frank Patino, president of the Central Labor Union here declared he not only supported Green's move to split labor through mass expulsions but also began a campaign to oust local militants.

Patino, backed by the Summit County Labor News, announced his policy the day after the monthly meeting of the C.L.U. thus preventing an immediate reply by militants to his disruptive tactics.

It was the first open admission of Patino that he is with the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, although his previous actions in strikes had branded him as a hopeless, petty bureaucrat. His statement, widely featured in the labor paper, came three weeks after Coleman C. Claherty, rubber organizer, dragged the red herring across rubber workers' union meetings in an attempt to scare progressives.

Italy Prepares Ethiopia Rape, Mussolini Says

Dynamite in Situation May Explode in New World War

By MARTIN A. GLEE

From official sources, writes the London correspondent of the New York Times, it has been learned that Mussolini has told the British envoy, Sir Anthony Eden, that "nothing could prevent Italy from going to war with Ethiopia in October." Arnaldo Cortesi, writing from Rome, says: "If there was any doubt that hostilities (against Ethiopia) would begin in a couple of months there is none now."

The war against Ethiopia may well turn out to be the precursor of the next world massacre. Let us recall once again that it was the Italo-Turkish war of 1911 which was the precursive signal of the last world war. Italy's designs on Ethiopia are pregnant with dire consequences for the world working class. For it is they who will be called upon to suffer a thousand tortures in a thousand different sections of the globe—when the next world war starts.

To understand more clearly the designs of western imperialism on this primitive kingdom in Africa, it is necessary to go back a bit; to establish the position of Ethiopia on the dark continent and to focus attention on the imperialist powers having a "direct interest" in the matter by virtue of boundaries—Italy, France and England.

In eastern Africa lies the kingdom of Ethiopia, popularly but erroneously referred to as Abyssinia. (Of the many tribes that go to make up the empire of Haile Selassie I, the Abyssinians are the most culturally compact, unified and politically and socially advanced. Hence the usual reference to Abyssinia when one is in reality speaking of all of Ethiopia.) It has a population of about 11,000,000 in an area approximating 350,000 square miles. The chief industry is agriculture with breeding taking second place. The exports, the chief articles of which are wax, ivory and animal skins, do not amount to very much. Imports which amount to about 10,000,000 dollars yearly are

Invent Electric Jolt for Strikes

NEW YORK (FP).—Police can follow orders now and handle strikers with gloves—"electric gloves."

Construction Supt. Cirilo H. Diaz of Frederick Snare Co., Havana, Cuba, has invented an electric glove which, he guarantees, will paralyze strike pickets temporarily.

In his office in the heart of the Wall Street district, the ingenious Diaz demonstrated his invention to a Federated Press reporter.

Diaz explained that the battery supplying power to the glove is hung on the policeman's belt. An electric cord, cleverly hidden inside the coat sleeve, runs from the battery to the glove, from which electricity is sent through the striker's body by means of four contact points.

The patent, as issued by the U. S. Patent Office, claims the glove is intended for use by police against drunken and insane people, often hard to handle peacefully.

Diaz himself exploded this idea when he told this reporter: "Police can use my glove against radicals and strikers."

Diaz claims the glove can't kill anyone, although the current can be stepped up to 5,000 volts, enough to shock or paralyze any person, and to cause the more jumpy to lose consciousness.

A complete outfit sells for $10 and New York police officials have already praised the weapons and asked for reduced prices on quantity orders. Police in other cities and states, as well as companies which hire their own private guards to break strikes and stop unionization, are expected to buy huge quantities of these electric gloves. They will supplement clubs, guns, horses, tear gas and vomit gas in dispersing strikers.

This invention may bring fame and fortune to Diaz; it means only a new kind of hell to American workers. But it may galvanize the American workers into abrupt action unforeseen by the inventor, or police and thugs users of the gloves.

BEET WORKERS ORGANIZE FINDLAY, Ohio (FP).—Sugar beet field workers in the Findlay area have organized a local of the Agricultural Workers Union.

The newly-elected officers have been instructed to confer with growers for a wage agreement.

Beet workers are offered a contract giving them $10 an acre for blocking, thinning and hoeing beets, and $0.60 a ton for harvesting. They demand $19 an acre flat guarantee—the rate given in the Blissfield, Mich., area. Both areas are controlled by the Great Lakes Sugar Co.

WASHINGTON (FP).—A New York banker, Vice-Pres. J. L. O'Neill of the Guaranty Trust Co., has been given charge of the skeleton NRA, now little more than a research agency. O'Neill was formerly associated for 22 years with Carnegie Steel.

WASHINGTON (FP).—Fewer and fewer people are coming to control more and more of American industry. This tendency has been going on for some time, of course, but the latest figures are now presented in a report on the "Concentration of Corporate Control in American Industry," prepared by the old Research and Planning Division of NRA.

It shows that 100 large corporations control well over a quarter of the general industrial wealth of the country; that the big corporations are coming through the crisis years with their relative position strengthened; and that there is every reason to believe the concentration of corporate control is continuing.

The report quotes A. A. Berle and Gardiner Means, authors of "The Modern Corporation and Private Property," to the effect that the 200 largest non-banking corporations on Jan. 1, 1930, controlled 49.2 percent of all corporate wealth in the United States. In 1931 the percentage of non-financial corporate wealth controlled by the 200 largest corporations had increased to 55 percent.

A study of income tax data for 1931 and 1932 shows that the tendency toward concentration continued, the NRA report states. It assembles figures showing that 16.55 percent of the corporations controlled 52.2 percent of the corporate wealth in 1931, and 15.75 percent of the corporations controlled 53.3 percent in 1932.

Fewer and Fewer Hands Taking statistics on 100 large industrial corporations, the study shows that the percentage of the industrial wealth of the country controlled by them rose from 23.5 percent in 1929 to 26.0 percent in 1932. "There is every reason for believing that 1933 figures, when available, will show a continuation of this tendency," the report states.

In regard to the record-breaking number of business failures in 1931 and 1932, the report points out that these were mostly small firms. "How many others were forced to the wall, no one knows," it declares. "The passing of small businesses did not ripple the pages of the financial press, and went unrecorded."

But while small and medium-sized corporations perished by the thousands, the leading corporations as a group came through virtually unharmed. With some exceptions the relative position of the large corporations was "strengthened because of the holocaust of lesser competitors during 1931-32. Four hundred and eighteen industrial corporations tabulated by Standard Statistics had more cash and United States government securities at the bottom of the depression than they had in 1927."

These 418 corporations controlled 26.5 percent of the cash and equivalent held by 300,000 general industrial corporations in 1927. In 1929 this percentage had increased to 43.7 percent.

Roosevelt Throws Youth a Bone But Slams Labor at Same Time

Roosevelt has dished out a new sop (slop), this time to the youth of the United States. "I have determined," said the President, "that we shall do something for the nation's unemployed youth because we can ill afford to lose the skill and energy of these young men and women. . . . The yield on this investment should be high." The new project proposes, in one of its four points, to provide jobs for about 150,000 youths at $15 a month, "limited to unemployed youths in families that are certified for relief."

A second, and perhaps more obnoxious feature of the project, proposes to "find employment in private industry for employed youth." Employers will be urged to accept youths as apprentices during which a "minimum allowance should be given." In other words, employers, who will probably require little urging, are offered labor at cheaper than full-scale adult wages. Thus, while the first proposal establishes a miserable standard for youth labor, the second is designed to tear down the wage standards of the adult workers.

Other proposals include job-training, and assistance for high-school students whose families are eligible for relief at "80 per month average," and for college students up to 12 percent of the college enrollment, by providing jobs at $15 a month. The latter proposal is a continuation of the FERA system which has now operated for a year, transferring supervision from college hands to government authority.

Only One-Sixth "Benefits" All told, the project is estimated to cost about $50,000,000. This sum is to be administered by the National Youth Administration, over which will preside Josephine Roche, Colorado mine owner and Asst. Secretary of the Treasury. In addition the president is to appoint a National Advisory Committee, "to consist of representatives of labor, business, agriculture and youth."

On Life, Liberty and Pursuit of Happiness

By BILL REICH

Great Minds...

"If there were no aliens in this country there would be no unemployment problem," asserts Representative Dies who is forming an organization to be called "The Americans" for the purpose of carrying on a national campaign to deport 6,000,000 aliens. "Russia has, to all intents and purposes, withdrawn a fertile and populous land of over eight million square miles in extent, with a population of 165,000,000 from the usual economic intercourse with the world. This has upset the delicate economic balance of Europe," proclaims Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., commander of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, in the Hearst press. He advocates aligning ourselves with Nazi Germany "not only for laying forever the ghost of Bolshevism but for opening up the fertile lands of Russia to a crowded and industrially hungry Europe."

Safety...

$150,000 was appropriated for machine guns, floodlights, electrical devices and tear gas for the defense of United States Mints. "Evidently you're looking for an attack by the regular army," remarked Chairman Buchanan of the Appropriations Committee. "You can't tell what sort of an attack will be made," replied W. C. Cram, technical advisor of the Treasury. "We might be attacked by a mob." The New York City Police Dept. requested quotations on a new "electrical glove" to be worn in subduing strikers. The apparatus consists of a battery and induction coil carried on the hip with wires running to the glove. Voltages up to 5,000 can be obtained. Twenty-five 12-year old New York boys were arrested, jailed, shown the electric chair and fingerprinted as part of their instruction in the suppression of crime. After finishing the course they were presented with badges bearing the slogan "Crime Can't Win!"

Blue Eagle...

The National Association of Cotton Manufacturers reports that mills continue to operate in compliance with NRA codes and that its policing unit has had practically nothing to do. One mill was reported to have increased hourly rates. Textile mills in Macon, Ga., have gone back to the 50 hour week with no increase in pay (one back increases granted under the mill requiring employees to pay NRA); millinery manufacturers in Buffalo, N. Y., announce an increase in weekly hours from 35 to 40; workers of the Monzie Shoe Co. in Tennessee are on strike against increasing the shift from 8 to 10 hours; employees of the Ideal Hosiery Co. are striking against a 10 percent wage reduction; two men were killed by deputies in a dispute over wage cutting at the Monarch Textile Mill, Union, S. C. Investigators for the Labor Department found "home work" rampant. Visiting 179 listed employees of the Rhode Island lace industry they found 279 other persons working on the same production, more than a sixth being children. In 75 percent of the cases weekly earnings were less than $10. Anna Schlörer Smith, Philadelphia mayonnaise manufacturer and owner of Blue Eagle No. 13, slashed her throat when her employees struck in protest to an increase in hours to 50 and a cut in wages from $13 to $10 per week.

Housing...

About one third of America's dwellings "are of a character to injure the health, endanger the safety and morals and interfere with the normal life of their inhabitants," reports Edith Wood of the PWA Housing Division after an extensive survey of homes in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. "Housing, public works and other projects on which material costs are relatively high will have to take a secondary place," states the Advisory Committee on Allotments President Roosevelt's four billion dollar relief fund.

Unemployment...

Two thousand hunger marchers from the Canadian west coast are corralled in a concentration camp at Regina, Saskatchewan, to prevent them from marching on Ottawa. Prime Minister Bennett stated to members of the group that there would be no recognition of "Soviet agitators and Soviet committees." "You don't want work," he continued. "You want adventure and hope this organization you are building may overawe the government and break down law and order." FERA colonists at Matanuska, Alaska, complain that they have no houses to live in, food is exorbitantly expensive, schools are not ready, and mosquitoes are unbearable. President Roosevelt announces: "Harry Hopkins and I are considering offering a medal to the State Administrator who causes us the fewest headaches."

A Survey of the Automobile Industry

Detroit and Toledo-Striking Contrast in Organization Methods

moment the "left wing" was nowhere to be found. When the blow came, the men were simply bewildered and stunned. Nobody was on the spot to give them the necessary advice and point the road. The auto-workers protested in the only way they knew how—with their feet.

After that betrayal, the A. F. of L. bureaucrats left the auto workers to the tender mercies of the Automobile Labor Board. When after some nine months meditation, Dr. Wolman at last got around to holding "elections" in the automobile plants and the results showed some 4 percent for the A. F. of L. Green and Dillon got terribly indignant and belligerent. They threatened retribution. Fearing that the ground was just slipping underneath their feet they promised to start a giant organization drive to organize the whole automobile industry.

Dillon Blocks the Road

The organization drive, if it can be honored with that name, just evaporated into thin air. Because the auto workers wouldn't respond? The direct opposite is true. Every "spontaneous" outburst of the auto workers at Murray Body, at Hupp, Kelsey Wheel, the wet sanders in Lansing, was sidetracked by Dillon and referred to some governmental agency. Everyone in Detroit acquainted with the situation knew that the Dillon office feared to organize the men and was deliberately sabotaging all attempts.

The influx of thousands of new young workers of the basic industries in the A. F. of L. and the growth of mighty organizations in the nerve centers of American industry did not signify the corresponding growth and importance of the present leadership, but, on the contrary, heralded their downfall and disappearance from the trade union scene. Apparently the bureaucrats know this very well, and that is why they so assiduously and carefully sabotage every step of the locals themselves.

Good Opportunities Missed

After a year and a half of such experience, the period of easy unionization is definitely ended. Now, something more than small intimation fees and dues are necessary to attract the automobile worker. Still 1935 was an excellent year to start a serious organization drive. For one, 1935 was a "boom" year. More men employed in the industry than at any time since 1929. Undoubtedly the A. F. of L. would have regained major positions in the industry, had it seriously proceeded with its promised campaign.

A triple alliance would have been formed of auto, rubber and steel. The confidence, such a move would have inspired, would have been immense. The men would have returned to the firing line, and a serious offensive could have been launched against the company unions.

These are all the things that might have been done, were the present A. F. of L. leadership seriously concerned about organizing the automobile workers. Instead it did nothing—and when the workers here and there timidly attempted to start organization on their own account, they were ruthlessly and brutally squelched.

That is why trade unionism is at low ebb in Detroit today. These are the "objective conditions" which made it so difficult to stir up the Detroit Chevrolet workers and interest them in the strike in Toledo. After a year of such sterling labor "activity," the A. F. of L. federal locals might have lost all standing in the industry, had another center of attraction existed. At first that seemed to be the direction.

M.E.S.A. Stagnates

The Mechanics Educational Society, which organized the key men of the industry, the tool and dye makers, led brilliant, spectacular battles in almost every plant in Detroit and apparently were destined to sweep the whole field. But after the sell-out of March 25, 1934, instead of pushing on and taking over the leadership in a great organization campaign, it began stagnating. No serious attempts were made to get in production men, its membership slumped and the union was torn by an internal cancer of factional struggle between the various cliques, which paralyzed its activity and rendered it helpless. Unless the M.E.S.A. can cleanse itself—and that in short order, and begin an earnest drive for the production men—it will cease to be an important factor in the industry. All indications point at the present time to the fact that for the immediate future, the A. F. of L. federal unions are destined to be the shell within which the auto workers will organize.

We have spoken previously and we are ready to repeat again the story of the peridy of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy. We can even add: Dillon and Green are deliberately delaying the formation of an International in the automobile industry, for fear that they cannot yet control it; they intend moreover to exclude from such an International the tool and dye makers, the maintenance men and other workers claimed by the various International unions. All this is true, but axiomatic to a revolutionist engaged in trade union work. If we wish, however, to do more than just "expose" the bureaucracy, if we would actually do battle with it and destroy it, we must do more than propagandize; we must extend our organizational base in the auto industry because events have proved, we in the W. P. are the only ones who can do the job. We must fuse our ideas with the workers inside the federal unions, to help them "arm" themselves against their enemies and to organize "pressure" for the calling of a democratically controlled convention to establish an International union and to begin an organization drive by September in preparation for a general strike.

Workers Must Prepare to Strike

All the elemental forces of the industry are again turned loose full force, and are inexorably driving the men onward towards the path of unionism. Bitterness and resentment are accumulating so rapidly, that when the explosion occurs, the Toledo strike will look like a tea-party in comparison.

The workers have had a year's experience with the Auto Labor Board. Some 200,000 of them participated in the A. L. B.'s "elections" and while it was a bitter pill that Green and Collins forced them to swallow we say with confidence: it was not in vain! They have learned more in these last few months of "collective bargaining" than the previous five years put together. In plant after plant, members of the bargaining agencies have clashed with the management and have found that beyond getting a light bulb replaced or a water bubbler repaired—their power did not extend. If their demands were not acceded to, they of course had the opportunity of appealing to Dr. Wolman! Now, their only recourse is... strike, and for that they must have an organization.

So, having passed through the glorious run around of Roosevelt, Wolman, Green, Collins and Dillon, they are back at the starting point, more experienced, more steered and better prepared for the battle.

It is now the duty of the conscious revolutionists not to lag behind, but to be prepared to guide the workers and help them in their coming struggle. This task, of organizing this key industry, the "nerve center" of American economy is the most important and significant one since post-war days, galvanizing the key industries, the opening up a completely new phase in American unionism and the labor movement of this country. If we succeed, our position in the American labor movement is secure and we shall be prepared to lead the workers forward to victory.

A Letter the Daily Worker Dared Not Print

To the Editor of Daily Worker,
50 East 13th Street,
New York City
Gentlemen:

In a Daily Worker editorial of June 17, 1935, we read:

"Joseph Zack and Jack Taylor, the two choice morsels which the Trotskyites fished out of the garbage discarded by the C. P., have been expelled and are now publishing a paper of their own. . . . Any honest worker may be forgiven if he holds his nose!"

This section of the above dated Daily Worker editorial runs true to Stalinist form and method of "discarding garbage" in the form of Daily Worker editorials for the consumption of "honest workers" who "hold their nose!"

You hold it is the policy of the Daily Worker to give the "honest workers" the truth and nothing but the truth—yet you deliberately print a trumped up account of my "expulsion" from the Workers Party of the U. S.

The New York Times gives "all the news that's fit to print" providing they do their own "fitting"; the Daily Worker prints a "fitting" account of Jack Taylor's "expulsion" . . .

Need I say that this "expulsion" is the brain child of the Daily Worker editor? . . . Need it be said that Stalinist brain fever (perhaps clairvoyance with Stalinism as the medium) has produced a picture of Jack Taylor "expelled" from the Workers' Party of the U.S.A. and publishing his own paper? . . .

For the "honest workers" who "hold their nose" against the Stalinist stench known as Daily Worker editorials, let me say the following:

Jack Taylor has not been expelled from the Workers Party of the U. S. and he is not publishing or helping to publish an independent paper.

Finally let me remind you—although you cannot have forgotten this fact—my resignation from the Communist Party was published in the Militant two months prior to my being "discarded" by the C. P. bureaucrats.

Stalinism has now been "discarded" what you call "garbage" for years. Thousands of "discarded" revolutionaries are exiled to Siberia and others held in Stalin's jails. This "garbage" is composed of those Marxists who can see the difference between the Menshevism of Stalin and the Bolshevism of Lenin and Trotsky.

This, gentlemen, is the truth—but to get the truth it is necessary to discard the Daily Worker and to read the New Militant, organ of the Workers Party of the U.S.

—JACK TAYLOR

Plenum of N.C. of W. P. Spikes False Rumors

The June Plenum of the National Committee of the W. P. took note of rumors to the effect that there are leaders and members of the W. P. who advocate that the W. P. should join or merge with the Socialist Party. Occasionally it is necessary to take account of rumor and gossip, no matter how absurd and irresponsible it may be, simply because it is so persistent. Solely on this ground, the Plenum hereby states that all such reports are absolutely without foundation, that no leaders or members of the W. P. advocate or have advocated any such program.

The position of the W. P. on the Socialist Party and the Second International has been clearly and explicitly set forth in the Declaration of Principles adopted at the merger convention last December of the former Communist League of America and the American Workers Party. We repeat it here both because of the intrinsic soundness of the analysis there set forth and because it is the best and simplest way to indicate how incompatible with the basic Declaration of the W. P. is advocacy of a proposal that it should join or merge with a party of reformism and pacifism:

"The Socialist Party is not a party of revolution but of reform and pacifism. The fundamental error of all wings of the party is their false conception of the nature of the state and of the colonial question. From this flow its parliamentary illusions, its notion that the workers can achieve power within the framework of existing state forms, its fetishism of capitalist democracy, its policies of class collaboration, and betrayal of colonial revolts and revolutions. It is affiliated and gives allegiance to a bankrupt Second International, which bears the responsibility for supporting the last imperialist war, and whose leading section, the German Social-Democracy, openly aided the capitalists to suppress revolutionary uprisings of the workers and made possible the triumph of Fascism in Germany. The Socialist Party conducts no struggle against the reactionaries in the trade union movement and important sections of the Party are directly associated with these elements. Though now, as at other periods in its history, the Party contains many militant and leftward moving workers, the powerful right wing elements in the Party openly spurn and combat all revolutionary tendencies. The radical phrases of the centrist wing represented by the 'Militant' leaders serve as a cover for an essentially reformist attitude and a policy of capitulation to the right wing. The Party and the Second International with which it is affiliated therefore serve the purpose of hindering the consistent development of the workers to a revolutionary position. The genuinely revolutionary workers in the Socialist Party can carry out the implications of their position only when they break with the reformists and social patriots and unite with the Workers Party and the New International."

The merger of the former A.W.P. and C.L.A., after more than a decade of splits and disintegration in the revolutionary movement, was in our opinion an historic turning point. The founding of the new party on the basis of the Declaration of Principles was the one possible step toward revolutionary unity. We believe that in ever increasing numbers the vanguard workers who are today in other parties and groups or have no political allegiance will realize with us the crucial importance of breaking with reformism and centristism and unifying the revolutionary forces on the basis of revolutionary internationalism and under the banner of the Fourth International.

Tobin's Union-Busting Drive Against 574—and their Reply

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The Central Labor Union committee has returned from Indianapolis bearing a set of written demands from D. J. Tobin which outline the basis on which General Drivers Local 574 can be reinstated in the Drivers International. These demands bear witness to the ruthless tactics to which Tobin will stoop in his burning desire to get revenge for an imaginary grievance. Here are his demands:

1. That all inside workers be denied membership in the union.
2. That no worker who does not devote at least 51 percent of his time to driving or other actual work on a truck be permitted to be a member.
3. That the ice drivers be in a separate union. That the coal drivers be in a separate union.
4. That the taxi drivers be in a separate union.
5. That all independent truck owners be denied membership in any union.
6. That a new charter be issued on the following basis:

a. All present officers and active members in Local 574 be denied membership under the new charter.

b. All applications for membership be subject to the approval of Tobin. (This would mean that any worker who is even suspected of having taken an active part in the union would be unable to remain a member.)

c. That the Teamsters Joint Council reorganize the local under the direct supervision of a special representative of Tobin.

d. That all actions of the union be subject to the approval of Tobin.

7. That Tobin receive the delinquent per capita tax of Local 574, the amount to be determined by the General Executive Board and to be not less than 50 percent of what Tobin estimates the local owes. (Tobin's estimate, by the way, is almost double the actual amount involved.)

Tobin Program Worse than Bosses

This program was planned deliberately to cut the union up into small helpless units and to strip it of its fighting ability. Tobin does not want a union in his International which has the power of 574. A few unions like 574 and it would be impossible for him to maintain his bureaucratic control which constantly strangles unionization of the truck drivers of the nation.

In this desperate attempt to protect his pie-card, Tobin is putting forward the same program which the Citizens Alliance put forward last summer. Once again he plays into the hands of the employers as he did through his editorial writing during the 1934 strikes. In fact he attempts to go even further than the bosses did. Not only does he deny that the inside workers have a right to belong to the union, but he attempts to confine the membership of the General Drivers to workers who spend at least 51 percent of their time on trucks, and then they can be members only if the truck is used to haul certain Tobin-approved commodities.

After reading the Tobin manifesto to the assembly, Jean Spellman, spokesman for the C.I.U. committee, moved that the report be referred to the Teamsters Joint Council for action.

Slander Used in Election Campaign

At this point several delegates took the floor demanding to know why and how intimate details regarding the Local 574 charter fight had come into the hands of the candidate opposing William S. Brown in the aldermanic race in the third ward. Brown, the president of 574, played a militant role in the 1934 strikes and, in keeping with his fighting ability and instincts, waged a splendid and clean fight in the election campaign. But despite this fine record he was not invited to speak to the assembly on this issue which is of such vital importance to his union.

Moe Hork, a member of the 574 executive board, was denied the floor when he attempted to speak on the tactics employed against Brown in the campaign.

Many delegates took the floor to speak of the great gains which the General Drivers have brought to the entire labor movement. Specific instances were cited, such as the New England construction job where the truck drivers threw their strength into a fight which had begun to appear quite hopeless to the building trades unions.

Travesty on Union Democracy

At this point in the debate, which had by now become very heated, a substitute motion was made to throw the Tobin demands in the waste basket. This motion was later ruled out of order on the grounds that it was a negative motion and could not be voted on.

Delegate Wachter pointed out clearly and completely what a travesty of trade union democracy Tobin's policies represent. He pictured how the overwhelming majority of the delegates were in complete sympathy with Local 574 and showed that the differences of opinion in the matter lay principally in the relative courage of the delegates in determining a course of action. Questioning sharply Tobin's right to the dictatorial powers which he assumes, Wachter proposed that the Central Labor Union appeal Tobin's decision to the convention of the Drivers International and that in the meantime the whole matter be left pending with complete recognition of 574. Wachter was unable to obtain a vote on his proposal.

Threaten Charter Revocations

Speaking for his motion to refer Tobin's demands to the Teamsters Joint Council for action, Spellman told the assembly that, while he was in Tobin's office, Tobin had held a telephone conversation with Green in Washington and that Green had promised full co-operation.

Attempting to get the floor to answer Spellman's statements, Farrell Dobbs, secretary-treasurer of Local 574, was denied that privilege, and the Spellman motion was railroaded through.

An analysis of Tobin's demands shows that the voluntary withdrawal of the present leaders of 574 will not satisfy the lust of D. J. Tobin. He clearly states that he will be satisfied with nothing short of the complete disorganization of the local, the sacrifice of all the gains for which Henry Ness and Jack Belor died, and the expulsion of scores of militant members from the union. Tobin demands more than the heads of the leaders—he demands the complete strangulation of the union.

Reactionaries Meet Defeat

With the matter now in their hands, the Teamsters Joint Council will attempt to carry out the Tobin program. But despite the action railroaded through the assembly, the reactionary bureaucracy was badly defeated.

The issues in the fight are clearly defined, and the progressive thinking delegates are well informed as to the real meaning of this program to the movement. Their sympathies are completely with 574, and they will carry their opinions back to their unions with a recommendation that they continue to support the drivers. The standing of Local 574 will continue to be very high among union men.

Delegate Crowl, business agent of the iron workers, told the assembly that on the army job, and every other union construction job where the ironworkers are employed, if any union refuses to demand that 574 men deliver their materials, the ironworkers will tie up the job.

Local 574 will not give up the gains it has made through the bitter struggles of 1934. The sacrifices made were too great to permit Tobin to so lightly cast aside everything that Local 574 stands for. The membership of the General Drivers is up in arms over this outrage. They recognize the Tobin demands as a twin sister to the vicious propaganda of the bosses.

Local 574 will fight Tobin on every front and defeat his Citizens Alliance program.

Every union, every liberal and radical organization must take a clear cut position in this fight. The workers of Minneapolis must respond in the same splendid manner that they did last summer in the struggle with the Citizens Alliance. Smash all union-smashers! Make Minneapolis a union town!

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

England Ends Versailles Treaty

Hardly one week after the Tories took over the British government the new foreign minister, Hoare, resorted to direct action to resolve the contradiction between the reality of German rearmament and the fiction of the maintenance of the Versailles Treaty. The tripling of the German navy is "legalized" by the Anglo-German agreement. In this fashion British imperialism tries to solve a number of its problems, external and internal. Faced with the possible danger of a new naval race in the North Sea with a resurgent German militarism, British capitalism preferred to make concessions relatively harmless to herself, even if a menace to her former allies. England thus takes one step further in encouraging Germany to seek the salvation of its capitalism by expansion to the East, at the expense of the U.S.S.R. A German navy of the size permitted means the control of the Baltic Seas, hence the possibility of attacking Leningrad safely.

At the same time the English ruling class serves notice to France that the latter had better come to terms also with Hitler and abandon the Soviet Union to its fate. This act makes of the Franco-Soviet pact virtually a scrap of paper, for in that pact France can "legally" be released from its operation in case England and Italy refuse to define the aggressor in the coming war. England is doing everything possible to force France to repudiate the military alliance with Stalin. Internally the British Tories are preparing for the coming general elections. They can point to the naval agreement as being one step in the direction of limitation of armaments, which adds nothing to the British naval budget at the moment. If the Tories are successful in the elections there will be an entirely different aspect of things after the elections. The naval race will then be resumed full speed ahead.

Stalinism Grovels Before Imperialism

The nearer the war of intervention, the more desperately the Stalinists grovel before world imperialism to prove that the Soviets are not really a menace to the bourgeois ruling class. Ambassador Troyanovsky, former Menshevik and fit representative of the corrupt Stalinist bureaucracy, assures America that the Soviet Union under Stalin is merely the continuator of the policies of the Kerensky Provisional Government. And in this he tells the truth. The Stalinists are engaged in erasing every trace of the October Revolution in order to prove their worthiness to exist side by side with reactionary world imperialism. As the preliminary to further concessions to reaction, the Stalinists are proceeding to annihilate physically all Bolshevik oppositionists, past or present. This can only mean a further attack on the working class in the Soviet Union, an added preparation for the betrayal of this working class as well as the world proletariat to bourgeois reaction, solely for the purpose of maintaining in power the reactionary Stalinist bureaucrats.

Only one force stands in the way of Stalin and endangers his "success" in blocking the road to power of the proletariat of Western Europe. That force, still small but growing in influence through the power of its correct Marxist approach to the revolutionary tasks of the working class, is the nucleus of the Fourth International, the inheritors of the militant traditions of the Second and the Third Internationals. To the Stalinists the Fourth International is a greater menace than capitalist imperialism. The next wave of revolution, organized under the banner of the new international, will sweep out of power and into utter oblivion the corrupt bureaucracy that exists only so long as the workers suffer defeats. The venomous hatred manifested by Stalin for the "Trotskyists," the attempt to confuse the workers by slanders and by lumping together the counter-revolutionary imperialist robbers and the Bolshevik-Leninist vanguard—the two extremes of the class struggle—are themselves the recognition that the Stalinists will have to pay for their crimes the moment the workers become aware of them.

The Fourth International alone can accomplish this necessary task of ridding the working class of the poison and treachery of Stalinism. It is the builders of the Fourth International who alone can forewarn the advanced workers against the betrayers who are already sowing the seeds of social patriotism in preparation for the next war. The justifiers of the Franco-Soviet Pact, the lackeys of Soviet diplomacy, are working, in the interests of a privileged clique, to fasten more firmly on the necks of the workers the yoke of capitalism. The Stalinist Defenders of the Soviet Union are ready to become also the Defenders of the Allies of the Soviet Union, the upholders of French militarism. With England already openly tossing aside the Versailles Treaty, the Stalinists are becoming the champions of this treaty insofar as it aids Stalin in his reactionary alliances with capitalist imperialism.

far from this goal. But here comes some good news. The New York party district has pledged itself to raise not less than half of the amount stipulated. And, while these comrades were a bit slow in getting started, they are leaving no pebbles unturned now. Very extensive preparations have been made to make good on the pledge. We shall render regular accounts so that every reader may watch how well this district puts its words into action.

The Boston branch made a preliminary pledge of $53.50 and in accord with the habit it has already established it proceeded to make good right away. Last week we reported $25.00 from Konikow. There was a slight error. It should have been listed to the credit of the Boston branch. In this issue we can report an additional sum of $14.00 for this branch. In other words $39.00 on its account made good already. Of course, the pledge was only a preliminary one.

For the best subscription getters, during the period from July 1 to September 1, the following prizes will be awarded:

Any comrade sending in 10 new yearly subscriptions ($2.00 each), or 20 new subscriptions ($1.00 each) will receive a complete set of Trotsky's "History of the Russian Revolution" in three bound volumes. Any comrade sending in five new yearly subscriptions or 10 six months subscriptions will receive a bound copy of "The Correspondence of Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels."

Of course, these are subscriptions for the eight-page issue only. We shall keep an exact account of all subs received and make sure that the prizes are awarded properly and only to those who reach the goal set during the period stipulated.

In each case we will also change the prizes for an equivalent of any set of books from the Pioneer Book Shop if so desired.

From The Very Beginning

By AL DASCH

The week of July 4th is a fitting one to review some of the revolutionary traditions of the American working class. Class struggles in America did not begin with July 4, 1776. Nor did the first American Revolution solve the contradictions in American society.

The history of this country is replete with class conflicts. From the time of the first indentured and chattel slave down to the modern wage earner an unceasing struggle has taken place between the contending classes. Nor is this strange. For America, almost from the day the colonies were founded, has been subject to the laws of the class struggle. Those who are ignorant of the past, or who deliberately seek to hide and distort its revolutionary traditions may deny this; but the past itself is the greatest living proof of the class battles in American society.

A Legacy of Force

The past has bequeathed the proletariat of today a rich legacy. Revolutionary actions of previous generations hammer home the necessity of revolutionary methods today in order to abolish the ills and ailments of present day society. The lesson they teach is that America was born and matured in violence—that those who struck out for their rights relied not upon "Eternal Truths," but upon the more substantial method of force. It was in this way that the progressive factors in American society were permitted to expand and the basis laid for a social change.

A century before the armed conflict between the colonies and the mother country, England, two of the largest colonies, Virginia and New York, were plunged into the throes of a civil war. These were the Bacon and Leisler uprisings, taking their names from the leaders of the oppressed who headed these revolts. Both met with temporary successes but were later suppressed with the utmost cruelty. The reasons for the rebellions and the severity with which they were put down is given by a member of the then existing Virginia Council. While his description refers specifically to Bacon it fits perfectly the rebels in New York.

The Rebels of Yesterday
"Bacon gathers about him a rabble of the basest sort of people, whose conditions are such as by a change could not admit of worse, with these began to stand in defiance against the government. . . . These are the men that are set up for the good of ye Country; who for ye ease of the Poor will have no taxes paid . . . Would have all magistracy and government taken away & set up one themselves & to make their good intentions more manifest stick not to talk openly of sharing men's estates among themselves."

Heritage of Class Struggle in U.S. History

How familiar is this cry from the lips of a colonial master, to us today?

The American Revolution of 1776 was the class struggle breaking out into the open and taking place by armed means. Underneath the surface of the civil war was, of course, a clash of economic interests. England by a series of decrees was hampering the development of the colonies. The mercantilists (who were the ruling class in England) prevented the establishment of American industries so that their own factories would have a market. They succeeded in passing laws forbidding the colonists to expand westward. They prevented the shipping of American raw materials to other nations and imposed restrictions upon the colonists purchasing goods from other countries. In short the domination of England was becoming a fetter on the growth of the colonies. The interests clashed—civil war was the result.

Suppressing the Poor

For us the heritage of 1776 lies not in the eloquent phrases of the Declaration of Independence or the revolutionary fathers. The Declaration of Independence is violated by the capitalist class whenever their interests clash with those of the working class. As for the leaders of the revolution, they were almost entirely motivated by personal interests and not idealistic conceptions. The revolution did not live up to its fine promises once it succeeded. Witness for instance, the revolt of Daniel Shay, an army colonel, and those he led in an attempt to garner for the workers and poor farmers the promises made to them. Shay and those with him were defeated by an army, especially raised for that purpose. But that action destroyed the myth that the revolution was fought for the inalienable rights of man. Wherein then are the revolutionary traditions?

The revolution broke the domination of the mother country and liberated the colonies. It opened the west for expansion and made possible the unleashing of the productive forces in American society. Besides it set up a republican form of government and gave an impetus to the progress of revolution in Europe. As such, it was progressive and we salute it. The heritage of the inalienable rights of man and the heroic suffering of the soldiers in the colonial armies belong not to the American bourgeoisie who are only too anxious to forget the revolutionary actions of the past, but to the American proletariat who will truly complete the first American Revolution by the establishment of a working class dictatorship.

The bourgeoisie claims that the Revolution abolished the difference between classes and the necessity of strife. But the whole history of America since then is a history of violent clashes between exploiters and exploited. From Shay's Rebellion down to the present day a red thread of revolt runs through American society. Nat Turner's revolt, John Brown, the civil war, the strike years of 1877-78, May 1, Homestead, the large and fierce strikes of the present period, all bear witness to the class conflict raging in the United States.

Marx, in the introduction to the first volume of Capital speaks of the stimulating influences of the American Revolution of the 18th century and the American Civil War of the 19th on European society. The first influenced the course of the Great French Revolution and brought in its train a spread of democratic ideas through Europe. The second helped bring about a series of important reforms in the old world. Who can say that the revolutionary events which will take place in American society in the 20th century will liberate not only the American proletariat but that of the entire world?

hands of the Executive Board including the power to suspend and expel members. The present very limited democracy would be succeeded by a bureaucratic dictatorship of the officers and the Executive Board. The road would be clear for further expulsions of members if they raised any organized objections to these measures or to any policies which the clique sought to pursue.

Effect on Other Unions

If the Administration succeeds in carrying through its program it will give the Green-Wool leadership encouragement in their present campaign to expel the communists from the unions—which is their device for labelling and getting rid of the progressives.

If minority groups can be suppressed in one union, then they can be suppressed in other unions as well. It is to be expected that the reactionaries in other A. F. of L. unions will not be slow in seizing upon similar "reorganization" measures. The demagogical cry will be raised that progressive groups based upon a simple trade union program are taking orders from "outside organizations" meaning by that the working class political parties. The pretext for the suppression of progressive minority groups will have been obtained by the precedent set in the case of the Teachers Union. Thus the investigation of Local 5 acquires significance for the progressive forces in the entire labor movement. It is not an exaggeration that these machinations endanger the existence of the progressive forces.

It thus becomes the duty of the progressives in other unions to come to the assistance of the large militant membership of the Teachers Union in their efforts to preserve the unity of the organization against the Administration splitters.

The "Investigation" Maneuvers

If the Lefkowitz-Linville faction succeeds in its present move to reorganize the Teachers Union, the results will probably take this form:

1) Leaders and many prominent members of the union will be expelled or excluded from the "reorganized" union.

2) The minority groups will be dissolved and legalized. They will be prohibited from holding group meetings, issuing literature and appeals to the membership, presenting motions and resolutions in the name of the groups. They would likewise be prohibited from putting up slates of candidates in the elections or to conduct an organized campaign in behalf of their candidates. The growth of the Opposition would probably be checked for the time being, at any rate.

3) The policy of no membership meetings with power to decide policies would be continued.

4) The Delegate Assembly would be stripped of its present powers to review decisions of the Executive Board; its policy-making powers would be taken from it.

5) All power to determine policies would be concentrated in the

Bolshevik Speaks for Fourth International at SFIO Congress

The following is a summary of the speech of Molinier, for the Bolshevik-Leninist group, at the Mulhouse Congress of the Socialist Party of France:

He explains why some of the members in various sections will vote against the report of the delegates to the Second International.

What is involved here at this time is not the question of approving some points of opposition of the French delegation but of posing here briefly the international problem in all its amplitude.

This is the key question which determines all others, which delineates the political evolution of the tendencies: the crossroad where they meet or divide, a problem which determines their will to carry on a real struggle against war. It is on the international scale what armament is on the plane of the struggle for power.

And this question of the International poses itself again and again every time the question of war or the seizure of power appears in a sharp form. The dilemma: Either "gradual national and international development" or coordinated international revolutionary action.

This difference crops up in all the debates.

Of what value are internationalist phrases if you are organizing for nationalism? At this time only the bourgeoisie acts in concert in the world and when the socialist delegates go to these conferences they act there as hirelings of their bourgeoisie.

Have we an international? That is, have we a coordinated political organization of international struggle? What do those think of the Second International who still have authority in the eyes of the majority of this Congress?

Lebas said at the National Congress on February 29, 1920:

"... The war, as comrade Rafin-Dugens, has so correctly observed, has killed not only men, it has killed wealth . . . one of its corpses, one of its victims was the International. . . ."

"... One must examine the situation created in the Party in all countries and observe more over if we can agree on saying how we can reconstitute it, this International, whatever number we give it. . . ."

"... These, of course, are the reasons why the Federation of the North has decided in almost complete unanimity to propose to the Party to withdraw from the Second International. This, of course is not because we are throwing mud at it but because we very sincerely believe that we can work more effectively for the reconstitution of the new International outside of the old and decadent one rather than by remaining inside it."

Paul Faure at the National Congress, February 29, 1920:

"... We ask, comrades, that the French Socialist party leave the Second International."

"I listened to Renaudel and vainly sought in his speech for decisive reasons which to my mind he did not produce for maintaining our adherence to this organization."

"Our resolution remains unshakable. We became more and more impatient, understanding that from the socialist standpoint the atmosphere of the Second International became absolutely unlivable. . . ."

Since when has it come back to life?

Defeat in Italy, in Germany, in Austria, in Spain, in Belgium, where the former president of the International presides at the imprisonment of striking miners! The corpses are rotting.

The Third International? Let us consider it. It must be said:

It bore the banner of revolution throughout the world.

Did it organize the split? Does it mean to split when one fights for principles?

It degenerated with the degeneration of the Russian revolution; it has seen its death certificate signed by Stalin.

It is now the International whose parties after many zig-zags are becoming the means of national defense in conformity with the fluctuations of the foreign policy of Russia; such a betrayal means placing the official seal upon the tombstone of the oppressed of the entire world.

(Molinier retorted to Dormoy who interrupts him at this point:) "It is only natural that you defend Stalin after he has sunk to your level."

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

Unity of the Second and the Third Internationals?

On what basis? The basis which allows the same class influences, the same games of difference to exist?

Or our basis? Coordinated, joint, action against capitalism, which is concentrated and spirited action driven forward. Never class peace! No theory of socialism in one country.

In the present state of things one must base himself on experience to rebuild the International.

WE MUST BUILD THE FOURTH INTERNATIONAL which means to take into account the life and the death of the others.

In many countries: Holland (R. S.P.-O.S.P.), America (C.I.A.-A.W.P.) unity was achieved on this basis.

All the living forces of the two internationals must be organized on this basis! What about the big parties? Win over the decisive elements.

For that; without subordinating daily action to the creation of the Fourth International, we will group around us on the principles of revolutionary action all the active forces of the Party, and with them pave the way for the Fourth International.

Molinier's speech was for the most part heard in intense silence, interrupted very infrequently and applauded lustily by a small minority of the Congress.

The defense of the Stalinist policy fell upon citizen Grumbach, one of the most active defamers of the Communist International in its best days.

Zack Expelled from Workers Party

Joseph Zack has been expelled from the Workers Party of the U. S. for gross violations of discipline. He wrote to a leading comrade in Minneapolis advising him to violate an N. C. decision on a grave trade union matter in action. He further openly violated party discipline by contradicting and challenging to a debate the Party speaker presenting the Party point of view at an open mass meeting in New York. He has been participating, without any consultation even with the Party, in efforts to launch a paper to be called "Independent Unionist" which has for one of its slogans: "For A New Progressive Federation of Labor." The W. P. has never issued any such slogan; it is contrary to the Party's trade union line. The fact that Zack is now announcing himself as speaker at a public meeting at which he promises to "expose" alleged controversies within the W. P., furnishes additional confirmation of the correctness of the action taken some weeks ago by the Political Committee meeting jointly with the N. Y. District Committee in expelling him from the Party—not for his views which he was given every opportunity to set forth in the regular channels within the Party but for flagrant and persistent disregard and violation of the elements of revolutionary discipline.

Labor Party Confusion

As the Workers Party predicted from the outset, the Communist Party gets into hotter water all the time with its mass-class-not-reformist-not revolutionary but class-struggle Labor party.

There is quite a flurry of Labor Party talk these days among the Old Guard of the Socialist Party and certain trade union leaders, as well as among some sections of the workers. Typical of a good deal of this talk was Sidney Hillman's speech at the Taminant Economic and Social Institute of the S. P. Old Guard recently. "Labor is now looking to the president for leadership," says Brother Hillman. But if "the conservatives in both old parties will not permit the president to carry through the New Deal program" then workers, farmers, etc. will be turning to a new party.

Fervently Brother Hillman prays that such a Party "will not go along the lines of the share-the-wealth groups and advocates of overnight panaceas." He was "particularly bitter," the papers report, in his criticism of liberal and radical critics of the New Deal, Senator Borah, Clarence Darrow, "the left wingers, radicals and college boys."

Thereupon the Daily Worker bursts forth in editorial and cartoon. "But what kind of a Labor Party, Mr. Waldman?" We charge that "the Old Guard of the S. P. and the top bureaucracy of the A. F. of L. are planning a Labor Party in name only." What did the C. P., Browder, Stalin and Co. expect to happen when they came forth with their Labor Party slogan? What could happen other than what has actually occurred—confusion among the workers, a golden opportunity for the bureaucrats and fakery to practice their misleadership, to divert the growing discontent among the workers into the safe channels of a Labor Party?

Yes, editors and cartoonists of the Daily Worker, an "anti-capitalist," not a pro-New Deal party is what the workers need. That can only mean in this period, a revolutionary Marxian party, not an attempt to lead the masses in this country into some replica of the British Labor Party or the German Social Democracy. But the C. P. is no longer a revolutionary Marxian party. It lacks consequently the intelligence and the courage to call the workers to rally under the revolutionary banner. It joins with Hillman and Waldman and others of that ilk in singing the Labor Party chorus. Only it protests that it is singing out of another book!

For a Fighting Auto Union

The announcement by the American Federation of Labor that a convention of Federal automobile locals is to be held on August 29 indicates a triumph for the militants in the industry and at the same time means that they must work more quickly and seriously than ever to organize their forces for a decisive battle with the reactionary bureaucrats of the A. F. of L. The latter would never have consented to a convention at this time had not the conduct of the progressives during the recent Chevrolet-General Motors strike in Toledo and elsewhere, and subsequent to the strike, demonstrated that the latter meant business and would not tolerate further delay in setting up an international. But the bureaucrats will now seek to control the convention and through it the new organization.

The progressives must work to send honest and militant delegates to the convention and to establish at the convention an organization based on democratic control by the membership, not bossed by Green, Dillon, Collins and Co.; an industrial union with jurisdiction over all workers employed in the automobile and auto parts industry; with no discrimination against members or prospective members because of religion, nationality, race, color, or political affiliation; relying not on favors from the bosses or government boards but on the militancy and solidarity of the workers.

The Workers Party now, as for many months past, calls for the most loyal and enthusiastic support of the militant forces in the automobile unions seeking to realize this program.

Italy Prepares Ethiopia Rape

made up chiefly of cotton, sugar, oil, etc. Recently it has been discovered that Ethiopia is probably rich in important natural resources such as gold, silver, iron, etc.

But that which has led to conflict in the past and which is most likely a great contributing factor to the present turmoil is the fact that Ethiopia is completely surrounded by "neighbors" without an outlet of its own to the sea and that in its interior lies Lake Tana from which rises the headwaters of the Blue Nile that water the fertile cotton regions of the British-controlled Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. As close as is possible to give boundary lines without a map, Ethiopia is bounded on the North by Eritrea (Italian); on the East by French and British Somaliland; on the South by Italian Somaliland and the west by the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. France permits the use of its railroad which is Ethiopia's only connecting link with the sea, running from Addis Ababa to Djibouti, a French possession.

Only the other day England was ready to grant Italy a seaboard outlet to the sea through its Somaliland, in an effort to arbitrate the Italy-Ethiopian differences, but Italy balked.

Britain's Stake

England's concern in the matter, its offer for an outlet to the sea and grants of land in Ethiopia proper to Italy—besides its game on the European continent—can be understood only if the strategic importance of imperialist hegemony over the Lake Tana region is taken into consideration. As stated before, it is from this region that rise the waters which makes of British-controlled territory in Eastern Africa so economically valuable a possession. Pacts and agreements have been in existence for decades and only recently it has been reaffirmed that no dams be constructed in the Lake region which might impair the flow of water to its neighboring territory. The gobbling up of Ethiopia by any of the imperialist powers involved would give it a strategic importance in the entire of eastern Africa.

The question might well be asked: how is it that, granting its strategic importance, no power has seen fit to conquer this territory? First, it can be answered, it is not so easily conquerable. Or rather it wasn't. Probably with ultra-modern instruments of warfare, Ethiopia could be licked. It must be remembered that Italy has already suffered a shameful defeat at the hands of these backward tribesmen at the close of the century.

And secondly, and probably most important of all, is the need of keeping a black Christian buffer state to counteract the sentiments of the rest of the native Africans who are Mohammedans. It was just this fact that scotched the ambitions of the Mad Mullah, a number of decades ago, who started a movement to drive the Christian imperialists out of Africa. This undoubtedly the powers, particularly that power which has had the most experience in imperialist conquest, Great Britain, has well understood.

Mussolini's Alibi

The so-called cause for the present conflict is the result of a series of border incidents along Eritrea some months ago. Some Italian soldiers were found dead, killed, perhaps by Ethiopian soldiers. But the facts already brought out prove that these Italian soldiers were killed sixty miles within the Ethiopian boundaries, which if one were to go in for this aggression and aggression business, would certainly prove Italy the aggressor.

Italy used this incident, however, as the nub around which to start long desired operations. Anyhow, it Duce argued, Abyssinia needs civilizing. Italy needs room for its people to expand, a modern power needs colonies and the Italian people need to satisfy a long standing insult to national pride. All of which means Italy wants Ethiopia. But Italy cannot go it alone. At least for any length of time. Britain and France are directly involved. From a little distance so are Japan and Germany. So far France is pretty well lined up with Italy and has been driven even still closer as the result of the Anglo-German naval treaty which France considered an affront. England's efforts at arbitration have so far proved futile. The League of Nations to which Ethiopia has been constantly appealing has merely put the matter off, arguing benignly, that since war on a real scale cannot start until after the rainy season (fall), it would table the matter till then. Meanwhile Italy has shipped thousands of troops and tons of supplies to Africa. In the past few months Italian troops have been laying roads in Eritrea and Italian Somaliland in preparation for war. France, standing by Italy, has barred ammunition from reaching Addis Ababa, which as we have shown above she could well do.

No Help from Litvinoff

In this connection it might have been expected that one voice in the League of Nations would have spoken up in behalf of the impoverished little nation in colonial Africa—the voice of Maxim Litvinoff, who represents the Soviet Union in the League. But not a peep out of him, except to so profusely and slavishly congratulate Sir Anthony Eden for his wise decision to postpone the matter until "after the rainy season" as even to make Sir Anthony blush. In this connection, too, the world is still awaiting the answer to the telegram sent Litvin-off by Mr. Williams, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The telegram reads as follows:

"Why has Soviet Russia, though you as Foreign Minister and President League Council, remained silent Italian-Ethiopian situation? Has Russia abandoned its alleged opposition to imperialism and its much publicized defense of weaker peoples? Does your anti-imperialism stop at black nations? Await your reply."

A war against Ethiopia by Italy will not be a purely African affair, or an Italo-Ethiopian affair. Even if it starts thus, it will not end so. Too many imperialist powers have their fingers in the pudding. The liberal jitters that Mussolini, as usual, is only blustering are false and disarming. It may well prove to be a test of how secure is the inner regime of a modern imperialist power since the abject collapse of the Third International, France's backing of Italy, in light of the Franco-Soviet pact, will compromise the Soviet Union in the eyes of the world proletariat unless a resounding call—which is highly improbable—be issued to the world working class to demand hands off Ethiopia.

England has been drawn closer and closer to Germany in recent days. Hitler's "drang nach Osten" may soon take on fearful reality. Japan is consciously contriving an act of provocation after another against the Soviet Union. While occupied in writing this, a late evening paper brings the news that serious skirmishes are already taking place on the Ethiopian front with "heavy casualties" reported. The next world war looms large on the horizon. More than ever must the working class be prepared.

More than ever must we reaffirm the revolutionary slogans: "Turn the imperialist war into civil war, 'The enemy is in our own country.'"

Spring Makers Strike in N.Y.

Employees of the Kay Mfg. Co. of 22 Warren Street, Brooklyn are on strike. The company did not think profits large enough so it increased hours from 40 to 44. With the increase of hours workers paid by the week received no increase in pay and to show the "fairness" of the company rates for piece workers were reduced 10 percent.

In other words all workers were supposed to work an extra four hours a week for the glory of god, the good of their health, and the bosses' profits.

Only one thing was wrong with this proposition—the 350 workers,

A Reply to Liberal Critics of Bolshevism

The Position of the Workers Party on Proletarian Dictatorship and Worker's Democracy in Light of Recent Events

By A. J. MUSTE

Doubt and discredit are being thrown upon the entire Marxist-Leninist philosophy and upon the revolutionary movement of the working class by the policies of the present Stalin-dominated regime in the Soviet Union. When in connection with the signing of a pact between the S. U. and the Imperialist French government, it is officially stated that "M. Stalin understands and fully approves the national defense policy of France in keeping her armed forces at the level required for security" and when Maurice Thorez, leader of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of France flatly declares: "Now I answer a question that has been put to me: In case of such a war launched by Hitler against the U.S.S.R., would you apply your slogan: 'transformation of the imperialist war into the civil war' (against French imperialism, that is). Well, no! because in such a war it is not an imperialist war that is involved, a war between two imperialist gangs, it is a war against the Soviet Union"—then the enemies of the Workers' State utter the taunt: "There goes your boast that the Workers' State brings a new force into diplomacy, into relations between states, your claim that the working class revolution will put an end to imperialist wars."

Liberals of all shades who had come to have a measure of sympathy for the revolutionary movement as perhaps the one practical instrument for the realization of their ideals are alienated; many of them go back to faith in phantoms like humanitarianism and religion to usher in the reign of peace. Reactionary and conservative trade unionists and Social Democrats who were on the defensive when the Soviet regime and the Communist International were making a clear-cut revolutionary attack on capitalism, imperialism and war, take fresh courage and obtain a fresh opportunity to confuse the workers and to strengthen their hold upon them. Into the hearts of many of the advanced workers strikes an icy blast of disillusionment and cynicism.

Stalin Sows Illusions

That social patriotism fastening itself upon the Second International should betray the workers and lead them to a ghastly slaughter, before they realized what was happening, that is understandable. From such an experience the working class can profit and therefore recover. But if now the International of Lenin succumbs to social-patriotism, calls upon the worker under whatever specious plea to defend the (imperialist) "fatherland," doubt may well arise as to whether there is any way to save the revolutionary movement from corruption and defeat. "If the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted?"

The revolutionary internationalists of the Workers Party in the United States and the parties and groups in other countries which have likewise raised the banner of the Fourth International, have the answer to this problem; and they alone in the working class movement today have an answer. It is not, however, with this phase of the degeneration of the Soviet regime and the Third International that we are primarily concerned here; but rather with a problem closely related to it.

The present regime in the Soviet Union is employing repression and terrorism on a large scale and of a brutal character, not only against those who are the enemies of the Workers' State or those who can with some measure of plausibility be regarded as such, but also against revolutionists who are political opponents of Stalin and his henchmen. It is not necessary here to produce detailed evidence of the fact. The Soviet press itself carries daily reports of severe measures taken against old Bolsheviks, including recently those who have never had any connection with the Trotskyist opposition, for example, as well as against relatives of the men who have never participated in any political activity at all, as witness the case of Trotsky's son, a chemist who was permitted to go on with his work for many years after his father's exile, to which Nathalie Trotsky has recently called public attention.

When organizations such as ours protest against such repressive acts, we are met, and with increasing frequency in recent months, with the argument that protests from us come with poor grace and can hardly expect to get serious attention. We are told that we also believe in the proletarian dictatorship, that we justified acts of terrorism in the period when Lenin and Trotsky were the dominant figures in the Soviet Union, that in our opinion the workers, when they take power in the United States, should take whatever measures may be necessary against those who would desire to reestablish capitalism, and so on. The acts against which we protest are bound to occur under "dictatorships," we are told, regardless of "the kind of dictatorship" which may exist. Only "democracy" such as we have in the United States provides any insurance against them.

Liberals Find a Moral

Thus the most liberal daily in New York, the N. Y. Post, in its editorial columns of June 24, 1935, reasons: "The appeal of Mrs. Nathalie Trotsky in Saturday's Post is recommended to the attention of parlor pinks and Communist 'sympathizers.' It illustrates the evil effects sure to flow from dictatorship, no matter what its alibi—whether on the plea of 'halting Communism' as in Germany or the plea of 'establishing Socialism' as in Soviet Russia. . . . Communism and Fascism are new labels, but the founders of this country knew them under other forms. It was to break the power of a Tory King and to prevent the recurrence of similar despotism in this country that the founders of this country set up the safeguards of the American Constitution, the world's oldest and still the world's best. . . . Communists oppose the Hitler dictatorship but they condone the Soviet dictatorship. Trotsky opposes the dictatorship of Stalin but he would like to substitute for it the dictatorship of Trotsky. The case of Trotsky's son demonstrates what happens under any kind of a dictatorship—whether Left or Right. . . . the use of suppression necessitates ever more suppression until rising resentment, deprived of peaceful vent, overthrows the regime. That applies to Russia under Communism as it applies to Germany, Austria and Italy under Fascism. Democracy will yet survive them all."

In one of the closing chapters of "Russia's Iron Age," the much discussed book by the brilliant foreign correspondent, William Henry Chamberlain, long regarded as one of the most devoted and effective journalistic "friends of the Soviet Union," there is a very moving presentation of the same point of view: "One among many points of faith common to apologists of Communism and of Fascism is an overweening contempt for civil liberties, which are represented as unnecessary and inconvenient barnacles on the ship of progress. The longer I have lived in the Soviet Union, where civil liberties—freedom of speech, press, assembly, and election—are most conspicuously lacking, the more I have become convinced that they are of vital and tremendous importance, and that their existence or absence is as good a test as any of the quality of a nation's civilization. The Communist (or the Fascist; their trend of thought in this question is strikingly similar) talks of civil liberties as of the outworn fetish of a handful of disgruntled intellectuals who are unable to rise to the necessary vision of the high and noble character and purpose of the Communist (or Fascist) state. But my own observation in Russia has led me to believe that a great deal more is at stake than the freedom of thought of the educated classes, although it seems rather obvious that culture becomes impoverished when the historian must alter his record of the past, the author must give a prescribed coloring to his characters, and free research in any field can be cut off by the will of an all-powerful state."

In the Ukraine

"It was during my trip through the famine regions of Ukraine and the North Caucasus that I became utterly and definitely convinced that democracy, with all its faults, weaknesses and imperfections, is enormously superior to dictatorship as a method of government, simply from the standpoint of the common man. Is there any recorded case in history where famine—not poverty or hardship or destitution, but stark famine, with a toll of millions of lives—has occurred in a democratically governed country? Is it conceivable that the famine of 1932-33 could have taken place if civil liberties had prevailed in the Soviet Union, if newspapers had been free to report the facts, if speakers could have appealed for relief, if the government in power had been obliged to submit its policy of letting vast numbers of the peasants starve to death to the verdict of a free election? The countless graves of the humble and obscure famine victims, the peasants of Ukraine and the North Caucasus, of the Volga and Central Asia, are to me the final grim, unanswerable refutation of the specious Communist contention that freedom of speech and press and political agitation is only humbug by which the bourgeoisie tries to delude the masses."

For good measure, and in order to emphasize the frequency with which the same tune is heard in these days, we may quote from the leading article in the June issue of Harper's Magazine by Johan J. Smertenko: "John Howard Lawson finds Alabama in the grip of a fascist 'terror' because he and a lawyer of the International Labor Defense were placed momentarily under 'illegal arrest' and six Communists, also freed after trial, 'are in daily and hourly danger of whipping, torture, and possible death.' But he is unmoved by the thousands, slaving in the timber camps of the Arctic region because they will not forswear their religion, who pray for death as a release from their torture."

"Elmer Rice and Paul Sifton cry out dramatically against the soulless industrial system of America and glory in the industrialization of the mujik. The bread-lines of disorganized capitalism stir Edmund Wilson to eloquent rage, but the bread lines of bureaucratic communism are accepted as a necessary expedient in technological development. The peripatetic John Strachey deplores from some thirty lyciums and a half-dozen periodicals that 'freedom of speech is abused by capitalists in this country,' whereas in Russia it is merely 'incomplete,' since the inviolate censorship and ruthless suppression are exercised only against 'the remnant of capitalists who wish to see the return of their system.' (Among the capitalists are the dead or exiled authors: Andreyev, Artzbashev, Bunin, Korolenko, Kuprin, Merezhkovsky, Tolstoy, and, of course, Trotsky.)"

"Thus too Walter Duranty, whose complacent dispatches in the Times contrasted the Nazi blood-purge with Lenin's treatment of the 'opposition,' has been eloquently silent about the outblutted imprisonment and summary executions of the Trotsky-Zinoviev-Kamenov faction. And Waldo Frank, whose burning protests against Kentucky violence almost scorched the pages of the liberal weeklies, does indeed 'speak in a monstrous little voice' of these official murders: 'I realize that the peoples of Russia have their own background and that it is utopian to expect them, because of their heroic prosecution of a great social cause, to behave in every instance according to our own rules and ideals. . . . In so far as it (Russia) appears, even to contradict justice at home, it is harming the cause of justice abroad. From the standpoint of this high strategy, if from no other, I deplore the recent executions.'"

Answer of Workers Party

Whether or not they are personally disturbed by such questions, revolutionists in the U. S. will have to meet them. If the reactionaries and liberals between them, making use of Stalinist policies and actions, can make the American workers believe that, as over against capitalism, Communism means repression, regimentation, less freedom, personal dictatorship, etc., a formidable barrier against revolutionary progress will have been erected. We of the Workers Party have to defend the assertions of our Declaration of Principles: that the policies of "socialization of the means of production and exchange" which the Workers' State will pursue "insures only the small handful of financiers, landlords and industrialists whose private control of the resources of the country is the source of hunger, unemployment and insecurity for the great bulk of the people," that every willing worker can be assured of "a well-paid job," security against unemployment, and insurance against industrial risks, old age, and sickness; that there "will be no need for the Workers' State to impose arbitrary and repressive measures upon small individual proprietors and farmers;" that the Workers' State while functioning as a dictatorship of the working class against its enemies will assure and continually extend "far more genuine and substantial democratic rights to the masses than ever accorded to them under capitalism."

men and women, old and young, did not like it and they walked out on strike 100 percent. They placed a picket line in front of the plant and the rest of the strikers camped on the street nearby. The plant is tied up tight as a drum.

The need for a trade union which previously had been agitated for by some was now apparent to all. The strikers sent a committee to see Wm. Collins, eastern representative of the A. F. of L. Collins gave them his good wishes and referred them to the Industrial Relations Board. The Board sent a representative who appealed to the non-existent heart of the boss.

The workers committee called up the Central Council of Federal Labor Unions. That was 15 cents lost in phone calls, though Mr. Ravitch, secretary of the Council, was mildly interested.

The strikers, still determined, sent a delegation to the Bronx where the Kay family has another factory. Here a representative of the International Upholsterers Union at both plants are signing up with this union.

The spirit of the strikers is excellent. New to labor unions, they were able to get themselves organized, established a picket line, elected picket captains, arranged a regular hourly relief of pickets, etc.

One worker was arrested in connection with an injury received by a scab truck driver. His release was immediately secured by a strikers' delegation. The plants manufacture springs and spring mattresses. Wages are miserably low and the workers are determined to go back on a 40-hour week with previous rates of pay and a union to back them up.

Bone to Youth Blow to Labor

to "benefit" from this new scheme. According to Labor Department statistics, there are, however, 3,000,000 unemployed youth, which estimate is "considered conservative" by the New York Times. Using this figure, which actually must fall severely, million short of reality, 2,500,000 youth are automatically obliged to shift for themselves.

"More than one third of the high-school and college graduates between the ages of 18 and 29 were unemployed in July, 1934," says the Labor Department. How many have become unemployed since? How many non-graduates are unemployed? A canvass conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the spring of 1934 "found that out of every 100 employable persons between the ages of 16 and 24, 34 were unemployed, as compared with an average of 21 for all age groups." (Labor Information Bulletin, May, 1935.)

posed to "do something for the nation's unemployed youth" is somewhat answered in Senate Resolution No. 67, January 30, 1935:

"One of the most tragic results of the depression is the effect it has upon the lives of young men and women emerging from our educational institutions. There are several million young people between the ages of 18 and 30 who have graduated from our schools and colleges and entered into a work-world where no opportunities have been open to them to obtain a start in business or to commence the practice of their profession. This large group may become demoralized and disheartened and thus constitute a dangerous addition to the discontented and radical-minded elements and also offer a challenge to the system which permits the minds and ingenuities of its youth to be wasted."

The National Youth Administration was therefore created to stem this rising discontent against a "system which permits the minds and ingenuities of its youth to be wasted." The National Youth Administration was therefore assigned the task of regimenting the youth into channels of patriotic devotion. Moreover, election time and maybe war is coming. That then is the yield Roosevelt expects. Unfortunately for the system and those who starve because of it the sop is hardly enough to assuage the needs or discontent of the youth.

A Blow at Labor The millions of youth, the few who have been offered a starvation pittance and the many more who have been completely ignored, have been presented a challenge that can only be met with further "dangerous addition to the discontented and radical-minded elements." Their problem is more than a youth struggle. The essence of the Roosevelt plan strikes a blow at the wages and jobs of all workers. It aims to reduce the American working class to a lower standard of living, and further penury. It must therefore be met, not as a youth affair, but as the concern of the whole laboring mass.

With the support of the adult workers behind them, the youth of the United States must demand, in united ranks: trade union wagescales; regular jobs with a five-day week and six hour day; adequate provision for support while attending academic and training schools; settlement houses in the cities for homeless youth under civil and youth supervision; unemployment insurance; the right to vote at the age of eighteen. The next step is to destroy that system which wastes "the minds and ingenuities of its youth," to join the "radical-minded elements"—the Spartacus Youth League.

Mooney Wins New Hearing

State Confesses to Destruction of Evidence

SAN FRANCISCO.—The California state supreme court has consented to hear new testimony through a referee on Sept. 3 to prove that Tom Mooney is innocent of the crime for which he has spent 19 years in San Quentin prison.

The court made this concession when Mooney's attorneys, on behalf of the famous labor prisoner, asked a writ of habeas corpus.

Attorneys John Finerty of Washington, D. C., Frank P. Walsh of New York City, and George T. Davis of San Francisco unsuccessfully tried to force the court to produce Mooney for the hearing. The lawyers held that the court could not waive Mooney's right to be present, but the judges asserted that it is an unwritten law of the court that the petitioner does not have to appear personally in a habeas corpus proceeding.

"If, in the future, Mooney's presence is necessary, he will be brought here and all his rights safeguarded," Chief Justice Waste said.

Over strenuous protests of the three lawyers, the court refused to sit to hear the testimony. A special referee will be appointed for this purpose. Testimony will take three weeks, Mooney's attorneys asserted.

"This court, in light of its past rulings, is going to have to reverse itself to hear our evidence, and therefore the whole court should hear the case," Finerty contended.

State Destroys Evidence

The state, in effect, confessed that it had destroyed some of the most vital defense evidence. When Mooney's lawyers asked that the state be directed to bring to the September hearing the negatives of the pictures which showed Tom and Anna Mooney on a roof a mile from the scene of the crime, the answer came: "The negatives have disappeared."

During the arguments before the court, Atty.-Gen. William Cleary reiterated former statements to the effect that the state will oppose Mooney's release even if perjury is proven.

"Mooney must prove not only perjury, but that it was committed with the knowledge and connivance of the state officials," was Cleary's assertion.

Finerty jumped to his feet with the statement:

"Two years ago, in Mooney's trial on an indictment remaining against him, Matthew Brady, district attorney of San Francisco, admitted the witnesses in Mooney's first trial had been impeached as perjurers. For the state to admit that it was not bound by that admission will bring down upon the attorney general of California another castigation at the hands of the U. S. Supreme Court."

Finerty and his associates said that they have 18 witnesses to give testimony. Two of the most important witnesses are seriously ill, and will testify only through depositions. They are John McDonald, waiter, who has admitted he perjured himself when he placed Mooney at the scene of the 1916 bombing, and F. E. Rigall, who can prove that Frank Oxman, now dead, who was one of the main witnesses against Mooney and Billings, perjured himself.

Wagner Bill Ignored in Akron

AKRON, Ohio, July 8.—Enactment of the Wagner strike-breaking labor disputes bill provoked little attention among rubberworkers here, even conservatives realized it was but a futile gesture of the government to pretend having an interest in labor's welfare.

Strong company unions at Goodrich, Goodyear and Firestone continued to exist without a murmur of protest from the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. Meanwhile uncertainty was evident among union workers over progress towards establishing an international union as Washington A. F. of L. headquarters withheld word, for no apparent reason, of a convention call.

Old Guard Pounds Militants As Socialist Party N.C. Meets

The National Executive Committee of the Socialist party is convening for its quarterly meeting in New York, July 13-15.

The most important point on its agenda is the report of the "Committee of Inquiry and Mediation," appointed at the last meeting to solve the internecine struggle in New York City.

The N.E.C. is exiled to the Bronx or Queens, the City Central Committee, under control of the right wing, having refused to act as host to their national leadership.

This meeting takes place one year after the national convention at Detroit, when the Milwaukee machine of Mayor Hoan, the "Chicago left," the New York "Militant" group, and Norman Thomas' followers made a horse-trading combination which captured the N.E.C. The theoretical excuse for this capture of power was the passage of a Declaration of Principles which, couched in deliberately ambiguous phraseology, enabled the "Militants" to claim it was a "revolutionary document," while Norman Thomas and Dan Hoan could assert it was traditional socialism.

Old Guard Position Clear

The Old Guard will have no centrist ambiguities, but demands a frank avowal of unashamed loyalty to the capitalist state and its democracy. The Old Guard served notice at Detroit of war to the death against the Declaration and has carried on its fight with principled intransigence, refusing to accept any of the compromises offered it by the N.E.C. Systematic expulsions of left wingers, in New York and upstate; lifting of charges of anti-Old Guard locals; enough to secure a majority of the City Central Committee; forcible expulsion of the New York branches of the Young People's Socialist League from their headquarters in the Rand School and the organization of a rival youth organization under Old Guard leadership; systematic onslaughts in the Forward and the New Leader; alliance with the most corrupt A. F. of L. bureaucrats to put pressure on the N.E.C. (the United Hebrew Trades, for example, passing a resolution denouncing the Declaration of Principles); organization of inter-state conferences of Old Guard state organizations to set up programs in competition with the N.E.C.—in these and a hundred other ways the Old Guard has hammered away, like a battering ram, against their opponents.

Under this steady barrage, their opponents have offered one shameful compromise after another, and when their proposals have been thrown back in their faces, have retreated still further. The Old Guard has given to the capitalist press a series of statements declaring their refusal to abide by the convention decision on the Declaration of Principles. When the convention decision was supplemented by a referendum which gave a majority for the Declaration, the Old Guard merely reiterated its stand.

The answer of Norman Thomas and Dan Hoan was . . . to propose to have the N.E.C. make changes in the Declaration! When, "after agreement was almost reached," as Norman Thomas recently revealed, the Old Guard refused to compromise and continued to violate the party's principles, Thomas and Hoan decided to act. They . . . "appointed a committee to consider suggestions of changes well in advance of the next convention of the Party so that the matter may be adjusted with as little dispute as possible" (Thomas)!

Then, at the last meeting of the N.E.C. instead of carrying on a struggle against the Old Guard, they appointed a committee to MEDDLE between the slugging Old Guard and the battered left.

Heavy Prison Terms Given to Group of Polish "Trotskyites"

GENEVA (ICL).—Information has just been received here that at the beginning of the month of May, nine persons, accused of belonging to the "Trotskyist" organization, were brought to trial in Warsaw. Without any proofs submitted, they were condemned to especially severe prison terms: one woman to five years in prison, three of the accused to four years, and three to three years each.

The attorney general of the republic, in his act of indictment, dwelled on the character of "Trotskyism" which he described as much more dangerous than official communism which merely wants to "defend the U.S.S.R.," whereas the "Trotskyists" "aim at inflaming the entire world." It's above all on this point that the big press dwelled in its court reports.

Workers' Security Bill Drafted By Nat'l Unemployed League

A BILL

To limit the hours of labor, to provide additional appropriations for public works, and for the relief of the unemployed and to establish a system of unemployment and social insurance.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled that the maximum hours of labor of those employed by the government of the United States, state, county, municipal and other governmental units in the United States and of those employed for wages by an employer in industry, mining, transportation, agriculture, domestic, technical, clerical and professional service, and all other occupations, shall be 30 hours per week.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted that the sum of 10 billion dollars be appropriated for the purpose of carrying forward a program of public works.

(1) The monies available or to be appropriated for the purposes of this bill shall be expended within one year from the date of its enactment.

(2) The objects for which the money available or to be appropriated under this act shall be spent shall be the provision of modern low rental homes; an up to date, fully equipped county hospital in every county; modern libraries and recreational centers in every city and county; rural electrification; and elimination of grade crossings.

(3) No monies available or to be appropriated under this act shall be spent for military or naval purposes.

(4) The hours of labor under all projects established under this bill shall be not more than 30 per week.

(5) The compensation of all those employed under the provisions of this act shall be not less than $30.00 per week and the prevailing union rate of wages wherever said rate exceeds $30.00 per week.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted that the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the immediate establishment of a system of unemployment and social insurance for the purpose of providing insurance for all workers and farmers unemployed through no fault of their own in amounts equal to average local wages. Such insurance shall be administered by workers and farmers and controlled by them under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in conformity with the purposes and provisions of this Act, through unemployment insurance commissions composed of the rank and file members of workers' and farmers' organizations. Funds for such insurance shall hereafter be provided at the expense of the Government and of employers, and it is the sense of Congress that funds to be raised by the Government shall be secured by taxing inheritance and gifts, and by taxing individual and corporation incomes of $5,000 per year and over. No tax or contribution in any form shall be levied on workers for the purposes of this Act. In no case shall the unemployment insurance be less than $10 per week plus $3 for each dependent.

U. S. Aids Terror of Mendieta

Brutal Regime Slays and Jails Scores of Workers

Right on the heels of the deportation of the liberal U. S. delegation from Cuba comes the sensational report, printed herewith, of assassination, wholesale arrests and horrible persecution of workers and revolutionists by the militarist regime of Cuba. This reactionary clique, emulating "Butcher" Machado, has suppressed all trade union and political organizations and prohibited the right of free speech, press and assembly. This terror proceeds with the open support of the Roosevelt Administration through its Ambassador Jefferson Caffery.—Ed.

By R. S. DE LA TORRE

The proletariat of Cuba is today confronted with a situation in many ways similar although more difficult than in other colonial or imperialist countries. The government of Mendieta which rose to power under the pressure of the United States Ambassador, Jefferson Caffery, has been converted into a most efficient instrument of imperialist oppression. In order to accomplish this destructive mission against the aspirations of the oppressed masses, the government has organized the largest oppressive machinery ever known in Cuba, under the leadership of Batista, commander of the army. It extends over every inch of the country, from the large cities to the most remote sugar plantations.

The army of Cuba (a country that has no national frontiers) reaches the exorbitant numbers of 18,000 soldiers, with a budget of $18,000,000 which is in effect a greater expenditure per soldier than any country in either Europe or America. To this we have to add a few thousand more technical and secret intelligence service men, devoted exclusively to political persecution of all those persons and organizations opposed to the government. Apart from this there is the urban police, controlled by the municipal government, which is a mere department of the general staff of the army, cooperating loyally in the persecution of all the oppositionists. As a general rule, the soldiers as well as the police, are recruited from the most degenerated social strata, from the lumpen proletariat of the cities and the hungry peons of the countryside. They are paid very generously and given all kinds of privileges, thus assuring their unconditional submission to the government.

In order to round out the oppressive apparatus, directed essentially against the working class, they have created Emergency Tribunals, which judge all matters of a political nature. These tribunals have

Thrift Pays

Little Diana Didn't Save A Dime But Inherits $30,000 A Year

NEW YORK.—It pays to work hard and be thrifty.

Fourteen-year-old Brenda Diana Duc Frazier of New York can tell you that—and she can tell you that she has never had to work or think of pennies and dimes. For her mother, who's the divorced wife of a big banker, has just received an approved order from a surrogate's court for expenses for little Brenda Diana.

Forty-five thousand dollars is all she gets to spend in the next 18 months. Her dresses will cost her $5,500; she'll be able to get by on her vacation if she spends her $5,250 carefully; and on $900 for music lessons she may be able to pick up a tune or two.

Only one item is really small and economical. Brenda will spend just $375 for Christmas presents and charitable contributions!

Powers Yield to Italy's Aggression in Ethiopia

Shall Ethiopia Perish?

Against Italian Fascism, Negroes Are Fighting Battle of World Proletariat

The devouring flames of war are burning on two continents. In Northern Asia, the troops of Japanese imperialism continue their relentless drive to the west and the south in order to assuage the ruling caste's rapacious appetite for an empire in Siberia and China. Afraid of bringing to its feet a powerful people's movement that might mean its own end, the pitiable Chinese bourgeoisie dampens the ardor of resistance of the masses and retreats precipitately before the Japanese invader.

And now the plains and mountainsides of Ethiopia are being approached as the scene of the Fascist war upon the last of even semi-independent countries on the African continent. Tens of thousands of Mussolini's troops, equipped with the most modern machinery of warfare, are on the march against the Ethiopians, determined to subdue them as once Eritrea and Somaliland were subdued—to accomplish now with the Fascist legions what they failed to do in the war upon Abyssinia towards the end of the last century.

The invasion is now generally recognized as inevitable. All talk about conciliation, about a peaceable settlement of the dispute, has been nothing more—it is now clear—than so much verbiage behind which Mussolini was taking all the measures necessary to dispatch to Africa an army which, when it reaches its full strength, will number some 200,000 men. From the Netherlands comes the official announcement that the Italo-Ethiopian Conciliation Commission has finally decided to adjourn its sessions indefinitely, after having met for two weeks, without coming to a conclusion. The whole matter is now referred to . . . the League of Nations.

And the League of Nations? What is to be expected from this "great instrument for peace"? Approximately the same result that was produced by it in the case of the war in the Gran Chaco; approximately the same result that was produced by it in the case of the appeal of ravished China against the brutal invasion by Japan.

For years the League of Nations has been advertised to the world as the only, "even if not entirely satisfactory" agency for the preservation of world peace. Each time it encountered a situation which brought new discredit upon it, it took care to take some new action which would restore its failing credit in the eyes of the masses. For a time, the assembled imperialist bandits covered their bristling armor with the solemn pledges of the Kellogg Pact which "renounced" aggression as an instrument of national policy. Where is the Kellogg Pact today—the pact to which both Italy and Ethiopia were signatories? A scrap of paper, a fraud, a deception.

3 Leading Members of North Dakota C.P. Resign; Join W.P.

Fresh evidence of the revulsion of revolutionary workers to the latest acts of treachery by the Stalin bureaucracy is contained in the statement of resignation of three leading militants in the North Dakota District from the Communist Party. Excerpts from their statement quitting the C. P. and joining the Workers Party are printed below.—Ed.

Flaxton, N. D.
Workers Party of U. S.
New York City
Comrade:

We have finally become convinced after due and careful investigation and mature consideration of all the facts that the Communist Party of the United States, and the Third International dominated and constituted as it is now, cannot and will not organize and lead the workers of this country or the world, for or to the seizure of power and the building of socialism on an international basis. Another vanguard party of the proletariat must be organized and built by the workers and farmers of this country.

For that task, and we are convinced after careful and mature consideration, that the Workers Party of the U. S., already organized by honest and capable revolutionists, and now functioning, is such a vanguard party of the working class, that can and will organize and lead the workers of America for the seizure of power and the building of socialism on an international basis. And being fully convinced of the necessity of the establishment of the Fourth International to organize and lead the workers of the world on an international basis, as advocated by the Workers Party and other groups of revolutionists in other countries with which it is affiliated, we withdrew our membership in and severed our connections with the Communist party, U.S.A., section of the Communist International, and submit our application for membership in the Workers Party of the U. S. and agree to submit to its discipline and to support the party to the best of our abilities. We call upon all honest and sincere revolutionists to follow our example.

We feel that we owe it to our former comrades and associates in the C.P.U.S. to state frankly, that we arrived at the decision stated above, after due and careful investigation and mature consideration, being fully aware of the implications and results. This decision is based upon the open and plain repudiation and betrayal of the world revolution, of internationalism by the Communist Party of the U.S.S.R. under the domination of the Stalin leadership and bureaucracy. . . .

Then follows a condemnation of the ruinous theory of "Socialism in one country," and its destructive results throughout the world—from China through to Germany and culminating with the Stalin-Laval communique. It concludes with the following statement:

"These successive acts of betrayal by the Third International and the C. P. of the Soviet Union, forces the necessity and justification for the steps we have taken."

Il Duce Moves For Conquest In September

'White Man's Burden' Alibi for Fascist Exploitation

By MARTIN A. GLEE

The situation with regard Ethiopia grows more tense daily. Whereas it could be stated a few days ago that Italy's penetration into the kingdom of the Negus would not start until October; today reliable reports have it that operations will more than likely begin a month sooner.

As the usually well-informed Mr. Frederick T. Birchall of the London bureau of the Times puts it:

"The last hope of averting a military attack by Italy upon Ethiopia faded out today." His reference is to the fact that the meeting of the conciliation commission appointed by the League of Nations broke up when the Italian delegation refused so much as to listen to the statements of the Ethiopian delegate who insisted on establishing the fact that Cal Ual, the scene of the first clash, was within Ethiopian territory.

Il Duce Ready for Action

So far as Italy is concerned the negotiations are over and dead. Il Duce is now completely occupied with the strengthening of his forces in Africa, building his army up to about 250,000 (already about 150,000 Italian soldiers are encamped in Eritrea and Italian Somaliland). Moreover, Italy is compelled to prepare a sufficient water supply for drinking purposes, provision its African commissaries with food and medical supplies and continue road improvements for military purposes. For this she is compelled to wait a month or two longer. Besides, the rainy season will not begin subsiding until the early fall.

All of which means that Italy is prepared to strike now. The reply of Washington to the Ethiopian note was grist to Mussolini's mill. The apparent change of front on the part of England, in reconciling herself to the Italian adventure, can possibly be explained by the fact that Italy has assured Great Britain that it will not deflect the waters of Lake Tsana toward its own territory and that it is ready to assume treaty obligations to that effect.

Wants Only a "Crumb"

Italy will probably attempt to connect its colonies bounding Ethiopia on the north and south, by building a railroad and highway across the Ethiopian kingdom. This will greatly facilitate Mussolini's "civilizing" invaders reaching the capital, Addis Ababa, and taking complete control. Few more callous exhibitions of imperialistic methods of conquest could be cited unless one were to go back to the Boer War. One of the jingles for the Italian Fascist press puts it neatly and unhypercritically when he declares that "justice would require Britain, possessing the world's greatest colonial empire, to stand aside when Italy attempts to obtain a small crumb left over from Britain's gargantuan meal."

The "small crumb" is Ethiopia. Despite the hypocritical talk of Washington that it expects the matter to be ironed out between the parties involved and that it sees no cause for alarm, Cornelius Van H. Engert, a shrewd expert of U. S. imperialism in the Far East has been shipped from his post in Egypt to become Charge d'Affaires and Consul General at Addis Ababa.

The question of Ethiopia comes up in the next day or two in the House of Commons in London. France is still standing by Italy. Germany and Japan look on with hawk-like attention.

The backward colonial country of Ethiopia stands like a sparrow with clipped wings surrounded by hungry cats on all sides and its one friend whom it has a right to rely on, the Soviet Union, does nothing because of a conservative bureaucracy at its top. Litvinov, in the League of Nations, remains silent!

On Life, Liberty and Pursuit of Happiness

By BILL REICH

Relief . . .

An FERA survey of Baltimore's 1550,000 unemployed showed only 8 cases where people refused to work "without legitimate reason," this phrase applying to men who refused to scab and to those who refused to work at less than union rates. . . . An ad for a salesgirl in a New York evening paper attracted 1,000 applicants by 6 A.M. the following morning. By 3 o'clock the crowd was so dense that the plate glass store front gave way. . . . Berry growers complain that the unemployed will not go to work. In North Carolina the highest average net earning of berry pickers is 33c a day. Workers are quartered in barns in most cases entirely lacking in sanitary facilities, twenty persons eating and sleeping in one room. . . . General Hugh Johnson, recently appointed relief administrator for New York City, states his views: "Whenever a worker gets a chance to take a private job, even if it pays less than he is getting on relief, he should be made to take the private job." . . . E. P. Hurlburt, Oklahoma oil magnate, has banned from employment in his refinery anyone who has ever accepted relief. . . . In Oregon single men are forced to live in camps and work on public projects for maintenance and one dollar a week spending money. . . . Sixty-five year old Clark Fancey, on relief in Little Rock, Ark., could not eat the canned beef provided her because she had no teeth. Relief officials found her a job with a dentist where she could "work out" a set of false teeth. . . . Using an "attitude test," Dr. E. A. Rundquist of Minneapolis found that the average person on relief felt no inferiority complex but that his economic position bred radicalism. . . .

Imperialism . . .

Mussolini's war with Abyssinia is scheduled to begin when the rainy season ends. Meanwhile he is collecting insults to justify it. "Italy needs room for expansion," says he. . . . In spite of every encouragement, Italy's birthrate has declined steadily during the past ten years. . . . Great Britain protests that health conditions in Liberia (literally a U.S. protectorate) are so bad that it is a source of infection for the rest of Africa. Monrovia, the capital, is overrun with rats and bubonic plague which is kept from spreading only because the city has no harbor. Government officials raid the interior for slaves which they sell to Spanish and French provinces. Harvey Firestone gave the nation a brief period of prosperity by hiring natives at 25c a week on his rubber plantations. . . . The United States Senate passed a bill which makes it illegal to pursue, shoot, shoot at, kill, capture, trap, collect or otherwise willfully molest or disturb the American Eagle. . . .

Patriotism . . .

In the Revolutionary War 4,044 Americans lost their lives; 4,290 people were killed celebrating the Fourth of July in the last 30 years. . . . The Illinois Senate Committee investigating allegations that students at the University of Chicago were subjected to subversive teachings dismissed the charges but accused Prof. Robert Morse Lovett of being "unloyal to the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States" because he engaged in activities in defense of civil liberties. His only son was killed in the battle of Belleau Wood. . . . Chicago newspapers were filled with reports of the investigation which was inspired by Walgreen, the drugist. Not a word was said about Court Case 22585 against the Walgreen Drug Co. for adulterating medicines and tonics. The company was found guilty. . . .

Commerce & Industry . . .

To boost trade the British Association of Cotton Manufacturers announced at a trade luncheon that the Prince of Wales wears cotton underwear. Wool manufacturers countered with the information that King George wears "woolies" bought by Queen Mary. . . . California prunes are graded according to the following sizes: medium, large, extra large, mammoth, giant, jumbo, colossal, and super-colossal. . . . Cheese manufacturers in Wisconsin were successful in obtaining a law requiring two thirds of an ounce of cheese to be served with every 25c meal. . . . Maxwell Stewart, Associate Editor of The Nation, was arrested for picketing the office of The American Mercury in protest to the refusal of officials to grant collective bargaining to employees. . . . The current issue of The Nation carries a full page ad offering the two magazines clubbed at a bargain price. . . .

Stalinists Go to Bat for Priest

Chicago C.P. Makes Touching Plea for Coughlin

By F. X. FERRY

CHICAGO.—The workers of Chicago who were greatly interested in following the contortions and zig-zags which up to the present time represent the policy of the 8th District of the Communist Party and who saw many surprising things perpetrated under the flag of Stalinism—even those were surprised when the bourgeois press of July 2 headlined in black letters "Red Party Joins Coughlin's Suit." The workers shared the surprise of the bourgeois press which pointed out ironically in the Chicago Tribune, the Daily News and the Daily Times that the Communist Party of America sought to join in a lawsuit on behalf of Coughlin against the Chicago Park Board.

The story began when Attorney Samuel Eitelson, former Insull attorney and the former city attorney of Chicago during the administration of the famous "America first" Mayor Thompson, filed a suit in the Superior Court of Cook County on behalf of the Detroit priest, Coughlin, and of his organization "Union for Social Justice," asking that the Chicago Park Board be ordered to rent the Stadium, or as it is known, the Soldiers Field to Coughlin for the purpose of holding a public meeting.

C. P. "Enforces the Constitution" The point of view of the park board was that the Stadium is not to be rented for the purpose of holding controversial meetings, be they on political or economic questions. They pointed out that the field is to be used for sport and general educational purposes as singing festivals, etc. The hearings in the court were continued a number of times after certain technical points were decided and after a petition of the Huey Long faction and of his "Share the Wealth Club" for permission to intervene on behalf of Coughlin was denied.

On July 2, the Chicago Tribune reported "Reds Offer Aid in Fr. Coughlin's Fight for Field" and that formal notice was served on Coughlin's attorney and on the counsel for the Park Commissioners that the "Communist Party of the United States of America" will ask permission of Judge James Joseph Kelly to file an intervening petition in the case. The Chicago Tribune obtained some information on the matter from the attorney representing the Communist Party to whom the vicious bourgeois paper refers to as "the mouthpiece of the Reds" and who identified his clients as "having an organization in Illinois and a headquarters in Chicago" and described the organization as follows: "The Communist Party of the United States of America is an organization made up of workers, industrial and agricultural, small farmers, professionals, intellectuals and such other sections of the population who are opposed to exploitation of the toiling workers by a handful of the rich."

The C. P. attorney assured the Chicago Tribune that "his friends and associates really are hostile to father Coughlin for a number of reasons," but nevertheless, as he stated in his petition, "we are interested in the performance by public officers of their official duties and in the enforcement of the Constitution and laws protecting public rights."

A "Fascist Attack" on Coughlin

Of course, it is very hard to say whether the Communist Party of the United States actually identifies itself with the petition presented on its behalf by its attorney, but if it does, it is more than interesting for the workers to know that the attorney for the Communist Party states that "many Communist workers would like to hear Father Coughlin, not only to listen to him, but to expose his anti-workingmen ideas." It is undoubtedly true that Coughlin will appreciate the help extended to him by the C. P. in obtaining working-class and more particularly Communist working-class audiences in which to peddle his stuff.

To be sure, the attorney for the C. P. becomes also theoretical in support of his petition in which they support the prayer of Father Coughlin that the court should give him the right of using the Soldiers Field for a public meeting because it is stated that "any denial of the use of Soldiers Field is in itself a Fascist attack against the right of freedom of speech and assembly of citizens and workers."

Apparently the C. P. has a new theory concerning Fascism somewhat similar but not quite as clear as that concerning Social-Fascism, because now they believe, at least in their intervening petition in Chicago, that the duty of the workers in general and the C. P. of the U. S. in particular is to prevent the advance of Fascism, and for that end to fight for Father Coughlin's right to obtain a public meeting place where he may expound his views which up to the present was characterized by the C. P. as nothing else but potential fascism if not clear fascism.

In Black on White

Many of the workers of Chicago when reading the bourgeois Daily News wondered how it happened that the "Communist Party sought leave to file an intervening petition in Coughlin's behalf — an ironical note in view of the priests' attack on Communism." Judge Kelly attempted, unbeknown to himself, to save the C. P. from the embarrassment of being recorded in the court files when he first denied leave to the C. P. to intervene, telling the lawyer representing the C. P. that he was too late. Later, however, the court relented and permitted the attorney to file an appearance in the case; and thus the historical finger, warning the C. P. to keep out, at least from the written records, was not observed. The C. P. of the U. S. is on record in the Superior Court of Cook County under No. 368 S879, as an intervening petitioner in which they joined with Coughlin in asking the Court that the Park Commissioners be ordered to rent Soldiers Field to the priest whom the C. P. labelled the "Radio Hitler of the United States."

Of course, it may be that Earl Browder does not know anything about Chicago, but there is no question about it that some of the bright lights must have been informed since the political genius of the C. P., Bob Minor, was seen around headquarters on the first day of July, that is, one day before the petition was filed.

The workers have seen the C. P. in action more than once and they have seen it going through a whole series of united front tactics so there is no justification for any follower of the C. P. to be very much surprised. They may feel satisfied that the theory of "Social-Fascism," the "united front from below" and the latest help extended to Father Coughlin is undoubtedly not out of line with the circus which they performed together with Father Divine (Father Divine is God), and it is surely not out of line with the tragic role which the C. P. of Germany played in the famous referendum when they joined, if not in forces at least in efforts, with the Hitlerites to oust the Socialist government of Prussia.

Russian Stalinist Emissaries Sent to France to Win Socialist Youth for Patriotism and against Marxism

INTRODUCTION

Kossarov: The minority of the Socialist youth will be defeated if it continues on its present course of action, not knowing exactly what it wants. A minority is built for struggle, failing that it becomes demoralized, its leadership disintegrated, and it loses the masses. You are not yet ready to fuse with the Young Communists; that will leave you a free hand. Should you become a sympathetic organization of the Young Communist International you will retain the prerogative of tendencies and internal factions. If you should fuse with the Y. C. we will propose that you accept our program without reservations, because we do not permit factions in our movement. We do not force anyone to join our organization but once there he belongs unreservedly. From our point of view tendencies are detrimental to the unity of our organization. Our rule is the following: before accepting a decision there is a discussion, then everyone must abide by it—a strict and indispensable discipline. Unity with the Y. C. will be possible only on the basis of the above.

Lissansky: It is only thanks to democracy that I who was expelled for having participated in the Amsterdam-Pleyel conferences (the Stalinist international united fronts with themselves on war and fascism which were held in the twilight of the "third period"—Ed.) can speak here today. The situation is becoming increasingly revolutionary. The comrades believe that they will be able to continue their action without being expelled, to do as the minorities did during the war. It is possible, if events are with us, to regroup the left elements as our Belgian and Spanish comrades have done. It is therefore more possible to raise their class consciousness by creating an organization sympathetic to the U.S.S.R. In this manner we will be in agreement with the left elements of the party and the international and we will be able to retain the comrades who still evince a party patriotism. What we propose is almost a desperate solution: 1935 is not 1917. You have thirty million sympathizers and the prestige of having defeated your capitalism. If we discuss as equal to equal we are likely to hesitate for we are not entirely in agreement.

Chemodanov: Thanks to the existence of a tendency, the meeting this evening could have taken place; thanks to democracy Lissansky was reinstated. But we must not lose sight of the differences between the Socialist and the Communist organizations. We stand on

The Color Line in the A. F. of L.

The Negro & American Labor

Discrimination against Negroes in the American Federation of Labor has always represented one of the most ignominious features in the organized labor movement of this country.

At the convention of the A. F. of L. held in San Francisco last October Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters raised the question of discrimination for discussion among the assembled delegates. It might be interesting to observe that Negroes picketing the convention for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were arrested.

Randolph's resolution called for the expulsion of "any union which violates the constitution of the A. F. of L. by maintaining the color line." It might be pointed out, here, that despite his "radical" gesture at the convention it is well known that Randolph has worked hand-in-glove with Green and Co., who have tacitly condoned race discrimination in A. F. of L. unions. After hearing the resolution the committee on organization recommended non-concurrence, but a loud chorus of "NO" greeted the recommendation. Fearing a show of hands, Pres. W. L. Hutchinson of the Carpenters union quickly introduced an amendment calling on William Green to appoint an investigating committee to report on the whole matter to the next convention.

After some debate this amendment was finally adopted. Chairman of the committee on the Negro question is John E. Rooney of the Operative Plasterers and Cement Finishers International Assn. The secretary is John Brophy of the United Mine Workers of America.

No Negro on Committee

The other three members of the committee are John W. Garvey, International Rod Carriers; Jerry L. Hanks, Journeymen Barbers and T. C. Carroll, Brotherhood of Maintenance of War Employees. It is again interesting to note that the one concerned most in that he brought the question up at all for discussion, Randolph of the Sleeping Car Brotherhood, is not on the committee.

At the hearing held July 9, Randolph reiterated his plea for the necessity of disciplining international unions if they maintain the color bar. Reginald J. Johnson of the National Urban League warned that "dual unions, company unions and anti-A. F. of L. unions among Negroes would take shape unless the policy of discrimination were discontinued."

One or two preliminary meetings of the committee have been held but a hearing will finally take place in Washington sometime in July of this year where Randolph and others will present their case.

A number of unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. absolutely deny membership to Negroes by constitutional provisions. Others exclude them by various rituals which pledge members of the union not to bring up a Negro for membership. Still others, having no outright provisions excluding Negroes, yet in practice see to it that few if any are admitted. In still other unions the Jim Crow system of Negro locals prevails.

It is of some merit here to cite same example of crass discrimination against Negroes in A. F. of L. unions and of the policy of evasion if not outright chauvinism of the leadership of the American Federation of Labor. We quote at length from the 25th annual report of the N.A.A.C.P.:

Outright Discrimination

"On October 31 the attention of President Green was called to the complaints of discrimination against Negro members of Local 306, Motion Picture Operators of New York City, as to hours of work, general working conditions, rates of pay and restriction of locality of work to the colored section of Manhattan. It was pointed out that the employment of Negro union operators was restricted to theatres patronized principally by Negroes and that they were not permitted to work in circuit houses; that they were forced to accept working conditions and wages unacceptable elsewhere within the union's jurisdiction and in violation of the NRA code. The A. F. of L. was asked to promptly correct these abuses. Late in November President Green replied that it was impossible to interfere in the internal affairs of affiliated national or international unions except upon their consent, and referred the Association to the President of the International Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, thus continuing the familiar policy of evasion."

Below we cite another example of discrimination against Negroes as brought out by Mr. Johnson at the hearing and culled from the New York Times, July 9, 1935:

"Negroes who tried to enter a local of the painters' union in Atlanta, according to Mr. Johnson, were told that their leader was a Communist. They withdrew the leader and then again applied. This time, he said, they were informed by the District Council of the Painters' Union that the hod-carriers were forming a union and that their members should apply to that organization."

"The applicants responded that they were skilled painters and not hod-carriers. Then the secretary of the International Painters Brotherhood suggested that they send the usual $15 fee to accompany the request for a local union charter. This they did and a charter was refused, the witness explained."

extended to workers and farmers without discrimination because of age, sex, race, or color, religious or political opinion, or affiliation, whether they be industrial, agricultural, domestic, or professional workers, for all time lost. No worker shall be disqualified from the benefits of this Act because of refusal to work in place of strikers, at less than normal or trade union rates, under unsafe or unsanitary conditions, or where hours are longer than the prevailing union standards at the particular trade and locality, or at any unreasonable distance from home.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted that pending the establishment of the system of unemployment insurance provided for under this Act, Congress shall authorize to be appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of 5 billion dollars to provide for all the unemployed cash relief at the rate of not less than $10 per week for each unemployed worker or farmer, and $3 additional for each dependent.

Coast Dockers Defy Ryan at I.L.A. Meeting

Propose Progressive Measures; Wants New Leadership

The convention of the International Longshoremen's Association held this week in New York promises to have some stormy sessions if advance indications can serve as a measure of judgment.

Since the upswing in business such conflicts have found increasing manifestations in numerous A. F. of L. unions. In the longshoremen's union it is particularly advanced. There is a fairly distinct division of right and left, the former represented in the main by the international officials and their supporters and the latter by the Pacific Coast delegation headed by Harry Bridges.

West Coast Against Ryan

This delegation declares openly that it has come to the convention instructed by the West Coast membership to oust the president, Joseph Ryan and to fight for a new leadership. This course of action is based on direct experiences, dating back to the Pacific Coast maritime strike and the San Francisco general strike of last year. Ryan took some flying trips to the coast, not to support the strike but to connive with the employers and to break it up.

A high sense of solidarity has prevailed ever since. The popularity of Bridges is attested by the fact that in the elections of delegates to the international convention he snowed under his conservative opponent by a vote of 1,759 to 129.

But the greatest gain scored by the Pacific Coast longshoremen since their famous strike is undoubtedly expressed in the creation of the waterfront federation extending through all the ports from Seattle to San Diego. It comprises the unions of all the waterfront workers.

The Pacific Coast delegation proposes that the convention adopt this form of organization in all ports. It proposes a national uniform agreement for all ports and joint control of hiring halls.

proposed that we leave the Second International and join in sympathetic capacity to the Third. They have the advantage over us of having triumphed. We understand their state of mind. If we do what they want, what will be our relation, exactly, with the Young Communist International? Will we be obliged to apply all its decisions or will we have a certain amount of independence? Will we have the possibility of forming factions? Our movement is young, we are organizing ourselves, we must first win over the Young Socialists and the Socialist Party; we have no other perspectives. Can we extricate ourselves from it now? That is impossible.

"What is the foreign policy of the U.S.S.R.? For a long time it refused to join the League of Nations, that is, when there were revolutionary possibilities in Germany, in Austria and in Spain. On the other hand, the social democracy believed in the usefulness of the League of Nations: the Russians now have created a spirit of patriotism among the workers and they are obliged to utilize the contradictions between the imperialist states. I do not at all agree with Chemodanov: we do not want to place ourselves under the orders of our bourgeoisie for the defense of the U.S.S.R."

Chemodanov: The question of the foreign policy of the U.S.S.R. has been discussed in the U.S.S.R. too; I am only giving you my personal opinion. But the Communists did not accept the united front because the U.S.S.R. needed it; the workers in every country need it. The foreign policy of the U.S.S.R. does not influence the course of the Party; the Young Communists have not abandoned the anti-militarist struggle, etc. If there is a war against the U.S.S.R. the workers will want to defend it and they will defend it arms in hand. In case of a struggle between Germany and Russia, the U.S.S.R. will be in no special danger; no country can withstand the Soviet Union; it will be a world war and the workers will all be on the side of the U.S.S.R."

Kossarov: The problem for revolutionaries is the organization of the masses. The mistake many Young Socialists make is neglecting the struggle for the conquest of the unorganized youth, especially the Catholics; they are allowed to go their own way under the influence of the enemy. If we do not work among them, the enemy will. Peace is the aim of the foreign policy of the U.S.S.R., but besides it is also necessary to be able to maneuver for the purpose of utilizing existing contradictions; the bourgeoisie has good relations with us but we must not renounce the struggle against it.

Chemodanov: The question of the foreign policy of the U.S.S.R. has been discussed in the U.S.S.R. too; I am only giving you my personal opinion. But the Communists did not accept the united front because the U.S.S.R. needed it; the workers in every country need it. The foreign policy of the U.S.S.R. does not influence the course of the Party; the Young Communists have not abandoned the anti-militarist struggle, etc. If there is a war against the U.S.S.R. the workers will want to defend it and they will defend it arms in hand. In case of a struggle between Germany and Russia, the U.S.S.R. will be in no special danger; no country can withstand the Soviet Union; it will be a world war and the workers will all be on the side of the U.S.S.R."

Ranvier: For us, the enemy is international fascism. French and German. We do not believe, in any case, that the youth must follow their fascism against German fascism. If we allow our pre-fascist government to arm, then we allow the fascist morale to develop; our attitude must, of necessity, be clearly anti-militarist. If we allow the militarist spirit to develop, the revolution will no longer be possible. We cannot bind ourselves to our own imperialism under cover of defending the U.S.S.R. "The emancipation of the working class is the task of the working class itself." Therefore, the workers must rise against their own fascism and thus assure the defense of the U.S.S.R."

a revolutionary basis; our aim is the dictatorship of the proletariat; we do not collaborate with the bourgeoisie. If there are factions, in whose interest do they struggle: those of the bourgeoisie or of the revolution? For us a faction weakens our ranks.

"What has happened in the Young Socialist International? In Sweden the Socialists are collaborating with the bourgeoisie in the government and are against the united front; similarly in Norway, Denmark and Czechoslovakia. One of the leaders of the Swedish Young Socialists, Valenken, said: 'If negotiations with the Young Communists are opened we will leave the Second International.' In Spain the Young Socialists have voted to withdraw from the reformist Socialist International and are for the united front; similarly in France and in Belgium (where the leaders are neither for nor against the united front; we cannot understand that). We believe that the French young socialists are acting in the interests of the young workers, contrary to the young Socialists of Sweden. If we struggle for the united front we must exclude those who are against it; that is why we are against factions."

"Will you be expelled from your party? Possibly. In Argentina the Young Socialists were dissolved. In Belgium the leaders brought pressure to bear on Godefroy (leader of Belgian Young Socialists—Ed.), threatening to cut off all financial assistance to his organization. It is hardly different here. If you stand in the way of the party they will not play the democratic game with you. Don't be so sure of yourself. The question of expulsion is not so important. What counts are your perspectives. Do you want to win out in the youth movement, in the Party and then in the International? That is a remote objective. Everywhere in the Y. S. there is to be found a tendency favoring unity. Is your aim then to form an international mid-way between the Second and the Third? That is a difficult and unfruitful task. There is another road: change the leadership of the Young Socialist International; remove Ollenhauer. You will then be the leadership. And then what? What are our basic differences? The theory of Marx has been translated into life over one-sixth of the globe, etc. . . . If there is a war it will undoubtedly be against the U.S.S.R. It will not be a war between imperialists but between classes. Where will the Young Socialists be in such an eventuality? In the middle-of-the-road? With us? They must make their position concrete."

"There is another question: if you feel yourself to be very weak it is useless to form an independent organization. The essential question, however, is the struggle for put into practice a series of laws of a fascist nature, such as the prohibition of strikes, trade unions, the suppression of working class propaganda. They have also prohibited the right of free speech, assembly, etc. These series of laws concocted by the Mendieta and Batista regime that do away with all democratic rights and puts the working class of Cuba into a position known only in countries of outright fascist nature.

The Emergency Tribunals have meted out sentences ranging from six months to ten years to members of the Bolshevik-Leninist party, and have condemned militants of our trade unions for the only crime of having a union book on their person. At present we have about thirty comrades of the party, almost all of them outstanding political and trade union leaders, in prison. Together with the rank and file of our unions a total of nine hundred workers have been imprisoned. Of this number at least sixty are women. These figures refer only to the city of Havana.

Apart from those mentioned above hundreds of students and petty bourgeois revolutionists have been imprisoned. The conditions of repression are indubitably much more violent now than in the terrible years of the Machado dictatorship. Apart from imprisonment, the number of assassinated workers mounts daily.

The Strike

In the month of March the forces of the working class, united around the Committee of Proletarian Defense, under the influence of the leaders of the University of Havana, and under the pressure of the oppositionist petty bourgeois organizations, which have an appreciable influence on certain sections of the working class (street-car, railway, printers) embarked on a general political strike that was supported by almost all the state employees, paralyzing all the activities of the governmental offices.

Our party, conscious of the weak state of working class organization, centered all its forces on fortifying the previously established Committee of Proletarian Defense (the united front) so that the general strike would have a centralized leadership and would have a chance for victory. But in this proposal we found a clear opposition, on the one side from the Stalinist party, which, desiring to maintain its own hegemony, called the strike separately from the Committee, and from the other side—the leaders of the students and the petty-bourgeoisie who wanted to hurriedly precipitate the movement.

Under these conditions, the workers spontaneously, and under no centralized leadership, threw themselves into one of the most extraordinary strikes known in the history of the Cuban proletariat. They joined with the state employees in order to obtain for them security of their jobs (in Cuba every faction that takes power redivides the jobs by displacing the old employees.)

Marital Law

The government immediately mobilized all its machinery. A state of war was declared, thus putting into the hands of the military the power of judging of all acts of sabotage resulting from the strike. For three days complete terror reigned. All inhabitants were required to remain at home after nine o'clock. Even in broad daylight it was considered a criminal offense for more than two people to be seen walking together. The police and military hordes thronged the streets only party that can lead the Cuban masses to victory.

Organizing the Workers

To understand our problem the special characteristics and the social composition of the Cuban people must be taken into consideration. In Cuba, proportionately speaking, the proletariat is very small, and only in the big cities does it present a picture of cohesion and militancy in its economic struggles. The political struggles of the proletariat are only of recent origin (the C. P. was organized in 1925, but until 1929 had no influence on the working masses). The proletariat of the sugar factories, although it had participated in strikes since 1914, really embarked on its major struggle only during the years 1924-25 and after the fall of Machado. They are, in general, an unstable group. The sugar worker is engaged in industry only during three or four months of the year, the rest of the year he loaf and begs in the nearby towns. Agricultural peonage on the sugar-cane and tobacco plantations, where work is generally spread throughout the year is of considerable scope. They work under terrible conditions. Notwithstanding their low cultural level and lack of class consciousness, however, they are amenable to organization as was proved in the four months of the Grau San Martin government when there was a certain modicum of democratic rights. The other determining factor in the social composition of Cuba is the petty bourgeoisie. But the Cuban petty bourgeoisie is different from their prototypes in other countries in that they have no economic base of their own. They are not rooted in small businesses, small industry and small property, but live exclusively as employees of the state. They can properly be termed as a petty-bourgeois bureaucracy.

Middle Class Parasite

The origin of this anomaly derives from the specific interests of American imperialism in Cuba. The chief industries (sugar, tobacco, transportation) belong to U. S. capital. Wholesale commerce belongs to the Spanish bourgeoisie. After the war of independence the American mediator, faithful to the policy of imperialist penetration impeded the rehabilitation of the Cuban petty-bourgeoisie, tricking them into dependence on the budget of the new born republic. Beginning with the government of Charles Magoon in the second intervention of the U. S., the national budget grew daily with the sole object of nourishing the growing petty-bourgeois bureaucracy. With the prosperity occasioned by the high price of sugar during the world war, everything went well, but the collapse of prices starting in 1921 caused a reduction of the budget despite the loans contracted in the North American markets to prevent such an expediency.

The effects of the crisis were felt most severely by the parasitical petty-bourgeoisie. Displaced from their bureaucratic positions they soon descended to the ranks of the degenerate lumpen-proletariat. At the crossroads of life and death, the most courageous nucleus took up the struggle and there arose a number of militant organizations of the petty-bourgeoisie. First of them was the ABC which began under Machado with a democratic program, arriving lately into an ideology of open fascism. After the fall of Grau San Martin, the Revolutionary Party of Cuba, which the latter led, appeared to express the desires of the petty-bourgeoisie, but the relative consolidation of the reactionary Mendieta and their little faith in the electoral process made this social stratum, in open desperation, seek as its only way out, insurrection. Then it turned toward the revolutionary organization, "Young Cuba", led by Antonio Guiteras, secretary of interior in the Grau San Martin cabinet.

Guiteras' Position

The organization "Young Cuba" is in essence an amalgamation of heterogeneous forces of the petty-bourgeoisie of all kinds; conservatives, centrists, lefts. Its program has as a basic point the "anti-imperialist" struggle and puts forward a broad reformist program in favor of the working masses. Guiteras had a broader outlook than his followers. He had an internationalist perspective for the Cuban revolution. In order to achieve this objective he intended to call a Continental Congress in Mexico of all the left parties and he expressed a great interest in inviting all the sections of the International Communist League on the American continent as he had communicated to our party.

But in the first days of this month Guiteras was taken by surprise by the army, as he was embarking for Mexico, near the city of Matanzas. He was assassinated together with the Venezuelan colonel, Carlos Aponte.

The death of Antonio Guiteras creates a different situation in the Cuban political scene. Our penetration in the ranks of "Young Cuba", the sympathy that its members feel for our party opens up good perspectives for our organization. The petty-bourgeoisie will not stop in its insurrectional intentions. For them it is a question of life and death; but here rises a brilliant opportunity for the proletarian party to show its abilities at leadership. On the other hand the terrible situation that confronts the Cuban proletariat will drag the petty-bourgeoisie into any insurrectional movement that may arise. If our party can mobilize its forces and put itself in the position of a vanguard, where its voice will be heard by the masses, then we can say that the revolution is saved.

But under the conditions that prevail work is very difficult. Our party lacks financial resources, cannot legally publish its press, cannot legally conduct any campaign to collect funds, and must therefore turn to the proletariat of other countries in requesting immediate help. This appeal is especially addressed to the North American proletariat with whom we are united through common bonds of exploitation.

North American comrades: you who have the possibility, even within the capitalist system, to build your organizations have before you the task of assigning funds immediately for the help of your Cuban comrades. Your help is necessary if the Bolshevik-Leninist party is to be able to fulfill its mission. We feel certain that a response will be forthcoming.

Old Guard Hammers Militants As N.C. of Socialist Party Meets

National "Militant" Caucus Breaks Up — Hoan and Thomas Backslide

lowers of the N.E.C. (incidentally, this N.E.C. committee has been boycotted by the Old Guard, who refuse to supply it with information, documents, facilities) and thereupon, as proof positive to all labor fakers and money-bags who might have some doubts about the respectability of the N.E.C., Hoan and Thomas launched a real campaign against the left wing workers in the party.

They passed a resolution making membership in the party incompatible with advocacy of "armed insurrection"; the Old Guard promptly used the resolution to expel revolutionary workers; and the net result of the year's struggle is that the Old Guard is more solidly in the saddle than ever before, and the only blows which have been delivered by the N.E.C. are blows to the left. Querulous complaints about the Old Guard, worthy statements about their crimes, but decisive action against the leftward-moving workers—this is Norman Thomas' record since the Detroit convention.

What, meanwhile, has happened to the New York Militants, under the leadership of Murray Baron and Jack Altman, and their allies, the "Chicago left," led by Maynard Krueger and Clarence Senior—these "revolutionary socialists," who came to the Detroit convention with a printed program (which they never brought to the floor). Despite their support of the shady ambiguities of the Declaration of Principles, the socialist militants had a splendid opportunity to crystallize a real left wing in the Socialist Party. The spectacle of the disloyalty of the Old Guard and the cowardice of the N.E.C. made it possible for the militants to secure a hearing from thousands of socialist workers. But the whole strategy of the Militant leaders led in an opposite direction.

"Cadre Builds Program"

A revolutionist says: "The program builds the cadre": hammer out your principles and win adherents by fighting for your principles. The Militant leaders said: "The cadre builds the program": i.e., they, plus Thomas and Hoan, plus the trade union bureaucrats who, they hoped, could be induced to break with the Old Guard, plus anti-New York sentiment in the West and South, plus anyone who would come along for whatever reason—in short, a bloc having no other program than anti-New York, had to be maintained at any cost. This unpurposive line of the Militants could lead in only one direction: capitulation on every issue to Thomas and Hoan, who themselves have no principled differences with the Old Guard.

So far, indeed, has this surrender by the Militants gone, that on the eve of the N.E.C. meeting, at which the retreat before the Old Guard will in all likelihood develop into a flat acceptance of the Old Guard on their own terms—on the eve of an open alliance between Hoan and the Old Guard, with Thomas "going along for the sake of unity"—the year's record of the Militants does not show a single instance of criticism of the N.E.C.

The Socialist Call, organ of the Militants, has only rarely criticized the Old Guard, and never said a word about the cowardly actions of the N.E.C. It has even suppressed the fact that the Old Guard has refused to invite or receive the N.E.C. for this week's meeting. Instead of coming out with a declaration that the Old Guard's report is the central issue before the N.E.C., the Socialist Call, after listing other points on the agenda, says that "it is expected" that the Old Guard issue will "also" be discussed. Not a word about Thomas' blows to the left; on the contrary, after the last N.E.C. meeting made advocacy of "armed insurrection" incompatible with party membership, the Militant leaders went around explaining that this was a clever tactical move by Thomas, that it only applied to public statements by socialists to non-socialists, and they tried to hide the fact that the Thomas decision applied to the socialist press, to socialist meetings, and to socialists anywhere and everywhere. Though Hoan revealed at the last N.E.C. meeting that he was getting ready to make a deal with the Old Guard, the Militants made no criticisms of him. In other words, on the eve of the N.E.C. meeting, the Militants are completely identified in the eyes of the party rank and file with the N.E.C.

Instead of gaining ground by these tactics, the Militants have already lost considerably. Their so-called national caucus has disappeared: the "Chicago left," which revolved around the national office, has so completely identified itself with Hoan that its leader, Krueger, was attacked by left wing delegates at the recent Illinois convention; the "western Militants," around Andrew Biemiller, have found a resting place in the Milwaukee machine; the Massachusetts "left wing" has just held a harmony convention with the right wing.

Pessimism Among "Leaders"

Some Militants privately recognize this situation—but draw from it the conclusion that their weakness means they must still further submit to the N.E.C. To the argument that they should have built a broad caucus organization (they refused to do this because the Old Guard would seize upon it as an "issue"), with democratic election of steering committees, etc. (they refused this because it meant an open stand for a factional organization), with all decisions submitted for rank and file approval (they refused this because they didn't know what they would do the next day since they were tied to the chariot wheels of the N.E.C.), etc.—to all such arguments they mournfully answer: "Yes, we did wrong, but it's too late to change that now."

Too late! The pessimism of leaders, undoubtedly will affect part of their following, who will simply drop out of the party. And anyone who will not fight within his own party will not be recruited into another party; that is one of the lessons of 1921. No one will gain from such defeatism.

It is certainly not too late. The onward march of Fascism, the lessons of Germany, Austria and Spain, have smashed the complacency of thousands of socialist workers; and as they survey the new August 1914 being jointly prepared by the Second and Third Internationals in France, they are more ready to break with reformism than they have been for years. They want to fight the Old Guard but they don't know how.

The leftward-moving socialist workers have to learn that the way to fight is to fight on the basis of clear-cut principles. Let them seriously turn to an examination of the principles of the main currents in the labor movement, and they will find that the only revolutionary program is that of the Workers' Party. In the Declaration of Principles of the Workers' Party they will find their principled basis for the struggle against reformism and its centrist allies of today and tomorrow. On the basis of a program the cadres are built: that is the first lesson the socialist workers must learn.

Question Box

—By A. WEAVER—

N. H. BIRMINGHAM—
Question: In the "Draft Program of the Communist International" Trotsky states that the Stalinists, by the theorem of "Socialism in One Country," adopt the same theoretical ground... of the Social Democratic theoreticians as a whole" except that "they turn the Social Democratic evaluation inside out." What does he mean by this?

Answer: Basing themselves upon the formula of Marx: "No Social formation disappears before all the productive forces have developed for which it has room," and applying it to a single state, the Social Democracy claimed, in their criticism of the Bolsheviks, that the latter had no historical right to seize power in Russia since that country did not have the material prerequisites for the construction of a Socialist society. To this the Bolsheviks, under Lenin, replied: while it is true that Russia, by itself, does not have the material requirements for the construction of a classless society, nevertheless, WORLD capitalism as a whole does have these material forces; the revolution in Russia, whose economy is part of world economy, took place because WORLD capitalism broke at its weakest link. Like the Social Democrats, the proponents of "Socialism in One Country" also cast entirely aside the international perspective of Lenin, and merely counterpose to the assertion that the Soviet Union does not have the necessary material resources for the completion of a Socialist society the claim that the country does have such material forces. They therefore stand on the same theoretical ground as the Social Democracy in that they search for historical justification for the Russian revolution in the productive capacity of a single state.

D. J. E. LOS ANGELES—
Question: How can you expect the proletarians to manage a government when they cannot even manage themselves?

Answer: If one were to follow the logic of this reasoning, the capitalists would not be able to manage their state power. On the average, the members of the capitalist class, particularly today when they play practically no role in the productive process, are people of very ordinary intelligence, and because of their mode of living, are for the most part too incompetent to even arrange for their own food and clothing. Nevertheless, they rule society through special organizations whose officers are their agents and who supply for a price of one sort or another, the ability needed to perform the necessary functions for the class rule. In other words, the ruling class has its work done for it by special representatives drawn from its own and other classes.

Despite the fact that there are certain qualitative differences, the same applies to the proletariat when it becomes the ruling class. It is true that there is much ignorance, illiteracy, etc., among the proletarian masses, a condition which capitalist exploitation has fostered and developed in order to maintain and perpetuate itself, a state of affairs requiring that the proletariat also set up its special organs of class domination. The revolutionary party thus becomes a necessity in order to rule for the working class as well as to seize the power in its name.

There is a fundamental historical difference, however, between the ruling apparatus of the proletariat and of the capitalist class. The organs through which the latter exerts its rule, for example, the banks, press, chambers of commerce, etc., develop along with the system itself, as component parts of it, and no special effort, no sacrifice, which lies outside of their money making routine is required by the capitalists, in order to build up the foundations of their rule. The party of the proletariat, however, does not evolve naturally out of the development of the class itself but must be built alongside of it. Such a party can be constructed only by those who are able and willing to exert the necessary effort and make the needed sacrifices.

APPLICATION REJECTED

The West Coast District Committee of the Workers Party has rejected the application of Lillian Monroe for membership in the Party. Evidence of complete collaboration with the A. F. of L. bureaucracy in the San Joaquin Valley and of a disregard for the political party in the field of union activity, coupled with an unreliability have conclusively proven that her membership is impossible.

MARCH OF EVENTS

—By JACK WEBER—

The War for Colonies

The general world crisis of capitalism of 1907 produced or rather intensified the fierce life and death struggle for colonies among the advanced imperialist countries. Each country hoped to prolong the existence of the system of exploitation at home by attaining and exploiting larger controlled markets abroad. Thus the crisis of capitalism was transformed into the first world war in 1914. This war was preceded by "skirmishes" in various parts of the globe, particularly in Africa. In the so-called Moroccan crisis of 1911, the needs of German imperialism forced the Kaiser into the notorious Agadir incident that almost precipitated the war at that time.

Now again the general crisis of capitalism has sharpened all antagonisms and posed more sharply than ever before the contradiction between highly developed productive forces and closely restricted markets. To secure access to new markets the great powers find it necessary to prepare for war, one against the other, so as to break the grip of their rivals on the more desirable colonies. Japan proceeds steadily, as yet unchecked, with plundering of China—and America looks on waiting the opportune moment for intervening. Germany looks first of all to the East of its borders, to the Ukraine and to Central Europe, for the expansion that will save its capitalism from complete decline.

Italy has turned to an African adventure in Ethiopia for its share of plunder. In a general way Mussolini's attack on this African semi-colony may well be compared with the Agadir incident as the prelude to the second world war. It is not enough for fascism to prevent revolution at home with its complete destruction of the capitalist system of exploitation by the proletariat; that represents only the political condition for the continued existence of the bourgeoisie. Fascism knows no other way to solve its economic dilemma than the same methods pursued abroad that it pursues at home. Capitalism cannot exist without resort to plunder and warfare.

Ethiopia and the Powers

Italy did not begin its wolf's leap at Ethiopia without first securing the consent of England and France. All the present sham of British opposition and its "sounding out" the other powers in the League of Nations concerning the application of economic penalties and "sanctions" to put a stop to Italy's further measures, is characterized even in the capitalist press as so much face-saving for its own masses. Of course it is also intended to wring other concessions from Mussolini for the British lion. What these are will probably not be known for some time. But one can hazard the guess, knowing the direction of English diplomacy at this time, that England is trying to separate Italy from France in order the better to exert pressure on isolated France to split it away from the Soviet Union. A crusade against the Soviet Union would be least dangerous to England—or so its ruling class supposes—and would enable England to "recover" by becoming the workshop for supplying the needs of a war-torn Europe.

The abrupt and chilling reply of Roosevelt to the appeal of Ethiopia for the application of the Kellogg-Briand Pact of Paris illustrates not merely that this country, under bourgeois rule, is no more interested in peace than any of the other powers, but that it is to the interest of America also not to become involved in complications in Europe and Africa when the ruling class here is forced to concentrate its entire attention on the knotty problem presented by Japanese penetration of China. Furthermore Italy's move at this time is a blow at Japan, just beginning its thrust toward Africa through Ethiopia. American capitalism is therefore somewhat sympathetic towards Mussolini.

Civilizing Ethiopia

The fascist leader, Il Duce, who found it unnecessary to hide his aims and methods when it was a matter of knifing the Italian proletariat, now employs the usual imperialist hypocrisy of carrying civilization to the conquered colony. Mussolini, enslaver of the entire Italian working class and the most hunger-stricken peasantry of Europe, will be the "Abraham Lincoln" of Ethiopia. He will "free" the large number of slaves held in bondage by the exploiting rulers of Abyssinia. He will "free" them from their present masters to place master and slave alike under the yoke of Italian capitalism. That is all that the bourgeoisie can carry to the colonies—a system of exploitation more intense, more cruel and costly in human life than any previous system. It is only the world proletariat that can bring real civilization to the colonies. When the workers throw off the yoke of capitalism at home, they will at the same time strike off the chains of the colonial peoples. The proletarian revolution will not only destroy the bourgeois exploiters at home, but will aid in the destruction of the colonial ruling classes, feudal or bourgeois. It is as much the task of the workers to accomplish the freedom of the colonial peoples as their own.

"Progressive"

How history plays pranks on names and makes a mockery of shibboleths is strikingly revealed in a recent issue of the "Progressive Miner," organ of the Progressive Miners of America.

In it is reproduced an article by Eugene Talmadge, the governor of Georgia called the "Cruel Scarcity Policy" which is published under a picture of the Governor and the following note by the editors:

"The following from an article by the governor is charged, by some people, with being political propaganda, and by others with being an attempt to whitewash his labor record.

"We are not familiar with Gov. Talmadge's labor record, nor his intentions in writing this article; but we are absolutely sure that every word contained therein is absolutely true, and that the writer being a Democratic governor deserves a lot of credit for this clear-cut expose of the vicious un-Christian and un-American New Deal agricultural program."

Can it be that the editor of the Progressive Miner is really ignorant of the labor, or more correctly anti-labor, record of Talmadge of Georgia? Is he really unaware that the lowest textile wages in the country obtain in Georgia? Did he fail to see the headlines during the textile strike of 1934 which proclaimed Talmadge as the first governor to call out the militia against the mill workers? Doesn't he know that this southern bourbon bears the unenviable honor of being the first to introduce the Nazi concentration camp in the United States for the purpose of subduing and subjugating rebellious working men?

We can hardly believe it. Every suckling in the labor movement has marked the cross over this reactionary: labor enemy No. 1. The editor of the Progressive Miner, we are certain, is willfully closing his eyes and the eyes of his readers to the union-smashing policies of Talmadge. Opposition to militancy and left wing forces and tactics have driven the leaders of the P.M.A. into a loving embrace with the worst reactionaries in the country. They have, however, one thing in common: they pose as progressives until the issues become too hot.

And what does Talmadge say? First, a plagiarism of the facts long ago adduced in radical circles which marshall figures depicting cotton and live-stock destruction by the AAA and the consequent suffering caused by it. Then a good deal of specious reasoning which space does not permit us to deal with in this editorial. Finally, the conclusion printed in large, bold-face type:

"And the party in power should return to the principles of its founders and fulfill the promises of its platform to eliminate unnecessary and extravagant governmental bureaus and reduce the cost of government."

In short, Talmadge's is not one white better than any die-hard Tory who speaks for the Chamber of Commerce.

At least this much should be elementary for a progressive. But the Progressive Miner thinks otherwise: "we are absolutely sure that every word (in Talmadge's article) is absolutely true. . ."

And they call themselves "progressive"! What's in a name!

Shall Ethiopia Perish?

tion, in other words, it is now what it was originally intended to be.

From its very inception, the League of Nations was given a high credit rating by the acting and would-be socialist ministers of the world. No less powerful a pillar of the Second International than Arthur Henderson, the leader of the British Labor Party, adorned its sessions and set its tone. Now that the Italian imperialists are preparing the brutal rape of a far weaker foe, where are the spokesmen of the Second International, the Messrs. Henderson and Vandervelde and all their political kinfolk? What is their League of Nations doing, what does it intend to do, and what do they propose it shall do?

A year ago, the Stalinists drove the Soviet Union into the League of Nations. The self-admittedly beloved leader of the world proletariat, Stalin, told Walter Duranty that the League of Nations was at least a little bump in the road that would prevent war and help strengthen the "peace-loving" countries to preserve world order. What is the Stalin-Litvinov section of the League of Nations doing to defend the Ethiopian people from enslavement to the bastard descendants of the Roman emperors? Time was when the voice of the Soviet Union was heard in the most obscure hamlets of the world, ringing with challenge against imperialist aggression, ever vigorously articulate in behalf of the oppressed and exploited peoples, of the hundreds of millions of brown and black and yellow serfs of imperialism. That voice is now stilled! The Stalinist press is filled with delirious joy when it reports that M. Maxim Litvinov is chairman of this or that session of the Council of the League of Nations. It has not yet reported that he has uttered a single vigorous note of protest against the infamous villanies of Mussolini—to say nothing of a criticism of that ally of Fascist Italy in the Ethiopian expedition, France, which is at the same time the ally of the Soviet Union.

Neither Kellogg nor Laval, Henderson nor Litvinov, can cover up the true and quintessential nature of the League of Nations. The "thieve's kitchen of Geneva" remains what it was: an association of imperialist bandits for the preservation of capitalist slavery throughout the world. "Any impromptu activity at Geneva is improbable," writes the New York Times. "The League is in the worst dilemma of its career and sees no way out. . . Not only have the French and the British abandoned a humble fellow-member of the League to her fate, but the League itself is preparing to renew that policy of postponement and masterly inactivity that left China at Japan's mercy and the conflict in the Chaco to settle itself."

Notwithstanding, the case for Ethiopia is far from hopeless, and the prospects for the Fascist regime far from guaranteed. So far as the latter is concerned, it would be well for this murderous Bonapartist regime which seeks to solve its ever-increasing problems at home by foreign aggression, to remember Sedan, Port Arthur and . . . Sadowa. The senseless slaughter of the French masses in 1870 in the hopeless campaign of the little Napoleon to smash Germany led to the uprising of the Parisian masses and the establishment of the immortal Commune. The wanton destruction of tens of thousands of Russian peasants to satisfy the imperialist lust of a degenerate Czar was succeeded by the St. Petersburg Soviet of 1905, just as Kerensky's adventures on the western front in 1917 was followed by the great Bolshevik revolution. The present lord of the Palazzo Chigi might well recall at this time the fate of his equally audacious predecessor, the prime minister Crispi, who fell from power and into disgrace when the streets of Italy were filled with embittered soldiers returned from the humiliating defeat of Sadowa and clamoring for the heads of the criminals who had sent them to die on foreign plains.

And when he thinks of Sadowa, let him remember also that this is 1935 and not 1894. Ethiopia is not weaker, but stronger. Even though it is matched against an army of far superior technical strength, its own forces have an infinitely higher morale. They are fighting for their own independence, for their national integrity. And no longer are they armed merely with primitive spears and knives. We do not refer here to the comparatively insignificant fact that the Ethiopians now have a few thousand rifles and some machine guns. They have at their command—if they will but summon them to their aid—the millions upon millions of other natives of the Dark Continent who have produced fabulous wealth for world imperialism. By themselves, the Ethiopians are no match against the Italian forces, backed as they are by the active or passive support of other imperialist powers.

But they have allies. Their allies are the Italian workers and peasants who are under the Fascist lash, but who await only the moment when their taskmasters have encountered such difficulties as will enable the masses to attack them from the rear. Their allies are the workers of the entire world, whose foe is their foe, who have cause to hate and harry imperialism with the same bitterness and vigor as their African brothers. Their allies are the African masses themselves. Before the first Italian shot is fired, the black and brown masses of the entire continent must be aroused in a sacred war against world imperialism and for their own liberation. When the Bantu in the south and the Berber in the north joins hands and masses rifle and spear with all the other imperialist slaves of Africa, then not only Italy, but France, and England, and Spain and Portugal—all the assassins and exploiters of the African peoples, will have cause to tremble for their empires and to regret the day they aroused the fettered titan.

Therein lies the hope of the Ethiopian people, on whose side we stand together with every honest and conscious working man and woman. Therein, further, is clearly implied our elementary duty. The Washington government has piously and impartially refused to furnish arms to "either side." It is, you see, neutral—that is, it will help neither the heavily armed butcher nor the virtually unarmed victim.

We are not "neutral." Heart and soul we are with the Ethiopian people in their defensive war against the Fascist invader. Heart and soul we are with the Italian masses who have languished for thirteen years in the great prison which the Fascist despots have erected, and from which they are now being conscripted to fight those with whom they have no quarrel, nor can have.

Throughout the length and breadth of the country, in every labor organization, let the voice of the American masses be heard in unmeasured condemnation of the cowardly Fascist butchers, in unmistakable solidarity with the courageous battlers against the enslavement of Ethiopia!

A Reply to Liberal Critics of Bolshevism

The Position of the Workers Party on Proletarian Dictatorship and Worker's Democracy in Light of Recent Events

By A. J. MUSTE

First of all we may observe that while it is true that we do not have a Fascist regime in the U.S. and that it can only be misleading and silly to talk as if we did have, those who in these days are so vociferously proclaiming the joys of life under American democracy as contrasted with the repressions and horrors under "dictatorship whether Fascist or Communist," are unquestionably unrealistic and sentimental in their view of the United States. We know that the ordinary worker and farmer does not have this sense of perfect liberty and profound happiness. Millions of them are free—free to spend their youthful powers in a few years on the chain-gang in the production line in a mass-production factory; free to eke out an existence "in the midst of plenty" by means of a public works job at the Rooseveltian "security wage" of four to twelve dollars per week; free to organize, strike, picket, vote the ticket of their choice and so on, provided they do not mind being kicked out of a job, seeing their families suffer privation, getting dubbed over the head, thrown into jail, possibly shot in the back. Consider that the economic crisis has not reached any such proportions here as in many other countries, that there is here no such daily and hourly peril of invading armies as many nations have to face, that at the moment there is no force which can remotely threaten the continuance of the existing government. Then recall that every edition of every paper brings fresh stories of clubbing, gassing, jailing, shooting, murdering of men and women trying to assert the right to organize and bargain collectively in conservative trade unions. Then ask to what extent civil liberties are a reality, and not merely a tradition or a myth in "democratic" United States. Consider the economic, political and social disabilities under which millions of Negroes labor. Consider the plight of the Jews and of "foreigners" in a nation where economic tension is as yet a far distance from the breaking point.

Freedom and Fascism

It is, furthermore, a fallacy to suppose that we can retain the measure of freedom we now possess, if only we can maintain our economic system based on free enterprise and our political democracy against both Fascism and Communism. It is precisely the attempt to maintain the capitalist system which leads under modern conditions with fatal precision to the resort to Fascism. Capitalism itself, the present ruling class, will—unless the workers and their allies prevent—in the effort to maintain itself destroy every vestige, every pretense of democracy and civil rights, will appeal to the basest racial and national prejudices, will establish an open and brutal dictatorship. Why? Simply because the time when capitalism can maintain profits and at the same time make concessions to the workers, better the standard of living, is past. Now it maintains itself only by taking away even such concessions as it once gave. It must drive the standard of living even lower. But obviously if the masses have any freedom at all, any means for protest and self-expression, any workers or farmers union, party, press—then no matter how peaceful, legal, respectable, meek they may be, they will at some point offer resistance. They will try to fight for mere existence. But this threatens the existence of capitalism. Therefore it wipes out "democracy", smashes every trade union, farmers' organization and political party, degrades the intellectuals, and hounds and destroys minority groups. It is not by maintaining capitalism that we can maintain democracy and escape dictatorship.

Those who declaim against "red terror" and present imposing lists of its victims and catalogues of its social and psychological effects need also to be reminded over and over again not only of the numerous instances of "white terror" and the abominable excesses of Fascism, but of that most colossal and obscene terror of all—war. War which in its modern form is the natural and inevitable by-product of capitalist-imperialist rivalries, which kills millions of its victims, itself abrogates all civil liberties and makes the individual the puppet of an absolutist state if indeed it does not destroy him of his reason altogether.

This is, however, only the negative side of the case. If we could indeed offer the workers, farmers and the professional and technical groups only a choice of terrors in the future, they could hardly be blamed for emulating Hamlet and clinging desperately to those ills they have under so-called democracy rather than flying to evils which they have not yet experienced. The revolutionary internationalist does offer a positive alternative to the masses—an enhancement of well-being and of freedom.

The Workers' State

The Workers' State is a dictatorship. As Marxists we believe that and we do not attempt to conceal it. But it is important to understand the sense in which the term is here used, and Marxists have not always been too careful and accurate on this point. So long as there are classes, every government is in essence a dictatorship—of the ruling class over whatever other classes there may be. Whether at a given moment, however, this rule expresses itself as an open and avowed dictatorship, resorts to open and extensive terrorism, etc., depends upon whether this is necessary to the ruling class. The facts are clearly suggested in that sentence of our Declaration of Principles which says: "The political forms of capitalist society (monarchy, democracy, military dictatorship, fascism) are only the means by which the actual dictatorship of the controlling minority expresses itself."

The political expression of the proletarian dictatorship is the Soviet or Workers' State. Workers of all categories—industrial, agricultural, technical, clerical, professional—will be organized on a functional basis into Workers' Councils. Through the Councils functioning in a democratic manner, under the control of their membership, the workers will have a much more direct and simple way of sharing in the determination of the policies which affect their well-being than they have under the farcical electoral system which exists in the U. S. today. Furthermore, in a country with the resources and the technical equipment of the U. S. an immediate improvement of the standard of living and relief from insecurity could be provided if the capitalist brakes upon production were released, and this too would have the psychological effect of liberation on the masses now haunted by the spectre of insecurity and enslaved to fear.

Dealing with Enemies

It is true that parasites will be disfranchised in the Workers' State and that repressive measures will be used against those who conspire to overthrow the new regime and bring back the horrors of capitalism, unemployment, war—that is to say, those who want to abolish the dictatorship of the majority over the minority and bring back the dictatorship of the minority over the majority under which we now live. The extent and the character of these repressive measures, and the length of time during which they may be enforced, will depend primarily, as has been repeatedly demonstrated in revolutionary periods, upon the extent to which the new regime may be threatened with destruction from outside and upon the counter-revolutionary movements within. Life was not altogether peaceful and comfortable in the U. S. during and for some time after the Revolutionary War, nor in France during and after the Great French Revolution. It took four years of Civil War in these United States to smash the slaveholding aristocracy of the South, even after a president and congress representing a new class had been elected by parliamentary methods, and there was a considerable interruption of normal activities. It is thus that social change of a fundamental character is effected. The fact is not usually regarded as an argument for setting the clock back—if that could be done. And, in view of all that has been said, we are not among those who raise pious protests or shed crocodile tears when the Soviet Union takes whatever measures may be necessary against the class enemies, internal or external, of the Workers' State.

(What causes us to protest and shudder—what constitutes indeed a tragic menace to the well-being of the masses in the modern world, to the entire future of humanity—is not the proletarian dictatorship, nor the mistakes and excesses which it may have committed, nor the dominant role of the revolutionary party in the Workers' State. So long as classes exist, government will be in essence dictatorship. Human beings are nowhere infallible. Without a disciplined, devoted, heroic party of the vanguard elements the accomplishment of the modern revolutionary task is inconceivable.

The crime of the Stalin regime is that it has abandoned and destroyed the organization principle on which the revolutionary party must be built and thus has corrupted the party and transformed the proletarian dictatorship into a caricature of workers' democracy. No greater crime than this can be committed, for it means the corruption of those instrumentalities by which alone the masses can be liberated and a higher stage in human development achieved.

Democratic Centralism

Democratic centralism is the organizational principle of the Leninist party. Precisely because there must be the severest discipline in action and because the Party takes upon itself the role of leadership of the workers in the greatest crises, its own inner life must be free, democratic, vigorous. The clearest, straightest Marxian thinking is required; but that involves the right of criticism; and that cannot exist where there is repression.

A healthy revolutionary party which is based on democratic centralism will seek to establish its leadership over the mass organizations of the workers whether before, during or after the revolution, not by cheap political trickery, not by forced and mechanical processes, not by clever yet futile attempts to "capture" organizations, but by what may be rightly characterized as democratic methods. It gains influence in the unions e.g. by the correctness of the policies which its members set forth, by the persuasiveness with which they argue for them, by their devotion to the day to day work of the organization, by the sacrificial and heroic role they are prepared to play in strikes and similar crises. It is in substantially the same manner that a revolutionary party with a democratic inner regime gains and maintains its influence over the mass organizations, the Soviets or Workers' Councils, once the workers and their allies have taken power.

Now a vanguard party of this character is constantly subject to check by the mass organizations. It must essentially and most of the time actually serve their needs or it will be rejected. On the other hand, it can afford, indeed it will ordinarily encourage a democratic life in, will seek to educate, the mass organizations because it is well aware that in the long run it is precisely as they are enlightened that the masses will follow them. Exploiters of the masses such as the capitalists today, will do all in their power to keep them ignorant and confused. A Leninist revolutionary party will do just the opposite. Thus our Declaration of Principles can assure the masses in the U. S. that the workers' state does not mean repression, the curtailment of democratic rights for them but, while it functions as a dictatorship against enemies who may want to restore capitalism, will assure and continually extend far more democratic rights to the masses than ever accorded to them under capitalism.

Bureaucratic Regime

By the same token, it is when bureaucracy gets the upper hand in the revolutionary party itself, when a reign of repression is established there, that corruption enters into the whole of the proletarian dictatorship; it becomes a caricature of the workers' democracy. This is the crime which the present Stalin regime has perpetrated. Party, democracy was crushed. The utterly un-Marxian conception of an absolutist party, a mystical something, standing above the working class, which could do no wrong, which needed no checks upon itself whatever, arose. In the final analysis this can only end in a personal dictatorship. That is what exists in the Third International and its parties today. But such a party, resting now upon an insecure and artificial basis, serving essentially not the working class but a bureaucracy, will crush out democracy also in the Soviets, the unions, etc.

The Stalin regime has been forced to an ever more vicious suppression of party democracy and workers' democracy, because its basic aim of building Socialism in one country is anti-Marxian and wrong. It had to attempt to crush all opposition among revolutionists both inside and outside the Soviet Union, because if the opposition had had any means of expression the emasculation of the Communist Parties throughout the world which was the inevitable result of this policy would not have been tolerated. On this, however, space does not permit us to dwell here.

We of the Workers Party who raised and raise no protest against necessary repressive acts of the Workers State against its class enemies, within and without, do raise our voices with all our might against the terrorism now being exercised in an intensified degree against revolutionists, against those who are for the Workers' State in the Soviet Union but who are political opponents of of Stalin and his henchmen. We protest against these persecutions because this policy corrupts the revolutionary party itself and so undermines the Workers' State, which has been the beacon light of inspiration to the workers of the entire world. It furthermore, casts discredit upon and corrupts the entire revolutionary movement throughout the world.

From our Leninist point of view we can also criticize, not the principle of repressive measures against class enemies, but the manner in which the principle is applied in the Soviet Union under the Stalin regime. A bureaucracy resting on an insecure foundation, maintaining itself more and more, therefore, on a basis of fear and physical force, cannot carry out such measures as the collectivization of agriculture, for example, and numerous other policies in a sound manner. It falls into entirely unnecessary excesses which give both the workers and their enemies a false conception of what the proletarian dictatorship really means.

Our Position

We of the Workers Party thus have the answer, as neither the hypocritical reactionary defenders of "American constitutional liberties," nor the liberals of various shades, nor the social-democrats, nor the Stalinists have, to the question of freedom in the modern world. The alternatives before the workers and farmers and before those artists and professionals who are concerned about freedom to create and express are not limited to Fascism and the corrupt version of the proletarian dictatorship which Stalin offers, and the sham democracy which obtains in some countries today under capitalism, but which cannot be maintained if capitalism remains. There is the other alternative of an uncorrupted and genuine workers' democracy under the leadership of a revolutionary party organized under the principle of democratic centralism and based upon revolutionary internationalism.

The road to genuine democracy is not away from, but back to Marxism and Leninism; not away from but back to revolutionary internationalism; not away from but through the proletarian dictatorship, i.e. workers' democracy. This is the road to which the masses oppressed in varying degrees under Fascism and capitalist "democracy" are directed by the parties of the Fourth International.

In pursuing this course we are also the sole effective champions of humanity, of any idealism worthy of the name in the modern world, and of world peace. For a social order in which human dignity can be maintained and not constantly trampled in the mire, in which the creative energies of mankind can express themselves and not be endlessly suppressed and thwarted, is possible only if capitalism is destroyed, and this deliverance can come only as the result of victory of the workers in a revolutionary struggle.

July Issue of New International Out

The July issue of the New Internationalist is just off the press. The long awaited article by Trotsky on Thermidor and Bonapartism in relation to the Soviet Union is printed in full. In this article comrade Trotsky revises the previously confused conception implied by Thermidor and gives terminological concreteness to the term. It is an extremely interesting study of historical contrasts between episodes transpiring today in the Soviet Union and those in the period of Thermidorian reaction during the Great French Revolution.

A very timely and penetrating analysis of Centrism is contained in the article, "Centrist Alchemy or Marxism?" which deals with the road toward the Fourth International and the centrist brakes applied thereto by the Socialist Workers Party of Germany. The fact that the S.A.P. has given lip-service to the idea of building a Fourth International and has done everything in its centrist nature to delay that process is here acidly exposed.

Of domestic significance is the analysis of the recent Supreme Court decision with regard the NRA in an article by comrade Swaback entitled "The Passing of the NRA." Also, away from the international arena for the moment, is the critical exposition of the great Toledo strike by comrade A. J. Muste. An article on the coming struggles in railroads by A. Weaver concludes that portion of the magazine dealing with internal affairs in the country today.

Of special importance is the article by John West, "The Bands Are Playing," dealing with the question of war. The article deals primarily with slogans against war. And here comrade West takes up the ubiquitous slogans: Against War and Fascism and Defend the Soviet Union and dissects them to show the positive and negative features inherent in them—as bare slogans. An article on Greece, book reviews and excerpts from the international press conclude the contents of this issue.

NUL Calls National Caravan

Convention in Wash. D.C. to be Held Same Time

Once again the National Unemployed League is about to embark on an action that will make history for the million-headed jobless of this country. Entering a counter-offensive against the pauper wages of the Roosevelt administration, the N.U.L. will bring its protest to the front door of American capitalism: in October a mass caravan will march on Washington, D. C. Simultaneous with the caravan the Third National Convention of the Leagues will be held in the same city. The call for the National Convention follows:

NAT'L UNEMPLOYED LEAGUE
232 North High Street
Columbus, Ohio
July 16, 1935

To All Local Leagues
Dear Fellow-workers:
By action of the National Committee of the National Unemployed League, the 3rd Annual Convention of the NUL has been postponed until October. The place of the Convention has been set for Washington, D. C. The Caravan to Washington has been set for the same time.

The reasons for this action are as follows:

1) The great amount of work which has been and is now taking place in the various states must go forward to build the Leagues throughout the country and to prepare for the greatest National Convention of the unemployed which has ever been held.

The West Virginia Unemployed League held its annual Convention on June 7-8 and is now preparing for a state Hunger March.

The Pennsylvania Unemployed League held the largest and most successful convention in its history on June 8-9 and is now conducting a big organizational campaign.

The Ohio Unemployed League is undertaking the greatest task ever attempted by any State organization of unemployed. It will hold a mass Hunger March and Convention at Columbus on July 29-Aug. 2. Thousands are expected to join in the demonstration which should start the ball rolling for such demonstrations and action throughout the country as will force a complete change in relief and works programs throughout the country and make another step toward the 30 hour $30 week.

In Indiana, Kentucky, Connecticut, New Jersey, Michigan, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri, Massachusetts, Maine, New York and other states the Unemployed Leagues are growing. State conventions are being planned.

At no time in the history of the N.U.L. have we had so much activity and the need of giving every possible assistance to the organizational work. The National Unemployed League is stronger today than ever before. It is by far the strongest National organization of the unemployed in the country and is becoming one of the greatest.

Plans for Eight Page Completed; Now Funds!

The California Workers Party District Committee requests that a special section be set aside for news of class struggle events on the Pacific Coast in the coming 8-page weekly. The comrades will undertake to edit regularly material for this section. This is acceptable. But the first duty for the comrades on the Pacific Coast is to put their shoulder to the wheel and put over the campaign to provide the funds necessary for the 8-page weekly.

This duty rests upon Party branches everywhere. We ask all sympathizers of the movement and readers of the NEW MILITANT to give their assistance. Contributions received are still below ten percent of the total needed. The report in this issue shows $195.48 collected at the time of going to press. The total required is $2,000.00. From this it is obvious that much more speed in the campaign is necessary. We still await a response from the majority of the Party branches. We ask the question: What do the several thousand NEW MILITANT readers say?

Only the New York and Boston branches have recorded somewhat of a response so far. The Philadelphia and New Haven branches have each made an initial small contribution, and even as far as New York City is concerned the bigger branches are still far behind in the campaign. The Harlem branch, which is one of the smallest numerically but most active in make-up, holds the lead with $23.98 collected to date.

Since the report made a fortnight ago, we have received the following amounts:

Contributions:
Center Branch, N. Y. C.	$6.50
Brownville Branch, N. Y. C.	1.00
Flatbush Branch, N. Y. C.	1.25
W. Gray, Minotola, N. J.	5.00

'Toledo Plan' Hits Militant Union Policy

'Capital-Labor' Cooperation Intended Against Strikes

By CYRUS RIGBY

TOLEDO, July 8.—Details of another high-sounding system of government strikebreaking were disclosed in Toledo July 8 when Edward F. McGrady, assistant United States Secretary of Labor, spoke before the Toledo Rotary Club.

The new plan, McGrady said, has been dubbed the "Toledo Plan for Industrial Peace," and is to be built upon the ideas gained by the notorious Federal "meddler" during his experiences in helping "settle" the Chevrolet and Toledo Edison strikes.

But McGrady showed rare modesty when talking about the Toledo Edison settlement. He claimed all the real credit for the selling out of the Edison workers for the editors of the three Toledo newspapers: Grove Patterson, editor of The Blade; Richard Patterson, who is connected with The Times; and Carlton K. Matson, editor of The News-Bee. These three, he declared, had formulated conditions of settlement that could finally be accepted by both sides.

Revolt Against Muir Lumber Strike Sell-Out

A.F. of L. Chief Works Hand-in-Glove With Militia

By EARL LANE

PORTLAND, Oregon.—The heroic strike of the Pacific Northwest lumber workers is entering its tenth week with the tempo of the struggle gradually slowing down.

From its inception the workers have been confronted with every weapon in the arsenal of the boss class from the bayonets and gas bombs of the national guard to the wily sell-out tricks of the labor fakers.

Saddled with the reactionary leadership of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, which was given jurisdiction over the Sawmill and Timber Workers Union by the executive council of the A. F. of L., the workers are waging a courageous battle for the control of their union and victory in the strike.

The Northwest Convention of the S. & T.W.U. met in April and endorsed a demand for a six hour day, five day week, 75c per hour minimum wage, one week sick leave and one week vacation with pay annually, and the closed shop, and went on record to strike for these demands on May 6.

Muir's Maneuvers
Abe Muir, vice-president of the Carpenters and Joiners, who had been made Northwest organizer of the lumber workers, immediately began to sabotage the strike. He and his henchmen began a series of conferences with the employers and E. P. Marsh of the U. S. Department of Labor that were designed to sow confusion in the union's ranks and prevent the walkout from being effective in the key production centers. On the very day before the strike was scheduled to start he announced that only mills whose owners refused to negotiate would be called out. As if the time to begin negotiations was on the day when a general walkout of the industry was due to start! He even went so far as to say that he expected several mills already closed by spontaneous walkouts of the workers to reopen on the strike date.

These maneuvers were to a large extent successful for only 12,000 walked out on May 6. Four days

Africans Called to the Colors

'Better Die Free Than Live as Slaves,' Sellassie Says

Tribesmen of all Ethiopia are prepared to drop the plowshare and seize the sword to drive back the Fascist marauder and preserve the independence of their nation.

To a man they responded to the battle cry of Haile Sellassie, who exhorted them with the appeal: "Better die free than live as slaves."

Meanwhile in Italy—
Close to two hundred thousand Italian troops are now in eastern Africa prepared to assume military operations against the legions of Haile Sellassie. Three hundred planes are being dispatched by Mussolini to overcome hazards of desert fighting. Corroding acid to burn the soles off the feet of the Ethiopian soldiers is being turned out in large quantities and shipped to Eritrea and Italian Somaliland.

In the meanwhile Emperor Sellassie is preparing his troops for the coming struggle which even the most sceptical declare will in all likelihood break out in September.

In Europe the three imperialist powers most concerned, Italy, England and France, are busy finding an out for their little institution known as the League of Nations and dubbed by Lenin the "thieves kitchen of Geneva." The "thieves" seem to have come to an agreement and Il Duce, it is reported, is preparing to fly to Africa to personally supervise the impending hostilities.

It is quite likely that Mussolini's proposed flight is motivated by more than personal ambition. Reports emanating from Italian territory in east Africa declare that demoralization is setting in among the troops stationed there. The fascist chief undoubtedly reckons that his presence there will help build up a declining morale. But the swamps and mosquitoes and the heat may yet prove too much of a match for Mussolini's vocal cords.

Unquestionably England and France would much rather come to an agreement with Italy—even so far as granting it a complete protectorate over Ethiopia is concerned. Hostilities in Africa may prove too costly for both France and England. What these powers fear most is a colonial uprising that may well put an end to their imperialist domination forever.

The forthcoming meeting of the League of Nations is scheduled to take up the Ethiopian question. The attitude of England, France and Italy has already been expressed above. What will M. Litvinoff say—or do?

The notorious Harry Gannes writing in the Daily Worker complains at the Social-democratic ministers in the Scandinavian cabinets not raising the issue of Ethiopia and taking a firm stand in defense of the people of Abyssinia. Yes, it is correct to demand of those old hands at social-patriotism that they take a stand on this question.

But what about the neophytes of the Stalinist school who have taken to social-patriotism with the zeal of an infidel coming late to Christ? What about the representative of the Soviet bureaucracy in the League of Nations? Haile Sellassie has appealed to him. Has he replied? Yes—his only statement on the Ethiopian question in the League of Imperialist Bandits was lavish praise for Sir Anthony Eden's proposals!

No Share-the-Wealth Here

NEW ORLEANS.—Eight-year-old Clarabelle Newchurch and her brother Leo, aged two, are in New Orleans Charity Hospital suffering from malnutrition—for Huey Long's much advertised "share-the-wealth" plan never got around to them.

Joseph Newchurch, the children's father, told police he'd been jobless since June 15, living only on grocery orders from the Y.E.R.A. Then the orders expired, and so did the family food supply.

Third Party Meet Sows Confusion; F.D.R. Safe

By A. J. MUSTE

The chief accomplishment of the convention of the Third parties just held in Chicago with Professor Paul Douglas of the University of Chicago as chairman and Alfred Bingham of Common Sense magazine as secretary, are to furnish some fresh evidence that Roosevelt has as yet little cause to worry over the outcome of the 1936 election and to give the Daily Worker another job of trying to make it clear that "this is not the kind of a labor party we are for."

The two hundred and fifty representatives of Farmer-Labor groups and the Farmer-Labor Political Federation, League for Independent Political Action and People's Political Alliance of Chicago, the last three all manned by the same group of liberals, who met in Chicago described themselves as "native American radicals," and "the direct descendants of the populist tradition." They aim at a new social order based on "production for use." They wish to "unite all the groups who want a change to come through the ballot box, which excludes Communists." A delegate from Idaho, with the eagerness for quick and big results at the polls which characterizes the "native American radicals" argued eloquently for the exclusion of "all members of the Communist Party and also those who do not believe in the democratic process of government" (did he mean to imply that the C. P. with the new turn does believe in the democratic process?) on the ground that each Communist included in the new organization would cost ten thousand votes and "ruin the new movement."

While not all the delegates supported these mathematical speculations, Plank Eight in the Platform for a Third Party drawn up by the group which, by the way, now calls itself the American Commonwealth Political Federation (in addition possibly to its other names) begins the declaration: "We reaffirm our faith in the democratic form of government." This is a frank statement. It might seem that it would take some courage to make such a statement in these days. At any rate, it is well to have so unequivocally on record these people who often speak of themselves as "true revolutionists," who know how really to "stop fascism" in the U. S. and who regard Marxism as Congressmen such as Lundeen and Marcantonio, who have been C. P. pets recently, are among them. And it is said that the younger, "very radical" ones, among them receive advice and counsel from the Reverend Doctor Harry F. Ward, master mind of the League Against War and Fascism.

Despite their radical talk on their playing at revolution, this outfit consists of liberals, nothing more. In such a period as the present it cannot persuade any considerable number that it has more to offer than Roosevelt. If the crisis is again intensified, the chances are that Douglas and Co. will be swept aside like chips on a raging forest, as the genuinely revolutionary forces and those of reaction come to grips. If by chance and in combination with certain labor and farmer organizations, they were to succeed in forming a sizeable party some day, it could only serve to create illusions among the masses about salvation by "democratic

Old Guard Swamps Militants at SP Meet

Complete victory for the Old Guard, with Norman Thomas and the other erstwhile allies of the "Militant" Socialists voting with the reactionaries on every decisive issue, was the outcome of the quarterly meeting of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, July 13-15.

As predicted by the NEW MILITANT, the N.E.C. majority elected by the "Militants" and publicly identified with them in a single bloc since the Detroit convention last June, capitulated to the Old Guard. This was the inevitable result of the systematic struggle waged by the Old Guard, while the "Militants" carried on no independent struggle but

Dismiss Indictment Against Robins-Gras

NEW YORK.—Dismissal of the indictment in General Sessions Court of July 12, terminates victoriously the Robins-Gras case which arose out of the hotel strike 18 months ago and which was one of the first important activities of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Harold Robins and Andrea Gras were convicted of slugging a non-union worker, served eight months in Sing Sing while their appeal was pending, due to Judge Valente's refusal to issue a certificate of reasonable doubt, which would have made bail possible. It now turns out that there is not even the basis of a prosecution. For the workers who sat in the "pen" and for the strikers at whom the frame-up arrest was a deliberate blow, however, there is no compensation for what they suffered at the hands of the police and courts.

After conviction, Robins and Gras appealed to the N.P.L.D. for aid. The Robins-Gras Defense Committee set up by the N.P.L.D. had the backing of the Socialist Party, Workers Party, Communist Party Opposition, General Defense Committee, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, I.L.G.W.U. and others.

As a result of the fight and the able brief drawn by Attorneys Abraham Abramowitz of the Socialist Lawyers Association and Louis Glickhouse, both of whom donated their services, a reversal was won. The higher court handed down a decision last December which was widely hailed as setting an important precedent. It castigated the trial judge, the late Joseph E. Corrigan, for his violent prejudice and dishonest tactics. So complete was the exposure of the frame-up engineered by the hotel owners and the prosecution, that the District Attorney finally had to drop the case altogether.

But their trust in Norman Thomas, despite the fact that Thomas has always demonstrated that he has no principled differences with the Old Guard.

By the passage of an 8-point resolution, the Old Guard won, not merely on organizational points, but on fundamental political principles.

Reformism Triumphs

1. The first point is the most important, and embodies the main demand of the Old Guard. Since the Detroit convention the Old Guard has demanded the proclamation by the N.E.C. of a broad definition defining communism. They won this; point one making party membership incompatible with holding the following views: "armed violent overthrow of the state," "dictatorship as over against democracy," "bureaucratic control of the party from the [national] center," and "underground methods."

Survey of Ohio Strikes Shows Value of Revolutionary Party

By JACK WILSON

In the shadows of Northern Ohio's massive industrial structure with its giant rubber, steel, auto and textile factories, the working class has fought incessantly since the inception of the NRA in 1933 to establish its fundamental rights and organize itself for its historic task—the overthrow of American and world imperialism.

Workers have won great victories during this period when led by the Workers Party as in the memorable Toledo Auto-lite strike.

Workers have suffered foulest betrayals when controlled by the A. F. of L. bureaucrats. Witness Akron, rubber city.

The stories of the struggles have been told in the NEW MILITANT. It is unnecessary to repeat them.

New Party Gains in Holland

Fourth Int'l Vote Increases in Many Municipalities

AMSTERDAM.—The municipal elections have followed close on the heels of the provincial elections. In them the Revolutionary Socialist Workers Party made an excellent showing, electing their candidates in many cities.

The R.S.A.P. now commands a total of 25 seats in various municipal administrations, an increase of 9 over the last election. Some of the preliminary results follow:

In Davenport the vote rose from 2,098 in the provincial elections to 2,624 in the municipal contest. Compared with the vote received by the C. P. in this city, which increased from 707 to 756 and the S. P. whose results remained stationary; 5561 to 5556. But the proportion between reformist votes on the one side and revolutionary votes on the other is three times as favorable for the R.S.A.P. than for the C.P. The number of votes for the capitalist parties remained quite substantial: 8870 out of a total of 17,806 votes.

Another significant incident in the voting was at Zaandam. Here the R.S.A.P. increased its total from 1,180 to 1,397 while the number of votes for the Stalinist party fell from 1,726 to 1,590. The president of the building workers union, one of the social democratic candidates was beaten by our comrade. The reply of this bureaucrat to the expulsion of four R.A.A.P. members from the union.

In Weststellingwerf R.S.A.P. votes rose from 589 to 988 while the reformists lost—2,680 to 2,192—and the Stalinists dropped from 396 to 325 votes.

Highly gratifying increases were obtained in other municipalities throughout the country.

A serious setback, however, was suffered in Amsterdam where the R.S.A.P. dropped a few thousand votes. A serious disappointment to the Dutch Party, it has had a total salutary effect in jacking up the morale of the comrades and imbuing them with the determination to build solid and strong in this center, to make the party a more effective instrument in the class struggle and a more serious factor in the coming elections.

It Pays to Be A Plutocrat

DETROIT.—It pays to be a General Motors bigshot!

For the top group of 130 directors, and executives received in 1934 $4,990,737 for their work—or an average of $38,389 a man.

When Chevrolet workers struck recently, the management termed their demands "unreasonable."

Agriculture...

For the year ending March 15, 1935, approximately 54.1 farms per 1,000 were sold for taxes or mortgages. . . . Forbes Magazine announces a farm tractor with air-cooled, sound-proof cab, equipped with radio and cigar lighter. . . . Because few American farmers have money to buy tractors, the use of horses and mules is increasing. In Arkansas and Oklahoma human beings are forced to pull plows and harrows. . . . In Soviet Russia nearly 100,000 more tractors are available this year than in 1934 and the acreage per tractor has increased 25 percent. Food prices are approximately half of what they were a year ago and consumption has increased accordingly. . . .

Patriotism...

Adopting the slogan "Crime and Communism must perish!" the United States Flag Association adopted a new Declaration of Independence on July 4. It asserts that "United States people are normally the most prosperous and happiest on the planet. Wages of American workmen are highest in the world and the American standard of living far above any other. . . . Communists and radical forces are spending six million dollars a year in propaganda to undermine and destroy the republic. . . . The time has come when every man must declare himself and show his colors, be they red or pink, black or blue, brown or silver, or Red, White and Blue." Among the 56 signers are Al Smith, former Vice-President; Curtis Hamilton Fish, Jr.; John J. Raskob, C. R. Walgreen, Copper magnate Solomon Guggenheim and WILLIAM E. GREEN. . . . The Catholic Daughters of America, assembled in convention in Seattle, were urged by their national chairman, Bishop William J. Haffey, to combat Communism, Bolshevism, Atheism and birth control. Members bitterly attacked Margaret Sanger, birth-control advocate. . . . A recent study shows that during the past 10 years the birthrate of Catholics in Milwaukee fell 15 percent, of Protestants 5 percent. The report states, "Whether Catholic families are resorting to contraceptives or continence cannot be proved by the evidence." . . .

Capitol Hill...

The U. S. Senate passed an amendment appropriating mileage of 20 cents a mile to vice presidents. To John Nance Garner this means $851.20 per trip from his home in Uvalde, Texas. Senators and Vice Presidents now receive free postage, free clerk hire, free haircuts, shaves and massages, free snuff and free mineral water. . . . Everett Parker, citizen of Newport, Tenn., with his wife and four small children hitchhiked to Washington to get new shoes for the kiddies. They were put out of the Senate gallery when Mrs. Parker began nursing her eight-months old baby. . . . Senator Hiram Long's recent filibuster cost taxpayers $4,450, the speech filling 89 pages of the Congressional Record at $50 a page. . . . The United States Weather Bureau reports that Washington is less windy than any other large city. The average wind velocity in Chicago is 15 miles per hour, New York, 13 miles per hour, Washington only 7 miles per hour. . . .

"At the very outset Franklin was plump, pink and nice," says Sarah Delano Roosevelt in "My Boy Franklin." When editor of the Harvard Crimson he showed his militant spirit by crusading against lack of sportsmanship, listless hockey practice and the small volume of cheering at football games. . . . "Until I was twelve I sincerely believed that everybody had a house on Fifth Avenue, a villa in Newport and a steam-driven, ocean-going yacht," confesses Cornelius Vanderbilt in his "Farewell to Fifth Avenue." . . .

Society Notes...

To prove that it is a pure Nordic Nation, Germany has undertaken to establish a family tree for each of its sixty-six million inhabitants. . . . The Lukens Steel Co. of Coatesville, Pa., first makers of boiler plate, recently celebrated its 125th birthday. . . . Last March, Mike Naggis, unemployed puddler who had worked for the company 40 years died of starvation. . . . "There are no more sticks, no more hicks," announces the fashion editor of a national woman's magazine. . . . Clad only in nightshirt, John Hechter of Weldon, Ark., was found wandering the streets of Dallas, Texas, at 2 A.M. It was his first visit to the city. "I went out in the back yard and there was no path leading to the place I wanted to go and I couldn't see my little house," he explained. . . .

Form United Front to Protest Deportation of Anti-Fascists

SAN FRANCISCO, July 2.—Protesting the ordered deportation of two Italian anti-Fascists, Vincent Ferrero and Porrick Salitto, a mass meeting was held here last night by the Workers Party, Socialist Party, the I.W.O., the Northern California Civil Liberties Committee, Tom Mooney Molders Defense Committee, the I.L.G.W.U. and the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Ferrero, a resident of San Francisco for thirty years, and Salitto, who has been here fifteen years and has a motherless child of three, were charged with being anarchists, subject, as aliens, to deportation, because as owners of a restaurant they sublet office space to the editor of the English-language Anarchist newspaper, "Man". Their arrest was part of a campaign of intimidation against radical workers last year, during which subscribers to the paper were visited by immigration officials and threatened if they continued to aid it.

Salitto is now detained under $2,500 bail on Angel's Island here, awaiting a decision on a writ of habeas corpus which is to be argued next week, and the outcome of which will also decide Salitto's fate. They are defended by Austin Lewis. Previously, after secret hearings the men were ordered deported on June 3, and the Board of Review in Washington refused to reopen the case.

The protests to Washington of many workers' organizations and the attention the case has received here has prevented their deportation so far, but they are still in imminent danger.

If deported to Fascist Italy as the government plans, Salitto and Ferrero are subject to a sentence in Fascist dungeons of five to fifteen years under a law specifically passed to cover anti-Fascist citizens who have been residing outside Italy. This makes the deportation equivalent to extradition. Recently Italians arriving from Argentina and Uruguay were immediately seized upon arrival and sentenced to long terms on the dreaded penal islands.

Working class organizations are urged to protest to W. C. McCormack, Commissioner of Immigration, Washington, D. C. and to send notice of their action to the Non-Partisan Labor Defense.

Marcus Graham, editor of "Man", notified the other organizations which cooperated in the protest meeting that he had requested the I.L.D. to participate also. Both of the I.L.D. expressed a willingness to cooperate but said that she would first have to take the matter up with the Communist Party. After a conference between the I.L.D. and the C. P. which took nearly two hours, Graham was informed that under no circumstances would the C. P. or the I.L.D. appear on the same platform with the W. P. or N.P.L.D. Then to further disrupt the mass protest, the C. P. organized a rival meeting on the same evening at which the counter-attraction was Leo Gallagher speaking on the NRA.

The mass meeting adopted a resolution pledging all participating organizations to conduct a mass campaign for the freedom of Salitto and Ferrero.

Revolt Against Strike Sell-Out Muir Lumber

after the strike began Muir triumphantly announced that he had negotiated a "model agreement" with the Weyerhaeuser Lumber Co., that negotiations would be begun with all employees on the basis of this agreement and that the end of the strike was now in sight. This brazen sellout agreement provided for 500 per hour, forty-hour week, the recognition of the union as a collective bargaining agency and rejected the closed shop.

The fakers were given a rude shock when the Weyerhaeuser workers did not even wait to vote on this "model agreement" but walked out to a man. When the Longview local did vote on the sell-out it was rejected 8 to 1, and this large production center was soon closed down tight.

Revolt Against Muir

From then on the strike spread rapidly and soon over 40,000 were out. Although Muir and his stooges continued their maneuvers the strike ranks remained solid, except for one important break, the workers of the McCormick Lumber Co., returned to work on Muir's terms.

Revolt against Muir's leadership began to rise in the union locals, several of which wired Green and Hatcher demanding his removal, and when action was not forthcoming from these quarters a rank and file Northwest Strike Committee was set up which announced its intention of sidetracking Muir and fighting to a finish for the original strike demands.

When it became apparent that the fakers were losing control of the situation the bosses called upon their executive committee, the state governments of Oregon and Washington to take action. Ever obedient to their masters voice these organs of class rule swung into action and unleashed a reign of terror upon the workers so vicious that even conservative A. F. of L. leaders branded it as Hitlerism.

Police Terror

Picket lines were broken up at Bridal Veil, Oregon, by state police and sheriffs deputies and the workers driven down the highway at a dog trot with these armed thugs showering blows upon them with riot clubs and pick handles. Over 230 workers were arrested at this town.

The answer of the A. F. of L. leaders to this terrorism was a series of statements bristling with "radical" talk and -- a resort to the capitalist courts in an effort to obtain an injunction to prevent the police from interfering with "peaceful" picketing!!!

On Tuesday, June 18th, Clarence D. Martin of Washington, acting on petitions allegedly signed by 63 percent of the employees of the Tacoma mills, ordered the state police in Tacoma to "protect workers in their right to work."

"Ample evidence showing that a majority of the employees were satisfied with agreements negotiated with employers and want to return to work were laid before the executive office," he said.

"The state will go the limit in protecting them. Their right to work must be respected."

Proof that the statement that 63 percent of the millmen wished to return to work was false was evidenced by the fact that only a handful would pass the picket lines.

On Friday the state of California followed the lead of Oregon and Washington when pickets at Eureka were fired on and one worker murdered. Another has since died.

After the reopening of the Tacoma mills had proved a failure with only the state police on hand it was decided to loose a real reign of terror on the workers. On Monday the 24th the national guard was ordered into Tacoma. Picket lines were broken up at the point of the bayonet. Although martial law was not formally declared groups of more than two persons were declared an unlawful assemblage by the commander of the guard. A permit which the City Council had granted to the S.T.W.U. to hold a tag day was summarily revoked.

Strike Pitts Brother against Brother

By GERRY ALLARD

PORTLAND, Oregon.—Two brothers bravely carry symbolic banners of their cause on the strike front.

Two brothers man bayoneted rifles and menacing machine guns in a company of national guards.

The four brothers met the other night at their father's home in a conference asking the son for advice.

"Dad, if they call out the troops to break the strike? What should we do?" was the question the boys asked their dad.

"Stick with your gang!" the father exclaimed to his striking sons. "I believe in labor's right to organize." Thus the sagacious old father spoke, knowing full well that the strike meant a loss of family income they could not afford to lose.

For days and days the two sons continue to carry their banners before the gate of a Portland lumber mill proclaiming the right of their cause in the long strike of lumber mill workers of America's Pacific northwest.

Many strikers have been injured while picketing. Two have been killed. The strike continues. Efforts to smash the picket lines with brute, criminal force have failed. Attempts to reopen the mills floundered. The strikers are winning.

Thus another chapter—perhaps only a sidelight, but nevertheless significant—has been written of American labor's onward march to victory.

IN THE UNIONS

By KARL LOKE

The American Federation of Hosiery Workers has, for years, been known as one of the more wide-awake and aggressive units of the American Federation of Labor. For a long time it constituted practically the only organized force in the textile industry. With the hosiery workers, the United Textile Workers—to which the A.F. H.W. is affiliated—would have been a paper organization. Its leadership, by and large, takes a right Socialist position. It is likely that the coming period will see a certain grouping of forces around the tendency which these leaders represent.

In the June 28 issue of the Hosiery Worker, the official union organ, this group presents its conception of the path which the labor movement should take if its organizations are to be modernized and strengthened. Summarized, their proposals are as follows:

Program...

1. The A. F. of L. should be empowered to order, within certain limits, the form of organization to be adopted in a given section of trade or industry to make possible the penetration of such fields as autos, rubber, armament industries, steel and food. Such a program can only be effected by a complete change in the status of the international unions. Some of their absolute power and autonomy must be taken away in order to create a more powerful central organization.

2. In line with this conception, immediate steps should be taken to unify action in the printing industry. One craft must not work while another is on strike. All agreements made by printing trades unions should expire on the same date while organization of the unskilled elements in the industry is a vital necessity.

3. Central authority should be granted to the A. F. of L. to end the confusion and the division in the ranks of the building trades unions.

4. The situation calls for an immediate organizing drive in the South, in other thinly populated areas and in steel and other basic industries. The cost of this campaign as well as legal defense expenses, etc. would be covered by a universal assessment of 50c on every member of the Federation to raise a two million dollar fund.

5. The legislative activities of the Federation should be intensified and more adequate publicity mediums should be developed. An imperative necessity is a Labor Radio System equal in range to the hook-up of Father Coughlin.

6. Establishment of a Labor Red Cross with a million dollar fund to feed strikers.

7. Greater financial and moral support to workers' education.

8. Intensification of activities among Negro workers.

There can be no disagreement with the general line of these proposals. In essence they aim toward reorganization of the Federation on a more strongly centralized basis. These proposals, if adopted would certainly make the organization and strike campaigns of the Federation more effective and vigorous. They would encourage organization of the unskilled in the basic industries. It would be much more difficult, under such an organizational setup for the large and powerful craft unions, to strangle the organizations of the workers in the mass production fields.

How??

The editorial proposes that "the questions raised . . . be taken up on the floor of all local unions, central bodies and in every type of trade union gathering. As opinion crystallizes, resolutions should be drawn and adopted and eventually brought to the attention of the Executive Council of the Federation and the responsible leaders of the movement, local, sectional and national."

Radicals and progressives in the unions will do well to keep their eyes open in this situation. The leaders of the Hosiery Workers together with such others as Gorman of the United Textile Workers, Harrison of the Railway Clerks, constitute what might be called the "moderate progressive" tendency in the Federation. Far more aggressive, honest and intelligent than the run-of-the-mill labor leadership, they are still part of the A. F. of L. machine, they play the game according to the official rules and they undertake no real fight against corruption and reaction. The textile workers will not soon forget the deal, made at the last U.T.W. convention whereby Rieve, hosiery worker chief, first declared his intention of running against Thomas MacMahon for the presidency of the U.T.W. He withdrew at the last moment after MacMahon had agreed to let Gorman run the general textile strike, a fight which he ended with a gross capitulation to the combined pressure of the government and the operators.

WASHINGTON. — Workers will not even be allowed to protest against being shut down in strikes, under the McCormack military disobedience bill favorably reported July 12 by the House military affairs committee. It is a counterpart of the Tydings bill which was slipped through the Senate.

speed up accompanying the upswing, the long hours, etc., workers sought to better their conditions.

Using as a basis for generalization sixty major Ohio strikes, three characteristics of them come sharply to the fore.

General Features of Strikes

1. Two thirds of the strikes, predominantly those in the basic industries, were met with flagrant violence by local, state and county police, the national guards, all under the domination of the capitalist class. But in no instance did terrorism serve its purpose. The militancy of the working class hurled back this challenge. It took other means to "pacify" labor.

2. The federal government played the dominant role in effecting "settlements" in four-fifths of the strikes. In other words, the class character of the state exposed itself in the great majority of the struggles.

3. The American Federation of Labor served as a brake in all struggles, it openly betrayed the rubber workers in three strikes, it rubbered the labor movement in rubber temporarily through its policy and it served as an effective screen for the government in many cases.

Besides the rubber industry, there are many examples which should be mentioned; the Chevrolet strike this spring, the huge gas operators strike in Cleveland last year; the Columbia Chemical strike in Barberton; the Berger Steel strike; and so on and on.

While every strike had union recognition as its prime motive, this was won clearly in only two out of the sixty strikes. Pay increases were wrung from employers in ten of the strikes, being used as a "bribe" in five cases to avoid union recognition.

Concrete Results

Labor was organized in only four of the sixty plants involved before the NRA. Less than 5,000 out of the 65,000 workers in these strikes were union members before NRA. The weight of the factor of inexperience speaks for itself.

In sixty percent of the plants, and particularly in the basic industrial plants, company unions were formed by the bosses to split the ranks of labor.

Over 21,000 of the 60,000 workers involved in major strikes in the Ohio region were auto workers who struck in six plants during this period. Of course, the Toledo Chevrolet and Auto-lite strikes were the most significant.

The betrayed Berger Steel strike and the Weirton and Steubenville walkouts drew 15,000 workers into open class struggle.

Textile strikes brought 4,000 workers on the picket line in three factories and three rubber strikes (in minor plants) had 2,500 workers.

What the paper results of the great majority of the strikes were can be summarized in the familiar terms, "Go Back to Work and Negotiate," "Called Off," "Company Agrees to Meet with Any Group of Employees," etc., etc. Labor gained little there.

The Role of the W. P.

What the working class learned from its experiences is of decisive importance. One scarcely need add we are not "mechanical" Marxists—the workers didn't learn automatically. Only where revolutionary forces drew correct conclusions and explained them to the masses was conscious progress made in the working class movement.

It is precisely in this that the Workers Party played its major and constructive role. Utilizing both an Auto-lite victory and the rubber betrayal to educate and lead the workers, the Workers Party gained in strength and influence.

Only in so far as the Workers Party is built up to play a greater and stronger role in the numerous struggles (through participating in them) will the revolutionary movement grow in America.

This must be one of our major tasks. Strengthen and build the Workers Party in the highly industrialized Ohio region.

A clear understanding of the nature and scope of the problem and of the prominent position strikes as a manifestation of the class struggle will play a necessary pre-requisite to our success.

process" which bitter experience would dispel and thus to postpone the unification of all the oppressed elements of society under the leadership of the revolutionary Marxist party.

As we have suggested, the Daily Worker will have to get busy again, uttering disclaimers that these "radicals" are building the "right kind of Labor Party" and furnishing another detailed explanation of just what is a labor party which is not reformist and not revolutionary and so forth and so on.

Big Guns Very Absent

As things now stand, the Roosevelt strategy has taken the wind out of the sails of such movements as this at least so far as making a considerable showing in the 1936 election is concerned. Certain incidents of the Chicago conference itself bear this out. The LaFollettes were conspicuous by their absence. Young Bob, predestined to become the presidential candidate of these Third parties when they make a bid for a real showing, does not see enough anti-Roosevelt, liberal-labor votes in sight yet. He is pursuing the "canny" course of building up a reputation as a "determined but constructive" radical and "friend of labor." He tries to get Roosevelt to go farther but votes for Roosevelt measures, when he has made his attempt to get more and failed. Governor Olson, the Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, another big man in the estimation of the Chicago dabblers in politics, sent word that he was ready to support any movement standing for "production for use," but also had other engagements and could not be present in person. Senator Nye came and made a speech as a sort of friend of the movement, but made it clear that the liberal forces must not be divided in 1936 and that in the forthcoming election it's Roosevelt so far as he is concerned. Marcantonio, the New York Congressman who succeeded LaGuardia in Washington, and who was one of the signers of the call for the conference, withdrew from the movement as did the Knickerbocker Democrats when a decision looking toward running a presidential ticket in 1936 was made. Upton Sinclair also made it clear that he is still for capturing the Democratic party for Socialism and Epic.

Conservative As Any

Nobody outside an insane asylum any longer believes that Roosevelt is going to put an end to the capitalist system and usher in the cooperative commonwealth. The Republican case against him is accordingly weak and no Republican of importance has yet shown any eagerness for the job of standard bearer in 1936. A little excitement has been stirred up about a tax program which asks a few more dollars from big incomes, about federal control of business invading states' rights, about a big spending program, about Roosevelt's hint that the Constitution might have to be amended to allow Congress to enact social legislation—but Roosevelt, the red revolutionist, does not register any more even with the Dr. Wirts.

On the other hand, unless new elements enter the picture, the liberals and the trade unions will be found on the Roosevelt bandwagon in 1936. Many jobs are dependent on the money appropriated for public works which Roosevelt has for disbursement. Liberals and union officials are subject to subtle influence from this source, being only human like the garden variety of local politicians and citizens.

Long, Coughlin and Townsend can declaim that the Roosevelt unemployment insurance and old age measures do not go far enough and that appropriations for public works are too small. They can argue that the tax program which the incomparable publicity-artists pulled out of his sleeve a few weeks ago just when Congressmen were all set to flee the heat of Washington, does not "soak-the-rich" enough. The fact of the matter is that the program of taxing big incomes, big corporations and big inheritance does not "soak" the rich at all. It represents a feeble start toward imposing income and inheritance taxes which the ruling classes in European countries have long since had to accept as a price for keeping the capitalist system on its feet. But when all the advantages on Roosevelt's side are taken into account, what chance have any of these "extremists" of persuading the electorate that any candidate that may advance has a chance against Roosevelt or could accomplish anything more than Roosevelt will?

As for the trade unions, Roosevelt has "given" the A. F. of L. the Wagner Bill, the Magna Charta of Labor, as William Green does not tire of proclaiming. As the New Militant has pointed out, the employers will contest the constitutionality of the act, they will construct the National Labor Board, etc. In the end, the unions will realize that the Wagner Bill will do no more for them than the other Magna Charta, Section 7a. For the present, however, in spite of all the talk about a labor party and the fond hopes of the C. P. and all the varieties of the socialists, the union leaders, and that still means the unions, will stick to friend Roosevelt. They will not run any chances of a Republican slipping into office by putting up a Labor Party candidate against him.

Even if disillusionment with the Wagner Bill should come more swiftly than in the case of the labor sections of the NRA, Roosevelt has protected his position. His "impromptu" speech to the press a few days after the Supreme Court knocked the NRA into a cocked hat, will be recalled. The Supreme Court has acted on the philosophy of "the horse and buggy age." Some time in the next few years the Constitution might have to be amended if the Supreme Court persisted in such interpretations. Nothing more along

Ryan Cops ILA Gab Fest; Raises Salary

Under the slogan of "Kick the radical elements out of the American Federation of Labor" and "A square deal to square employers," Joseph P. Ryan was again elected to serve as President of the International Longshoremen's Association for four years.

The first days of the convention, held at the Governor Clinton Hotel in New York, were turned into a get-together gabfest in which talk, talk, and more talk was the order of the day. One of the first very important acts of the convention was the presentation of a gold—solid gold—membership card in the union to the present prize-fight night champion, Braddock. Then William Green opened up an anti-red barrage lasting for hours in which the red stripes in the flag were barely spared.

Harry Bridges of the West Coast delegation took the floor. For almost two hours he spoke, telling of the dock strike on the Pacific of last year, answering the red-baiting charges of Green and Ryan and generally exposing the corrupt machine of Ryan and his cohorts in the Longshoremen's union.

Bridges Outmaneuvered

On Thursday after days of speech making in which nothing of a practical nature had been taken up, days in which not a resolution had been read or a concrete motion acted on, the first item thrown on the agenda for action was the election of officers. Bridges tried to protest but he was overruled by the convention. The chairman then called for nominations for president. J. P. Ryan was nominated. After calling for more nominations for a number of minutes someone suggested that nominations be closed.

Your correspondent approached Bridges and asked him why the West Coast delegation had not nominated anybody for the office. Bridges declared: "We are pledged by the West coast membership not to nominate anybody until after the resolutions have been discussed and to vote for officers of our union by a national referendum."

So far as the delegates assembled were concerned this strategy on the part of the Bridges delegation went completely over their heads as Bridges had no occasion under the procedure adopted to explain it. Some of the delegates demanded of Bridges to run for president or nominate someone other than Ryan if he was so violently opposed to him. But Bridges had his mind made up not to play ball. Outmaneuvered by the machine in having the elections put on the agenda before the resolutions, Bridges decided on a silent boycott of the whole proceedings.

The vote was called for and Ryan this line has emanated from the White House since this "trial balloon" was sent up. If the measures already taken suffice to retain liberal and labor support until the elections then talk about an amendment can rest and timid souls will be reassured that after all Roosevelt will do nothing rash, even though in his genial way he sometimes "says the most radical things." Should the pressure of industrialists and financiers, by means of an early adverse Supreme Court decision or otherwise, emasculate the Wagner Act, however, and labor and other elements develop a belligerent attack, then the slogan of a constitutional amendment can be brought forward for the presidential campaign and as a basis for urging the unions not to "spoil their own case by resorting to direct action."

On the part of many rank-and-filers the call for independent political action, for a labor party, etc., represents a radicalization, a consciousness that labor must pass beyond "pure and simple trade unionism." The so-called progressive trade union leaders, however, aided and abetted by the C. P., S. P., and other political groups, are practicing tail-endism in this matter. Instead of educating the masses in the need for a revolutionary political solution of this problem and rallying them around the banner of a revolutionary Marxist party, they divert thought and energy into the channel of a labor party, a program which can produce no immediate gains for labor in this period and which, insofar as it succeeds, hinders the development of an effective revolutionary party which alone can effectively guide the daily struggles now and provide clear leadership and a bulwark against fascism when the crisis again becomes intensified. For us there is no more urgent political task than that of developing an offensive against the labor party propaganda. And "offensive" is here used advisedly. Negative criticism of the labor party idea is certain to appear to the rank and file as carping against him when he has become aroused to the necessity of "doing something." His enthusiasm must be aroused for the positive alternative of the revolutionary party, for the real as against the fake solution of his problems.

Although the administration was defeated in this matter it made an undemocratic use of its majority to force through an amendment to the constitution depriving the membership meeting of the power to determine the policies of the union. This was done at the end of a six hour meeting called to act upon the report of the Dewey Committee and after a considerable part of the membership had left the meeting.

In Place of the membership meeting was set up composed of representatives of Union groups in the schools. This measure would have been a step forward for the Union if combined with the continuation of membership meetings, but carried out after the abolition of membership meetings it became a bureaucratic distortion of democratic procedure.

Placed Hopes on LaGuardia

The administration likewise revealed its hand in the struggle of the Union with the La Guardia administration over the question of a furlough for teachers (temporary salary cut). In this struggle Dr. Lefkowitz admitted that the administration had placed its confidence in the pre-election promises of La Guardia not to cut teachers salaries and had supported him in the campaign on the basis of that promise. When La Guardia, yielding to the pressure of the bankers and real estate interests broke his promise, the administration expressed its amazement. When it had recovered from its amazement it proceeded to defend the politician of the broken promises by pointing to the financial difficulties which the newly-elected Mayor had inherited from the previous Tammany regime.

The result of the Administration's course was to strengthen the opposition. Its expulsion on proceedings, its anti-democratic measures, its position in the salary fight, its opposition to mass action which even Wall St. brokers were using, its tail ending of the Joint Committee of Teachers Organizations, its undercover support of the La Guardia Administration, its frequent resort to red baiting while posing as a radical leadership, its failure to give timely and adequate defense to victimized teachers like Blumberg, Begun and Burroughs, its fraternization with 59th St.—all these actions caused it to lose its own supporters en masse to the opposition. In addition, a process of radicalization due to the economic crisis, was taking place among teachers. Teachers who had been known for their conservative or liberal views became militant and radical as the crisis continued without abatement. An influx of new members from the ranks of the regular and substitute teachers only added new recruits to the ranks of the opposition.

Reports on resolutions were taken up Friday. The progressive resolutions of the West coast delegation were killed in committee. These called in the main for union controlled hiring halls and the six hour day for the industry. Other Bridges resolutions called for an endorsement of the Labor party and the Lundeen Bill. These too were defeated. The convention moved on to the body of the resolutions dealing with hiring halls and six hour day and referred the "resolves" to the local districts.

The "Practical" Ryan

Bridges argued for a national fight to unify the forces behind the proposals. Ryan replied demagogically that while it wasn't impossible to get these demands, it would certainly prove "impractical."

Another resolution calling for a convention every two years instead of four met with the same fate as the others. Ryan arguing that four years was not "too long a time for one to serve." On the resolution for a one day general strike for the freedom of Tom Mooney the convention voted to concur on the "whereas" and non-concurred on the "resolves." Meaning that in words they are for freedom but action—god forbid! A resolution presented by a Southern delegate calling for the convention to go on record not to handle company union freight shipped from Southern ports was concurred in—in spirit and recommended to the incoming executive board.

And as a fitting conclusion to a bureaucratic controlled convention of A. F. of L. machine men was the slap in the face administered to dock workers over which these corrupted and money grubbing bureaucrats rule in having the salary of Joseph P. Ryan raised from $8,000 to $15,000 a year. That, argued Ryan, was not "impractical."

Reveal Background of Fight By Militants in Teachers' Union for Real Democracy

This is the second of a series of articles on the situation in the Teachers Union resulting from the "red" investigation carried on by the Administration at the behest of William Green.—Ed.

In 1931 and 1932 the Administration's tactic was to concentrate the policy making power of the Union into the hands of the Executive Board by proposing constitutional amendments requiring a two-thirds majority at a membership meeting as necessary to override decisions of the Board. After this move had failed the Administration threw the organization into turmoil by preferring charges of expulsion against thirty-two leading members of the minority. Under pressure of protests by the members the number was reduced to five. Finally a packed grievance committee, headed by Prof. John Dewey was elected to hear the charges. The Dewey Committee brought in a report condemning the existence of minority groups and recommending the suspension of the five members for a period of one year. The suspension was voted down by the membership meeting in April 1933.

Although the administration was defeated in this matter it made an undemocratic use of its majority to force through an amendment to the constitution depriving the membership meeting of the power to determine the policies of the union. This was done at the end of a six hour meeting called to act upon the report of the Dewey Committee and after a considerable part of the membership had left the meeting.

In place of the membership meeting was set up composed of representatives of Union groups in the schools. Neglect Costly in Elections

Timed with the issuance of the Linville letters came the announcement of the organization of the "Organized Union Majority" headed by Linville and Lefkowitz. This was the first time that the Administration appeared before the Union as an organized group. The leaders of the Rank and File and the Progressive Groups failed to estimate correctly the appearance of this group. They turned down the proposal of the Committee for Democracy in the Union to form a united front to combat the Organized Union Majority and to conduct a campaign for the restoration of democratic membership rights in the Union. This action of the two minority groups proved very costly for in the election platform the main plank of the Organized Union Majority was the demand for the suppression of the minority groups and foreshadowed the present investigation. In the elections for officers and members of the Executive Board the Administration candidates polled less than 60 percent of the vote while the opposition polled more than 40 percent, despite the fact that over 200 applications for membership had been purposely held up in order to prevent these members from voting. It is believed, for the opposition candidates. When it is recalled that in the elections of 1930, the Administration polled between 85 percent and 90 percent of the vote, it becomes clear why the Administration has moved its steam-roller at such a rapid pace. The hand writing of its future defeat was on the wall.

We want every State convention and the National convention to be a success. 3) The place of the convention has been set for Washington, D. C. This means that the "Caravan to Washington" as proposed is now combined with the Convention. The "Caravan to Washington," however, will be expanded and will now include five delegates from each local League. Every local League should start preparations now for the National Caravan and Convention in Washington.

The month of October has been set because this is the time that all of the Federal administrators, including the President, return to Washington from their vacations. The Federal officials will be faced with the army of the unemployed.

The Convention Call will be issued in August, giving dates, arrangements and problems to be faced at the convention. MASS ACTION, our official newspaper, will carry a special series of articles in preparation for the convention.

Every League should help finance the convention and other work by sending in their per capita tax to the National Unemployed League of one cent per member per month as decided by the delegates at the National Convention in 1934.

Stalinists and Cops Break up W.P. Meeting

The following letters addressed to the Communist Party and the Civil Liberties Union speak for themselves. And what they say loudest is that the W. Communist Party U.S.A.

New York City
Comrades,

Last Friday evening, July 12, members of the Communist Party and Young Communist League with the aid of the police broke up an open air meeting held by the East Side Branch of the Workers Party, at Norfolk and Delancey Streets.

Similar actions by members of your party have been taken against meetings of the Socialist Party, Young Peoples Socialist League, Unemployed Union and other workers organizations.

We call your attention to the fact that such conduct plays into the hands of capitalist reaction. It gives the police a pretext for limiting or prohibiting all workers' public meetings. It is particularly condemnable at a time like the present when the crying need is common action of all workers' organizations against the growing wave of reaction which threatens all workers' democratic rights.

We call upon you to state the policy of your party in respect to the conduct of your members in breaking up working class meetings.

We will hold an open air meeting this Friday evening at the same corner as last week, Norfolk and Delancey Streets. All necessary steps have been taken for the adequate defense of the meetings against any attempts to disrupt it.

If members of your party continue the tactics employed last week, at this or any other meeting of the Workers Party, we plan to call on all workers' organizations to form a united front committee in defense of workers' meetings.

We urge your consideration of the above and an early reply.

Fraternally,
MORRIS LEWITT
District Organizer.

P.S. A copy of this letter is being sent to the American Civil Liberties Union. We are calling upon the A.C.L.U. to send an observer to Friday's meeting.

Dear Friends,

You will find enclosed a letter sent to the Communist Party re the breaking up of an open air meeting of the Workers Party by members of that organization.

You will note that we intend holding another open air meeting this Friday evening at the same place as last week, Norfolk and Delancey Streets. The meeting will open at 7:30 P.M.

In view of the position of the A.C.L.U., we request that you send an observer to our Friday meeting. In case of a repetition of last week's occurrences your observer will be in a position to give an objective report.

Kindly inform us of your decision.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

LOS ANGELES COMRADE—

Question: In R. Palme Dutt's "Fascism and Social Revolution," the author makes it appear that the Communist Party of Germany made incessant appeals to the Social Democracy for a united front to combat fascism but that the Socialists stubbornly refused. What is the truth in this?

Answer: Prior to Hitler's coming to power the Socialists were programatically forbidden to make united fronts with the Social Democracy because the Communist International (headed by Stalin) maintained that the social democracy and fascism were twins and that only a united front from below under the leadership of the Communist Party could and would be considered. On two occasions, the Communist Party of Germany, forced into this by life itself, announced in its public press its willingness to make a united front with the Social Democracy, thereby condemning as false its entire approach toward the united front, since, on the days preceding and following such public declaration, the Socialists were still "social fascists" and only the "united front from below" was possible.

The Stalinist apologists, e.g., Dutt, are today attempting to pass off as the program of the C.P.G. prior to January, 1933, those declarations by means of which the Stalinists condemned their own program (The exception proves the rule but is nevertheless not identical with it.)

If you wish elaborate quotations, see the files of the (old) "Militant" for 1932 and 1933 and "What Next?" and "The Only Road" by Trotsky. A file of the Daily Worker for this period will also show that Dutt is far from interested in truthfully establishing historical facts.

J. P. NEW YORK—

Question: Should workers refrain from striking to benefit their conditions where they are handling products destined for the Soviet Union?

Answer: By no means. Our slogan: "The enemy is at home," which applies even to the case where the United States and the Soviet Union are war time allies, surely holds during peace time.

It is only from the Stalinist concept of "Socialism in one country," which counterposes the international proletarian revolution to the economic success of the Soviet Union, that one can arrive at the conclusion that a strike, which affects products destined for that country, can be of harm rather than of aid to it.

It is true that certain economic difficulties can develop in the Soviet Union as a result of such strikes. If, however, the American workers must make sacrifices for the Russian workers, is not the obligation mutual, particularly when the fulfillment of his international duties is, in the final analysis, in the best interests of the Russian worker?

The greatest aid to the Soviet Union is the extension of the class struggle internationally, because the workers' fatherland is doomed as a Soviet state unless the workers seize power in at least several of the advanced capitalist countries.

S. L. P. BALLSTON SPA, N. Y.—

Question: How can you expect to institute a Socialist society unless you change human nature?

Answer: The peculiar thing about this criticism is that those who advance it attribute to us an "idealistic" position and then proceed to overthrow their own straw man.

We are materialists, not idealists. Our perspectives do not flow from the idea that human nature will be educated by our propaganda into becoming "unselfish," but, on the contrary, that human nature, being what it is, the masses are forced, in their own self-material-interests, under the given historical conditions and productive forces of society, to bring about a social change.

Selfishness itself, or more strictly speaking, the methods by which human beings look after their own interests, is an historical and not a fixed human characteristic, and is conditioned by the social mode of production.

Under capitalism the self-interest of the rulers of society, whose ideology is that of the society so long as this rule exists, is best served by individual appropriation of wealth regardless of, and in opposition to, the welfare of others. Selfishness, therefore, takes on the form of individualism. Under a Socialist society the welfare of the individual is best served when the interests of society are enhanced so that selfishness will take on the form of collectivism.

Pacifism Keynote of A. Y. C.

Stalinists Adopt Social Patriotic Position - Defeat Spartacus Resolution to Oppose U.S. Imperialism under any Conditions in Next War — Whole Venture Nears Collapse - Yipsels Prepare Break

The American Youth Congress, a successful attempt at the mutilation of the Leninist united front tactic, held its second national convention in Detroit, Michigan on July 4, 5, 6 and 7. The congress opened with the singing at an outdoor mass meeting, attended by 2,000, of "America." In consideration of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, ten o'clock mass was arranged at which Reverend Ward preached a delightful and most interesting sermon.

This second convention was characterized principally by its moving to the right of the New York congress (August, 1934) and the Washington "plenum" (January, 1935). Having completed its gradual capitulation to pacifism, the congress was no longer dignified by a reluctant opposition to IMPERIALIST war. Resolutions congruous with revolutionary spirit were supplanted entirely by the slogans of the pacifists. Thus, at last, the congress came out flat-footed for a program of national and international social harmony, and international peace among nations. The congress reeked from beginning to end with "peace." (Amen!)

The Stalinists, chief sponsors of the congress, blocked every formulation, motion, resolution or amendment that stood to the left of the proposed program. Every resolution introduced to the right of the program was carried with passionate enthusiasm and exhilaration. With the Y.P.S.L. they were terribly concerned about not offending pacifist and liberal elements. They were consequently little concerned with offense to revolutionary elements by passing a pacifist, liberal and non-labor program. Every left semi-left proposal was combatted by a classically opportunist argument: "Everybody knows that my organization is heartily in favor of that resolution. However it must be defeated because its acceptance will narrow the congress to purely labor organizations."

In compliance with the character of the congress, a weak, innocuous and ambiguous document, a clumsy attempt at evasion, was presented. This message of liberalism, submitted to the four seminars for discussion and "correction," was labeled "The Declaration of Rights of the American Youth." Its most radical feature was a recognition of the existence of a number of ills in present day society. The terms "capitalist," "working class," "class struggle," "imperialist war" were scrupulously avoided. The "few" ills were mentioned with liberal indignation, without explaining their origin or proposing a solution other than vague references to freedom of speech, press and assembly. The Spartacus Youth League proposed rejection of this "moral indictment" of capitalism. If a programmatic declaration, going beyond proper united front agreement on action, was to be drafted, argued, the S.Y.L. the declaration must include the responsibility of capitalism for the evils listed in the document (which should be analyzed with specific reference to the youth), and that only the destruction of this society could solve these evils. Such a program alone could be a true Declaration of Rights.

The document reads: "We propose to realize in actuality the ideal of free America." (How?) "We propose the maintenance and the extension of our elementary rights of free speech, press and assembly, with full academic freedom in the schools, and the unhampered use of the streets, parks and public buildings for the expression of opinion."

As revolutionaries we distinguished ourselves from the liberals by qualifying our interpretation of civil rights. We aim to deny these rights to our enemies. Reactionary and fascist organizations confront occasional difficulties (see New Militant, June 13, for example of Father Coughlin in Chicago). The formulation of the A.Y.C. allowed freedom of speech for the fascists—a resolution consistent with C. P. policy, as evidenced in the Father Coughlin incident. Hence, the following amendment was introduced by the S.Y.L. and met with defeat after having been viciously attacked by the Y.C.L. spokesman:

"We propose the maintenance and the extension of the elementary rights of the WORKING CLASS AND THEIR PROGRESSIVE ALLIES to free speech, press and assembly with full academic freedom in the schools, and the unhampered use of the streets, parks and public buildings for the expression of opinion. WE REFUSE TO STRUGGLE FOR OR TO DEFEND THE CIVIL LIBERTIES OF THOSE MOVEMENTS AND ORGANIZATIONS WHICH AIM TO DENY US (the working class) civil liberties and rights (Fascists)."

The Declaration continues: "We affirm the right of workers to join trade unions and to use the weapons of strike to advance their economic interests." At Washington

THE S. Y. L. RESOLUTION

1. There exists at present a danger in the workers movement and all anti-war organizations, a tendency to distinguish, in their struggle against war, between Fascist countries and the so-called democratic countries and lend their sympathies to the democratic country. This Congress goes on record against ANY war engaged in by American imperialism.

2. The Congress does not recognize such a thing as a "lesser evil," i.e., the idea that justifies support of one's own country, or any country, whose political form is still a so-called democratic one, against a country in which Fascism or reaction is in power. Such a war could not and would not be in the interests of the masses and to countenance this theory could only lead to creating a support of the masses to such a war.

3. The Congress recognizes that any pact engaged in by this country, would be so engaged in only to advance the interests of American imperialism, and under no circumstances can the workers movement or any anti-war movement support any pact entered into by the ruling class of this country.

stirring defense of the document, acknowledging the correctness of our criticism, but insisting that the "program of Karl Marx could not be presented for adoption at the A.Y.C." Thus, the Y.C.L. and the Y.P.S.L. are jointly responsible for the Declaration. The document was accepted by all the seminars without one basic change.

Y. C. L. and Y.P.S.L. members, nauseated by an overdose of liberal sweetmeats, reacted very sympathetically to the position of the S.Y.L. Members of both organizations confined to us their disgust with the innocuous and pacifist character of the congress. The pressure they exerted upon their respective caucuses warranted a "basic" revision of the document. The second draft contained many fundamental changes and some improvements. But it retained the false, ambiguous character of the first—including over half of the first. The S.Y.L. voted the rejection of the second draft, along with the Proletarian Party youth.

The Stalinist chairman of this democratic conference exposed the Stalinist-control by announcing (through error, of course) that the final form of the "Declaration" was already being mimeographed while the congress was discussing its merits and presenting amendments. All amendments were defeated.

The point of greatest controversy at the entire congress arose on the three point resolution introduced by the S.Y.L. on the question of social-patriotism. The resolution was prompted by the growing social-patriotic sentiment in the working class movement, evidenced by the sections of the Communist International, and other centrist and reformist groups. The resolution contained three points:

1. Against war engaged in by American imperialism.

2. Against the theory of the lesser evil in the wars of so-called democratic nations against a fascist nation (i.e. refusal to support a war of American imperialism against another capitalist state with a fascist government.)

3. Refusal to support war or "peace" pacts engaged in by American capitalism.

Wars of capitalist states, whether "democratic" or fascist, argued our comrades, are profiteers' wars. To support American imperialism in a war for the conquest of fascist Germany, Austria or Italy would be a betrayal transcending that of the Second International in 1914.

The big guns of the Y.C.L. top caucus went into action against the resolution but could not keep all their members in line on their obvious non-Marxist position. In opposing this resolution, the Y.C.L. applied the Franco-Russian pact and the social patriotism of the Chechoslovakian and French C. P.'s to the American scene.

Y.C.L. members violated party discipline and voted for the entire resolution. The representatives of the Y.P.S.L. announced their support of the resolution. In the seminar on "Peace and Freedom," where the resolution was presented, it was defeated by a vote of 75 to 25.

The three points were then voted upon individually. The Y.C.L. caucus leaders even fought and voted against point 1 which read: "The congress goes on record against any war engaged in by American imperialism." Pray, tell us, what war engaged in by American imperialism does the Y.C.L. support? The answer is clear. Should the U. S. enter a multi-lateral pact similar to the Franco-Russian pact, the Y.C.L. stands ready to suspend all activity against a war waged by American capitalism with, possibly, Germany.

view, said that an office would be set up in Toledo, with a representative of the Department of Labor in charge. This office would immediately go about getting the Toledo Plan in operation, presumably before the workers could recover from their last two foul blows. A committee, composed of both capitalists and "representatives" of labor, had already held one meeting to put the scheme in effect, and another gathering has been arranged for July 16, McGrady stated.

As soon as the Rotary Club meeting was over, McGrady departed for New York by plane to help that equally famous strikebreaker, Hugh Johnson, with his plans for disbursement of relief funds.

The "Toledo Plan for Industrial Peace" is too apparently Roosevelt's answer to the organized and militant efforts of Toledo workers to gain better conditions of labor. It would be difficult to find a center where American workers have, during the past few years, used better directed fighting tactics than in Toledo. The telling effects of these tactics are evident in the pains the Roosevelt administration has taken to check them by a red herring called the Toledo Plan. But Ohio workers have another "Toledo Plan" that they know will work: their next step in its operation will be complete exposure of McGrady's fine plans for perpetual sellouts.

The start of the picketing of the Works Progress Administration under the Johnson regime occurred last Friday. Fifty-three men and women, members of local 15 of the Workers Unemployed Union picketed in front of the building under the following slogans:

"Trade Union Wages, General Johnson,—Not Your Berry Pickers' Scale!"

"Promises, Promises, Promises, Where Are the Jobs?"

"Give Us Relief From Relief, We Demand Jobs!"

"Thirty Dollars for Thirty Hours!"

After picketing for more than an hour a committee of three, Paula Aragon, Nell Harrison and Saul Steigltz presented their demands to the administration. Johnson and Francis Robinson ("Robbie") being in Washington, the delegation was received by Captain Battley, first aide to the General.

The demands presented were:

1. Jobs for all unemployed;

2. Minimum wages of $1 an hour; with trade union wages when such are higher;

3. Thirty-hour week on all jobs;

Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund Holds Convention

By PAUL STURM
National Secretary

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The 17th Convention of this Society was held June 10 to June 24 in the society's main administration building, located at 714 Seneca Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. The quadrennial report was given by the National Secretary. The report showed that the society made a surplus of $289,276.72 during the past four years. The solid financial foundation is evidenced by the large reserves. All funds on hand December 31, 1934 amounted to $3,533,808.73.

The convention did not act as a "rubber stamp" for measures prepared to amend the society's constitution, but deliberated all business very thoroughly, after several special committees, elected by the assembly, had gone over the constitutional amendments and rendered their report. Many delegates participated in the debate during the plenum session, at on time, more than forty members of the convention took part in the discussion.

The main feature of the W. S. and D. B. F. to wit, to provide for payment of sick benefit to its members for a continuous period of 80 weeks was extended to a 100 weeks period with a re-adjustment of rates. The basic monthly assessment was adjusted at 25 cents for each three dollars sick benefit provision. The death benefit in the Juvenile Department was considerably increased though the monthly assessment of 10 cents was retained. Our initiation fees which were too high for the changed economic conditions were reduced to nominal fees ranging from one to three dollars.

Since the time of organization in 1884, the society grew by the sole activity of its members. No organizers nor agents were employed, no money appropriated for such solicitation. The convention empowered the administration to employ from the ranks of the membership organizers on a temporary as well as permanent basis to gain new members for the society.

"Add those who are in distress," is the foremost characteristic of this society and the organization paid $66,315.90 to its members in form of relief for dues and outright contributions to needy members during the our year period of 1931 to 1934. To provide for a wider scope of relief the revenues for the national relief fund were increased.

Many transactions before the plenum were of difficult nature due to the fact that the society's members live in 27 states of the Union and the laws differ so greatly in the various states. What seemed to be feasible and legal in the home state, appeared to be contrary to the statutes in Massachusetts and elsewhere. The difference in the sum of money to be taken from the death benefit for funeral expenses illustrated this vividly. Uniformity of laws was a great desire and the underlying wish of many delegates, who hailed from Mid-West, New England and the Pacific Coast.

Every section of the by-laws found suitable attention, and wherever possible, the spirit to ameliorate to face new conditions was present and put into practice.

Tom Mooney's fight for freedom was considered and a resolution passed unanimously to donate $2,000 to the Tom Mooney Mothers' Defense Committee to help to set this victim of injustice free.

A resolution was also passed to aid the suffering and destitute miners with a $1,000 contribution.

With hearty greetings and best wishes to the administration the convention concluded its work on June 24 after the last tunes of appropriate songs faded away.

"Defend the Fatherland" replaces "Turn the imperialist war into a civil war" as the slogan of the C. I. Therein lies the significance of the Y.C.L.'s opposition to our resolution.

Sections 1 and 2 of the resolution were defeated by a vote of 40 to 30, with many Y.C.L.ers voting "aye." Section 3 was defeated by a vote of 60 to 25. Let the Y.C.L. explain its vote.

The enthusiasm that marked the New York and Washington congresses was lacking at Detroit. The futility of this giant symposium becomes clearer to greater numbers of participants. On several occasions the sessions were interrupted by delegates who demanded to know what the congress had accomplished in the year of its existence. Yipsels and Y.C.L.ers refer with skepticism to the congress. Its collapse is inevitable. It is no secret that the congress continues only thanks to the presence of the Yipsels in it.

There is however reason to believe that the Y.P.S.L. is no longer desirous of remaining in the A.Y.C. The right wing of the S.P. certainly wishes the Y.P.S.L. to break away because of its (the right wing's) reactionary opposition to the united front. The left wing wishes to break because it has begun to recognize the inability of the A.Y.C. to conduct actions, and that its broad, pacifist and permanent character acts as a detriment to the proper education of the American youth to radicalism.

The Yipsels therefore are seeking to break from the congress; but on organizational, not on political issues. They cannot break on political issues because they bear equal responsibility for its creation and permanent status. In breaking from the congress they have then this alternative before them: break on the real issue—the false character of the congress and educate the membership, so as not to duplicate another such caricature of the united front; or, break on some technicality, some small organizational question, and thereby reap no benefits from the experience—disillusion the Yipsels in the united front, and thus play into the hands of the old guard of the S. P.

It is necessary now for the Y.P.S.L., which bears co-responsibility with the Y.C.L. for this farce, and for all Y.C.L.ers to speak out. It is necessary that the inability of the A.Y.C. to serve the American youth be exposed, and that the A.Y.C. be dissolved. It is necessary to establish, wherever possible, local youth councils of action which can act as the apparatus of labor youth organizations in the conducting and initiating of united action of united action of the toiling and student youth in the United States.

Under this blanket definition the Old Guard state organizations can expel members of the Revolutionary Policy Publishing Association, "Militants," and even those who take the Detroit Declaration of Principles seriously, or who demand that the national organization enforce discipline against the state organizations. Under the banner of "unity" Norman Thomas and other "militants" voted for this point, carrying it by 8 to 3. Only Daniel, Hapgood and Kreuger voted against.

Thomas Backslides

To support the Old Guard on this, Norman Thomas threw overboard the line laid down in his speech at the Detroit convention supporting the Declaration of Principles. Then Thomas, moving from an outright reformist position to the ambiguous formulas of centrism, declared that there were circumstances under which violence against capitalism was necessary and dictatorial methods of a workers' government were superior to the bogus democracy of capitalism. One consequence of Thomas' new attitude was to secure the issuance of an invitation to "unattached radicals" to join the S. P.; this was arranged with the collaboration of Gitlow-Zam-Goldman and resulted in their joining the S. P. under the slogan "revolutionary unity within the S. P." All this is now thrown overboard by Thomas in his alliance on principles with the Old Guard.

All other points were carried by 7 to 4, Devere Allen voting with the minority on the other points, after, as a pacifist opposed to proletarian violence, having given the Old Guard support on the most decisive point.

2. The N. Y. State organization "accepted" the Declaration of Principles, on the proviso that it can be criticized and changed at the next convention.

3. National, state and local constitutions to be enforced. This is a meaningless abstraction, to save the face of the N.E.C. which has been confronted by systematic Old Guard violations of the national constitution, which are now to be ignored.

4. Eligibility of Yipsels to party membership at 18 years to be carried out by the state organization. With point one defining eligibility, the Old Guard can keep out the leading Yipsel cadres, who are breaking with reformist ideas.

5. No vicious attacks on comrades in party press and no statements to the capitalist press.

Drop N. Y. Charges

6. The "militants" charges against New York state organization to be dismissed without implication that they are right or wrong. These charges, including the suspension of sufficient branches to enable the Old Guard to capture the City Central Committee, can now be acted upon only by the Old Guard state organization!

7. The suspended Y.P.S.L. of New York is to be reinstated without requiring from it a declaration of loyalty to the New Leader, but is to accept the direction and control of the Old Guard.

8. The New Leader is to be put back into its constitution a declaration of loyalty to the Socialist Party and to print no factional news; if this is done, the Socialist Call is to be discontinued. Since no mention is made that the N.E.C. or any other body is to decide whether the New Leader has fulfilled its requirements, this means that the Old Guard state organization is in a position to order the Socialist Call to cease publication. Another motion to take the New Leader off the accredited list of socialist papers, because of its vicious attacks on the N.E.C., was countered by a victorious substitute motion, supported by James O'neal, editor of the New Leader, to abolish the list of accredited papers!

Thus did the "Militants" reap in full measure the fruits of their policy of liquidating all efforts to build an independent Left wing, of suppressing the facts about Norman Thomas' constant support of Right wing principles, of ignoring all the signs of many months that the N.E.C. majority was preparing to come to an understanding with the Old Guard. As late as Saturday night, at a mass meeting to greet the N.E.C.—which was boycotted by the old Guard—two "militants" Aaron Levenstein and Saul Marcus, declared from the platform to the N.E.C.: "We declare our loyalty to you, no matter what you do." With the "Left wing" taking such a fawning attitude—and the Old Guard harassing them and hammering away, the N.E.C. could betray their promises to the "Militants" with complete impunity.

Norman "Swears"

In a caucus held in the Socialist Call office on Friday night, Thomas and Coolidge had sworn to revoke the Old Guard's state charter. But two days later they voted solidly with the Old Guard. Why shouldn't they? They had no fear of any retaliation by their "militant" allies, who had docilely for a year done whatever Thomas ordered them to. And fundamentally Thomas, Coolidge, Allen, Krayci—all the Militants' friends—belonged with the Old Guard; they had struggled for control of the party with them, hated them for this and that; but at bottom they were as devout believers in the "democracy" of the capitalist state as the Old Guard. Under the slogan of "save the party," they voted with those whom they really belong with.

"They didn't sell us down the river. They gave us away," declared one "Militant" leader. But the "Militants" have only prepared this situation by their own course. Combinationist, unprincipled, seeking to make deals instead of fighting for the leadership of the rank and file on a revolutionary basis, it was by such a deal that they joined with Hoan to elect the majority of the N.E.C. which has now dumped them—a "Left wing," without a program, with a leadership of heterogeneous political views, always leaning on Norman Thomas or some other Personality instead of depending on the rank and file—such a policy can only lead to capitulation.

The only N.E.C. members who did not back water were those whose only standing in the party and possibilities for support are as "Left wing" candidates. Kreuger, frightened by the attacks made on him by Left wingers at the recent Illinois state convention and the fact that he was at the bottom of the list of those elected to the state committee, dropped his recent maneuvering with Hoan, and rejoined the minority. Powers Hapgood fought desperately, but paid for the policy of a bloc with Thomas of which he has been an insistent advocate. Franz Daniel, elected to the N.E.C. as the candidate of the Revolutionary Policy Publishing Association, and with only this group to give him any standing, revealed his serious weakness when he voted for the Wagner Labor Disputes Bill on the sole ground that the A. F. of L. was for it.

Old Guard Satisfied

The Old Guard expressed complete satisfaction with the "peace pact," and declared that they would make Dan Hoan the presidential candidate (this was part of the deal?). But peace is merely the slogan under which the Old Guard and the Centrists are uniting in order to carry on war against the Left. With a blanket definition of communism as their sword, the new Old Guard-Hoan-Thomas leadership have the weapon with which to cut down every Left winger who takes his principles seriously.

The Leftward moving elements in the S. P. have suffered a serious defeat, the main responsibility for which must be laid at the door of the "Militants." The only hope of recovery from this defeat is a complete break with their past methods. The Left wing workers must hammer out a program, the only genuine foundation for a Left wing faction. Undoubtedly in the course of working out this program, they will find that many elements in the "Militant" leadership must be broken with, especially those who vie with the Stalinists in supporting the Franco-Soviet pact and a labor party, and who even after Thomas' open stand with the Old Guard, still seek collaboration with him. Without a revolutionary program and a break with the pacifists and reformists like Thomas and Devere Allen, the Left wing workers in the S. P. cannot even begin the process of building their disoriented ranks.

Already there are those in the ranks of the "Militants" who are saying that the "peace pact" is not entirely a defeat, that the Yipsels got something, etc., etc., and are hoping against hope that the ultra-reactionaries in the Old Guard camp will criticize the "peace pact" and thus give these wavering "Militants" an excuse to crawl back to Thomas. This tendency must be immediately crushed by the militant rank and file who must demand the immediate turn to the hammering out of a revolutionary program, and the conducting of an intransigent struggle for their views.

The chickens are now coming home to roost for the unemployed who have been depending upon Roosevelt's relief program.

Announcement has come from Washington of Draconian measures to be taken to remove jobless wholesale from the relief rolls. In every case, irrespective of the wages offered, where jobs are available workers will be immediately stricken from the lists. They will be re-entered, says the announcement, only after the strictest check-up following a new application. This they propose to do whether or not a new job is obtainable for the jobless worker.

"It is our definite effort to liquidate relief rolls," an official declared. "While we don't expect private industry to take up the slack at once, we think that private employment will increase as the work program continues."

Thus upon the good wishes and the rainbow hopes of the relief administration the unemployed are to be given the boot, left to shift for themselves until they can find jobs. The official "thinks" that jobs are in sight but no provisions are made for the difficulties that will ensue if no such jobs can be obtained or if private industry which can be filled up to capacity although comparatively only few of its previous employees are rehired.

Roosevelt is here killing two birds with one stone. On the one hand he is cutting down on the budget, thereby saving wealthy taxpayers money and on the other hand providing cheap labor—cheaper even than the relief hand-outs—to slave-driving employers.

Without hesitating very long, officials in five states, South Dakota, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa began to carve a hole into the relief rolls in their states.

In South Dakota all relief has stopped completely.

This has been done to meet the demands of the farmers for a labor force adequate to handle the harvest. These farmers want "hands" in the field or wages at the same level or below that granted by Federal or state relief. The unemployed met this demand with what the state officials have termed a "revolt."

With perfect right they refused to apply themselves to this strenuous backbreaking toil for from 12 to 14 hours at the same pittance and hard enough to keep body and soul together, which they receive when the state supports them.

For this they are disparaged by the chair-sitting governor of the State, Berry as refusing to work "because it is . . . easier to live on relief."

Now that relief has been cut off completely the state officials look with complacency at the fate of the unemployed—the sick, halt and the blind—who are to be taken care of by the degenerating "poor laws" of the state.

On the other side the rich farmers will confront no such slave-driving ultimatums of "go-to-work-at-whatever-wages-offered," receiving all the time subsistence from the Rural Resettlement Administration and subsidies from other government sources.

Mr. Ketchum, state relief administrator for South Dakota, out of the meanness of his heart's magnanimity conceded "that the order would probably (1) work a hardship upon some (2) individuals or communities, but he said that this course appeared the only practical (3) one to follow until investigations (4) demonstrated a necessity for a change in the rule."

'Militants' Capture
YPSL Convention

By JOSEPH CARTER

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Fresh from the crushing blows meted to them at the "harmony" meeting of the National Committee of the Socialist Party, the New York "Militants" won signal organizational victories at the eighth national convention of the Young Peoples Socialist League held here during the week-end of July 19 to 21.

Approximately one hundred delegates, a little less than half of them New Yorkers, were present at the convention. However, most of the delegates did not participate in the proceedings and were constantly in a state of expectancy. They did not know precisely what to expect. No pre-convention documents had been prepared. No pre-convention discussion had taken place. In many cases delegates were elected because they and none other were able to go to Pittsburgh.

No Political Discussions

The convention was run by the New York and Chicago top caucuses. The arrangements made impossible any adequate discussions of the problems confronting the socialist movement and the Yipsels in particular. The three evenings of the convention period were devoted to public affairs, a mass meeting, social affair and banquet respectively. The rules of the convention limited speakers on resolutions to three minutes, seven minutes allotted to reporters on resolutions and a total of one hour for any one resolution.

However, even these provisions were not carried out. No political resolutions came before the convention.

Seventh Congress of C
Opens in Moscow

The following article, by a prominent European Marxist, was written prior to the appearance of the call for the World Congress of the Third International and serves as an introduction to it. Coming issues of the NEW MILITANT will contain detailed reports and analyses of the Moscow congress now in session.—Ed.

After an interval of exactly seven years it looks as if the Seventh Congress of the Comintern will be convened after all.

It can be stated with complete confidence that had our organization not existed, had not the banner of the Fourth International been unfurled, had there not been the latest successes of our French comrades, the Third International would still be waiting for the Seventh Congress. The Seventh Congress, just as the last Congress of the French Socialist party will revolve primarily, if not exclusively, around the Bolshevik-Leninists and the Fourth International.

After Hitler's victory we proclaimed the political death of the Third International. But the example of the Second International proves that the demise of political organizations with a mass basis—in the sense of the arresting of their progressive development—does not coincide with the end of their conservative self-preservation. The Third International, despite its pitiful bankruptcy, retains tremendous reserves in the form of the Soviet Union which by itself can give it great possibilities not only for continued political existence but also for dealing heavy blows to the world proletariat. The whole question is: does the Soviet bureaucracy still need the Third International? The Soviet bureaucracy in this respect finds itself in an acute contradiction. Its present policy, particularly its foreign policy, which is assuming a decisive role, makes the Third International an obstacle rather than an aid. But should the Comintern disappear its place would immediately be occupied by the Fourth International which would result in a complete ideological catastrophe for Stalin and his clique, i.e., the bankruptcy of all falsifications and calumnies which lie at the basis of the "general line." Only on one condition would Stalin have no fear of such an eventuality: if he were prepared to come out as a consistent Bonaparte, i.e., break openly with the traditions of October and place on himself some kind of crown. Despite the growth of the "ideologic" and political preconditions for an open Bonapartist overturn there are too many risks on such a road as this. The Soviet proletariat is, at any rate, a more definite and stable political factor than the petty bourgeoisie was in France at the beginning of the last century, and corresponding with this the Bolshevik tradition is of greater weight than that of the Jacobins of that period. Stalin must hold on to the appearance of Bolshevism and therefore convene the Seventh Congress in face of the danger of the Fourth International.

for 11 Weeks

CAMDEN, N. J.—Directly challenging Roosevelt's war program, the 4,600 workers in the Camden Shipyards are now holding out for the eleventh week, militantly defying every attempt to open the yards and begin work.

The most recent attempt of the company to import strike-breakers met with disaster as the automobiles bearing the scabs were overturned and the occupants given a lesson in unionism.

Frantic is the word that best characterizes the state of mind of the shipbuilders who have resorted to every method of coercion and intimidations known in industrial disputes. In vain they have appealed to loyalty to a government which has no regard to the wages its contractors pays the workers nor under what conditions they toil. How just is the attitude of the strikers and how far they are willing to go is evidenced in their willingness to agree to the Perkins Plan for arbitration where the bosses have flatly refused to consider it.

The strike is led by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers and has been conducted militantly throughout. Demands are fifteen percent wage increase, preferential union shop and abolition of piecework.

Latest in the attempts to crush the strike is an injunction which the company has served on the strike leaders. Although they refused to accept it and ground it under foot when it fell to the ground the company will go through with the action.

If the methods that have prevailed up to now in fighting strike-breakers are continued with greater intensity after the injunction, the U. S. government will have to continue whistling for its orders from the New York Shipbuilding Company's yards at Camden.

With Onslaught of Press and Soldiers on Workers

For forty-eight hours, the Dream of Debs—the General Strike, not a street car moving, not a printing press turning—came true in Terre Haute itself, Eugene Victor Debs' own home town.

Then, just as suddenly but not quite as unexpectedly, the strike was called off to the great relief of the bosses.

Called off by the head of the Central Labor Union, over whose resistance the strike was declared, without advice or consultation of the strikers, without any of their demands being granted Terre Haute now waits expectantly for its resumption.

Though a surprise to the outside world the declaration of the general strike was no surprise at all to the workers of Terre Haute. For seventeen long weeks a battle had been in progress between the smelting and Stamping Plant and its employees. The workers could be quite as dogged in their resistance as the bosses. Their strike, however, had gained the support and the admiration of the workers in all crafts and unions. And where three days ago fifty-eight armed guards marched a crew of scabs into the plant, the labor movement rose to action.

Town Stands Still
A conference of unions took place and the workers left their jobs to a man. The town was tied up tight as a drum. From gasoline station attendants to retail clerks no one worked. Even the printing crafts, which with the abominable attitude that characterizes the so-called "aristocracy of labor" refused to join the swelling ranks, could not print the labor-baiting newspapers because the teamsters would not deliver paper for the strike.

No sooner was the strike declared than three agencies of capitalism went into action against the protesting ranks of labor.

First, the yellow press from New York to Oregon began to scream

Ohio Jobless
Prepare Huge
State Confab

20,000 Are Expected
To Heed League Call
For Demonstration

In Columbus, Ohio, beginning on July 29 and continuing for three days, the Ohio Unemployed League will hold the largest demonstration in the history of the United States. Over 20,000 are expected to invade Columbus in the march of the Grand Relief Army. Labor's demands will be formulated and presented to the lawmakers of Ohio—and in no "hat-in-hand" manner.

Local leagues are already recruiting for the march, setting up tents flying the rattlesnake flag at every relief station, and keeping up in the face of sheriffs and frantic relief squads, will be relieved by first-aid trucks now being recruited. Funds are coming in from all over the state—twenty-five locals have already pledged a total of $125.00.

The response from the locals has been even more enthusiastic than was expected. Erie County has pledged 500 marchers, Clinton and Williams County each expect 500. Putnam County pledges 300, and a total turnout of a thousand unemployed under the rattlesnake flag is expected from Athens County.

Tag days, rallies, and mass meetings are held with enthusiastic response. Brass bands are being organized by a number of locals. The marchers will press forward into Columbus flying the flag of the first American revolution, while the hands blend with twenty thousand voices in the songs of the coming revolution.

The Unemployed Leagues intend to show the legislators of Ohio that, far from tolerating the general cut in relief that the Roosevelt administration is trying to put over, they still demand the 30 hour-$30 week. And they intend to get it.

In the official call to the convention, the O.U.L. poses the question to the working class, employed as well as unemployed: Slavery or freedom? And its answer, and that of the whole working class of Ohio, is FREEDOM. So far from being intimidated by the government, the unemployed are out to reverse the process. At the Columbus convention, the legislature will hear the voice it fears—mass action by the workers!

The O.U.L. does not pin its final goal to a "fair day's pay" policy; like all sections of the National Unemployed League, it recognizes that the battle for decent conditions can only be won when the working class controls the government, and that the present government is the tool of the bosses. And it does not pay merely respect to this fundamental fact. In battle after battle, it has fought for the rights of the unemployed, militantly and savagely.

Two years ago, the O.U.L. in a similar demonstration, mobilized 7,000. This year, there will be 20,000 jobless solid beneath its banner. After Columbus, what!

W. P. TO HOLD ANTI-WAR
MEETING IN ALLENTOWN

On Friday night, August 3rd, at 8 P.M., the Allentown Branch of the Workers Party will hold a huge anti-war mass meeting on Center Square. Max Shachtman, editor of the New Internationalist and Sam Gorden, W. P. organizer, will be the main speakers.

Social Patriotism in Full Flower in France

French capitalism has been threshing for years now in the steel vice of the world crisis. Its foreign trade steadily decreasing with no immediate prospect of relief in sight is dealing a crushing blow to the peasantry. Unemployment is hiking on a long upward climb while wages are precipitately dropping. French financial and political hegemony on the European continent is rapidly vanishing. The full burden of the crisis must be loaded upon the working class. The way out for French imperialism is on the hide and bones of the workers.

For years the French financiers have been greedily speculating about the salaries of the state employees. They could not touch this fat plum so long as the working class organizations remained vigilant, aware of the fact that a blow in that direction could only be followed by a general slash in wage levels and living conditions. Moreover, the Chamber of Deputies was somewhat of an obstacle because of the fear of the politicians that resentment of their constituents would be aroused if such measures were approved. The deputies, however, found the way to "absolve themselves." They agreed to the dissolution of the parliament for an indefinite period of time and granted Laval extraordinary powers which his predecessors failed to obtain.

Pierre Laval, premier of France, lost no time in using the "extraordinary powers" granted him. He applied the economy knife to the salaries of the Civil Employees—with the more extensive assault upon the living standards of the working class to follow in short order. The French imperialists with their fascist hirelings are, of course, keeping close watch upon the ease with which the government can put over the initial preparatory steps.

Striking indeed is the parallel between pre-fascist Germany and present day France. In Germany too, in preparation for Hitler, there was a series of "strong men" who like Laval, were supplied with "emergency powers"; and who likewise slashed salaries and wages without the consent of the Reichstag. Their slogan was Notverordnungen. And like Laval, they posed as the impartial arbiters between the camps of fascism and the working class. They slashed wages and salaries, always making a pretence at fairness by ordering reductions in prices and rents. Of course, the rents and the prices were never lowered; on the contrary they kept rising. And a double burden was thus imposed upon the masses.

It is indeed significant that Laval's action followed hard upon the July 14, "Bastille Day" demonstration. 200,000 marched in the "People's Front"; a glorious parade, a unified front that included all parties, even the bourgeois radicals, and celebrating the fascist destruction by far. Laval paid his respects to it by slashing salaries. In this action is summarized the attitude of French capitalism to the "People's Front."

Laval, in one executive order, pricked the bubble of Stalinist pretension. A short two weeks before the Stalinists blew up the "People's Front" as the newest panacea which would cure all ills, meet all the requirements of the situation and deal a death blow to French fascism. Here is how P. Vaillant-Couturier, editor of l'Humanite, hailed it on July 1:

"Just as our party is a new party so the People's Front is something new, something which responds to a new situation created by the economic crisis and the advent of fascist regimes in the world. We can never insist enough on its character of realism, on the ideal that animates it, on its taking what is living from the traditions of the people of France. . . . The People's Front is French because it expresses the will of a people that know how to commemorate the July 14th demonstration, who have made four revolutions to preserve and consolidate their conquests, and it has the benefit of the international experiences of those peoples who are temporarily under the heel of fascism, as well as those who are finally liberated from capitalism."

In Germany, in the face of what they called a "revolutionary upsurge" the Stalinists tore to shreds every proposal, every attempt at a united front with the social democracy, a party with hundreds of thousands of workers in its ranks and controlling a trade union movement of close to five million. In France, where they swear no pre-revolutionary situation exists—just "Trotskyist hysteria and provocation"—they are fighting like tigers "to consolidate and preserve" unity with the petty bourgeois serfs, flunkies of imperialism, the party of Stavisky, the forgers, the stock-exchange gamblers, the fortune hunters and the parvenues—the "true sons of France." Listen to Thorez snarl to ward off the furious attack of reaction on the Radical Party. In l'Humanite for July 3, Thorez bares his teeth at the Fascist attempt to "Divide and Rule":

"In order to create an obstacle to the People's Front the reactionaries and the fascists hope for a split in the Radical Party. We, Communists, hope that the ENTIRE Radical Party will resolutely take to the road of the People's Front. We hope that this evening the Executive Committee of the Radical party will seal an orientation that will permit the joining together of all good will, of all energies in the struggle for a peaceful France."

Today Thorez can fight fascism only hand in hand with Deladier and no reactionary or fascist dare come between them. Yesterday this very same Deladier, then an "assassin of the people" for accidentally shooting a few fascists, fed all in a panic, abdicating the premier-skates placed themselves at the head of the movement to behead it at the earliest opportunity, the Indiana crowd took no responsibility for the strike, stepping in only when confusion appeared in the ranks and the reactionary whip would be most effective. . . . Full fruits of this rotten treachery are already to be picked in Terre Haute. Returning to work before a real test of strength could be made, the workers are being victimized by the bosses. In several of the plants which struck in sympathy with the Columbia Stamping Company employers are refusing to rehired workers, contending that agreements were violated. In the Columbia Plant itself, where the strike is still in effect, the original cause of the strike still remains—armed plug-uglies keep guard of the plant while scabs work inside. The bosses refuse to accept the services of Federal Labor Department in mediating the strike. On the other hand, martial law still prevails; union halls are closed; innocent bystanders are hauled before court martial and several of the most militant strike leaders and workers to the number of almost ninety are still under military 'custody'. . . . That the labor fakers are about to reap a cyclone for their betrayal can already be seen in the tenseness that prevails in Terre Haute. Resentment is rife everywhere, and the forty-eight unions in the general strike alliance are considering a resumption of the general walkout. United Mine Workers locals and the Power Plant Workers are refusing to return to the job. Indications are multiplying by the hour that they will not long be alone.

Spring Strike Enters Fifth Week

The Brooklyn and Bronx strikes involving 800 workers of two spring manufacturing companies enters its fifth week with the ranks united and determined to win. An enthusiastic meeting of the Brooklyn strikers held at strike headquarters applauded the vice-president Demar of the Inter. Upholsterers Union as he pledged the full support of the International to the strike and called for solid ranks and even greater activity on the picket line.

The strikers are not the same crowd of workers that walked out on strike three weeks ago. The same enthusiasm is there, the same high spirit, but there is a discipline and direction to the strike that was not to be found in the earlier days. The strike committee members today speak with sober assurance. They feel themselves to be part of the mighty army of labor. They have tested themselves in action and in that action have been welded together into a strong united force. They have been harried, attacked and jailed by the police. They have battled with scabs and thugs and more than held their own. Many have been arrested. Seven are charged with entering the plant and attacking scabs. They are veterans of a battle and determined to fight until victory is theirs. The plant is producing nothing. The manager, who formerly, as one striker stated, had one name for all the workers—'Hey, you,' has now addressed letters to them as 'Dear Mr. So-and-so,' urging them to return to work. 'The boss now recognizes our name but he'll have to recognize our union before we enter his factory'. . . .

Some financial support for the strikers has been secured. The International Upholsterers Union, which has been hit very hard by the depression, has contributed to the support of the strike. Other unions are urged to give financial aid. Send funds to the strike committee: Jack Gordon, Upholsterers Union, 273 Sackett Street, Brooklyn.

3 Members of P.P. Sect Resign After Bitter Struggle; Join W.P.

'The Proletarian Party is today hopeless; for not only is it ultra-sectarian in nature and its position completely incorrect, but there is no possibility of changing it. The existing bureaucracy is too deeply entrenched, and cannot be dislodged. There is nothing for us to do but resign.'

With these concluding remarks three leading members, Phil Lawson, Dick Landgraf and Gunther, of the Detroit local of the P. P. bid farewell to a hard-shelled sectarian outfit. Beginning with a protest at the 'unwarranted and unconstitutional expulsion of comrades Martin Larson and Stanley Novack'—booted out for challenging the dictatorship of John Keracher, P. P. secretary—they submit the policies and practices of the party to a devastating criticism on all counts.

Taking a clear stand on the international question they point out that the Proletarian Party hid for years behind the skirts of the Comintern, never criticizing it through years of bankruptcy and treachery but opposing at all times the American Stalinist party as a means of avoiding responsibility for the world movement. 'The best one can say for the position of the Proletarian Party on the Comintern,' they comment, 'is that it serves as an excuse for maintaining an organization that can never consider unity with any other.'

All of this is of a piece with the rest of the hallowed sectarianism of the Proletarian Party which raises 'educational activity' to a principle and by means of study circles, lectures, reading groups and the like it hopes to win over the majority of the working class.

With the dogma as a guiding line contempt has marked their attitude with regards the daily struggles of the working class. They spurn immediate demands, fearing to be contaminated in the class struggle, and justify this ivory tower position by tearing some quotations of

Indiana Council Members Denounce Stalinist Splitting

INDIANAPOLIS, July 14.—The second conference of the Marion County Joint Conference Against Wage Cuts and For Increased Relief, held Sunday, July 14, passed a resolution holding the Communist Party and organizations close to it responsible for criminal sabotage of the united front.

The first conference was held on June 16, consisting of delegates from the National Unemployed League (one local), National Unemployed Council (three branches), Communist Party, International Labor Defense, and Young Pioneer League. There was a total of 37 delegates. A program of action against wage cuts and for increased relief was drawn up by this conference, the following being the main points:

1. Absolutely no wage cuts on FEBA;
2. Jobs for every unemployed worker, with the 30 hour week and $30 minimum wage;
3. No unemployment insurance at the expense of the bosses;
4. Right to call the family physician at the expense of the local authorities;
5. Immediate 50 percent increase in relief allowance, with $15 a month cash for rent and utilities.

Plans were made or drawing the unions into the united front. Plans also were made for the holding of a picnic, for the purpose of raising finances for the carrying on of the Conference's program.

An executive committee of seven was elected to carry out the activities of the conference until the next conference when further action would be decided on. The representation on the Committee was: National Unemployed League, Brightwood Local, 2—Fred Sullivan, chairman of the local, and Robert L. Birchman, NUL organizer for Indiana; National Unemployment Council blocks, 4—Cecil Allen, Andy John Faune, Mohamed Ajamy, and Elsie Francis; and Charles Staidfeld, Section Secretary of the Communist Party. Cecil Allen, of the National Unemployment Council was elected chairman, and Robert L. Birchman of the National Unemployed League, secretary of the Executive Committee.

When the second conference convened on Sunday afternoon, July 14, Cecil Allen as chairman of the Executive Committee noted the fact that only nine delegates were present, three from the NUL, four from one block of the NUC, two from the Angelo Herndon Branch of the I.L.D., and one alternate delegate from the NUL. Fellow-worker Allen reported that the Communist Party representative on the Executive Committee failed to function at all, and that delegates from organizations close to the C. P. also failed to function, with the exception of several from the NUC blocks. Allen further stated that the report had come to him that the reason they wanted nothing to do with the united front was because Birchman of the NUL was secretary of the Executive Committee. They sabotaged the conference by telling the workers in organizations under their influence to stay away, he further stated. Reports and discussion by other delegates followed. . . . Robert L. Birchman, delegate from the Brightwood Local, NUL, and secretary of the Executive Committee of the conference, discussed the functions of a united front, and stated that it appeared that the C. P. did not understand the character of a united front, or want one, and that no objections had been raised to the NUL local being a part of the united front at the first conference. . . . Jules Bertman, delegate from the Brightwood local, NUL, spoke further on the purpose and function of the united front, and offered a resolution pointing out that the united front is imperative in the fight against wage cuts, etc.; that this conference was a step in this direction; and that the Communist Party be condemned for criminal sabotage in openly disrupting the united front. . . . Mrs. Faye Allen of the NUC pointed out that the county chairman of the NUC was absent from both conferences, as was also the state secretary of the NUC and that neither functioned in any way to build the united front; the state organizer of the NUC was present at the first conference, but otherwise failed to function. She stated, 'Organizations that do not function are only isolating themselves from the workers and are doing wrong.' . . . Andy John Faune, delegate from Block No. 101, NUC, of Marion County, stated: 'We should have had double the number of delegates here that we had at the first conference. The reason we haven't is that the Communist Party black-

Ride Scabs Out In Iowa Strike

Workers on March In Many Cities Of State

By PAT MURPHY

DAVENPORT, Iowa, June 18.—Twenty-five men who were imported from St. Louis, Mo. to act as strike breakers in the Des Moines, Iowa bakery strike were met at the depot by over 200 labor union members and informed that they could not stay long in Des Moines. The Des Moines workers lined up the St. Louis importations, and marched them to the labor temple and held them until train time. They then marched them back to the station and saw that they left town. . . . A. A. Ahner, head of the Industrial Investigators of St. Louis, Mo., (a company that makes a specialty of strike breaking) accompanied the men to Des Moines. . . . The six leading bakeries of the city are shut down. The unionized bakers and bakery truck drivers walked out July 13. They are demanding closed shop contract. . . . In Keokuk, Iowa, workers struck the Huggins Co., corn product manufacturers, demanding the reinstatement of seven workers who were discharged for union activity. After five days the strike was settled with the company granting all the demands of the workers. . . . In Council Bluffs the Street Railway strike is still on. There has been only one attempt made to move the trams. This attempt met with such resistance on the part of the strikers that they returned the car to the barn for repairs. The men are just as determined to win as when they walked out April 20.

The resolution was passed unanimously. The conference instructed the executive committee to prepare for a large mass meeting within two weeks, as preparation for a demonstration against wage cuts, against cutting any worker off from relief, and for the 30 hour week, $30 minimum wage. Jules Bertman, NUL delegate, was elected as an additional member of the Executive Committee. . . . Plans were also developed for the Workers Unity Picnic which the first conference decided to hold. The date selected was August 11. The program included games and two speaking programs, one in the afternoon at which representatives of the different unemployed organizations will speak, and in the evening a symposium of representatives from all political parties on what their party is doing and will do for the workers in the fight against wage cuts, etc.

The resolution adopted follows: Whereas the workers, unemployed and employed in Marion County are faced with a new offensive on their living conditions including new wage cuts and discriminations; And whereas united action of all workers' organizations is imperative; And whereas this conference is a step in this direction; And whereas the Communist Party and organizations close to it have sabotaged this fight; Be it therefore resolved that this gathering of workers for united action hold the above parties responsible and condemn them for criminal sabotage. The resolution adopted follows: Whereas the workers, unemployed and employed in Marion County are faced with a new offensive on their living conditions including new wage cuts and discriminations; And whereas united action of all workers' organizations is imperative; And whereas this conference is a step in this direction; And whereas the Communist Party and organizations close to it have sabotaged this fight; Be it therefore resolved that this gathering of workers for united action hold the above parties responsible and condemn them for criminal sabotage. An Outline History of Class P resecution
'Criminal Syndicalism Laws,

Prosecutions of militant workers which have occurred in Sacramento and elsewhere are proceeding under laws passed during the post-war labor struggles. As the rising tide reached the heights of the general strikes of Winnipeg and Seattle, laws were hurriedly passed to curb the labor movement. From 1917 to 1920 21 states and two territories passed criminal syndicalist laws. . . . In sixteen states the law is worded exactly alike. The California law of 1919 is typical. It defines criminal syndicalism as "any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching, aiding and abetting the commission of crime, sabotage (which term is hereby defined as meaning willful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property) or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership or control, or effecting any political change."

Any person, who by word of mouth or by the circulation of literature, advocates the principles of criminal syndicalism, or any person who knowingly joins an organization which advocates similar principles, is guilty of a felony and subject to imprisonment for from 1 to 14 years. . . . Originally the criminal syndicalist laws were directed chiefly at the I.W.W. But as the revolutionary movement developed the courts used the laws against all militant workers.

Three other types of laws were already on the statute books as weapons against labor: criminal anarchy, incitement to insurrection, and seditious laws.

Reviving Dead Laws

Criminal anarchy is defined as "the doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force and violence or by assassination—or by any other means." New York, New Jersey, and Washington passed such laws after the assassination of King Humbert of Italy and President McKinley, but for twenty years they remained unused. They were revived in New York for the purpose of prosecuting Larkin, Giltow, Ruthenberg and others. The defendants, as Communists, were not opposed to "organized government," and were opposed to individual terror. Nevertheless, they were convicted and the New York Court of Appeals sustained the conviction. A minority (Pound and Cardozo) dissented because the statute was directed against the doctrines of Tolstol and Kropotkin and not of Marx and Lenin.

Judge Anderson in Federal District Court concluded similarly in interpreting our deportation laws which were originally directed specifically against anarchists. However, this acquaintance with some of the rudimentary differences in radical philosophies has left no impress on the law. In fact, the only person who seriously accepted these distinctions is that well-known student of Lenin, William Randolph Hearst, who has recently cried out that our deportation and syndicalist laws are creaky, antiquated instruments inadequate for a 20th century capitalist reaction. Others do not feel the need of new laws, for the courts have shown remarkable ingenuity in extending existing laws to any philosophy or activity of which capitalist courts disapprove. The criminal anarchy laws are now being used in Arkansas against organizers of tenant farmers.

Dusting Off the Civil War Another example of the ingenuity of the courts is the use of the "Incitement to Insurrection" laws passed in the Southern states during Reconstruction days. The Georgia laws says that: "Any attempt or persuasion or other means used to induce others to join in any combined resistance to the state, shall constitute an attempt to incite insurrection," which is punishable by death, unless the jury recommends mercy; in that event, the punishment shall not be less than five nor more than twenty years. This type of statute does not penalize membership in radical organizations, but requires proof of an actual attempt at incitement to insurrection. However, in the hands of a vicious prosecutor, together with a handpicked jury, it is an effective weapon for the suppression of radical activity—a Civil War musket, slightly rusty, but still usable—as the conviction of Angelo Herndon shows.

Finally, there is a fourth type of law commonly known as the "Sedition Law." Rhode Island punishes "language intended to incite—disregard of the Constitution or laws." Connecticut punishes "public advocacy of any measure or doctrine proposed or propaganda intended to injuriously affect the government."

Terror in California

The criminal syndicalist laws have been used mostly against union organizers. In California up to 1924 there were 531 indicted of whom 504 were actually apprehended; 292 dismissed without trial; of 212 who were tried, 164 were convicted, of all of whom were members of the I.W.W. except three who belonged to the Communist Labor Party.

Anita Whitney was one of the three. Daughter of a former Supreme Court judge of California, she had played an important role in the defense of members of the I.W.W. She was convicted so soon after the organization of the Communist Labor Party that the state had little evidence except some speeches made at the Chicago convention. As part of its platform, the party had adopted a resolution recognizing the historical significance for militant unionism of the I.W.W. The judge ruled that the Communist Labor Party had thereby endorsed the I.W.W. and that evidence as to the activities of the I.W.W. was admissible to show the character of the Communist Labor Party. Whitney was convicted, as were all the others, solely on the basis of membership in a radical organization.

"The Usual Story"

Immediately upon the passage of the criminal syndicalist laws the I.W.W. had eliminated from its platform all references to sabotage as a tactic in class struggle. But this was of no avail. Pre-war documents were used to convict Wobblies. Two stool pigeons appeared at trial after trial with the same evidence, which was so much a matter of rote that the Appellate Courts often refer to it as "the usual story."

The California prosecutors have developed a technique for confusing the juries. Evidence is introduced—not as to the defendants' activities—but to show that the organization the defendants belong to has advocated certain doctrines. Since, however, juries have often shown themselves not ready to send workers to jail merely because they advocate and organize unions, the prosecution resorts to embellishments: long extracts from Lenin on religion, taken out of their context and badly distorted, followed up with a parade of bogies, such as nationalization of women, destruction of the American home and fireside, etc. The prosecutors have also been accustomed to prove with perjured evidence that Communist meetings are opened with a ritual which starts by kissing the Red Flag, trampling the American flag underfoot and ending with the collegiate cheer, "Bolshevik, Bolshevik, bang bang bang!" Prosecutors have also introduced fake evidence of sabotage, terrible tales of arson, emergency dust in machinery, systematic destruction of property, etc.

Everything Goes

Where convictions have been obtained on such evidence, the defense objections against the evidence have been agreed to by appellate courts—which, nevertheless, sustain the convictions! How? The California law, for example, provides that even improper evidence may be overlooked by the appeal court, unless "the Court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." So, no matter how raw the patriotic antics of the prosecutor, no matter how little evidence is produced, the upper courts have often succeeded in convincing themselves that there was no "miscarriage of justice."

In both the Giltow case (1925) and the Whitney case (1927) the U. S. Supreme Court sustained the convictions. Thus the highest court in the land has blessed these vigilante laws. The post-war wave of prosecutions was finally defeated, not by reversals in higher courts, but by failure of the juries in lower courts to render verdicts. As the red scare faded, fewer and fewer juries could be found who were amenable to the prosecution's frame-ups. The struggle for civil rights began to have its effect on the juries, and there were many split juries. In desperation, prosecutors and judges even resorted to the use of injunctions against radicals—for the violation of the injunction could be punished by the judge himself without a jury. This method was too raw, however, and was dropped. The splitting of juries under the pressure and persuasion of the struggle for civil rights brought to an end the post-war prosecutions.

Stalinists in Van of Social Patriotic Peoples Front

ship, when a few canes tipped with razor blades were waved in the attempted coup of February 6, 1934. But that was before the Stalin-Laval pact. Today Daladier is the very pillar of the "People's Front," worthy indeed to march side by side with Thorez himself, leading the Bastille Day demonstration.

And on the platform of the "People's Front" none other than Herriot thunders his undying opposition to "fascism of the right as well as fascism of the extreme left." For he too fights for the "common cause." The keen Thorez knows the true merits of the man: "Is it not evident," he declares, "that we can come to an agreement to safeguard peace with a party whose most eminent leaders and notably, President Herriot, have never ceased to say and to prove their friendship for the Soviet Union, considered by them, as well as by us, as the great force for peace in the world?" (L'Humanite, June 30).

On July 14, Herriot, Daladier, Blum and Thorez marched in the vanguard of the first "People's Front" parade bearing high aloft "the tricolor flag, the emblem of French revolutionary traditions, and the Red flag." (L'Humanite, June 28).

The Stalinists have traded in the revolutionary struggle for power for a respectable program of haggling for "immediate demands." In a period such as this, concessions can be wrested from the bourgeoisie only if its power itself is challenged. Otherwise the new immediate demands will not be granted and instead the old ones will be drawn. While the fascists are preparing the noose, the Stalinists are hamstringing the workers so that the bourgeoisie can bleed all resistance out of them.

Painting Up the Radicals

What is this monstrosity, the "People's Front"? Is it an alliance with the petty bourgeoisie? The middle classes, who can have no program of their own, will follow the most resolute camp in society. While vacillating in despair between the revolutionary proletariat and the fascist gangs, the middle classes are presented by the Stalinists with the shoddy "People's Front." This constellation is intended to refurbish all the Daladiers and all the "democrats" in whom the middle class is fast losing all confidence and hope. Its only result can be to throw them into the arms of fascism.

The "People's Front" is the unholy offspring of the Stalin-Laval pact. It is social-patriotism in full flower. It is intended to be—and it is—an alliance with the bourgeoisie itself.

Each new day brings into bolder relief the social-patriotic aspect of Stalinism. In May, the new recruiting sergeant for French imperialism, Vaillant-Couturier, plows the trumpet:

"The fatherland? Why not? We want to conquer it. . . . We do not want to conquer the fatherland after it is laid low, ruined and devastated by war. While waiting for The Day we must do everything in our power to protect it against the capitalists, the destroyers of the machine, and the fascists, the destroyers of culture, its material wealth, its moral and intellectual riches accumulated by generations of the toiling masses of France. We are proud of the revolutionary traditions of France. . . ." (L'Humanite, May 15)

L'Humanite beats the drums: "What could be more natural than the fact that our comrade Stalin, upon the request of Laval whom he received in the presence of members of the government, should have declared his approval of the military measures taken in France? Did you want him to make a declaration to disapprove them? That is not serious. . . . What is important is that the interview led to concrete results for the defense of the U.S.S.R."

And further on, "the communists do not plant their banner in mud. They do not condemn the army as such. They do not misconstrue the idea of the fatherland. They want to conquer for the toiling masses the right to their flag, the right to their army, the right to their fatherland. The Communist party is a young, realistic, honest party, a government party, which has already conquered one-sixth of the globe, one-fourth of China, and which in France by its successes is about to augment its prestige to a considerable degree." (P.V.C. writing in L'Humanite, May 17)

Small wonder the died-in-the-wool social patriots can raise their heads high. At last their betrayal of 1914 has met with the sanction of Moscow. So, Evrard grows lyrical in Populaire, organ of the French Socialist Party:

"Stalin, the great Stalin, the supreme leader of the Third International, has proclaimed before the entire world that the task in France is not to allow in any way the weakening of its instruments of national defense."

"And as he goes on, he becomes more emphatic."

"Stalin adds that he understands and fully approves the policy of national defense carried on by France to maintain its forces at the necessary level of security."

"These declarations of their deity have descended on the skulls of the French Communist leaders like so many hammer blows till they see stars by the thousands. They are waiting the order—to dilute their wine with a little water and to prepare their minds more and more for a new conception of Communist duty in the event of war—but they were many hundred miles removed from the thoughts that Stalin would personally take the liberty to proclaim that Flandin and Laval were right in reestablishing the two years' term of compulsory military service, and that their duty was to continually strengthen French armaments that our people must bear up under their burden, and the opponents of this policy must be cast into prison."

"I confess that today I would have cause for laughter if I were in the mood."

"But I will refrain because the facts are indeed very serious."

"Still, since Stalin has avenged me against the sarcasm heaped on me by the French followers, I have decided to thank him for it, to present him with a ceremonial offering. In fact, I intended to send him a drawing depicting the communist leaders Thorez, Duclos, Thiepaut, Quinet, Darguesse and the rest as doughboys, with a pack on their shoulder, a musket in their hand, oozing sweat and blood in military exercises under the severe and imperious command of colonel Marcel Cachin. With myself seated in a corner watching them, while re-reading the theses and conditions of 1920, and the articles and speeches of Cachin and Thorez on revolutionary defeatism."

"And over the drawing, this heading: 'Ones must never swear to anything.'"

"Below, an inscription: For France, for Russia, let us prepare quickly and well." (Populaire, May 23.)

Cachin, the prodigal son, has returned to the fold and Evrard externally cannot refrain from chortling his happiness.

Organic Unity

Now that Stalin has trampled under foot the last vestiges of Leninism there is no barrier any longer between himself, Blum, Zyromsky and all the other Evrards. Le Populaire has expressed its entire agreement on the united ("People's") front and on the national defense policy of Stalin. The committee for Organic Unity (merger between the S. P. and the C. P.) is working overtime. L'Humanite drives for organic unity as the task of the hour. Zyromsky is happily agreed to the Stalinist formulation in the draft program for unity (see L'Humanite, June 8, 1935), where "no national defense in an imperialist war" has been substituted for "no national defense in a capitalist regime" in harmony with Thorez' oath that a war against the U.S.S.R. would be no imperialist war. Piatnitzky, high priest in the C. I., will be shortly in France to officiate at the social-patriotic wedding.

True, the Stalinists have one condition: the expulsion of the Bolshevik-Leninists. This time, however, expulsion will not prove so easy, for the Bolshevik-Leninists already control over one-fourth of the strongest district in the S. P., i.e. Paris, and they have a strong following elsewhere as well. The original nucleus that entered last October has turned from a propaganda group into a revolutionary factor of the first order. Foaming at their mouths, the bureaucrats had to recognize this fact by granting the Bolshevik-Leninists one regular representative and one alternate on the C.A.P. (the S. P. equivalent of a Political Committee) and one representative on the Administrative Board of the organ Le Populaire. The machinations of the bureaucrats behind the scenes will now be forced into the open through the medium of the Bolshevik-Leninists.

The reporter for the semi-official organ of the government, Temps, in covering the Mulhouse Congress of the S.F.I.O., expressed only too well the emotions of Blum and Co. in stating that "they (the leaders) regret having accepted them several months ago."

In the meantime, while unity with Blum hangs fire, the Stalinists are also involved in fervent negotiations on the trade union field, seeking an alliance with Jouhaux, the Bill Green of France against the revolutionary elements, particularly against the Bolshevik-Leninists whose influence in the movement is growing. Had the C.G.T.U. (Red Trade Union Center) entered the C.G.T. (the reformist organization) as a revolutionary opposition, trade union unity would have been already achieved. The Stalinists, of course, were instead interested in "prestige" and in securing for themselves a proper share of sinecures. Point Seven of the C.G.T.U. declaration that made possible the resumption of negotiations with Jouhaux reads as follows:

"(7) Freedom of opinion and the exercise of trade union democracy must not entail the formation of bodies that act as factions in the trade unions. Each trade unionist has the full liberty to belong and work in political and philosophical organizations of his own choice, he, however, can belong to the trade union only in the capacity of a trade unionist. . . ."

Thus at the end of the Stalinist trade union rainbow we find the Siamese twin of the "People's Front": unconditional capitulation to the labor lieutenants of the French capitalist class.

But within the ranks of the C. P. itself, despite the stranglehold of the bureaucracy, the barracks-room discipline there is a seething ferment. Opposition to the Stalin-Laval pact in Jura, Montlucon, Anrillace and elsewhere broke into the open. The Auxerre district demanded the expulsion of Stalin, the social-patriot. The workers are no longer being taken in by the specious arguments of the bureaucrats that "everything remains as before, nothing is changed, Stalin is a Leninist and is leading the bourgeoisie by the nose."

Outside the Stalinist ranks opposition to social-patriotism is taking an organized form. An initiative committee of revolutionary minorities already functions. The Bolshevik-Leninists, Pivert (one of the leading figures in the Paris District of the S. P.), Doriot together with several other groups and trade union organizations held a meeting on July 10 in preparation for a national conference set for August. Elsewhere in this issue we print the resolution of the preliminary conference against a repetition of the 1914 betrayal.

For the first time, after more than a decade of crimes, betrayals and defeats, the revolutionary proletariat is rising in France to take to the road the October victory.

The Manager's Corner

The Chicago branches are now getting their forces together to help put over the campaign for the eight-page weekly. A special committee of fifteen, composed of the most active comrades, has been set up, elaborate plans are worked out and practical results in a big way should follow soon. An initial installment is recorded this week. But so far the Boston branch still holds the lead with a total contribution of $38.00.

Among the New York branches the competition to show best results has brought a small change this week. The West Side branch has taken the lead over Harlem which was ahead last week. Contributions from the West Side branch at the time of going to press were $33.00. Still this is not such a good lead since this sum represents contributions from only five members and on the West Side we have one of our larger branches. In comparison the smaller branches like Harlem and Flatbush, the former with a total of $29.43 and the latter with a total of $20.00 have done better when measured in real terms. The larger branches are still behind in this sense. For example the Bronx branch, which has a membership of about 60, has contributed only $13 to date and the Center branch, also with a large membership, has contributed only $24.25. There is still a long way to go to reach the quota accepted by the New York district of $1,000.

A number of individual contributions have been received from NEW MILITANT readers and friends. Amongst them T. C. Glasheen from West Virginia informs us that he received a copy of the NEW MILITANT from a friend and became particularly attracted by the articles in defense of Ethiopia. He says: "I read carefully the little paper and I love the stand it took on the side of right against might and truth against falsehood. I pledge to give my strong support to this paper and you will find enclosed $1.00 for my subscription and 50 cents for a donation."

Needless to say we receive quite a few of such notes of support and it augurs well for what we have been convinced of from the outset: We will put the campaign for the eight-page weekly over the top. Since last week's report we have received the following amounts:

Contributions
West Side br., N.Y. (Wright) $10.00
Flatbush branch, N. Y. C. . . . 3.25
Bronx branch, N.Y.C. . . . 1.00
Harlem branch, N. Y. C. . . . 2.50

St. Louis branch (Burbank) . . . 4.03
Philadelphia br. (Thomas) . . . 195.48
Previously reported . . . 195.48

Grand Total . . . $276.51

This amount is still only a little better than ten percent of the total necessary to lay a secure foundation for the eight-page weekly. We must build that foundation right away.

BUNDLE ORDER SETTLEMENTS

Last week we published a resume of the branches and bundle agents who have been put on the list of delinquents in regard to remittances due to the NEW MILITANT and the NEW INTERNATIONAL. Of course they were only the worst delinquents. There are a number of others whose accounts are also overdue for payments but there is still an opportunity for them to catch up before they will also be entered on the delinquent list.

Some of the branches mentioned last week have since made a serious effort to get in good standing. The Minneapolis branch forwarded $15.00 payment on the NEW MILITANT account and $9.00 payment on the NEW INTERNATIONAL account. The New York Spartacus Youth League made a similar effort. But the most important point is that practically all accounts are far overdue and the branches and the bundle agents must take serious steps to remedy this situation.

AUGUST NEW INTERNATIONAL ALMOST READY

Among the valuable material that will appear in the August issue of the NEW INTERNATIONAL, will be an Open Letter to the French Proletariat by L. Trotsky, the first installment of a discussion with Max Eastman on some Marxian Fundamentals, a Survey of the Third Party Movement, a review of Olgin's pamphlet on Trotskyism, an analysis of the British-German Naval Agreement and an article by L. Trotsky on Rosa Luxemburg and the Fourth International.

For a change the NEW INTERNATIONAL will appear on time. The August issue is now almost ready and will be mailed about the first of the month. Henceforth it will appear regularly every month and on time. But, and this is urgent, agents must now rush their remittances. We can no longer afford to let the accounts lapse. The indication given above shows the character of the rich material to appear in the August issue. Therefore no delay in settlements. Get ready to distribute the August issue.

Incidentally the combination of $2.00 for a yearly subscription to the NEW INTERNATIONAL and the NEW MILITANT both, still holds good. But it will hold good insofar as the price is concerned only for the next few weeks. With the appearance of the eighth page weekly the price will change. Take advantage of this offer while it is still good.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

C. E., BROOKLYN—
Question: According to Marx the value of commodities is determined by the socially necessary labor-time embodied in them, and yet we observe everywhere that one capitalist employing a certain number of men makes much different profits than another employing the same number. Does this not contradict the Marxian economic theory, since apparently the workers should be adding the same value in each case?

Answer: As a rule, commodities, in capitalist society, do not sell at their values, and it is this fact which gives rise to the suspicion that the concept of socially necessary labor-time as the determinant of value is incorrect. What we have here however, is not a refutation of the law of value but its further development. What actually occurs is that value is determined by the socially necessary labor-time embodied in commodities, but the surplus value extracted from the workers is proportioned among the different capitalists according to the amount and power of the capital that each controls and not according to the number of workers that each directly employs.

Under competitive capitalism this proportioning is brought about by the tendency towards the creation of an average rate of profit for all capital. As an illustration let us assume three industries as follows which are selling commodities at their value: (1) Constant capital, $1,000,000; variable capital $500,000; surplus value, $500,000; selling price $2,000,000; rate of profit 33 1/3 per cent. (2) Constant capital $2,000,000; variable capital $500,000; surplus value, $500,000; selling price $3,000,000; rate of profit 20 per cent. (3) Constant capital $900,000; variable capital $100,000; surplus value $100,000; selling price, $1,100,000; rate of profit, 10 per cent. (We assume for the sake of simplicity that the entire plant wears out in a year so that its entire value is transferred into the value of the commodities.)

The total surplus value extracted from the workers of all industries is thus $1,100,000, and the total value of all commodities is $6,100,000.

There would now be a tendency for capital to flow from the industries with a lower to those of a higher rate of profit so that overproduction, forcing down the prices below their value would occur in the latter and underproduction and a raising of prices above their values would take place in the former. This process would tend to continue until an average rate of profit was brought about for all industries and the three industries taken as examples would then have the following compositions: (1) Constant capital, $1,000,000; variable capital, $500,000; surplus value, $330,000; selling price, $1,830,000 ($170,000 less than its value); rate of profit, 22 percent (11 percent less than before). (2) Constant capital, $2,000,000; variable capital, $500,000; surplus value, $350,000; selling price, $3,050,000 ($50,000 more than its value); rate of profit, 22% (2% more than before). (3) Constant capital, $900,000; variable capital, $100,000; surplus value, $220,000; selling price $1,220,000 ($120,000 above its value); rate of profit, 22% (12% more than before).

The total surplus value extracted from the workers of all industries remains, as before, $1,100,000, and the total value of all commodities remains, as before, at $6,100,000. What has happened is that the competition between capitals has brought about a redistribution of the surplus value among the various capitalists so that the capitalists of industries (2) and (3) are exploiting, not only their own workers but those of industry (1) and this occurs because the latter sells its commodities for an amount below their value equal to the amount above their values for which the commodities of the other two industries are sold.

Under monopolies the same process occurs except that it is the monopoly which makes it possible for certain capitalists to sell commodities above their values and even above the price which would realize the average rate of profit. Monopoly capital is thus able to extract wealth from lesser capitalists as well as from the workers. To answer the many questions bearing on this subject we should like to go more fully into the matter but we are here able to merely present an extremely simplified example of why prices do not correspond to values, since a complete analysis of the question would require a complete review of "Capital." Your editor thinks it appropriate however to call to the attention of those comrades whose questions indicate that they believe Marxian economic knowledge to be exhausted by the concept of labor as the determinant of value, that, besides volume I, there are volumes II and III to Marx's critique of capitalist economy.

JOIN THE WORKERS PARTY.

7th Congress Of C.I. Opens

undoubtedly did not foresee the extremely unpleasant response to his communique. The leaders of the French party immediately went to Moscow in an almost panicky mood. Leon Blum lectured to them learnedly: you mustn't at present waste all your patriotic powder or else you will be morally and politically disarmed at the outbreak of the war. In parliament the Stalinists have already refused to vote for military credits. The reasons? There are Fascist officers in the army. The army of imperialism is to be democratic, a people's army, i.e. it must correspond to the principles of the "People's Front" (remember that the speeches of Noske in the Reichstag on the attitude toward the Hohenzollern war always had this tone). Something in the same spirit will be decided by the Seventh Congress. The sense of the decision will be approximately as follows: it is not necessary to today openly to support French, Czechoslovak and other imperialisms but rather to prepare the workers gradually and carefully for the defense of imperialism at the time of war. In other words, the strategy for the obliteration of the elementary principle of Marxism will for a time be substituted by a strategy of seige. After all Stalin will succeed in carrying out his will as expressed in the communique—we can only be grateful to him for this. This would be too great a gift for the proletariat and for us.

One can be confident that not one of the "leaders" commanding at the Congress will have the courage to pose the question of Zinoviev's fate. Out of the six congresses heretofore known in the history of the Comintern, Zinoviev presided over five. At present he languishes in a prison cell for the alleged intention of restoring capitalism with the aid of terrorist acts against the Soviet bureaucracy. The alarming turn of the Soviet bureaucracy finds its clearest expression in the personal fate of Zinoviev. But can any Cachin or Pleck find any interest in this? So long as they have a post and a salary, why should they be concerned whether Zinoviev presides over a revolutionary congress or is confined to jail as a counter revolutionist? But the question of Zinoviev must be posed by us, particularly in connection with the 7th Congress.

Who will now make the big speeches and write the long resolutions? Manulsky and Kuusinen are now in decline. Perhaps Bela Kun? He is most suited for it, particularly if we remember Lenin's famous speech at the plenum of the E.C.G.I. on the eve of the Third Congress. The speech was devoted almost entirely to Bela Kun and its last motif was the brief formula: "Bela Kun's stupidity." Not by accident did the Comintern reach Bela Kun's level.

Another candidate—Dimitrov. His present, entirely unexpected career, was caused exclusively by his conduct at the Fascist trial. We all applauded him, particularly in comparison with the conduct of the chairman of the Stalinist parliamentary fraction, Torgler. But we

PHILA. FRUIT CLERKS IN SIX WEEKS STRIKE

The Fruit Clerks Union struck the Blue Ribbon Market six weeks ago. The demands are: (1) a 63 hour week, (2) $17.50 minimum a week, (3) union recognition. It is rumored that the Blue Ribbon Market is in a bad condition financially and can no longer get credit in the wholesale market as a result of the strike.

Five Organizations Issue Call for New World Party; Answer New Betrayal of 7th Comintern Congress

Open Letter to All Revolutionary Working Class Organizations & Groups

Hitler's assumption to power, which did not meet with the slightest resistance on the part of the two "mighty" working class parties—one of them, moreover, basing itself upon the U.S.S.R.—has exposed decisively the internal putrefaction of the Second and Third Internationals. In August, 1933, four organizations (International Communist League, Revolutionary Socialist Party, Independent Socialist Party—both of Holland, and the Socialist Workers Party of Germany) formulated for the first time in a programmatic document the new historic task: the creation of the Fourth International. The events that have transpired since that time have been irrefutable confirmation that there is no other road.

The annihilation of the Austrian proletariat has demonstrated that victory cannot be gained by issuing a last minute call for insurrection to the masses, disoriented and drained by opportunism—after the party had been driven into a blind alley. It is necessary to prepare systematically for victory by means of revolutionary policies in every sphere of the working class movement.

The very same lesson immutably flows from the annihilation of the Spanish proletariat. Under all conditions, especially during a revolution, it is impermissible to turn ones back upon the toilers for the sake of a bloc with the bourgeoisie. It is impossible to expect and demand that the duped and disillusioned masses will fly to arms upon the belated call of a party in which they have lost confidence. The proletarian revolution is not improvised by orders of a bankrupt leadership. The revolution must be prepared through incessant and irreconcilable class struggle which gains for the leadership the invincible confidence of the party, fuses the vanguard with the entire class, and transforms the proletariat into the leader of all the exploited in the city and country.

Following the ignominious downfall of the principal section of reformism—the completely corroded German social democracy—the "left wing" of the Second International went down in ruins in Austria and Spain. But these fearful lessons passed by without leaving a trace; the leading cadres of reformism within the party and in the trade unions have degenerated to the marrow of their bones. Their personal interests and their patriotic views bind them to the bourgeoisie and they are utterly incapable of resorting to the road of the class struggle.

Social Democracy Bound to the Chariot of the Bourgeoisie

The parties of the Second International calmly reconcile themselves to the fact that their Belgian president, at the very first beck of finance capital, joined hands with the Catholic and liberal middlemen to salvage the banks at the expense of the toiling masses. In the wake of Vandervelde there followed de Man, the vainglorious critic of Karl Marx, the originator of a "Plan"; nor did the "left" centrist Spaak fail to betray the socialist opposition in return for the livery of a minister.

Mindful neither of lessons nor warnings, the French Socialist Party continues vainly to clutch at the railcoats of the "Republican" bourgeoisie, and it pins greater hopes upon the friendship of the Radicals than upon the revolutionary might of the proletariat. In all other countries, in every part of the world, in Holland, Scandinavia, Switzerland, the Social Democracy, despite the decay of capitalism, continues to remain the agency of the bourgeoisie within the working class and reveals its utter inability to mobilize the masses in its own

Introduction to the Open Letter

The Workers Party of the U.S. participates this week in an action of the greatest significance for the international proletariat, viz. the publication of the Open Letter on the Fourth International. Signing this letter in addition to the W.P.U.S. are the Revolutionary Socialist Workers Party of Holland (K.S.A.P.), the International Communist League, the Workers Party of Canada and the French Bolshevik-Leninists. Of course the signature of the I.C.L. implies that of its other sections also, Russian, South African, Chilean, Cuban, Chinese, etc.

The signature of the Open Letter by the W.P.U.S. was authorized, depending upon the fulfillment of certain conditions, by the June Plenum of the National Committee of the party. The chief conditions were that the S.A.P. (Socialist Workers Party of Germany) should be given a month's time to join with other signers, the S.A.P. having been one of the signers of the Declaration of Four in 1933 where the concept of the Fourth International was proclaimed; that the headquarters of the Provisional Contact Committee provided for in the Open Letter be Amsterdam; and that certain paragraphs dealing with the Franco-Soviet pact and with the situation in the U.S. and other American countries be included.

The S.A.P. expresses sympathy with the movement to build the Fourth International but asks that parties such as the W.P. join the I.A.G. (London-Amsterdam Bureau of centrist parties), a condition which the W.P. plenum rejected.

The other conditions laid down by the W.P. have been fulfilled.

In accordance, therefore with the action of the June Plenum of the N.C. the Political Committee of the Party has ordered the publication of the Open Letter in our official organ as the official proclamation to the world labor movement of our concurrence in the Open Letter and renewed evidence of our determination to proceed as rapidly as possible to the building of the Fourth International.

In this hour of mounting war danger and on the other hand of renewed evidence of capitulation of the Second and Third Internationals to social patriotism, the W.P.U.S. joins with joy, pride and hope in raising higher the banner of the Fourth International. We call upon the workers and intellectuals throughout the world, and especially here in the United States, to whatever organization they may today belong, to read and study the Open Letter and in the light of its contents and the present world situation to determine where their allegiance belongs. We have no time to lose in deciding how the working class may be saved from fresh betrayals and defeats, under what banner and how the vanguard and the masses may be rallied for the revolutionary victory over capitalism and the building of a workers' world.

imperialism, publicly renounced the American Communists. This party, corrupted by a decade of unprincipled maneuvers and liquidationist experiments with parties (Farmer-Labor Party) which have nothing in common with proletarian parties either in their composition or program—this Stalinist party, upon orders from Moscow confines itself to the role of a radical-intellectual movement which functions in the United States as the valet of Stalinist diplomacy. But the deep-going crisis of American capitalism is awakening wide layers of workers from their semi-provincial slumbers, gradually dispelling bourgeois and petty bourgeois illusions, impelling the proletariat towards large scale class actions (Toledo, Minneapolis, San Francisco) and creates for the revolutionary Marxist party the possibility of gaining a wide spread and profound influence upon the development and organization of the American working class. The historic roll which accrues to the Fourth International and its American section not only within the confines of the Western hemisphere but on the world arena as well is of exceptional importance, since the smashing of American imperialism is of extreme significance for the world proletariat.

In Austria and Spain, the Communist International, despite extremely favorable circumstances, failed not only to create an organization in the least influential, but systematically compromised in the eyes of the workers the very idea of the revolutionary party. The Saar plebiscite is evidence that the German proletariat lost every vestige of confidence not only in the social democracy but in the Communist party as well—the party that so ingloriously capitulated to Hitler. In Great Britain, Belgium, Holland, Scandinavia, on both American continents and in the Orient the sections of the Communist International, burdened by twelve years of fatal policies are unable to emerge from their obscurity.

True, after the German debacle, the Communist International substituted the capitulatory policy of the united front at any price for the adventurist policy of the "third period." However, the experience in France, where this latest turn has attained its greatest development, demonstrates that the Communist International, with all its contradictions and zigzags, manages to retain its function of being a brake upon the proletarian revolution. Rejecting the creation of a workers' militia in face of the immediate fascist danger, substituting its program of immediate demands and a policy of parliamentarism for the struggle for power, the Communist International is the sower of the worst illusions of reformism and pacifism, gives actual support to the right wing in the Socialist Party against the Left, demoralizes the proletarian vanguard, and clears the road for a fascist overturn.

Finally, the founder of the Communist International, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union has been completely crushed during the last few years by the uncontrolled bureaucracy which has turned the dictatorship of the proletariat into the conservative absolutism of Stalin. By means of persecutions, frauds, amalgams and bloody repressions the ruling clique strives to nip in the bud every manifestation of Marxist thought. Nowhere in the world is genuine Leninism bounded so bestially as in the U.S.S.R.

Manifesto of the W. P. U. S. on Anti-War Day

For the working class the greatest tragedy in connection with the World War of 1914-18 was its betrayal by the Socialist leaders and the trade union leaders under social democratic influence. These leaders who had ostensibly been engaged in the struggle against imperialist war capitulated at the outbreak of the war to the capitalists and militarists, voted the war credits demanded by the various governments, and made it possible for these governments to lead the workers of one nation to slaughter and be slaughtered by the workers of another nation.

The greatest tragedy which threatens the workers of the world on this twenty-first anniversary of the outbreak of the first World War, which finds all the capitalist powers engaged in war preparations on the most extensive scale, is not only fresh betrayal by the social democracy but betrayal also by the Third (Stalinist) International and the Communist (Stalinist) parties throughout the world and by the Stalinist bureaucracy which controls the Soviet Union today.

The most urgent task of the advanced workers is to expose the utter and abject surrender of the Stalinist parties to social-patriotism; to expose the so-called "peace policies" of the present Soviet leadership as leading not to peace but to capitulation in war, not to the defense of the Soviet Union but to the breakdown of its best and only defense, namely, the world revolutionary movement; to smash the influence of the Stalinist parties over the workers and their allies throughout the world; and to raise aloft the banner of the New, Fourth, International, under which alone the uncompromising revolutionary struggle against imperialist war and against imperialism can be carried to a victorious conclusion.

Fervent War Preparations
At this very moment when the children who were born during the period of the Great War, are of age for military service, all the capitalist nations are engaged in war preparations on the most colossal scale and the "coming war" is no longer something that may or may not appear in the remote future. The diplomats of the Great Powers discuss cynically not whether war is to come but when it will break out. In portions of Asia and Africa the armies are already being drawn up in battle formation.

Hitler Germany has defied the Versailles treaty, introduced universal conscription and begun the rebuilding of a navy to make her a dominant sea power once again, at least in the North Sea.

Fascist Italy has announced its intention to subjugate Ethiopia and is daily transporting thousands of armed men to that country's frontiers.

Once more the fuse has been lighted that may blow up the powder barrels of the Polish Corridor, for which Germany is now renewing its claim, and of Memel, where the antagonism between Germany and Lithuania is only a superficial expression for a deeper rivalry among all the rival imperialist powers of the Old World.

The hegemony of France over Continental Europe, temporarily secured by the Versailles treaty, is now threatened; and France must

Green Dodges Convention of Auto Workers Rank and File Determined to Form International

By BURKE COCHANE

DETROIT, Mich.—The unofficial date for the convocation of a constitutional convention of delegates from the present federal unions to set up an international in the automobile and auto parts industry, is supposed to have been set for August 26. This unofficial notice has already engendered a tremendous enthusiasm among automobile workers throughout the country. The response has proved again that the time is doubly ripe for the establishment of an international and will undoubtedly become a major factor in the organization of the workers of this key industry.

President Wm. Green, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, and Francis Dillon, head of the National Council of the United Automobile Workers Union, however, have not yet broken their silence with regard to the proposed convention. Nobody in the Dillon office at Detroit, knows what arrangements have been made for this convention, where it will be held or anything else about it. None of the locals have yet received instructions with regards to the convention, on what basis delegates will slip back unless she reasserts herself and goes forward—that is, unless she is a victor in another war.

The economic contradictions in which the Japanese ruling class finds itself continue to drive Japan toward expansion in China, Manchukuo, Mongolia, all along the borders of the Soviet Union, and finally past them, in Siberia.

British interests are threatened by the adventures of Italy and Japan and the economic expansion of U.S. capitalism, so that at the very moment when a poll of British citizens records a ninety percent vote for universal disarmament the British government launches a colossal naval building campaign.

Terrorism Grows

As capitalism everywhere in spite of its most frantic efforts, finds it more and more difficult to satisfy the most elementary needs of the masses, as it further depresses the standard of living even in relatively favored nations such as the U.S. and as the discontent of the masses seethes and boils over, expresses resentment against misery and war preparations, the capitalist nations establish ever more repressive regimes and by unlimited terrorism seek to establish the "national unity" which will enable them to lead the masses to war in an attempt to resolve the crisis. Hitler is today compelled to resort to terroristic methods even against those very lower middle-class elements which helped to bring him into power (the persecutions of Catholics and Protestants, the Hitler press attacks on small business men). The Hitler regime has not been able to fulfill its demagogic promises to these elements; he is already in danger of losing their support. Thus we are shown that the German economic crisis is so severe that Hitler may be compelled any day to embark upon war. At the same time the masses in other countries are reminded that it is but a question of time until there is too capitalism, either in preparation for war or in the conduct of it, establishes an equally brutal and barbaric terrorism.

All of these war preparations of the imperialist powers are in reality directed also against the Soviet Union, though only some of them have this avowed aim and some capitalist governments even profess to be eager to help "defend" the Soviet Union. Capitalism cannot live peacefully side by side with the workers' state which is laying

10,000 Rally for Tom Mooney In Frisco on 19th Year of Arrest

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28—10,000 workers filled the Civic Auditorium here today, on the nineteenth anniversary of the framing of Tom Mooney. The all important and immediate purpose of this mass meeting was to signalize attention to the continued imprisonment of Mooney on the rankest frame-up conspiracy ever perpetrated by open shop employers against active militant trade unionists.

Harry Bridges, militant maritime labor leader, was one of the principal speakers who emphatically protested against continuing this monstrous injustice.

Leo Gallagher, former attorney for Mooney, commented at length on the legal aspects of the Mooney case; and Melvin Jackson who represented the Tom Mooney Molders Defense Committee spoke on the role of youth in the struggles of labor for a place in the sun and in the fight for Tom Mooney's freedom.

Kanjo Kato, Chairman of the National Trade Union Congress of Japan, brought a message of peace and friendship from the workers of Japan, and expressed international solidarity in the demand that Tom Mooney be freed. He delivered his oration entirely in Japanese and at intervals passed so that his interpreter could translate for the audience what he had said.

The entire program of three hours was broadcast over radio station KROW, and the only unexpected occurrence was during Rev. Alexander's speech, when he asked for a demonstration by the audience for the special benefit of Tom Mooney who was listening to the meeting over the radio from San Quentin. The radio station immediately cut him off the air, and the announcer explained to the radio audience that it was a federal offense to communicate with a prisoner inside a penitentiary by radio.

The sponsors of the meeting, those who helped to make it a huge success, included the International Longshoremen's Association 38-79, the Sailors Union of the Pacific, the Ship Stewards 38-100, the Communist Party, the International Ladies Garment Workers Union No. 8, the I.L.A. Auxiliary, the Workers Party of U.S., the Waiters Union, the Waitresses Union, the Auto Mechanics Union, the Carpenters Union No. 518, the Painters Union No. 1158, and the Machinists Union.

Tom Mooney on this August 2 will have been a continuous active member of the International Molders Union for thirty-three years, and the unions of San Francisco supported him loyally in this mighty demonstration of solidarity.

Move for Omaha General Strike In Support of Tram Workers

OMAHA, Nebr.—General strike sentiment in Omaha in support of the striking streetcar men has risen so strongly that the executive board of the Central Labor Union has agreed to place a general strike call before that body Aug. 2.

The executive board's action followed pressure from the streetcar men's rank and file strike committee of 13, who demanded that the C.L.U. endorse a call for the general walkout within two weeks.

A conference of all organized labor in the city has been called for August 6 to form a general strike committee. At that time the date for the strike will be definitely set.

On the following day there is to be a conference of unaffiliated and unorganized workers and farmers to form a supporting committee of action.

The aggressiveness of Omaha labor was aroused by the continued delay of C.L.U. officials, by the vicious "red baiting" and spitting tactics of the daily press, and by open threats by bosses of wholesale firing of union labor.

In a press release, James C. Perkins, strike leader, called upon all groups to support the program of unity and militant action as the only means of winning the strike.

Should the general walkout take place, some 35,000 Omaha families will be affected. Strikers followed the recent Terre Haute general tie-up with keen interest, and it is felt that the Indiana situation has been a great influence in creating general strike sentiment here.

In support of the streetcar workers, the Omaha and Council Bluffs Central Labor Unions and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen have issued 70,000 circulars explaining the strike, to be distributed in every home in Omaha and Council Bluffs. Organized labor contributed the stock, members of the printing crafts donated their labor, and the Farmer-Labor Press of Council Bluffs gave the use of its press.

The leaflet emphasizes the fact that the streetcar strike is the same one which was called April 20, 1934, and has been repeatedly interrupted by conferences, only to have the company ignore all decisions of such conferences. Some weeks ago, Gov. Roy Cochran forced an agreement after compulsory arbitration only to have the company violate it by ignoring the seniority decision.

The local C.L.U. calls attention to its offer of "free-ride cars" identified by red and white stickers, a convenience developed by organized labor for the citizens to enable them to boycott the streetcars.

The Role and Position of the Various Groups in the Struggle Occurring in the Teachers Union

Below is the third of a series of articles on the situation in the Teachers Union, its background, the policies of the groups within it, and the struggle for union democracy as occasioned by the recent attempt of the administration to drive minorities from the organization.—Ed.

In 1928, a small group of Union teachers organized the Progressive Group based upon a program designed to make the Union a more effective force among the teachers. The Union then had within its ranks less than 1,000 members out of a teaching body of over 30,000 and was making little progress in organizing them. Two years later certain sections of the left wing within the general labor movement adopted a policy of seeking to build a new national trade union center in opposition to the A. F. of L. The influence of this policy was soon reflected within the ranks of the Progressives, which resulted in a split into two groups, one retaining the name of the group and the other group representing this new influence adopting the name of Rank and File.

The Progressive Group based its policies on building the Union as the sole economic organization of the teachers and was opposed to all independent activity outside the Union. Although it has been in opposition to the Administration and fights it on many issues on the floor of the Union, it does not seek to oust the Administration from the leadership—it seeks to reform it in a progressive direction. It takes the position that at present the Administration is much to the left of the great mass of teachers—hence what is needed is not a new leadership but a reform of the policies of the present one.

Bertram D. Wolfe, one of the leaders of this group, declared at one of its meetings that it would be disastrous to the Union or the present Administration to be replaced by a left wing leadership because the latter would be so much out of touch with the point of view of the majority of the teachers as to cause a collapse of the Union and the ruin of many years of hard work in building the organization.

Ben Davidson, the chief of the Progressives, declared that if Dr. Lefkowitz should resign as legislative representative of the Union, he believed it would go to pieces. With this defeatist point of view as its guiding line, it becomes clear why the Progressives did not put out a full election slate until 1933, offering until then no candidates in opposition to Lefkowitz and Linville. It also becomes clear why the Progressives centered their main attack during this period upon the Rank and File for its dual-unionist policies, and not upon the Administration, thus giving the latter fuel for its attack upon the entire opposition. That is why the belief has existed among many teachers that the Progressives are simply a pseudo-opposition.

After the formation of the Unemployed Teachers Association in the spring of 1931, upon the initiative of the Rank and File, the Progressives, in the fall of the same year, sponsored the organization of the Association of Unappointed Teachers as a rival organization of unemployed teachers—thus splitting the movement at the very outset. This policy it has maintained until the present despite the fact that there does not exist any legitimate reason for two organizations in this field.

The leaders of the Progressives—Davidson, Wolfe and Wittes—voluntarily promised that as soon as the Rank and File group abandoned its dual unionist position, liquidated its Classroom Teachers Groups, etc., it would propose a merger of the Progressive Group and the Rank and File and other opposition groups. In this event it further promised to merge the Association of Unappointed Teachers with the Unemployed Teachers Association and strive for the eventual entry of both into the Teachers Union. Despite the fact that the Rank and File has changed its policies in this respect—despite the dissolution of the Classroom Teachers Groups—the Progressives leader refuse to carry out their promises and hide their opposition to the long overdue merger under various untenable pretexts.

Policies of Rank and File Group. The Rank and File group, as stated above, came into existence as a result of the movement, during 1929 to 1934, for the building of a new national trade union center, and as a result of a split within the Progressive Group. The Rank and File is officially allied to the "Rank and File" movements in other A. F. of L. unions, such as the A. F. of L. Committee for Unemployment Insurance. Its official organ is "The A. F. of L. Rank and File". The Rank and File, under the leadership of Isadore Begun, originally took the position that it was hopeless to seek to reform the union and have it adopt and carry out a progressive or militant program.

In accordance with this orientation, it initiated the organization of the Committee to Protect Salaries (1931) ostensibly for the purpose of organizing school salary committees to fight the then proposed salary cuts, but actually for the purpose of laying the basis for a rival organization to the Teachers Union.

After this attempt had failed, it initiated and organized the Classroom Teachers Groups on a similar anti-Union basis and used this organization as a means of attacking the Union from the outside. Attempts by members of the Rank and File to correct this policy proved of no avail; they were simply dropped from the group, received no notices, were refused the floor, etc.

Similarly, the Rank and File undertook the organization of the Unemployed Teachers Association in 1931, which was a correct move in itself due to the refusal of the Administration to organize or permit the organization of the unemployed teachers under its auspices. But the Rank and File leadership (Begun, Citron, Levine) misused their influence within the U.T.A. to lead it into anti-Union channels. Within the U.T.A. a struggle was carried on by a group of leading members to correct this false course. The result was the same as in the Rank and File: the opposition was removed from the Executive Board and ostracized within the organization.

The leadership of the Rank and File proved in action that in addition to steering a dual unionist course, it could outdo the Lefkowitz-Linville faction in anti-democratic measures against those who disagreed with them in their own organization. Through these destructive activities the Rank and File leadership played into the hands of the Administration which used their tactics as arguments to confuse the membership and to prevent the adoption of mass action policies by the Union.

A Bankrupt Maneuver

After the liquidation of such dual organizations as the National Miners Union, the National Textile Workers, the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union, etc., the policy of the Rank and File also was changed. At first it proposed a united front of the Classroom Teachers Groups with the Teachers Union (June, 1934). When this maneuver failed, it proposed that the Teachers Union call a conference of all teachers' organizations for the purpose of uniting, although the Rank and File leaders knew perfectly well that the only organization that would respond to such a call would be its own controlled Classroom Teachers Groups. This maneuver was designed to cover the bankruptcy of its own policy and to act as a face-saving device while a change of policy was being effected, likewise failed. The Rank and File leaders were compelled to order the liquidation of the Classroom Teachers Groups, thus substantiating the charge that its intent was to create a rival to displace the Teachers Union.

In spite of its false policies, the strength of the Rank and File has increased considerably during the past year, a contradiction which not only does not justify its past anti-Union course, but serves to emphasize how much greater its strength might have been had it followed a pro-Union course. In the last few months of the school year it strove feverishly to bring in as many members as possible into the Union from among its followers which it had previously kept from joining the Union. But the Administration made good use of the Rank and File's previous blunders to win in the elections of 1935. This soon made it possible for the Lefkowitz-Linville faction to block the rapid growth of the opposition by closing the books of the Union against the entrance of new members.

The Committee for Democracy

Because the leaders of the Rank and File refused to reform their policies in a pro-Union direction, because they refused to organize a broad and non-factional united front movement together with the Progressives and other independent elements to restore democracy in the Union, because they resorted to expulsion and ostracism against those of its members who advocated these changes—the Committee for Democracy in the Union came into existence. Disaffected members of the Progressive Group and independent members likewise joined the committee. The aim was not to create a third opposition group with a complete trade union program but to develop a non-partisan movement to restore the democratic rights of the membership to determine the policies of the Union.

The program of the Committee consists of the following:

1) The restoration by constitutional amendment of the right of the membership to determine the basic policies of the Union.

2) The democratization of the Delegate Assembly, which will then constitute the working body of the Union between membership meetings.

3) The reduction of dues to the Union, with full membership rights and at nominal dues, of unemployed and unappointed teachers of the city.

4) The reduction of dues to facilitate an organizational drawing into the Union of the great mass of teachers who are still outside it.

The Committee for Democracy in the Union, in the brief period of its existence (Nov. 1934) engaged in a remarkable amount of constructive activity in a hostile atmosphere created by a highly factionalized situation. In this brief period it issued a program for the liquidation of the Union. Six bulletins explaining this program were issued to the membership. It sounded the alarm and called for a united front when the Organized Union Majority was organized and when Dr. Linville sent out his unauthorized letters to the membership attacking the right of minority groups to exist in the Union.

Predicting that these moves were preliminary to the renewal of the Administration's campaign to crush the opposition groups by ousting them from the Union, the Committee pointed out the dangers and appealed to the Rank and File and to the Progressive Group to form a united front with it on a limited program of restoring and extending democracy (Nov. 1934). Both of these groups refused to heed the appeal, each denying that an immediate danger of expulsion existed and each setting forth ultra-realist demands which made a united front impossible. They were soon to learn how costly their blunder would prove.

Party Grows In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The recent liquidation of the Branch of the Workers Party began its organizational and agitatorial work with a bang here Wednesday night, July 24, through the medium of an open organizational meeting attended by approximately fifty workers. The meeting had been well advertised at several open air meetings held during the week at Public Square.

Harry Thurman, branch secretary, in opening the meeting gave a short report dealing with the great need of an organization of the type of the Workers Party in Cleveland and showing the necessity for such an organization nationally. He also brought out the necessity for every class conscious worker to be in its ranks. After this preliminary report the floor was thrown open for discussion. The majority of the questions asked dealt with the difference between the Workers Party and the C.P., and S.P. They also stressed the necessity for a united front of all political working class organizations against the common enemy—capitalism.

As a result of this meeting fifteen workers who attended signed applications for membership in the Party. Besides holding these open meetings, the downtown branch plans to help in the organization of an Unemployed League.

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—"C. A. Hathaway was responsible for my resignation from the Communist Party and my intention to join the Workers Party," Harry Thurman, young C. P. member answered in response to a question from the District organizer of the C.P. as to why he was leaving the Stalinists for the Workers Party. Thurman, a member of the Communist Party for two years, became convinced of the bankruptcy of the Third International after reading statements of Thorez, leading "theoretician" of the French C. P., in which he attempted to explain away the entangling alliance the Soviet Union has just concluded with France, which forces the French C.P. members to act as recruiting sergeants in time of war. Other members of the C.P. and Y.C.L. in Cleveland announced their intention of leaving the Stalinists for the same reason.

CHELSEA, Mass. (FP).—A unique decision closely affecting the labor and radical movements was recently handed down when Judge Samuel R. Cutler of Chelsea district court found the Western Union Telegraph Co. in contempt of court and fined it $500 for accepting, transmitting and delivering protest telegrams against the arrest of two defendants appearing before his court. If this decision is upheld, it will deprive the great majority of the people of the right to inform public officials of their opinions, and bring mass pressure to bear on reactionary officials.

Lumber Strike Ends; Obtain Few Demands

Labor Skates Expel All Rebellious Locals from Union

By EARL LANE

PORTLAND, Ore., July 31.—The great Northwest lumber strike virtually ended in this important lumber production center when on its 80th day the Sawnmill and Timber Workers local voted overwhelmingly to accept a compromise settlement of 50 cents per hour minimum wage scale, a 40-hour, five consecutive day week, no discrimination against workers who participated in the strike, re-employment as soon as each department re-opens, and collective bargaining between the individual employers and employees in the individual mills. The workers in each mill are to be represented by a committee elected by them. The original strike demands were: 75c per hour minimum wage scale, 30-hour week, one week's sick leave and one week's vacation annually with pay, and union recognition.

The bosses were reluctant to grant even the meager concessions contained in the final settlement, and only did so after the workers had flatly rejected a proposed agreement that would have left the operators free to discriminate against the militants in the union's ranks and put the matter of re-employing the strikers off into the nebulous future, "whenever it is possible to do so." In the case of the militants "whenever it is possible" would with a creativity have been never. Another concession forced by the union was the five consecutive day week.

Concessions Inadequate

In spite of the fact that these concessions were won the settlement must be considered a defeat. The fact that the workers in two plants were not included and were left to settle with their bosses by themselves, was a serious departure from true union solidarity. But the gravest defeat is the splitting up of the union into separate mill locals, thus preventing the presentation of a united front to the attacks of the bosses which are sure to follow as soon as they feel themselves strong enough.

In the face of the fact that the strike has virtually ended in every other important center, the workers in Tacoma and Aberdeen are still out, the Tacoma local having rejected a compromise settlement last Saturday night.

Abie Muir, with the support of the top leadership of the A. F. of L., is continuing his campaign to smash the militant locals of the S. & T.W. U., using the same charter revoking tactics that are being used against the Minneapolis militants.

Green injected himself into the struggle to smash local 2504 which has been fighting Muir and his sell-out policies. In a telegram to Hutcherson, reactionary president of the Carpenters and Joiners, he threatened to revoke the charter of Longview-Kelso Central Labor Council if they did not unseat delegates from 2504 and completely disassociate itself from the militant local. The federation executive's threat is contained in this message sent to P. W. Dowler, general representative of the Carpenters and Joiners.

Green's Papal Bull

"Just received following telegram from President Green. 'Have dispatched a letter with seal attached thereto to officers Central Labor Council, Kelso and Longview by airmail instructing them to disassociate themselves from suspended local 2504 from affiliation with central body and also writing organizer Watson Longview and if necessary revoke the charter of the central body in order to enforce compliance with my instructions.' Wm. L. Hutcherson."

Thus we see that the labor fakery will not hesitate to use any methods, no matter how vile, to smash militant unionism.

Promote the Struggle
Although the workers fell short of winning their original strike demands, and agreements such as the ones concluded in Portland represent some definite gains, nevertheless some real setbacks can be recorded. Wage increases were won, the company union (4L) has been smashed in the largest production centers, and although its ranks are infested with such rats as Muir, a bonafide trade union has been established.

The Northwest lumber workers must guard themselves for a struggle to cleanse their ranks of the fakery and build a strong rank and file movement that will wage a determined struggle for better living conditions.

Above all the workers must realize that labor fakery, the bosses, and the government are one big union of exploiters which the workers must unite to banish from the earth or gradually sink back to the level of the serfs of the Middle Ages. Join the ranks of the Workers Party. Onward to the goal of a classless society.

The Manager's Corner

The realization of the eight-page weekly is now assured by the enthusiastic response given to the call for the strengthening of the party press. The figures of total contributions received to date for this special purpose would hardly seem to substantiate our claim. But these figures do not tell the whole story. So while we have now reached only a little less than 20 percent of the $2,000 set as a goal for the campaign to launch the eight-page weekly, the real situation is that we are building up a solid economic foundation for our press, and above all, we are really beginning to extend its circulation.

Our appeal was not in vain. The party branches and the bundle agents are undertaking in a serious manner to pay up on their accounts, regular subscriptions are rolling in, subscription renewals are given attention and advance subscriptions for the eight-page weekly are appearing.

Comrade Lloyd Lassen, from far away Arizona, writes to us: "The NEW MILITANT overshadows any other publication in the field already. Organizational gains are bound to flow from a larger and even better paper." Many similar messages arrive.

Postponement Unavoidable

When we announced our campaign for the eight-page weekly we set August 3 as a tentative date for its appearance. Many comrades undoubtedly expected this issue to be it. But we were a little too rash in our estimates. We did not fully realize that because we had been so badly remiss in the past, resulting in so many frightfully delinquent accounts, there was so much to be done before a sound economic basis could be assured. In addition we were ourselves so much delayed in getting the campaign underway. And let it be clearly understood, we have no interest in making a show of progress that is not real and does not rest on a realistic basis enabling us to maintain every gain and to march forward. Our aim is not merely to add to the pages of the NEW MILITANT, rather it is to make the kind of advance that will produce a vastly improved party organ and produce a worthy spokesman for the militant workers.

Five Organizations Issue Call for New World Party

Fight Hitlerism!

Out of the hell-holes of German fascism, the concentration camps, and the illegal activity once again comes the imperious cry of the revolutionists for assistance. Faced with tremendous obstacles such as were unknown since the days of Czarism, which seems mild and heavenly in comparison with the Nazi inferno, the German internationalists are carrying on in spite of all. At the risk of life and limb they are circulating their literature, educating the workers anew and preparing for the day when they will be strong enough to throw off Hitler's yoke. Many are thrown into prison, others are mauled beyond description by the Brown sadists and still others make the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the revolutionary movement.

These comrades have appealed to us directly through their friends in Paris. Their organization, the International Communists of Germany is affiliated to the I. C. L. with which the Workers Party is in fraternal relations. They give instances of the arrest of several of their best fighters as quoted in Nazi papers and their condemnation to death and three years in the concentration camp. Such cases exist by the hundreds. Yet the work continues; each case of persecution only spurring on the members of the I. C. L. to greater activity.

They speak in their communication of the dreadful shambles that once was the proud Socialist party and the Communist party; how the youth are looking for a new road after the shameful collapse of both these parties in face of the Hitlerite aggression. Disillusionment has not only spread to the adherents of working class parties but also to large sections of the middle class—for whom the Nazi promises have all turned to dust. Possibilities for revolutionary activity are greater in view of the lot down of espionage among large sections of the populace that previously acted as stool pigeons for Hitler.

Although the political advantages and opportunities of the International Communists have increased because of the disillusionment that has spread in both old parties, nevertheless they operate under tremendous handicaps. While the Stalinist and reformist parties command huge sums of money wherewith to carry on their illegal activity, the revolutionists are forced to rely on the meager pennies and nickels of their comrades and the occasional contributions of sympathizers.

Up to now the International Communists have refrained from making public appeals for funds for fear of jeopardizing the physical safety of those comrades in the clutches of Fascist "justice." Changed conditions however have obliged a change in this policy and through us they are appealing for aid. A committee has been set up in Paris to forward such funds as are received for the purpose of smuggling literature into Germany, distributing it in the Reich and helping those comrades fleeing from the Fascist butcher and so on.

All funds should be sent to: Jean Meichler, P. B. 14, 248, rue des Pyrénées Paris (18).

Money orders to: Jean Meichler, Paris 1258 14.

YOUNG SPARTACUS OUT

YOUNG SPARTACUS has come out after a lapse of a couple of months and its contents compensate for the delay. Articles on the Y.P. S. L. convention, the A. Y. C. congress, and Tom Paine, and excerpts from a manifesto of the Bolshevik-Leninist Youth of France make the paper interesting reading.

International is intimately linked up with the Soviet turn in foreign policy towards the League of Nations and the military alliance with French imperialism. The ruling bureaucracy of the U.S.S.R. has definitely arrived at the conclusion that the Communist International is impotent to afford it any assistance whatsoever against the war danger and at the same time, it hinders the work of Soviet diplomacy. The humiliating and truly servile dependency of the Communist International upon the Soviet upper crust is expressed in a particularly glaring light in connection with the recent declaration of Stalin, approving the national defense of French imperialism.

Through the medium of an imperialist minister the leader of the Communist International passed the order to the French Communist party to conclude a patriotic truce today with the French bourgeoisie. Thus the Third International whose congresses have not been convened for almost seven years has now officially gone over from the internationalist position to that of the most outright and servile social patriotism. Whether or not the Seventh Congress, so continually postponed, convenes—the Third International will not be reconstituted. The Stalin-Laval communique is its death warrant.

A New Slaughter and a New Betrayal Imminent

Meanwhile, the destructive forces of capitalism continue their hellish work. The disintegration of world economy, the unemployment of tens of millions, the ruin of the peasantry put imperiously on the order of the day the task of the socialist revolution. The toilers, embittered and aroused, are seeking a way out. The prostration, collapse and putrefaction of the Second and Third International leave the proletariat without revolutionary leadership and impel the petty bourgeois masses on the road of despair. The bankrupt leaders seek to shift the responsibility for the triumph of fascism on the "passivity" of the proletariat; thus political betrayal is supplemented with calumny.

Thrashing in the grip of insoluble contradictions, capitalism is preparing to plunge the peoples into a new slaughter. Ministers and diplomats openly speculate whether the outbreak of the war will come in one or in three years from now. All the governments, vying with one another, are preparing the most destructive instruments, and thereby from every side they are hastening the explosion which may be immeasurably more frightful than the war of 1914-1918.

The leaders of the so-called working class parties and the trade unions sing loud the praises of the beauties of peace, they babble about "disarmament," exhort their governments to make peace among themselves, arouse the hopes of the working masses in the League of Nations, and at the same time swear fealty to the cause of "national defense" i.e. the defense of bourgeois rule with its inevitable wars.

Under cover of the "united front" and even of "organic unity" Soviet diplomacy is preparing, behind the backs of the class conscious workers, class peace between the sections of the two Internationals and the bourgeoisie of those countries which are in military alliance with the Soviet State. Thus the outbreak of a new war must lead to a new betrayal which will eclipse that of August 4th, 1914.

We Are Stronger Today

Than the "Lefts" in 1915

The betrayal of the cause of the international revolution by the Soviet bureaucracy has thrust the world proletariat far back. The difficulties that face the revolutionary vanguard are incredible. Nevertheless its position at the present time is incomparably more favorable than on the eve of the last war. At that time capitalism appeared to be all powerful, almost invincible. The patriotic debacle of the International came utterly as a surprise, even to Lenin. Everywhere the revolutionary elements were caught unprepared. The first international conference—very small numerically and its majority indecisive—took place more than a year after the outbreak of the war. The formation of revolutionary cadres proceeded slowly. The possibility of proletarian revolution was rejected even by the majority of the "Zimmerwaldists." Only the October victory in Russia in the 40th month of the war produced a change in the situation, providing a mighty impulse for the formation of the Third International.

Today the internal weakness and

The Signers of the Open Letter

The following is a brief resume of the history of the five organizations that have signed the open letter for the Fourth International and have joined the Provisional Contact Commission which is initiating the concrete activity, practical and theoretical, towards the formation of the new International:

WORKERS PARTY OF THE U. S.: Formed by the fusion of the American Workers Party and the Communist League of America, the founding convention of which was held in December, 1934. The Communist League originated with the expulsion of Cannon, Shachtman and Abern from the Communist Party in 1928 for supporting the Russian Opposition led by Trotsky and was affiliated to the I.C.L. until the fusion with the A.W.P. The latter organization emerged from the Conference for Progressive Labor Action. Its first convention was held in December 1933.

REVOLUTIONARY WORKERS SOCIALIST PARTY OF HOLLAND (R.S.A.P.): On March 3, 1935 a unification congress between the Revolutionary Socialist Party and the Independent Socialist Party resulted in the formation of the above-mentioned organization. The Revolutionary Socialist Party affiliated with the I.C.L. in 1933 and was led by H. Sneevliet, one of the outstanding trade unionists of Holland. The Independent Socialist Party (O.S.P.) began as an opposition in the Social Democratic Party and was expelled for its oppositionist views. With the removal of the right wing of the O.S.P. it began to evolve in a Marxist direction and fusion was made possible. The new party numbers some 4,500 members, publishes a bi-weekly paper, "Nieuw Fakkel" and a monthly theoretical organ, "Internationale." P. J. Schmidt and H. Sneevliet are its outstanding leaders. It has strong influence over an independent revolutionary trade union movement of about 15,000 members, the N.A.S. (National Workers Secretariat)

INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST LEAGUE (I.C.L.): This organization, with groups and members in most of the countries of the world, had its inception with the struggle of the Russian Opposition in the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in 1923. Its outstanding leader, who has headed this movement throughout the years of repression by the Stalinist bureaucracy is Leon Trotsky. Until August 1933, after the full effects and the meaning of the defeat in Germany had become clear it was called the International Left Opposition, the name then changing to the I.C.L. It ceased to be a faction of the Comintern and directed all its energies toward creating the Fourth International.

BOLSHEVIK-LENINIST GROUP IN THE S.F. I.O. (French S. P.): Previously the Communist League of France, it entered the Socialist Party as a faction in the Summer of 1934 in order to carry on a fight within it for the ideas of the Fourth International. It propagates its program of revolutionary Marxism through its paper "La Verite" and its action within the party. At the recent Congress of the S.P. at Mulhouse, it was the butt of attack by all the reactionaries in the leadership but nonetheless gained several thousand votes for its outspoken Leninist position and succeeded in electing one member to the Political Committee of the S. P. They have further been instrumental in organizing and leading the fight against social patriotism in a congress recently convened.

WORKERS PARTY OF CANADA: Affiliated to I.C.L., it formed its independent party in the fall of 1934, having up to then been part of the Communist League of America. It issues a twice-weekly paper, "The Vanguard."

Revolution Alone Can Eliminate War

The war danger which is a life and death question for the people is the supreme test for all the groupings and tendencies within the working class. "The struggle for peace," "the struggle against war," "war on war" and similar slogans are hollow and fraudulent phrases, if unaccompanied by the propaganda and the application of revolutionary methods of struggle. The only method to put an end to war is to overthrow the bourgeoisie. The only method to overthrow the bourgeoisie is by a revolutionary assault.

As against the reactionary lie of "national defense" it is necessary to advance the slogan of the revolutionary destruction of the national state. To the madhouse of capitalist Europe it is necessary to counterpose the program of THE SOCIALIST UNITED STATES OF EUROPE, as a stage toward the United States of the World.

Marxists irreconcilably reject the pacifist slogans of "disarmament," "arbitration," and "amity between peoples" (i.e., between capitalist governments) etc., as optimum for the popular masses. The combinations between working class organizations and petty-bourgeois pacifists (the Amsterdam-Pleyel Committee, and similar undertakings) render the best service to imperialism by distracting the attention of the working class from reality with its grave struggles, and beguiling them instead with impotent parades.

The struggle against war and imperialism cannot be the job of any sort of special "committees." The struggle against war is the preparation for revolution, that is to say, the job of working class parties and of the International. The Marxists pose this great task before the proletarian vanguard, without any frills. To the everlastingly slogan of "disarmament" they counterpose the slogan of WINNING THE ARMY AND ARMING THE WORKERS. Precisely in this is one of the most important dividing lines between Marxism and centrism drawn. He will never find the courage to solve the revolutionary tasks who dares not utter them aloud.

The 4th International Stands on the Shoulders of its Forerunners

During the year and a half that has elapsed since the publication of the first program of the Fourth International, the struggle for its principles and ideas has not abated for a single day; the revolutionary national sections and groups have grown in number; some of them extended their ranks and influence, others attained to a greater homogeneity and cohesion; organizations within the same country have united

Move to Oust Lackey in British Unions

LONDON, England—Two of England's largest and strongest unions have rejected a call from the Trade Union Congress executive to expel radicals.

At the recent convention of the National Union of Railwaymen, whose membership numbers around 400,000, delegates voted 44 to 35 to reject a demand from Trade Union Congress headquarters that no Communist be allowed to hold official positions in the union. Shortly before that the Locomotive Engineers Union rejected the same order on the ground that it throttled the democratic movement in the trade unions.

Sir Walter Citrine, secretary of the congress, has been severely criticized by his own Electrical Trades Union for accepting a knighthood from the national government.

Passing a motion of regret that Citrine, one of Britain's most prominent labor leaders, had seen fit to accept a knighthood from a government of "hunger and war," a branch of his union called for expulsion of Citrine from the trade union movement on the ground that "he has brought ridicule on our movement."

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

A. V. NEW YORK—

Question: When the social-patriotic position of the C. I., and the fact that it is opposed to revolution in the capitalist countries, is called to the attention of Stalinists, they reply that this means nothing since the bureaucracy of the Soviet Union only stands to gain by extending the international revolution and that therefore the whole thing can merely be a maneuver to outwit the capitalists. How do you reply to this?

Answer: It is extremely difficult, of course, to discuss with people who refute facts with "theory," and the argument of the Stalinists really means that, regardless of the evidence, they do not want to believe anything which may smash their "ideals," or interfere with their sinecures, or social and personal connections.

However that may be, even their "theory" is untenable. A conclusion such as theirs can be drawn only by identifying the interests of the bureaucracy with that of the Soviet State, which is false. While the workers' republic stands to profit by an extension of the world revolution, the Stalinist bureaucracy does not.

To clarify matters, let us consider some analogies, bearing in mind the points of difference. Logically, it might appear, Green, Wolf, and Co., would be better off if the A. F. of L. were several times its present size, since they would then have at their disposal larger dues payments, more jobs, etc. To build up the A. F. of L., however, it is necessary to set the workers into motion against the capitalists which could mean nothing else than the end of control of the A. F. of L. by the reactionary bureaucracy because of the latter's ties with the capitalists. In other words, under present day historical conditions, it is not in the interests of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy to really build the trade unions.

An extension of the world revolution would set into motion the Russian workers as well as the proletariat of the world. To the Stalinist bureaucracy in the Soviet Union this would mean the end of their special privileges precisely because the latter are conditioned by a decline in the revolutionary mood of the masses resulting from international proletarian defeats (China, Germany, British General Strike, etc.).

Consider dialectically, therefore, the Stalinist bureaucracy will not benefit by an extension of the world revolution. This is merely another way of repeating our thesis that Stalinism is reactionary and a brake on revolutionary progress.

Question: What evidence is there that the Soviet bureaucracy enjoys the "juiciest" steaks and "Rolls Royces" to which Trotsky has referred in his pamphlet on the Soviet Union?

Answer: The Stalinist bureaucracy does not oblige us, of course, with statistics of the amount of national wealth which it consumes, but we do get an occasional glimpse behind the curtains.

Here, for example, is an account of a "dinner recently given by M. Dolitsky, the general manager of Tass, the official Soviet press agency, for Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, and Karl A. Bickel, general manager of the United Press.

"Among those who attended were ambassador Bullitt, L. M. Krestinsky, Soviet Vice Commissar of Foreign Affairs; leading member of the Soviet press and correspondents for the American newspapers.

"This banquet, which was called a dinner, was held in the vast mansion of a former textile magnate named Morosoff, the rooms of which are decorated with carved oak and light blue paper decked with fleur de lys, which is the crest of the royal house of the Bourbons of France. In this dignified setting the sixty guests sat down before long tables with glasses, plates and cutlery from the Czar's palaces.

"Twenty white clad waiters served caviar on ice and chilled vodka. Then followed hors d'oeuvres, cold and hot. Then came borscht, a soup with sour cream, and white Caucasian wine.

"Then salmon with white French wine. The next course consisted of roast pheasant and turkey, with red Crimean wine. This was followed by sweets and fruits with French champagne, in accordance with the Continental custom. The fruits were not so lavish from the American point of view—oranges, pears and apples—but they were accompanied by ice cream worthy of America." (Walter Duranty, New York Times, March 22, 1934.)

Imagine, if you can, capitalist agents being fêted like this under the regime of Lenin and Trotsky.

"Dignity" Advice of
C.P. In Fusillade
Of Bullets

Five workmen gave their lives in France in the first battle of the coming civil war which will paint the nation either with the black of fascism or the red of proletarian revolution.

Breaking through the dead weight of passivity which fettered the ranks of labor since the establishment of the "united front" of inactivity the sailors and workmen in the great naval armories of France struck the first blow at Laval's decree laws, thereby pointing the road of struggle to their brothers in the rest of the country.

In Toulon, Brest, Cherbourg, Lorient, St. Nazaire and Havre the luxurious sea palaces of the French line are lying idle in the harbors while pitched battles between the troops and the workers stain the streets with the blood of the dead and the wounded. Beginning in Brest where clashes between the notorious Mobile Guards and strikers resulted in the loss of life of one of the workers the struggle spread rapidly to all the government's armories. In Toulon the conflict assumed its sharpest form.

Workers Storm City

Here the police, the Mobile Guards and the most ferocious of French imperialism's colonials threw up barricades to stay the marching strikers. Their devices unavailing against the determined militants, the troops fired volley after volley into the columns of the strikers, killing five and wounding two hundred. Newspapers report that the powder plant workers were armed and returned the fire of the soldiers. Their fury at the starvation decrees of Laval and the murderous action of his armed minions impelled the workers into tempestuous action, storming the entire town.

First results of the action in these cities are already to be seen in the conferences summoned by premier Laval to "enforce" his decrees on the one hand and on the other to make them more "palatable" to the people by "distributing" the burden more evenly among all classes. How striking is the contrast between the militant struggle in the seaports and the armory towns and the flamboyant parades of July 14 in commemoration of the taking of the Bastille.

As was pointed out in a previous issue of the NEW MILITANT so scornful was the capitalist class of the Bastille Day marches with its waving of the tricolor, its singing of the Marseillaise and its patriotic speeches that two days later Laval kicked the working class in the face with his decree laws. The Toulon action, on the contrary, with its resistance to the troops, its armed encounter and its slugging of our song, the Internationale, has given the Bonapartist premier pause, and has halted the rapidity of his anti-working class action.

C.P. for "Peace and Dignity" Every indication points to the fact that the strikes and the resultant actions were to a large extent spontaneous, that the trade union and the party bureaucracies of the C.P. and the S.P. had nothing to do with them, except to hamstring and restrain militancy of the workers. An A.P. dispatch reports that Stalinist leaders urged the MINNEAPOLIS, August 5.—The strike of the Ornamental Iron Workers, Local 1313, which is now in its fourth week here, is roaring along. About 250 men are out in seven or eight shops. The union's demands are: increases to bring wages up to 45-67½ cents an hour; a 40-hour week; time and a half for overtime; seniority rights; and union recognition and shop committees.

Though the strike is small, it is unusually rich in lessons because of the political developments which have grown out of it. The three parties involved are the Communist Party, the Farmer-Labor Party, and the Workers Party.

The leadership of the union has been drawn largely from the Stalinists. Before the strike was called the membership of Local 1313, through its representatives, asked several of the local unions for help. A delegate from the Iron Workers appeared before Local 574 and asked that the General Drivers give two men to sit in on the strike committee. The request was of course granted, and Local 574 pledged its full cooperation to its struggling brothers.

A Slave-Driving Boss

The two largest shops affected were the Olson Company and the Flour City Ornamental Iron Works. Almost from the first the Olson shop has showed a willingness to negotiate. Yesterday this plant agreed to accede to the demands of the strikers, and some 40 employees of Olson will go back to work tomorrow.

The Flour City plant, employing about 80 workers, has followed a different policy under the management of Walter Tetzlaff, Citizens Alliance man, a boss who has for years held a contemptible labor attitude in his plant. For the past 25 years Tetzlaff has made it a

Doomed to Life of Poverty
Ozark Tiff Diggers Rebel

Writer Describes Misery of Men, Women and

In Effort to Earn Livelihood

(By Special Correspondent)

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—What promises to be the most sensational strike of the year for the Middle West is the action of the brutally exploited "tiff" miners of Washington Co., Missouri, which has just begun.

"Tiff" is the colloquial appellation given to a mineral, the trade name of which is barytes. It is used extensively in the manufacture of paint and other lead products. It likewise has its uses in the rubber tire industry and last, but not least, for the sealing of oil wells when "over-production" threatens.

The strike is a protest against wage and living conditions always low but which with the recent rise in prices of foodstuffs are no longer tolerable. These miners of the Ozark hills, comprising as they do the descendants of the heroic and self-sacrificing first settlers of the Middle West are today the neglected and the "forgotten" men of the barium sulphate industry. Reduced to a standard of living, little if any, there was nothing else left to do. And if early indications speak for anything we think they will do it well.

Fighting for Life
The fact that they are organizing is phenomenal in itself, after decades of suffering and privation in silence. But organizing they are and their first act was to stop not only the mining of the "tiff" but the transportation of the reserves which the company has piled up for just such an event as this. The forethought of the company will do them little good because these grim, determined men of the Ozarks are fighting not merely for an increased standard of living; they are fighting for life itself.

With families of six and eight and incomes of $2.50 a week the picture of the suffering rivals any previous expose of social conditions ever made. A survey made by the Post-Dispatch reporter reveals that among 2,800 miners more than half of whom are on relief, there are whole communities without medical attention, subsisting on a starvation diet and living in houses which makes the miserable hovels of the Southern sharecropper and the West Virginia coal miner seem almost grand in comparison. Many of the miners live in company houses located on the property of the National Pigments and Chemical Co., a subsidiary of the powerful union-busting National Lead Co. Still others occupy "houses" furnished by individual producers, a description of which would defy the English language. From the standpoint of protection from the bitter, wet, cold climate of a Missouri winter they can be compared only to a pig sty or a corn crib.

In such a shack of two rooms about ten feet square were found 16 people—three families. Families of six, seven and eight were ruled rather than the exception, and deemed to live in these one and two room houses. Children and adults eat, live and sleep in the same room, except in cases where the children are crowded into the "loft" to sleep within a few short inches of the roof made miserably hot by the mid-summer sun. Some houses were without floors, most of them without windows and all of them dilapidated beyond description. The best houses in the entire district were the generations old log houses built by the descendants of the early French settlers led by Pierre La Cade and Henri Choutain nearly two centuries ago.

Nor were any apologies offered by the profit-hungry bosses for these housing conditions. Their own ill-gotten gains mean more than the welfare of thousands of workers and their families who slave to produce these profits. It was pointed out that the houses were already there when the land was bought two decades ago by the Lead Co. and they have not been touched since. In such a way did the National Lead Co. bring "culture" and "civilization" into the backwoods of Missouri.

Malnutrition and the diseases arising from it are rampant. Of the State's 17,000 cases of trachoma, the dreadful eye disease that strikes at America's army of the underfed, it is estimated that a large percentage of them comes from the poverty-stricken homes of the Washington County tiff miners. One worker told a Post-Dispatch reporter that he hadn't had a doctor in three years and even as he spoke there came the wails of two sick babies from the corner of the room, the youngest of a family of eight.

With families of eight the relief is set not to exceed more than $3 a month for any family. A dollar a month per person! For the rest they have to depend on the "truck gardens" which hang on despairingly on the sun-baked, drought-bitten hillsides. Two meals a day must suffice them for they dread the long winter months when even the truck gardens will be gone. In the homes boxes are used for furniture and tin cans for cooking utensils and dishes. Kerosene lamps are useless since they cannot afford the oil to burn in them. What the most lowly paid city laborer would count as commonplaces would be regarded as luxuries by these serfs of the National Lead Co.

Code "Sidetracked"
When the N.R.A., "the Magna Charta of American Labor" came along the tiff miners thought they were going to get a break. But alas! The lead bosses in conjunction with the code authorities managed to work out a code for the lead industry which put millions into the pockets of the manufact-

Proceedings

By CYRUS RIGBY

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 3.—The second annual convention of the Illinois Workers Alliance opened August 3 at Springfield. About 150 delegates from all parts of the state attended.

Militancy of the Illinois unemployed workers was demonstrated several weeks ago when Gerry Alard of the Workers Party led the Hunger March on the state capitol. This convention reaffirmed not only that militancy but also the confidence the workers have in W. P. members who are also members of the I.W.A.

One element of surprise of the first day and throughout the convention was the definite and unmistakable moving to the left of American workers during the past year. Known communists were not the only ones who talked about a workers' world: unemployed delegates belonging to reformist parties and workers without any political affiliation spoke one after another of the working class revolution. Not once was the epithet "red" hurled at speakers who dared to call for the overthrow of capitalism and all its trappings. Rather the delegates to this convention deemed being called "red" more of a compliment than an insult.

On the evening of the first day five movies were shown in a public park in Springfield. These movies were taken by W. P. member Hank Mayer, Educational Director of the I.W.A., and showed the lights and

Orders Striking WPA
Workers Off ReliefTrade Unions Stand by Men Demanding
Living Wage; Flying Squads Formed

Several thousand skilled workers struck on New York City Works Project Administration jobs this week demanding the prevailing union rate of wages. Flying squadrons which have proved such a popular and effective weapon in recent labor struggles set to work immediately to spread the strike throughout the city, and indications are at the time of his writing, that it will become general, affecting all of the WPA jobs.

This is not the first example of a strike on relief project works; but it is the first real sign of the determination of the workers to maintain the union standard of wages gained after decades of bitter struggle. This is the issue involved, and the trade unionists made no mistake in putting it bluntly. Long ago it became clear to the trade union movement that the efforts to establish the Roosevelt relief wage ranging from $19.00 to $38.00 per month on relief projects could mean nothing else but a signal to employers everywhere to force down the existing union scale. The workers who are involved in the New York strike understand the issue this way.

Forces Clash
Before Rubber
Union Confab

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, Aug. 5.—Issuance of a call for a rubber workers union convention tentatively set for Sept. 12 to form an international union affiliated with the A. F. of L. has spurred progressive elements to form a block to take control away from the A. F. of L. bureaucracy and has brought sharply into light the forces which will clash at the coming convention.

Coleman C. Claherty, rubber organizer for the A. F. of L., and his assistants, are uniting reactionary forces throughout the country in an effort to keep their stranglehold on the rubber workers, as per instructions from his boss, William Greene, who has announced he will attend.

Leading "industrial unionists" in the A. F. of L. bureaucracy probably including John Lewis, United Mine Workers president, and others are quietly encouraging a few mislead workers in the hope that they can control the Akron delegates to the next national A. F. of L. convention.

The Stalinists are concentrating their entire Akron strength to gain control of the progressive bloc and thereby make an entry into rubber and keep out the Workers Party from exerting any influence. The usual run of slander and lies against the Workers Party is the only weapon the C.P. has to accomplish their latter aim.

The Akron branch of the Workers Party is working steadily to counter the C.P. propaganda.

West Coast Marine Workers
Fight for Class Struggle Union

By EARL LANE

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 11.—Determined to smash the solidarity of the marine workers of the Pacific Coast, evidenced by the formation of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, refusal to handle scab cargo, and the ousting of such reactionary officials as Scharrenberg of the International Seamen's Union, the waterfront employers have launched a drive that has as its goal the smashing of every marine union on the West coast and a return to the intolerable conditions prevailing prior to last summer's strike.

The present agreement expires September 30, and the employers state they will not renew it unless all strikes (including sympathy strikes) are barred for the duration of the agreement, and on the condition that the militant leadership of the San Francisco local of the International Longshoremen's Association headed by Harry Bridges be ousted.

International Solidarity
Time after time during the past year the longshoremen and seamen have demonstrated their working class solidarity by refusing to handle scab cargo and work ships loaded by scabs. During the Northwest lumber strike the longshoremen consistently refused to saw picket lines established by the Sawmill and Timber Workers Union, thus aiding the lumber workers

Protest Persecution of Chinese
Bolshevik-Leninists - W.P. Call

Recognizing the Draconian measures taken in China, as the article below reveals, against the Communist League (Bolshevik-Leninists), the insufferable oppression and the brutal persecution leveled at them by the butcher Chiang Kai Shek who at the same time complacently watches and tacitly supports the Japanese invasion and partition of that country, the Political Committee of the Workers Party of the United States wholeheartedly endorses their appeal for funds and will do everything in its power to raise a movement of protest against the imprisonment of the best elements of the Chinese Bolshevik-Leninists. Further information on this campaign will follow in subsequent issues of the NEW MILITANT.—Ed.

Comrade Liu Jen-abin, known internationally as Niel Sih, and four other leading comrades of the Communist League of China (Bolshevik-Leninists) were recently arrested and are now prisoners of the Kuomintang military authorities in Nanking. These arrests marked the third wave of repression directed against the Bolshevik-Leninists in China.

In 1931, virtually the whole then-existing Central Committee of the organization was destroyed and in 1932 a similar blow was struck when Comrade Chen Tu-hsiu and ten others were taken and sentenced to long jail terms in Nanking. The most recent arrests coincided with the revival of the organization's activity, especially among the Shanghai workers. It was the reappearance of our literature and the activity of our comrades on a considerable scale in the industrial districts which drew down upon us once more the heavy hand of the terror.

Comrade Niel Sih's record dates back to the very beginning of the modern Chinese revolutionary movement. As a student he played a leading role in the famous demonstration of May 4, 1919 in Peking when the new youth rose against the corrupt Peking Government which was preparing to sell the country to the Japanese. This demonstration marked the starting point of a new revolutionary epoch in China's history and as the tide swept forward Comrade Niel Sih remained in the front ranks. In 1920 he joined the newly-born Chinese Communist Party and in the following year was a delegate to the party's first national congress. Subsequently he represented the Chinese Communist Party as delegate to the third and fourth congresses of the Communist International. During the revolution of 1925-27, Niel Sih was studying

By BILL KETCH

MENA, Arkansas.—The earnings of 2,600 tin miners in the foothills of the Missouri Ozarks average $2.50 per week. Tin is a hard, white rock containing barium which serves as a base in the manufacture of paint pigment. The National Pigment and Chemical Co. purchases practically the entire supply, paying $3.50 per ton for rocks, the gathering of which represents hours of arduous toil.

Most of the miners eke out a living from scrawny gardens and many must receive supplementary relief in order to subsist. This is another example of an industry being subsidized by the government; it is not the miners who actually receive the relief but the industry which thereby is enabled to pay wages lower than subsistence level. The men have recently banded together to form an independent union. The first demand is an increase of $2 a ton for their product. "God put you men on earth to live, not to starve," cried a leader at a recent meeting on a wooded hillside attended by more than 600 desperate workers.

The men voted to strike on August 12 if their demands are not met. Meanwhile they will continue to dig tin and pile it up but will prevent it from being moved, by force if necessary.

New Deal Heaven...

The aristocratic plantation owners and gimple hill folk of the South have been celebrated in song and story. The largest single group in the South, tenant farmers and share-croppers, remained unknown to the world at large until a few months ago. They have come into the limelight because of thousands of evictions of their number due to the plow-under policy of the AAA, because of their militant efforts to protect themselves through a union, and because of the vicious counter-offensive of the landlords.

It is hard to imagine living conditions lower than those of the sharecropper. His miserable one or two room shack of unpainted boards stands in the middle of the thirty or forty acres that he tends. There are no sanitary conveniences and during the rainy season the shack often stands in a typhus infected mosquito breeding puddle. In many sections the landowners are taking advantage of FEIRA generosity by having sanitary privies built on the plots. No attempts have been made by the landlords or the government to provide decent homes for the workers.

The usual garb of the sharecropper is a pair of patched denim overalls and blue shirt. Women and children wear clothing made of flour sacks and burlap bags with cheap "store clothes" for Sunday. Winter or summer the children seldom wear shoes.

The pay of the Arkansas sharecropper is 50 or 75 cents a day. He is rarely paid in cash however but must take his pay in credit at the commissary store where prices are marked up and accounts are kept with a "crooked pencil." His diet consists of beans, fat-back meat and corn bread with "poke salad" (the boiled leaves of the poke-berry plant) and turnip greens in season. Relief is hard to get in spite of the obvious poverty and hunger. In many counties relief has been cut off entirely during the growing and harvesting season in order to force all able bodied persons to work in the fields. Men, women and children must hoe and pick cotton.

The Southern Tenant Farmers' Union spread like wildfire among these exploited people. But the planters are not asleep. They have enlisted every possible means to fight the menace to their continued exploitation. Organizers are kidnapped, beaten and intimidated; tenants are forced to sign yellow-dog contracts; members of the union are evicted and discriminated against by relief officials; meetings are forbidden and broken up; religious and racial prejudices are fomented. A virtual reign of fascist terror exists.

The Commonwealth...

Commonwealth College, situated in the Ozark hill country, not far from the cotton belt, plays an important role in furthering the interests of the downtrodden croppers. Students and teachers venture on numerous organizational and educational forays into the region, while leaders of the union attend the school to obtain theoretical background for their movement.

Landlords recognize the danger of such an institution in the state. Two bills were introduced in the last session of the Arkansas legislature which would in effect abolish the college. A special legislative committee was appointed to investigate the teaching of "communism, atheism, nudism and free love." The school was saved by the mass protest of friends from all over the nation.

"Impartial" St. Louis Cops Bust a Record--and Heads Strikebreaking is a Pastime

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Trotzky once said that "a policeman in the service of the capitalist class is no longer a worker but a bourgeois cop," or words to that effect. And if Trotsky had been in St. Louis during the spring and summer of 1935 he would have found more evidence of his assertion than in any other six months of his eventful career.

St. Louis cops are not only expert strikebreakers but are jealous of their reputation. News of police brutality elsewhere stirs them to new zeal and energy. They do not believe in neutrality either in theory or practice. The bosses, yesterday, today and forever, is their slogan. And they do not discriminate. Women who violate the first commandment of the bosses creed, "Thou Shalt Not Strike" are given as liberal portions of the night club as the men. "Equal reward for equal militancy on the picket line" is their motto.

No Discrimination
In the Forest City garment workers strike radio cars and patrol wagons were used as scab convoys. Pickets were arrested wholesale without the slightest provocation. Arties Wilson, overworked, underpaid and brutally exploited garment slave was picked up and literally thrown in the wagon and was then hauled into the capitalist court on the charge of assault and battery. The writer of this article was given the same dose. Thus the discriminatory character of the police was established. A woman and a man had received equal punishment for an equal "offense"—being on a picket line.

In the Forest City strike Leo Durocher "hero of the pennant winning" St. Louis Cardinals also used his car as a scab convoy. Doris Smith, low paid, part time employee of the Forest City Co. and mother of several children, was arrested and fined $250 in court on the testimony of Durocher and a cop. St. Louis labor has put a boycott on the Cardinal team. (Incidentally, Sam Breadon, owner of the Cards, is also a stockholder in Forest City.)

The Gas Workers Strike
In the Gas Workers strike the police department established a new record in showing the partiality it feels for the bosses.

Cops were put on twelve-hour, seven-day assignments. They were withdrawn from school crossings. Scabs were more important than working class children.

Wholesale arrests were made, as many as seventy in one day. The charges were "suspicion of affray" which necessitates a common law bond, the highest feed bond for ordinary labor "disturbances."

A. A. Ahner, stoolpigeon, ex-labor spy, renegade from the labor movement of about 1920, gangster and nominal if not actual boss of every stick-up man in town was hired to break the strike. The most depraved criminals recruited from the underworld of America's largest cities were imported. The brave and handsome St. Louis police force were sent out for "protection" for these killers and cutthroats.

A nine year old boy was cursed and threatened with arrest for watching some scabs attempt to do some work which only experienced union men knew how to do and laughing at the clumsy efforts of the scabs.

A "Crime" and Criminals

A fourteen-year old girl was arrested for protesting against the brutal and insulting Gas Co.'s gangster-workmen and was hauled before the court for juvenile "delinquents." This child is to be branded as an "enemy to society" in order that Chicago Blackie and Omaha Red may be safely returned to their old haunts, the underworld dives of the respective cities. This is important. The bosses may (will) again have use to these vicious and depraved killers.

A mother, babe-in-arms, was narrowly missed by the flying bullets of cops who went berserk in an alley because some scab thought he saw a flying squadron of Gas Workers' pickets.

Many dozens of women were cursed and manhandled for refusing to let the dope fiends and petty thieves whom the Gas Co. had hired as "meter readers" into their homes.

This article would be incomplete without an account of Brother Lang's experience. Lang was a striking gas worker. He was arrested and charged with beating up a man. The victim of assault not only refused to identify Lang but bawled the copper out for trying to frame a gas worker. The cop looked Lang up anyway, insisting that "he must be guilty of something." When Brother Lang protested that his constitutional rights were being violated the cop growled: "Aw, you reds give me a pain in the neck."

Thugs, "Legal and Illegal"

In February, the employees of the Commercial Foundry came out in a body in protest against a wage cut for molders from $6.80 to $5 a day and for labor from 40 cents an hour to 25 cents an hour. Al Ahner was hired to break the strike and the police department to protect Ahner. Again arrests on a mass scale took place.

A few "molders" were secured. These "molders" didn't know anything about molding and did not care anything about it. They were hired to break a strike. Literally thousands of tons of worthless scrap was the result and J. C. Brite the owner had to close shop. The molders' 50 picket line led Mr. Brite straight to the Bankrupt Court. The scabs at the plant went on a rampage in May and tried to run the picket line away. They were not successful but since the cops busted all previous records in this affair it must be told. Let Martin Dillman, editor of the Labor Advocate tell the story.

"Try to picture policemen stationed at a strike-bound shop to maintain 'order' who stand picking their teeth while 75 rats march out of the plant in a body with gas pipes, clubs and other weapons for a riotous attack on strikers' headquarters and to assault pickets."

"At about 1:30 P.M., May 22 a mob estimated at from 75 to 100 of Brite's strike-breakers suddenly marched out of the foundry in a body armed with a varied assortment of weapons and made for strike headquarters where they staged a Wild West raid, driving a few unarmed, far outnumbered strikers from the place. The bullies then proceeded to make the rounds of nearby stores in search of strikers. One was sighted and set upon by the mob and several union men barely escaped serious injury or worse. One storekeeper resented the invasion and assault upon an offhensive striker, in fact he emphasized his displeasure by grabbing a radio attachment and bringing it with a firm downward motion on the scab's head whereupon the sluggers beat it from that place—"too hot."

"A riot call brought a good supply of cops who perhaps anticipated another wholesale pinch of strikers. But it was scabs who were the duly qualified candidates for the lock-up this time. Oh! that's different. Were the rioters arrested? Don't make us laugh."

"The rioting scabs were simply escorted back into the shop by these uniformed minions of 'law and order.' Neighborhood merchants protested so loudly that Superintendent and Harry Schneider, leader of the raiding bullies, was arrested but released on bond."

These scabs were tried and two of them drew $50 fines. The case was appealed and the fine was of course never paid—at least so far as we know.

With the words of the Labor Advocate I am willing to close: "Three rousing whippers for St. Louis' 'impartial' cops during strikes!"

in Moscow and there became acquainted with the views of Trotsky and the Left Opposition, particularly in the questions of the Chinese Revolution. He soon became an Oppositionist and upon his return to China brought with him the first documents of the Left Opposition ever to reach this country.

Niel-Sih Tortured Daily

He was arrested in Peking in March of this year together with his wife and two infant children. Only the most strenuous efforts on the part of relatives and friends secured the release of the two children, but all efforts on his behalf and for his wife proved futile. Both were subsequently transported to Nanking where Niel Sih is now being subjected to daily beatings in an effort to force him to sign a statement repudiating his Communist views. The release of his wife has been made contingent upon the publication of such a statement. As a result of the treatment which he has suffered, he has fallen seriously ill. The authorities have refused to give him any medical treatment and his condition is believed to be critical.

Despite this, and despite the importunities of a relative of his who holds a post in Chiang Kai-shek's own headquarters, Niel Sih has steadfastly refused to repudiate his views as a revolutionary or to betray the names of any of his comrades.

In sharp contrast to the conduct of most of the Stalinist functionaries who have been arrested in recent months, all our comrades have displayed unswerving fidelity to their convictions. The other four comrades, See Chao-sing, Wang Yao-hua, Hu Hwang-shang, and Liu Chia-liang, were arrested in Shanghai in April and all refused vince workers of the correctness of our policies and bring them into the Party, not only because correct perspectives must be given before and at the convention but because our primary task is to build the Workers Party.

It is doubtful that any one force will have a commanding position at the convention. But the workers must become more alert and understand more clearly the numerous underhanded methods being used to swing them behind the A. F. of L. bureaucrats and also the Stalinists. Claherty is spending his time and money creating small locals in out-of-town plants so he can have mechanical control of the convention. His story about the Youngstown local is an example. He reported a large mass meeting and a good local after a trip there to organize a minor plant. Actually, less than a dozen workers joined!

Flattering letters from the Lewis are used by these reactionaries to subtly win the progressives to their banner and thus give them more control in the A. F. of L. A few misled workers seem to fall for this. All the reactionaries really want is not a strong union, but votes to oust Green so they can take his place and then continue his betrayals.

The Stalinists tell rubber workers that the C. P. has 20 presidents of the autoworkers unions with them and that they are going to run the autoworkers convention to form an international next month! So the rubberworkers are supposed to believe their only hope lies in uniting with the C.P.!

We let the past record of the Workers Party here speak for itself. The only leadership, the only warning of impending betrayal, the first call to progressives to unite after the Claherty had Green sealed out this spring was given by the small but active group here!

As the Workers Party first agitated for a strike; first brought to Akron the lessons of Toledo and Minneapolis strategy in strike, so we are trying again to give the rubberworkers correct perspectives. We want to repeat for emphasis. Only insofar as the rubberworkers understand the nature of the forces contending in the industry and adopt the ideas of the Workers Party, will the labor movement in Akron progress.

CORRECTION

Our Canadian comrades have asked us to make the following factual correction of an error which appeared in the "Greetings to the Vanguard" in the NEW MILITANT for July 27: Instead of, "Of special interest to the organized workers in the United States is the platform of the progressives in the Industrial Dressmakers Union (I.L.G.W.U.) for unity in the ranks of the I.L.G.W.U."

Minority Groups in Teachers Union to Wage United Fight To Save Union at Convention

In April, 1935, the leaders of the Rank and File suddenly woke up to the fact that the Administration was preparing the expulsion of the opposition forces.

Instead of proposing a genuine united front movement to include all opposition groups on the basis of a limited program acceptable to all, the leaders of the Rank and File staged a "united front from below" meeting of its own membership and adopted a program to promote its own factional interests. Then it invited the Progressives and the Committee for Democracy in the Union to join its so-called "united front."

When the groups including various independent members refused, the Rank and File was forced to yield and accept a genuine united front program and organizational set-up. The United Committee to Save the Union, which was formed, adopted a program calling for the struggle against expulsions and for the complete democratization of the Union. All groups agreed that this program would have the widest possible appeal.

No sooner had the United Committee settled down to work when the majority of the Executive Board of the Union threw a bombshell into the organization by serving the opposition with an ultimatum that they must dissolve their groups, discontinue their activities or face an investigation by the Executive Council of the A.F.T. Lefkowitz boldly announced that the aim of his move was to expel the opposition groups from the Union. The prediction and the warning issued by the Committee for Democracy in the Union in November, 1934 and the whole course pursued by it since then had been vindicated at the end of May, 1935!

Bowing to Prejudice

The brutal and cynical manner in which the Administration decided upon the "investigation" called forth the protests of various independent elements, including the Militant Socialist teachers group, headed by Hendley and Miss Tulchin. This group was opposed to expulsions as well as to the investigation, but was likewise opposed to the program of democratizing the union proposed by the United Committee. They also refused to join the united front on any terms.

To induce the Militant Socialist teachers to join, the representatives of the Progressive Group proposed that the entire democracy section of the program be eliminated and that the fight be waged solely against the investigation and against expulsions. That this was a violation of their agreement did not concern the Progressives; they desired to have the Militant Socialists in the united front even on an anti-democratic basis. The Rank and File, the largest and dominating group in the United Committee, argued against the elimination of the democracy part of the program, but finally capitulated to the Progressives' demand instead of forcing it to carry out the agreement or assume the responsibility for breaking the united front. The representatives of the Committee for Democracy took a firm and consistent position, arguing that the fight to remain in the union was bound up with the struggle to democratize the union. They argued that the Administration would be quite willing to let them remain in the Union if that was all they demanded. The struggle against expulsions acquired meaning and could be used to effect changes only when it was bound up with the struggle for the right of the membership to determine the policies of the union.

These arguments were not heeded by the other forces in the United Committee; they were determined to court the Militant Socialist teachers even at the expense of emasculating their minimum program. But even after this decision was made, the Militants refused to join the united movement on any terms. They refused to be associated, they declared, with the other forces in the movement because of their previous record. They have since organized their own little independent protest movement in an effective manner.

Committee Active

The United Committee to Save the Union undertook and carried out a certain number of actions useful to the campaign. It staged a large protest meeting on June 7 which was attended by over 700 union members. The Executive Committee of the College Teachers Section of the union has gone on record against the investigation because of the activity of the United Committee. It was effective in stirring up such a protest sentiment that at a meeting of the Delegate Assembly, although the official vote on the investigation was 80 in favor and 77 opposed, the unofficial count showed that 81 were recorded against the investigation! No wonder the Administration refused to permit a recount by roll call! They realized that they had been defeated even in the Delegate Assembly which they control.

The United Committee has also circulated the various locals of the A.F.T. and prominent members of it, informing them of the conditions in Local No. 5 and appealing to them to support the opposition in the coming National Convention which will be held in Cleveland beginning August 28. The Committee is also organizing a mass delegation to the convention to support its position. It hopes to convince the majority of the delegates that the interests of the union demand defeat of the machinations of the Lefkowitz-Linville clique to split the union in order to save themselves from defeat by the membership.

Save the Teachers Union

The Administration of the union is determined to effect a "reorganization" of the union at all costs. It will stop at nothing—not even a split. Only the overwhelming defeat of the administration proposals at the convention and the intervention of the membership of the A.F.T., aided by the protests of the progressive locals in the A. F. of L. can defeat these wrecking operations.

The progressive trade unionists throughout the country must realize that the struggle now being waged inside the A.F.T. for the preservation of Local 5 is part and parcel of the struggle which they are waging within their own unions for democracy and clean, effective, militant unionism. They must help this struggle by sending resolutions to the Executive Council of the A.F.T. urging it to condemn the arbitrary and undemocratic policies of the Administration of Local 5 and its red-baiting statements as a menace to the reputation of the A.F.T. as a progressive trade union organization; as a menace to the jobs of the union teachers. They should request the Executive Council to recommend to the National convention that it go on record in defense of the democratic rights of the membership of the various locals to determine the policies of the organization, to defend the right of minorities to function legally within the locals of the A.F.T. including Local 5.

Resolutions should be addressed to: Executive Council, American Federation of Teachers, 506 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Manager's Corner

This weeks report brings the contributions received for the eight page weekly up to $425.46. But this is only a little better than 20 per cent of the total sum needed. Still to be collected is $1,574.54. How soon can we make it?

Judging from present indications this should be a matter of only a very short time. Now the campaign is getting into full swing. The Chicago branches have a big affair scheduled. The Philadelphia branches will have a picnic Sunday Aug. 18 and the Allentown branch will have a picnic on the same date. All proceeds are for the benefit of the eight page weekly.

But in order not to be outdone the New York branches are now going in for a real concentration in the campaign and doing it in a big way for the remainder of this month. The district committee has assigned one of its members to each branch to be personally in charge. Contributions, subscriptions for the eight page weekly and greetings will be solicited. The branches are going in for a hot competition, each having a definite quota assigned and keeping a record of the activities of its members.

The trade union fractions are getting special assignments in the campaign, and the moon-light excursion on the Hudson for the benefit of the eight page weekly promises to become a successful affair. In point of contributions made including advance subscriptions secured for the eight page weekly (None of the regular subs or renewals are counted in this column) and greetings collected the Boston branch still leads the field with a total of $52.50.

Harlem Leads

In New York City the Harlem branch is back in the lead with a total contribution of $50.38. Next follows the West Side branch with a total of $38.00 and the Center branch with a total of $32.76. After that the other branches have a record as follows: The Flatbush branch $22.50, the Bronx branch $21.00, Boro Park branch $14.00, the Astoria branch and the East Side branches have contributed $5.00 each and the Brownsville branch $3.50. It is not altogether the smallest branches that are in the lowest columns; as a matter of fact, compared to membership proportions the Harlem and the Flatbush branches have by far the best record.

Outside of New York City the Boston branch has already been mentioned. After that follows the Philadelphia branches with a total contribution of $29.78. One gratifying feature of this contribution is that a goodly portion were submitted in new subscriptions to the eight page weekly. The Minneapolis branch is next in line with a contribution of $23.00, the Chicago branches with a total of $17.05, the Newark branch sent in $15.00 to date and the Los Angeles branch $10.00. The other branch contributions we will not mention until they become more substantial. But we do wish to say to all of them, and this goes also for all our individual sympathizers: Hurry your contributions. The sooner we complete the campaign the sooner the first of the eight page issues will be in your hands. During the rest of this month we must have real speed and we should be pretty near to our goal.

During the week we have received the amounts listed below:

Contributions
Harlem Branch, N.Y.C.	$16.85
Philadelphia branches (Lee)	2.00
G. Krakofski, N.Y.C.	1.00
Boston branch	6.00
R. Herman, Chicago	1.00
Los Angeles branch	4.00
Selame, N.Y.C.	.75
Scott, Wash., D. C.	1.05
Youngtown branch	6.00
Flatbush branch, N.Y.C.	1.25
Bronx branch, N.Y.C.	2.00
M. G. Massachusetts	5.00
Total	48.85

Advance Subscriptions
Paul Graves, Detroit	4.00
Subscriptions (Club Plan)
Los Angeles branch	6.00

Greetings
Pittsburgh branch	2.00
Chicago branches	3.75
Previous total	$382.96

Grand Total$425.46
One of the contributors listed above, Comrade Scott writes: "You may be interested to learn that after subscribing to and supporting the G.P. press for five years I have this day cancelled my sub to the Daily Worker. Forward to a daily NEW MILITANT!"

SETTLING BUNDLE ACCOUNTS

This month we did it. Not only have the current amounts for bundle orders been met but we have succeeded in reducing slightly the total outstanding accounts. That, in the first instance, is due to the very good response made by some of the branches who were far in arrears. The example set by the comrades in Minneapolis and Boston we already mentioned in our last issue. But we still have altogether too large delinquent list.

The Chicago branches still have the dubious honor of heading this list, owing on August first a total to the NEW MILITANT of $45.93. The Allentown branch owed on the same date a total of $27.50, the Pittsburgh branch $26.00, the Philadelphia branches a total of $23.80, the Detroit branch $17.20, the Charleston, W. Va. branch $15.05, the Columbus branch $14.40, the New Castle branch $11.20, the St. Louis branch $10.70. Since August 1 the Pittsburgh branch has remitted a partial payment.

enemies of the future and has therefore wasted no time in trying to deal us a mortal blow; and indeed, the loss of these comrades is of no small consequence to us, since all were sterling fighters. China today stands on the brink of further dismemberment, imperialist aggression and militarist wars.

Redouble Efforts

The economy of the whole country is all but bankrupt, plunging the masses of workers and peasants into ever-deepening misery. In these circumstances our ranks stand in need of every firm revolutionary capable of holding up his head in days when the prospects seem so dark for our movement. Such comrades are these five men, now tight in the grip of the Kuomintang's talons. But these arrests will only cause us to redouble our efforts to rebuild the Chinese revolutionary movement, to create a new revolutionary party on the ruins which have been left to us as the heritage of Stalinism.

We appeal to our comrades and sympathizers throughout the world to demand the release of our imprisoned comrades. Let the millions of the Kuomintang know that the men they hold are rich in their relations to the firmest Bolshevik currents in the international revolutionary movement! Organize delegations to call upon Chinese diplomatic and consular officials to protest against the imprisonment and maltreatment of our comrades. Write letters of protest, address them to the Executive Yuan, the Judicial Yuan and the Central Military Headquarters at Nanking, China, demanding the release of Liu Jen-chin, See Chao-seng, Wang Yao-hua, Hu Hwang-shang and Liu Chia-liang, and of all other class war prisoners now in the prisons of the Kuomintang, including our comrade Chen Tu-shu.

Skeletons Out of the Daily Worker Closet

A Few Telling Quotations

By HENRY THURMAN

In the Daily Worker of April 3, 1935, and also in the issue of May 11, is printed the following correct Leninist policy on the war question: "It is difficult to forecast the shape in the next imperialist war. But it is very probable that such a war would start either as an attack upon the Soviet Union or as Stalin said would be rapidly transferred into a united attack of the imperialists against the U.S.S.R."

"But whatever the exact circumstances in which the hostilities would begin, the French Communist Party would continue to wage its relentless and unceasing struggle against French capitalism and their own imperialists. It would raise Lenin's slogan of turning the imperialist war into a revolutionary civil war...."

But the Stalinist editorial board was caught napping. Only a few months before it had printed a front page article vehemently denying that there was, or could be, any truth in the rumors of an impending military pact between Stalin and La Belle France. The gentlemen of the editorial board did not know (?) that Stalin had lost all faith in the international movement, and no longer considered a militant proletariat, fighting against their own national bourgeoisie at home, to be the best and only true defense of the Soviet Union. They did not know (?) that Stalin wants desperately to get rid of the embarrassment of the Comintern, as a chameleon snake at a broken tail until it rides itself of the useless member. They had not adapted themselves as yet to the sorry spectacle of a bureaucracy renting out the International in the manner of Abraham renting out his wife Sarah.

A "Little" Correction

Maurice Thorez, General Secretary of the Communist Party of France, cleared up matters, as the following quotation in the June 12, Daily Worker shows:

"And here I shall answer a question which has been put to me: 'In any war unleashed by Hitler against the Soviet Union, would you apply your slogan: Transform the imperialist war into a civil war?'"

"Well, no! Because in such a war it would not be a question of an imperialist conflict between two imperialist gangs. It would be a question of war against the Soviet Union."

"Maochen fur alle, indeed!" as Lenin would have said.

Now let us consider the matter from the viewpoint of internationalists. In a war of Germany against the Soviet Union and France, we want the German workers to turn the war into a rebellion against Hitler's regime—yes? Correct. See them gazing with pained anxiety over the line to see if their comrades on the other side remain loyal to internationalism. What are the German workers to do if the Communist International eggs on the French workers to support the war? Stalin, Thorez, and Hathaway, have you forgotten the German masses in your considerations?

Monstrous Indeed

Thorez tells us that "it would be monstrous to consider a side imperialist which included the country of socialism, the country of the working class." So if France fights on the same side as non-imperialist Russia, that makes France also non-imperialist for the time being. The French bourgeoisie will fight, not for the maintaining of the Versailles Treaty but for—the defense of the Soviet Union, pure and simple? Well—yes.

Yes, it would be "monstrous" to think of France as an imperialist nation with the "Communist" Party supporting it in a war. But France is imperialist, and the act of Thorez, in chaining the French party to the chariot wheels of the national bourgeoisie is—monstrous!

Thorez borrows the very arguments of the social-chauvinists of 1914, for he brings in the example of Marx's attitude toward the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, which was one of the social-patriots' favorites. Lenin answers Thorez.

Lenin on the Stalinists

Lenin wrote: "Whoever refers at present to Marx's attitude towards the wars of a period when the bourgeoisie was progressive, forgetting Marx's words that the workers have no fatherland, words which refer to a period when the bourgeoisie is reactionary and has outlived itself, to the period of socialist revolutions, is shamelessly distorting Marx and substituting a bourgeois viewpoint." (Socialism and War.)

Since Lenin wrote those words, the workers have gained a fatherland, the Soviet Union; but we are still in the age when the bourgeoisie is reactionary, and the real defense of the Soviet Union is identical with the struggle against our own national ruling class, for its eventual overthrow. The struggle of the French workers against the French master class, for example, is the best guarantee of a successful struggle of the German masses against Nazism.

Thorez brings up another point in defense of a position that a Marxist-Leninist cannot defend. He refers to the fact that Lenin accepted the aid of French officers who were willing to blow up railroad tracks to keep the German troops from advancing upon the Bolsheviks. Obviously this agreement in 1918, in which the Bolsheviks accepted aid but did not aid French imperialism by handing over the services of the French working class, and which did not renounce the Leninist policy of fomenting revolution against the French bourgeoisie, has little in common with the present traitorous pact.

150 Delegates Attend I.W.A. Convention

shadows, the contrasts and contradictions of capitalism in decay. There were shots of working class families living in hovels not fit for human habitation. One family in the opulent state of Illinois was seen actually living in a cave. Factories, mills and other engines of plenty, if the workers would but take them over, were shown. Jim Shipley explained those pictures not covered by subtitles on the screen.

On the second day of the convention resolutions were passed: for any workers' security bill that might be presented to Congress with the same principles as the Lundeen Bill; endorsing the Labor Party; against Hearst; condemning war and pointing out that it is an inevitable result of capitalism; against Mussolini and his imminent raping of Ethiopia; for youth relief; and for a slogan of union wages and conditions to promote the ideals of a 30 hour-$30 week. This last-named resolution was altered several times before being finally toned down to more of an appeal than a demand.

Two W.P. members, Cyrus Rigby, secretary of the Utica (N.Y.) Unemployed League, and Leighton Rigby of Dixon, Ill. asked for permission to address the convention. They were refused the floor on grounds that the business before the assembly allowed no time for guest speakers who had not appeared before the proper committee on the first day. Dick Harrington, national chairman of the Unemployed Councils, however, had gone through with the necessary formalities and was allowed to speak. He spoke on "working class unity" and specifically advanced the C. P. program of a united front by calling for such "unity" between the I.W.A.

and the I.U.C. When this C.P. program finally came to a vote it was overwhelmingly defeated; a resolution was passed condemning the Stalinist tactics used in Illinois in the past, particularly during the Hunger March.

A resolution for affiliation of the I.W.A. with the Workers Alliance of America was passed without serious opposition. This plan was not opposed by W.P. delegates to the convention because of the party's expressed and proved stand against splitting organized workers, whether employed or unemployed—this in spite of the raw tactics used recently by the national leadership of the W.A.A. when Lasser invaded N.U.L. territory in what could be interpreted as nothing else but an effort to chisel away fragments of the N.U.L. membership. The understanding of I.W.A. delegates who voted for the national affiliation was that the Illinois unit must remain a rank and file organization of the workers, as opposed to one mechanically dominated by Lasser and Rasmussen and the S. P.

Among others two W.P. members, Jim Shipley and Charles Fearn, were elected to the Executive Board by the convention. Hank Mayer was continued as Educational Director and commended on the fine job he has done in propaganda and workers' education in Illinois during the past year. Other comrades were assigned duties towards building an organization to include all the unemployed workers of the state of Illinois.

War clouds become thicker and blacker. Daily occurrences and speeches furnish conclusive and final proof that the Stalinist bureaucracy of the Soviet Union and the Comintern have capitulated to French imperialism, sold the revolutionary integrity and soul of the Third International for a mess of pottage. Under the circumstances Socialist workers in the United States and elsewhere—those of them who have abandoned the fallacy of classic Social Democratic reformism and who claim to be "revolutionary"—are more and more insistently confronted with the question: How and under what banner may the revolutionary elements in this period be welded together into a powerful, international, revolutionary party, under whose leadership all the forces of the working class and its allies may unite, not merely for defense against Fascist aggression but for the counter-attack to destroy capitalism.

Socialist party members in the United States in evaluating their own party and their own responsibility in the face of this question must make up the balance sheet of the party development during the little over a year that has elapsed since the Detroit convention of the S. P. and the adoption of the Detroit Declaration. This development has been reported and provisionally analyzed in the NEW MILITANT and the New Internationalist and it is not necessary to review it at length.

The Detroit Turn

At Detroit, in 1934, a National Committee was elected which the Militants claimed to dominate. The Detroit Declaration was far from a Marxist one. It represented, however, a certain turning away from reformism. In other words, it was a Centrist declaration. The election of the N.C. and the adoption of the Declaration were hailed by the Militants, on the one hand, as a climax of their work over a period of years, as representing a decided turn to the left, and the vindication of their contention that the S.P. could be made a "revolutionary" party. On the other hand, they stated that this was the beginning of a vigorous and more rapid move toward the latter goal. On this basis "unattached radicals" were invited to join the S.P. and "Communists" such as Goldman, Gilroy and Zam accepted the invitation. Those who were not convinced that organizations such as the A.W.P. and the C.I.A. should be liquidated and join the S.P. were put down as hopeless sectarians.

The Old Guard in the S.P., and especially the New York section, promptly took the offensive. Organizationally it defied the N.C. Politically it declared that the Detroit Declaration was "Communism" if it meant anything and that the Socialist Party must stand openly and unequivocally on a gradualist and democratic basis, that is, on reformism. At the Boston session of the N.C. as a result of this course the Old Guard again proceeded promptly to follow up this opening and further baited the N.C. The Militants on their part, as well as their "allies" such as Norman Thomas, realized that the Old Guard was gaining ground and that they must put up a much more determined fight if they were not to be routed. So the Socialist Call was projected and established, and talk that those who had hoped to be able to avoid a split in the party were wrong and that the Old Guard must be kicked out began to be heard.

The First Blow

At Buffalo three months later the Thomas-Allen, etc. group made a gesture of attack on the Old Guard, laying down certain requirements which they must meet within a given period or (presumably) be kicked out. At the same time a much more decisive attack, however, was made on the left wing by means of the resolution which declared "advocacy of armed insurrection" as incompatible with membership in the S.P. The notion that one could hold any views, and especially revolutionary ones, in the S.P. was thus abandoned. The Centrists made an attempt to establish a political position of their own as that of the S.P. by an organizational gesture against the right and a political blow against the left.

The denouement which might have been expected and which some of us had frequently enough predicted, came at the recent New York Plenum of the N.C., which has been reported in the columns of the NEW MILITANT. There Thomas, Hoan, etc. signed a peace pact with the Old Guard so that all good Socialists could get ready to roll up a big vote or the party (meaning for Hoan?) in the 1936 presidential election. The basis of the pact is the exclusion of "Communists," that is, Marxists from the S.P., technical "acceptance" by the Old Guard of the Detroit Declaration with the understanding that the right to "criticize and modify" exists, etc.

Militants Fail to Create Left Wing
The first point that stands out today is that after all these years of work by the assorted varieties of militants in the S.P., no revolutionary left-wing of any proportions has been crystallized in the party.

What Next in the Socialist Party?

An Analysis of Developments Arising Out of the Recent Old Guard Triumph at the N.C. Meeting

The militants who said they were going to do this job—yes, even make the S. P. itself revolutionary—and who rode so high and sung so confidently a year ago, suffered at the New York Plenum an obvious and shameful defeat. So far from being kicked out, the Old Guard is in the ascendancy and in a stronger position to advance its avowed purpose of undermining any attempt to build a left wing.

Under the circumstances those who question whether any considerable left-wing will be built in the S.P. have some basis for their doubts. The real point, however, is that no left-wing can be built on the basis and by the methods the Militants have employed in the last half dozen years.

What is the reason for the failure of the Militants to do what they professed they were going to do? First, they have never worked out a political program and sought to gather followers, educate the membership of the S.P. and carry on the fight against the Old Guard on the clear basis of such a program. Secondly, having no clear political basis on which to fight, their struggle has been an organizational one. "We will get control of the N.C. and of the party by uniting all elements opposed to the Old Guard for this purpose and then we will use our control to make the party revolutionary"—this is in effect what the Militants said to themselves. The Old Guard on its part carried on a political fight on the basis of a program though, of course, an incorrect one, and they won out. The opposition to them, not standing united on a program, being composed of politically unclear, heterogeneous elements, fell to pieces just at the critical moment.

Norman Thomas, for example, having no principled differences with the Old Guard, could not make a final break with them, no matter how many violations of discipline they committed, how ruthlessly they might hold him up to ridicule, and how many oaths of loyalty he might swear to the Militants, and thus run the risk of having the party get into the hands of "revolutionists" with whom he does have differences and whose control of the party would mean to discredit it "in the eyes of the trade unions," that is, of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats.

The Fetish of Unity

Because of this inherent political weakness the Militants also had their hands tied by a formal and fetishistic conception of the "unity of the party." Keep the party together, there must be no more divisions in the working class, was their plea. Suffice it at this point to make three brief observations:

First: "Unity" on an unsound and unclear basis means, as repeated experiences of the working class have demonstrated and as the Militants have now once again found out, disruption at the critical moment—disruption precisely of the more progressive forces to the benefit of the reactionaries.

Second: What kind of unity is it which means political collaboration with the Old Guard, reformists and trade union bureaucrats, but no collaboration with, objectively, even enmity towards revolutionists?

Third: Such painless births are envisaged by those who expect a revolutionary party to be born on the basis of keeping all the boys together in a party may have become a possibility in the biological realm but it is not yet in the social!

If the Militants have learned anything from recent experiences and expect to go seriously about crystallizing the left-wing, they must begin by facing the fact that they are now in a very weak position. The Militant leaders have themselves given the clearest indication of their helplessness and unpreparedness, by the failure of the Socialist Call; for example, to make even a plausible attempt to state their position and plans since the N.C. meeting.

Important Questions

Among the chief sources of their weakness in the fight against the Old Guard and as a force for the crystallization of a genuine left-wing is their attitude on the labor party question. With few exceptions they are for a Labor party and have in no important sense differentiated themselves from the Old Guard on this point. The role of a Labor party in the U. S. in this period is bound to be a reformist one. Politically, how build a revolutionary wing on the basis of building a reformist labor party? Organizational activity to build a Labor party, get votes for it and get elected to office on its ticket will furnish a means of evading fundamental revolutionary problems. In such activities all militants will have to play a tail-endist role, no matter how fine a face they may try to put on, to the Old Guard and the trade union officialdom—the role of a minority which does not know precisely where it is going.

Secondly, the Militants are weak because of their lack of a clear position on what are now the real test questions before the international working class movement—the questions of the Soviet Union, the role of the Stalinist bureaucracy in international relations, the attitude to the Second and Third Internationals and to the movement for the Fourth International, the question of how in the approaching war crisis a betrayal more infamous and tragic than that of 1914 is to be prevented. Even the R.P.P.A. forces are either unclear on these points or in some instances tend still to a Lovestoneite position. The Old Guard does not conceal its purpose to follow the same fundamental policies of betrayal as in the past. How pretend to be crystallizing a revolutionary wing unless you have a clear answer to the masses as to how you are going to prevent this betrayal? How postpone this answer?

The Trade Union Problem

Third, the economic basis for existence upon which many Militant leaders depend will prevent them, unless, of course, they break away from it, from following an out and out revolutionary policy. The Old Guard leaders in the S. P. are professionals, lawyers, for example, who are related to the top officials in the unions and get their practice, directly or indirectly, from them. They behave accordingly. The Militants are younger professionals on the make, the second layer of officials in the unions, etc. Now if they held their positions in the unions as representatives of a rank and file opposition to reactionaries and conservatives, they would be pushed to the left because the interests of this rank and file in the capitalist crisis would demand it. But in the main this is not at present the case. Therefore, though advocating progressive measures up to a certain point the Militants cannot contemplate an intransigent battle against the trade union bureaucracy and a decisive break with it, for this would mean a threat to their jobs and also to the basis of their prestige, their social position, in the labor movement.

Thus even at Detroit the Militants either offered no opposition, or only the weakest sort, to the Old Guard's blunt refusal to pass even a mild resolution of censure on the A. F. of L. officialdom. As we pointed out at the time, so far as the American labor movement and specific American problems are concerned, the trade union question is the test question today. On this the Militants failed, and must fail unless they effect a right-about-face. The second point that stands out from an analysis of the past year's developments in the S.P. U.S. is that a terrific blow has been struck at the conception that the S.P. could be "reformed," that is, that a majority could be won to a Marxist position and so make this the position of the party and the basis of the party membership. On the contrary, the course of those who rejected this road and who worked for the merger of the A.W.P. and C.I.A., established the W.P. as the independent revolutionary party, and raised the banner of the Fourth International, has been justified.

The Open Letter

There was a timeliness which was perhaps not altogether an historical accident, and in any case is significant, in the publication here and elsewhere, right upon the heels of the N.C. S.P. meeting, of the Open Letter for the Fourth International. The forces in the United States who have entered the W.P. and have accepted the program of a Fourth International are not entirely insignificant, compared with those of the S.P. Indeed, the number of S.P. members who accept or claim to accept our theoretical position is not small. But even if this were not so, S.P. members, Militants, all who are not reformists in the S.P., must face the challenge of the Open Letter and draw conclusions in the light of it as to which party represents the revolutionary vanguard, the future of hope for the proletariat and not the past of betrayal and defeat.

For the numerous Marxists and militant workers in the U.S. who are at present unattached, there can now, after the developments which have taken place in the S.P. and the revelations of the Comintern Congress now in session in Moscow as to the final capitulation of the Comintern to social patriotism, be no question of going into the S.P. or C.P. The Workers Party is the revolutionary party in the United States. Its doors are open. This is no time for any Marxist or honest militant to stand on the sidelines. There is no time to lose even in the U.S. in increasing and welding together the party of the vanguard.

We are aware that there are a considerable number of individuals in the S.P. who are not yet ready to accept our program or if they do, to draw the organizational conclusions from it. We never have, and we do not now in the Stalinist manner call them counter-revolutionists and Social Fascists. On the contrary, we expect them to be our comrades in the struggles of the working class today and hope that many, if not all of them, will be not merely fellow-travelers but comrades in the fullest sense of the term in the approaching revolutionary struggle.

We do say to them, however, that if they are serious in asserting that they are not reformists or mere Centrists it is, in the first place, their duty to study the program of the W.P. and the Open Letter, and to see to it that they are discussed in the Socialist Party. If these comrades are not prepared for such discussion of the problems before the revolutionary movement, they have no right to the name of revolutionist. If these issues cannot be discussed in the Socialist Party, there is no use talking of building a revolutionary wing in it.

Secondly, the leftward moving elements in the Socialist Party who still believe that something can be accomplished there must make their own program covering the crucial issues of today, not seeking an escape in generalities, and they must win followers, educate the S.P. members, and carry on the fight against not only reformism but centrism on the basis of such a program. Thirdly, these comrades cannot expect to be taken seriously if they can make collaboration with the reformists of the Old Guard in the S.P. and collaboration with elements such as Norman Thomas, on the basis of toleration of such a surrender to the Old Guard as the recent "peace pact," the basis for their procedure, while they hold aloof from or objectively even struggle against revolutionary elements in the S. P. or outside. To say that they have differences with these elements is to say exactly nothing or else to cover up organizational fetishism and cowardly evasion, for they claim to have differences with the Old Guard and the trade union bureaucrats also. Any movement in the S.P. which makes serious pretensions at aiming at the crystallization of a left-wing must make a clear and final break with the organizational horse-trading and maneuvering tactics in the past, must stand unequivocally and from the onset on a program of break with all reformists and Centrists and unity with the revolutionary elements on the basis of a revolutionary program. Let the rank and file in the Socialist Party and especially the Socialist youth apply that test rigorously and without delay to every program submitted to them and to every would-be leader who stands up before them.

By A. WEAVER

C. V., PHILADELPHIA—Question: What is the meaning of the struggle between Hitler and the Catholic Church?

Answer: In general, Fascism cannot tolerate the existence of any organization over which it does not have complete domination; other wise the interests of classes other than, and opposed to, finance-capital can exert themselves. When the Fascist state has become Bonapartist, this is particularly true as evidenced by the fact that even a large storm troop organization composed of plebeian elements, which might get out of control, cannot be permitted. For this reason, Italian fascism had to engage in a struggle with the Pope, and Hitler is repeating the process.

The existence of the Church, however, is not incompatible with fascism. On the contrary, once it has been adjusted to the new conditions of its master, it becomes again the justifier, with a mandate from heaven, for the increased misery of the masses, even though, as in Germany, it will have less funds at its disposal. (The Church devalues a great deal of the wealth of which Hitler is greatly in need).

O.S.S., NEW YORK—

Question: What is meant by inflation? Deflation? Devaluation?

Answer: In general, these terms, as used by the capitalist economists, have various and different meanings, reflecting the confusion in the minds of the bourgeoisie. To some economists, for example, any general rise in prices is an "inflation"; any decrease is a "deflation". Their difficulties arise, of course, through their failure to understand the distinction between money as a standard of value and as a standard of price.

Under the "normal" development of capitalism, prices rose and fell. This was neither "inflation" nor "deflation." It merely meant that the amount of gold for which fixed quantities of commodities would exchange fell or rose, and, since the standard of price (the weight of gold represented by the dollar, pound sterling, franc, etc.) remained stationary, the number of dollars (or pounds, francs, etc. also) fell and rose.

The term "inflation," therefore, has no significance unless an actual change takes place in the standard of price so that each unit (dollar, pound, franc, etc.) represents less gold than formerly. Prices then rise not because it requires more gold to exchange for commodities, but because the amount of gold represented by each unit of paper money is less. Inflation may be partial or complete, the latter implying that the standard of price has become worthless.

"Devaluation" is inflation except that the government, when it is able, formally sets the lowered standard of price.

"Deflation" is a meaningless term, a product of bourgeois confusion, and can have significance only if it is intended to mean the returning to a standard of price which has been reduced, or, if the latter has not been the case, the raising of the standard of price. However, it is very unlikely that we shall ever witness anything of this sort. The "devaluations" and "inflation" which we are witnessing, an index of the decline of capitalism internationally, are forced upon the capitalists. This fact alone eliminates the possibility that "deflation" will ever take place.

Ethiopia in the Thieves' Den

The struggle against Mussolini's robber attack on Ethiopia must be continued and intensified. It was, however, made clear at the meeting last week of the Council of the League of Nations that we do not have a case of a dastardly Fascist nation bent on plunder, on the one hand, and a group of noble, democratic capitalist powers seeking to make peace and to protect Ethiopia on the other hand.

France and Italy have pursued their imperialist designs in Africa for decades and specifically moved toward the parceling out of the control, if not the ownership, of Ethiopia among themselves in 1908. England at the moment appears as the chief obstacle in the way of Italy's aggressive plans, largely because even potential control by Italy over Lake Tsana and the head waters of the blue Nile in Ethiopia would strike a blow at her cotton-growing program in the Sudan, and seriously interfere with other British plans for check-mating the United States and her other rivals. France appears as Italy's "friend" because that serves her interests in building up alliances to combat the effect of the British-German naval agreement, etc., against the day of inevitable war. But France will not for one moment consent to any action by Italy which might adversely affect her own colonial empire in Africa.

For the moment both Great Britain and France would like to prevent the outbreak of a life sized war in Africa because of the repercussions this would have among their own black, brown and yellow subjects, and because they are by no means as yet prepared for that general European or world war which must be the inevitable result of the outbreak of war in any important situation, if not immediately, then after a brief interval of months or years.

The object of delay by imperialist powers cannot possibly be based on peace and on the protection of small nations or colonial peoples.

The object can only be to get a breathing space in which to line up their forces for the next war and in the meantime carry forward the robbery of Ethiopia under the cloak of peace maneuvers and good intentions.

Thus the Council of the League of Nations decided, first, to appoint a fifth member on a commission to arbitrate the Unalul clash between Ethiopian and Italian troops. The commission is, however, not to take up questions of boundaries or the ownership of the territory in question but simply to determine who fired the first shot in the above incident. Second, the Council will meet again on September 4 to discuss the whole situation.

In the meantime no restrictions are placed on Italian war preparations and the negotiations on the really vital matters are to take place between Italy, France and Great Britain with Ethiopia excluded. Italy even abstained from voting on the motion to provide for another session of the League Council in September.

Maxim Litvinov, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, and now president of the League of Nations Council, hailed the announcement of these negotiations as "something the Council has learned with satisfaction." If Hitler Germany, for example, were anywhere today sending military forces thousands of miles away from Germany in preparation for a bare faced attack on a small nation, the Soviet Union would unquestionably have protested. The result of the present policies of the Comintern and of the foreign office of the Soviet Union under Stalinist leadership is that the Soviet Union has uttered no word of protest against the Italian adventure in Ethiopia. The Soviet Union is not "free" to do so long as the interests of its "ally" in the Franco-Soviet pact are for a "friendly" attitude toward Mussolini! The Negroes in the United States, colonial peoples throughout the world, those who enthusiastically join in demonstrations of the League Against War and Fascism against Italy, the Italians who want to see Mussolini's designs foiled and his regime smashed, will do well to take note of this significant fact and to draw the necessary conclusions.

Extend and intensify the struggle against the Fascist robber attack on Ethiopia! For the boycott of Fascist Italy! For the struggle against imperialism on every front!

workers to maintain "peace and dignity." How strongly this smells of Bill Green and his crew of professional strikebreakers!

"Peace and dignity" has become the new formula for treachery ever since the Stalin-Laval communique. The writings of Vaillant-Couturier, editor of l'Humanite, that the Communist Party was a "government party," that the Communist Party was set upon "protecting the fatherland, its culture and its wealth . . . while waiting for the Day," that the Communist Party was the most determined fighter for the People's Front with the capitalist Radical Party which will "join together all good wills in the struggle for a peaceful France"—all of this presaged the first actual betrayal in action in Brest.

Fruits of Social Patriotism

Class collaboration, the natural and inevitable concomitant of social patriotism as set forth in the Stalin-Laval communique and accepted by the Stalinist leaders in France as only "natural," finds its expression on July 14 and after where the Stalinist leaders hush up all criticism of Paganon, the Minister of Interior responsible for government repression in the beleaguered cities because—you see!—he is a member of the Radical Party which is in favor of the Franco-Soviet pact and therefore must not be irritated. On Bastille Day Stalinist leaders had the placard borne by a revolutionary contingent reading "Down with the Decree Laws of Laval-Herriot" seized and the name of Herriot expunged from it. This, notwithstanding the fact that Herriot is a member of the cabinet and a participant in the reactionary measures against French labor. He too, is alleged to be a "friend" of the Soviet Union and nothing must be done to anger him.

When the strikers confronted the troops they chanted the Internationale. When the Stalinists made peace with capitalism and its armed forces they brayed the Marseillaise, the song of the assassins of the Paris Commune of 1871, of the jingoes and slaughter-bund of 1914. In a meeting at the Buffalo stadium in Paris, in preparation for the July 14 celebration it remained for Jacques Duclos, C.P. leader, to do what all the socialist and bourgeois orators had failed to do—to bring the audience to its feet in the singing of the patriotic Marseillaise.

C. P. Applauds the Army
The very troops that the Stalinists are pledged "to maintain at their full level of security" are brought into play against the workers, wounding them by the hundreds. The Stalin-Laval declaration was not enough. In the July 16 l'Humanite they gild the lily in peans of praise for the army of French imperialism. A prominent box reprints a "Declaration made by M. Marc Rucart, Radical Socialist Deputy from the Vosges, general reporter of the 6th of February Commission to the session of Peace and Liberty at the Buffalo Stadium before 10,000 delegates on July 14 in the name of . . . the Socialist party, the Communist party . . . and 58 other organizations participating in the gathering of July 14.

"In this immortal French Declaration which constitutes for all the people of all the land, the charter of liberty, the men of 1789 have written that the public force was constituted for the guarantee of the Rights of Man."

"The Republicans know that they can count on the loyalty of the army, the expression of the public force—the army formed of the sons of the entire people—"

2090, the painters local 905 and the bricklayers local 37. "No one has to work who does not want to," declared Mr. Hopkins, "and if they don't want to do it, other people on relief rolls will take their places and receive the security wage." Here is a clear statement of organized strike breaking and for the trade union movement there can hardly be any other recourse but to accept the challenge and fight it out.

Wm. Green in his editorial in the American Federationist, August 5, takes cognizance of the threat in asserting that when relief wages are set in competition with normal wages, work and living standards for all will be dragged down. But what does he propose? "State and local labor organizations should organize for effective participation in state relief plans and policies." And after the local and state organizations have participated to the fullest extent in these plans, then what, it may be pertinent to ask? There can be only one answer: The way out is already shown in New York. Strike the project jobs.

to give a rebuke to all those who endeavor to use it as an instrument for personal ambitions or for the ambitions of a fascist minority.

"They remember that the public force is at the disposal of the indivisible nation and the governmental authority will not tolerate the existence of other organizations of a military character than those which represent the supremacy of the first magistrate of the Republic and the central of the nation."

Whatever else need be said of the treachery of the Stalinists is spoken in the mute comment of the slain Toulon strikers, victims at the hand of these "defenders of liberty."

miners but the code for the tiff miners got "sidetracked" and these workers were crushed to a still lower level of existence. Persistently did the National Barytes Producers Ass'n beg for a code and just as persistently did the government and its lead code authorities turn a deaf ear. It would not be too presumptuous to guess that on this Code Administration sat a representative of the lead interests.

Hoping to break the strike of the 2,000 miners, who came out in a body, the company decided to use the huge reserves which they have been piling up just for this event. But they made their calculations without taking into consideration the temper of the miners. Since there is enough tiff in the yards to supply the mills for at least three months the strikebreaking power of these hundreds of tons of minerals is obvious. The company hired a steam shovel to load the mineral on flat cars. But when the machine got to the place it was met by a "reception committee" of 300 miners. Armed with a varied assortment of weapons ranging from clubs and stones to the old "squirrel gun" (usually a 12 bore shotgun) which nearly every miner keeps above his door. The shovel never got a chance to sink its teeth into the reserve and no ore has been moved to date.

On the morning of the strike they came a thousand strong to the Washington County Courthouse demanding immediate relief, the strike-breaking role of the federal relief authorities has already been shown by the offer to get "jobs" for them on reforestation work, promising jobs for 500 men.

When the strike was taken a thunderous volume of "ayes" went up. The men stood up and cheered while the women looked on with tear-dimmed eyes. The sentiments of these determined people fighting for their lives and the lives of their children was summed up in a few short words by the chairman, George Bourbon, tall, white-haired old digger for more than 30 years when he told W. H. Comins, general superintendent of the company:

"If you use that reserve pile of tiff we'll starve. We are starving anyway and we are on strike to win or perish. We want to peaceable if it is possible. But if not we'll have a nice quiet, little battle here all our own."

The organizers and leaders of the strike is the American Workers Union, an unemployed organization which will probably prove a great weakness. The Stalinists have just got through "merging" their Unemployed Councils with this organization from which the A.W.U. gained nothing except the addition to their national committee of Wagenknecht, nationally known Stalinist faker and others of the Stalinist wrecking crew to the local Executive Committee.

At any rate the bosses are fooling with the most dangerous animal in the world when they fool with the Missouri tiff digger—an animal that hasn't got a thing in this world to lose. They are fighting under the impulse of the first law of nature—of self-preservation, of keeping body and soul together. Reared in the school of "rugged individualism" they may try to convert the empty promises of demagogues into a living reality. And they have taken the only road—the road of militant struggle.

Fight for Union On West Coast

openly espouses the cause of the employers and makes a veiled threat of government action unless the unions capitulate to the demands of the employers. In a statement issued to the press in Washington on July 29, he said:

"Flour is rotting in the holds of the ships, (ships loaded with sea cargo from Canada) perishable goods are destroyed, newspaper publishing is being curtailed because the paper is being held on these boats, and business generally is adversely affected."

"This is an intolerable condition, and one which cannot be allowed to continue."

Gutter Press Aids Fakers
To prepare the way for this assault upon the unions the boss press is bending every effort to whip up a "red scare" with Lundberg, president of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, Bridges of the I.L.A. and other militants being daily labelled "minions of Moscow."

The San Francisco Chronicle has taken the lead and is playing a tune which the balance of the gutter sheets are taking up in one key or another. The chorus shrieks, "American Unionism and Red Radicalism cannot live together in the same house." In this red baiting campaign the bosses have the full support of Ryan and his West coast satellites, "Paddy" Morris, Lewis, Peterson and Co. While Ryan is openly attacking Bridges and the other militants his western henchmen are forced to proceed more carefully because of the strength of the rank and file.

The Portland News-Telegram in an article on the recent meeting of the executive board of the Pacific District of the I.L.A. boldly outlined the tactics that the reactionaries will probably use in their campaign to oust the militants. According to this paper, which is unusually close to the A. F. of L. leaders, it is not planned to put the question of Bridges' removal to a referendum vote for they undoubtedly admit this would prove a boomerang to their plans. Instead it is expected they will announce that the employers will make agreements with all locals except San Francisco. This will enable the reactionaries to tell the members that recognition of San Francisco can be secured only through strike. It will leave the other locals the choice of voting agreements without San Francisco, or insisting that San Francisco remove Bridges, "the source of all the trouble."

This may not be the precise plan that these fakers have up their sleeve but the workers can look for maneuvers of a similar nature from these union splitters.

The marine workers must prepare themselves for a bitter struggle to preserve the gains they won in last summer's heroic strike. They are in a much stronger position to wage a winning fight than they were last summer. They are all united through the Maritime Federation of the Pacific with its 34,000 members. McGrady has amply forwarded them of the role the bosses' government will play. The main danger is within their own ranks. Hold your ranks firm in the face of the attack of the bosses and send the first faker who tries to split your ranks by raising the red scare down the same road that the rank and file of the I.S.U. sent Scharrenberg.

Mass Arrests in Spring Strike

Mass arrests marked the seventh week of the stubbornly fought Brooklyn spring strike where 450 workers are crippling production and well on the road to a victorious settlement.

Paying no attention to the much-vaunted declaration of La Guardia legalizing mass picketing "New York's finest" smashed a line of some 100 strikers on August 5 before they even reached within three blocks of the plant. 76 pickets were arrested and charged with "disorderly conduct." On the next day 24 workers were arrested on similar charges. Among those seized were several members of the Workers Party who were extremely active.

If the arrests were meant to dampen the fighting spirit of the men and women they failed miserably. Behind the courtroom, in the cell especially provided for such occasions, 22 of the arrested pickets, all of them women, made the welkin ring and the coppers red with anger, by their stirring songs of solidarity. For this an additional charge was slammed on them—two days in the cooler or five dollars fine. On August 8 and 24 the two batches of arrested pickets will come up for trial.

Not only are the police attacks directed at the mass picket line as indiscriminate arrests of individual strikers on no provocation whatever has proved. Joe Koval, leading militant of the union and some half a dozen others were arrested at various times for no other reason than standing peacefully on street corners. The charge was "disorderly conduct" and for it they each served a day or more in jail.

The solid status of the picket line after seven weeks of strike, in which no more than 65 scabs, who merely stand at the windows for intimidation purposes, are "working" in the plant is sufficient proof of why the cops and the mass arrests are needed.

More—in spite of the bonus of $10 per head for every worker brought back, and a months vacation for reporting on strike activities offered to every foreman the plant has been unable to operate. Virtually prisoners in a Brooklyn, where they cannot leave their rooms except under heavily armed escort, these fink foremen are receiving their real bonus—the payoff for their rat activities.

Treachery Spiked

It was confidently asserted on the picket line that the strike could have been settled some two weeks ago but for the treachery of the Strike Chairman who behind the backs of the workers met with the bosses in Hotel Towers and as a result was sending strikers back on the job under scab conditions—until his activities were spotted and the scab movement decisively stopped.

Some $300,000 has been lost by the company since the outbreak of the strike in business and the non-operation of the machines.

Commissaries have been established in the Brooklyn and in the Bronx plant, which is in a similarly strong position. However, finances are still badly needed. All donations should be sent to: Jack Gordon, organizer; International Upholsterers Union, local 140B at 114 W. 14th St. N. Y. C.

Iron Workers of Minneapolis Reform Ranks

ular practise to import workers from Germany and Austria to Minneapolis. He has proceeded to exploit their skill and take advantage of their ignorance of our language and customs by underpaying these foreign workers so as to budge down the wages of other workers in his plant. Some of these workers, who could speak a little English, soon learned of this and, having been union members in Germany, went to the local metal workers union to ask for help. The union had found work for these men. The other immigrants had been told of this and sooner or later managed to escape the yoke of Tetzlaff.

Another of Tetzlaff's tricks is the farming out of special jobs to his gang foremen so that the workers are doubly exploited, both Tetzlaff and the foremen wringing their profits from the workers. Tetzlaff has given stock to his non-union employees. This stock paid no dividends, had no maturity date. Again, he would sell stock to his workers, permitting them to pay for it by deducting from their pay checks. Later he lost control of this stock issue through a deal with an eastern holding company, the National Bronze Company. He has since regained control, but to the dismay of the workers their certificates have become almost worthless in the process. For years Tetzlaff has maintained stool-pigeons on the job. Bearing this in mind, one sees that the struggle at the Flour City plant is not only for wages and working conditions but for the basic right of the workers to organize for their own mutual benefit, a right always denied by Tetzlaff.

Farmer-Labor Mayor Herds Scabs
The first two weeks of the strike were uneventful. Daily picket lines, though small, prevented the bosses from trying to re-open with scab labor. The strikers felt, and correctly, that the real struggle would revolve around the labor-baiting Flour City Ornamental Iron Works.

On the morning of July 26, the recently elected Farmer-Labor Mayor Latimer suddenly appeared at the Flour City plant with a squad of 68 police and proceeded to escort 30 strike-breakers into the plant through a small and surprised picket line. Latimer has since confessed that he "heard the plant was bringing in gunmen and brought the police down to protect the strikers." How the scabs managed to slip in on his arm still remains a mystery. The sight of a Farmer-Labor Mayor acting as a scab herder is causing thousands of serious workers to do some hard thinking this last week. It wasn't for this that the Farmer-Labor ticket was swept into office. These workers are beginning to see what the local branch of the Workers Party set forth in the election statement is true. In periods of crisis a reformist party cannot protect the interests of the workers. For this a revolutionary working class party is necessary.

Workers Party Takes Hand
Early in the afternoon a few of the leading Workers Party comrades, active in trade union work, walked into the strike headquarters. There were only about twenty men present. An air of gloom hung heavy about the place. Our comrades made a quick and accurate appraisal of the situation, and then went into action.

In this situation we could have behaved as the local Communist Party behaved towards the Local 574 strikes last summer. We could have organized a "rank and file" movement, we could have attacked the leadership of a union struggling for its very life against the employers, we could have issued a leaflet slandering the Stalinist party. And by so doing we would have earned exactly what the C.P. earned last summer: the contempt of thousands of local working men and women. The Workers Party does not act in that fashion.

Here was a case where scabs had gained entrance to the plant. If the boss could get away with this, the strike was broken. The scabs would be coming out at 4:30, in just a few hours. What was needed was a picket line. To build a picket line requires numbers of fighting workers. The job was to build that picket line in two hours.

The Communist Party members active in the strike leadership were active, courageous and devoted workers, the cream of the local membership. But now they were in one of those situations where all the past sins of the false Stalinist line were back to haunt them. To get pickets in a hurry, you need a real, living contact with the masses. The Communist Party does not have this. The Unemployed Council? It does not exist. The Communist Party local? Either it has dwindled to almost nothing, or its members are not interested in picketing. The Friends of the Soviet Union? Nice people no doubt, but not the kind to come out on a picket line. Why not call a meeting of the district committee, discuss the problem, issue a leaflet, agitate? That might do the trick—in a week or so. But a picket line was needed right now. This afternoon.

How Revolutionists Act

And how was it with the Workers Party in Minneapolis? It was different. We know that situations like this will arise again and again. We know that they must be prepared for by hard realistic work—day-to-day work that never slackens. What could we do to establish that picket line? The Workers Party has contact with the General Drivers Union, with the Federal Workers Section of Local 574, and with its own no-longer-insignificant membership. A half dozen messengers were sent about town—to various plants, to workers on various relief jobs. Workers were told that their help was needed immediately on the picket line at the Flour City plant. Because the workers trusted the messengers, they responded. By 4:30 a good 250 pickets were outside the Flour City building. A crowd of a thousand or so quickly gathered, and the police began arriving in squad cars. The plan of the employers was to escort the scabs through the picket lines in autos owned by the management and the salesmen. Among the scab autos were to be interspersed the police cars. It so happened that at 4:30 the entire strike committee was absent from the picket line, and down in the Mayor's office conferring with Latimer.

The cars began coming out. Somehow, or other the police cars were always held up for a minute or so as they came rolling out of the plant. This cut the police off from the scab autos, which were greeted with a shower of bricks. Each scab car looked as though it had been caught in a rain of cannon-balls. Things finally got to the point where the police cars were having the same trouble, and the phony were rolling around on the floors of their cars amid a shower of flying glass. Though the event was unrecorded in the local society columns, it was certainly one of the most successful receptions of a gay summer season. Spirited picketing like this had the effect of reviving the strike with a bang.

Here was a strike broken by the Farmer-Labor policy, creating a situation before which the Stalinists were helpless. It required the Workers Party to step in and rebuild the strike. There are lessons here for every worker to learn.

The Employers Whimper

Except for that one-day attempt by the Flour City plant to reopen, the companies have been completely shut down. The employers react to this strike approximately as they did last summer. They greet the public daily with large newspaper advertisements, the majority signed by Tetzlaff, informing us that the workers are quite content, that they don't want to join the union, that we are an "unruly mob," and so forth. The employers use the editorial columns to call for more and better police protection. Of course they secured an injunction which they thought would stop the picketing. But American workers in these days of mass misery aren't reading injunctions. This weapon of the bosses was treated with the contempt it deserves. The workers are defying it.

While Local 574 will continue to give its full cooperation to the striking iron workers and to support them to the limit, it does not take the responsibility for the strike. The "Northwest Organizer," weekly organ of the Northwest Labor Unity Conference, has now been placed at the disposal of the striking union, and may appear daily if events demand it. On Friday the paper carried an interesting exposure of Tetzlaff's many-sided struggle to maintain his open shop. The strikers are demanding that the Farmer-Labor mayor declare the Flour City plant closed as a menace to public peace, that he investigate the working conditions there and make a public report.

An open mass meeting is scheduled for Monday, August 5, at the Central Labor Union, where local labor leaders will answer the lies of the employers' paid advertisements.

All local workers are called upon to support Local 1313's strike. Be on the picket line every morning at six o'clock. Be around the strike headquarters. Give financial aid to the striking union. Make the ornamental iron industry a union industry! Make Minneapolis a Union Town!

NEW MILITANT

Official Organ of the Workers Party of the U.S.

VOL. 1, NO. 34

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1935

PRICE 3 CENTS

REMEMBER SACCO & VANZETTI!

A landmark in the struggle of the American proletariat approaches. August 22 marks the eighth anniversary of the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. Once again, we shall relive the experience of that hot August night when, as midnight neared, we waited with anguish for word of a reprieve—word that never came.

The crime committed at South Braintree, Massachusetts, for which Sacco and Vanzetti were unjustly tried and convicted, was a routine hold-up such as occurred innumerable times before, and since. The paymaster and guard of a shoe company were stopped as they left the factory by bullets fired from an automobile. Two men seized the payroll amounting to approximately $16,000 and jumped into the car which then gathered speed and disappeared.

Facts in the Frame-up

Many people witnessed the occurrence. Most of them testified that it was impossible in the brief period of three seconds, during which the crime was expertly consummated, to identify the criminals. Only fleeting glimpses were obtained of them. Testimony agreed that a light-complexioned man was at the wheel of the automobile and a foreign-looking man was in the back seat shooting. The prosecution could not find anybody, at first, who could describe the criminals more accurately. After Sacco and Vanzetti were arrested, they were brought to South Braintree where Katzman, the district attorney, finally got three unsavory characters to hesitantly identify them as having been in the car. These witnesses were subsequently so discredited that even the notorious Judge Thayer, the trial judge, said at a later stage of the case, when motions for a new trial were presented to him, that the conviction did not rest on the identification, but on the fact that Sacco and Vanzetti betrayed "consciousness of guilt" after they were arrested.

Thayer referred to the fact that Sacco and Vanzetti lied to the police about their activities in the period immediately preceding the date of their arrest. It was shown that Sacco and Vanzetti were active members of an organization which distributed literature banned by the government. Their comrades were being hunted, jailed and deported at that time of post-war anti-Red hysteria. The third degree was commonly used by the police. The illegality of the methods resorted to by Palmer and his raiders in the Department of Justice was so flagrant that even the capitalist courts were forced to condemn them. A comrade named Salsedo had, a few months before, died after a third degree examination at the hands of Department of Justice men who held him incommunicado in the office of the department. He either jumped or was pushed from the window of the office. Sacco and Vanzetti were both listed as "dangerous Reds" in the records of the Department of Justice.

When they were arrested by a lone, hick policeman to whom they offered no resistance, they thought that the charge against them was in reference to their radical activities. They sought, therefore, to conceal their movements and to protect their comrades by withholding information from the police.

It was never denied that after the date on which the crime was committed, Sacco and Vanzetti continued the normal existence of the working man—the normal existence of suppressed, exploited proletarians—Sacco working steadily in a shoe factory and Vanzetti peddling fish in the small towns on the coast. Both faithfully carried on the work of advanced workers by agitating and lecturing on behalf of the working class every moment of their spare time. No wonder the "best people" said that "they ought to hang anyway!"

Until the early part of 1926, the defense of Sacco and Vanzetti was entrusted to a committee organized by their friends in the anarchist movement. Thereafter, the International Labor Defense, then a healthy organization under the leadership of James P. Cannon, assumed control of the mass worldwide agitation for their release. During the early years, the defense committee was handicapped by the sectarian nature of its legal defense committee. The lawyers obtained by the committee had no responsibility for the manner in which they

Progressives Fight for Sway In Rubber Union

Claherty Gerryman-dering Meets with Stiff Opposition

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio.—Two problems occupied the attention of progressive rubber workers this week as they continued to organize a bloc to wrest control of the federal unions away from the A. F. of L. bureaucracy at the approaching convention for the formation of an international union.

Attempts of Coleman C. Claherty, notorious betrayer in the threatened strike this spring, to reduce the number of delegates from the Akron unions was being fought successfully by the progressives. At the Firestone local, Claherty's efforts to reduce the delegates from 16 to 4 were defeated. However, he will try the same thing in other unions.

His purpose is to cut down the Akron delegation so that he can control the convention through the out-of-towners who are more under his influence. Progressives at Good-year local are meeting this week to plan their fight next Sunday when delegate election comes out.

The problem of selecting a slate of candidates which will swing the majority of delegates behind the progressive bloc is another question confronting them.

Claherty's Maneuvers

Claherty will back either George R. Roberts, his assistant, who was a rubber worker, or else back John House, president of the Goodyear local, who while sincere, is easily led by Claherty. Many workers seem to like either Sherman H. Dalrymple, Goodrich local president, or Thomas Burns, A. F. of L. organizer from New England rubber plants for the presidency. Burns led a strong fight against Claherty last year at the rubber workers' convention.

A.F. of L. Skates Face Crucial Issues in N. J.

Fight for Spoils at Top; Demands from Ranks Sidetracked

Comforted by the delightful breezes of Atlantic City, the A. F. of L. Executive Council is now in session in preparation for the 55th annual convention scheduled for October 7. Among the questions considered was the report of its stewardship to be made to this convention, and in spite of meager information it is already clear that only very scant attention will be given to the real problems that face the trade union movement today.

The stimulus given to union organization by the NRA no longer exists. Two serious strike waves were effectively checked with a corresponding set-back to the movement. This enabled the employers to proclaim more boldly their open shop policy and to resist union recognition more effectively. The effort to tie up the workers' struggles in the complicated system of governmental boards has won a temporary victory.

Failure and Disappointment

Undoubtedly, trade union membership is receding from its peak a year ago, and receding at a time when conditions were favorable for gains. The decline is most obvious in the basic and in the mass production industries. On the one hand, this is due to sheer disappointment of the workers at the failure to pursue an aggressive policy of organization; but much more disastrous in their effects were the outright strike betrayals in the automobile industry last year and in the rubber industry this year.

Even in many of the well-established unions of the skilled trades there is an appalling loss of membership due to unemployment and consequent inability to pay dues. Above all, however, the whole American wage standard is threatened by the Roosevelt coolie relief wage on the WPA projects ranging from $19 to $32 a month.

But these questions are not the ones that cause the most worry to the mandarins on the Executive Council. They have their own vested interests to protect. While they are unable to separate these interests entirely from the life and growth of the unions, what is now uppermost in their minds is reflection in the maneuvering for position that goes on behind the scenes. The Executive Council is not united. And beneath the surface of complacent tranquility the issues of the life of the movement in the sense of the positions of bargaining power afforded by an organization—the

Fur Workers Elect New Leadership

Stalinists Unite With Right Wing to Gain Control

The first elections, since unification, to the New York Joint Council of the International Fur Worker's Union have just taken place. The Stalinist leadership of the former industrial union, led by Ben Gold, was elected by a large majority. Indications are that they could have elected the whole administration had they chosen to nominate a complete slate. Their endorsement of certain "right wing" candidates and their slanderous campaign against the "Progressives" did not meet with the same success.

Despite the slanderous attack, five members of the Fur Workers' Progressive League and one member of the Furriers Unity League were elected to the Joint Council. In addition, Irving Baritz, of the Progressive League was elected as a business agent. Other members of these two groups ran well ahead of some of the "independent" and "right wing" candidates endorsed by the Stalinists.

Oppose Removals

The elections indicated, as expected, that the Stalinist "Rank and File" group has a decisive majority in the union. That majority is reflected in the new administration, and any attempt to oust the democratically elected representatives could only mean an attempt to split the union and should be opposed by every progressive force in the union, and in the labor movement as a whole.

Though opposed to any attempts by the A. F. of L. bureaucrats to oust the duly elected officials of the union, it must be stated that we have no confidence whatever in them. Past experiences with these Stalinists when they were in control of the Industrial Union show that they repressed minority group opinion in the most brutal and bureaucratic manner. Their new turn, which conforms to the opportunistic and social-patriotic turn of Stalinism on a world scale, only reveals that added to their past policies of suppression and split is a new one—that of collaboration with reactionary forces against progressives. A few quotations from their pre-election leaflets will prove this:

"We want a united leadership in our union to consist of the two main tendencies in the working class movement, namely, the right wing and the left wing." "We pledge ourselves to agitate for

AFL Crew Turns N. Y. WPA Strike Into Fiasco

Follow Their Example!

From a group of New York fur workers we have received a $10.00 greeting for the 8-page weekly. This is a splendid tribute to our press and the ideas it stands for, but it is also an example worthy of emulation by others. With such encouragement there is rich assurance that the campaign will succeed speedily and the 8-page weekly will soon be an actuality.

To date, however, we have collected only one-fourth of the funds needed. Three-fourths of the way is still to be made. This is the serious question before us. We pass it on to our comrades, our readers and our sympathizers.

Our aim with this campaign is a doubly effective and a doubly powerful NEW MILITANT. To reach this aim, we propose four weeks of concentrated efforts, in order to collect the $2,000 that is necessary.

Our New York organization is now taking the lead in such a concentrated effort, starting out with a complete mobilization of the whole membership. All will be obliged to go out and visit friends, shop-mates and fellow-unionists with contribution lists and subscription blanks, and we expect a rapid rise in the figure column and a corresponding increase in circulation. Only actual results count in this campaign.

The District Committee will take full charge. Each branch has a quota to fulfill and will keep strict account of the activity of each member. The quota for all the New York branches combined is $325.

Pursuing this course everywhere, it should be easy to collect the three-fourths still to go. We recommend it.

Four weeks of concentrated effort to go over the top in the campaign. Four weeks of active work visiting friends, shop-mates and fellow-unionists for support to the 8-page weekly. With the energy and devotion, characteristic of revolutionists, we should soon reach our goal.

Imperialist Ring Tightens Around Ethiopian Nation

By MARTIN A. GLEE

"You offer us the choice between assassination and suicide. We prefer the latter. At least, then, we shall be able to call out for help."

These were virtually the last words spoken at the most recent session of the League of Nations Council, thrown into the teeth of the chairman of the Council, Maxim Litvinoff by the Ethiopian delegate, Zeze.

And thus the matter stands to date. The choice offered Ethiopia by the imperialist bandits, aided and abetted by the representative of the Stalin bureaucracy is indeed that of "assassination or suicide."

Which road will the kingdom of the Negus take? What can its people do under the circumstances? What solution will the bourgeoisie of France and England offer through its respective intermediaries, Laval and Eden? What solution to the problem of Ethiopia can we, the proletariat, suggest? These are questions which every person conscious of the seriousness of the situation is asking.

CPS Shouts for General Strike but Does Nothing About It

By FELIX GIORDANO

PATERSON, N. J.—In an article published in the May Day issue of the NEW MILITANT we called for extensive preparations in the silk industry for the expected general strike. A resolution embodying the same program was introduced to the Joint Board, where it was killed. Now, three and a half months later, the Communist Party suddenly re-members the general strike, and just as suddenly comes to life shouting and demanding that the strike be called.

How has the strike been prepared? What has the Communist Party done to see to it that the preparations for the strike were

LIMIT WALKOUT

Sabotage Picketing While they Connive With Gen. Johnson

Due to the glaring incompetence and in many instances downright sabotage by the local trade union officials, the strike on the New York WPA projects entered its second week in a state of utter confusion. Characteristic of this state of affairs is the fact that on some of the projects, one or more of the building trades are called out while others remain at work. In other instances, one or more trades are called out and shortly thereafter told by the business agents to return and await further developments.

On the Astor project, bricklayers were called out; but on the High Bridge swimming pool project, bricklayers remained working. On the latter project, carpenters were called out one day and later told to return. Moreover, in several instances where committees of the unemployed organizations, whose cooperation had previously been accepted by the union officials, appeared to assist in calling out the unemployed, they were met by some of these officials demanding business agent's credentials, together with policemen ordering them off the projects.

Workers Want to Strike

From the outset the overwhelming majority of the approximately 100,000 workers employed on the projects, who are unorganized, proved their readiness to make common cause with the unions. This was demonstrated in face of the fact that these workers openly expressed their disappointment at the failure of the union leaders to take measures to secure home relief for those refusing to accept the Roosevelt "work or starve" edict. In a test case made one worker was granted such relief, but even this advantage was not followed up.

Reports are now current on the projects that the local union officials are backing down from their once loudly proclaimed intention to fight for the prevailing union rate of wages, and are scheming to induce General Johnson to accept the establishment of a rating board to comprise representatives of the local unions concerned. Obviously, the aim would be to secure a somewhat better rate of relief wage and drop the fight for the prevailing union wage. But hidden behind this aim lurks the danger of throwing the interests of the unorganized to the winds at a time when the most complete coordination between the unions and the unorganized is imperative.

Groundwork to Lower Standards
The failure of this coordination in the first place accounts for the utter confusion now prevalent in the strike. There exists no doubt in the trade union movement that wherever the monthly relief wage ranging from $19 to $33 prevails, the groundwork is laid for the tearing down of the whole standard of union wages. This crucial issue remains. The unions are challenged to lead the fight. The fight they can conduct effectively only through the establishment of unity of action between the unions and the unorganized project workers.

United Front Anti-War Meet in Boston

BOSTON, Mass.—On August 4, 21st anniversary of major declarations of war, a united front demonstration against imperialist war was held on Boston Common jointly by the Socialist Party, the Workers Party, the Young People's Socialist League, and the Spartacus Youth League.

The Communist Party and the Young Communist League also had been asked to join in this united front, but had replied (per Sidney Bloomfield, district organizer of the C.P., and Mac Libby, D. O. of the Y.C.L.) that they "would not enter any united front with Trotskyists," and "would rather unite with Fascists."

However, the Workers Party and the S.Y.L. are working for a United Front Sacco-Vanzetti Memorial Demonstration on August 23, and will fight for participation by ALL workers' organizations, including the C.P. and the Y.C.L.

Expulsions Hit French Socialist Youth

Bolshvik - Leninists and Zeller Group Ousted by Reactionaries

Serious events have just taken place in the French Socialist Youth. The Lille National Congress on July 28-29 has decreed the expulsion of the entire revolutionary wing.

The National Congress had been preceded in the Seine district by a Federal Congress which was held on July 21. The different tendencies were: the Bolshvik-Leninists (170 mandates); the Zeller tendency (200 mandates)—Zeller is Regional Secretary—the strongest tendency in the federation, formerly hostile to us and recently approaching us very rapidly, representing the average state of mind of the Young Socialists of the Seine; the "Spartacus" tendency, inspired by the S.A.P., composed mostly of intellectuals, most frequently living on intrigues against the Bolshvik-Leninists (90 mandates); and finally the right tendency in the Seine, Mireille-Osmiin (130 mandates) which is a Centrist group nationally.

After the Federal Congress on the 21st, which had been a great success for the Bolshvik-Leninists, and where the lies of the Stalinists against us had been exposed, their influence in general had been liquidated in the Seine, the three left tendencies (Bolshvik, Leninist, Zeller, and "Spartacus") agreed on a common motion and prepared to defend this motion in the National Congress at Lille. The main points of this motion were as follows:

Today the problem of revolution is placed before the entire working-class youth. The Young Socialists consider the People's Front as the rallying center of the exploited French masses and declare their desire to fight inside this group, but state their opposition to the political line actually imposed on the People's Front.

The Socialist Youth fights for a Workers' and Peasants' Government, supported by workers' and peasants' Communes and factory and soldiers' councils.

They struggle for bread, work, peace, liberty, by revolutionary means. They are true to revolutionary defeatism and to the teaching of Karl Liebknecht, "The enemy is in our own country."

On the International:

To guide the world proletariat in its fight against war as well as for World Revolution, a revolutionary International is necessary. This International does not exist.

The Y.S.I. is in complete decay. Most of its sections have followed their parties into class collaboration and social-patriotism.

The Y.C.I. in spite of the revolutionary desires of its rank and file, is only the docile instrument of a nationalistic diplomacy.

The Young Socialists of France will fight beside their comrades and other revolutionary sections and minorities for a Youth International on the basis of revolutionary Marxism.

This new International can only be founded on criticism of the International which have preceded it and on the lessons of past revolutionary experiences.

Beyond the Second International which collapsed in 1914 and beyond the Third International which is submerged in Class Peace we must firmly convince ourselves and the advanced workers of the need to work for the creation of a new International.

This new International will not reject everything in those which have preceded it. It will reject their mistakes, their errors, their crimes.

It will be enriched with the experiences accumulated by them. It will proclaim itself the legitimate heir of the doctrines of Marx and Engels, of Rosa Luxemburg and Liebknecht, of the example of the founders of the Third International.

The motion ended thus: our intransigent opposition to reformism and to Class Peace will not keep us from fighting for the fusion of the Communist Party and the Socialist Party and of their youth.

The Young Communist workers are our brothers. Shoulder to shoulder with them in action, discussing fraternally with all the guarantees of democracy and discipline, we will build the revolutionary vanguard.

The Bolshvik-Leninists signed this joint motion. They had also brought in a further statement on the international question, making clear their position on the Fourth International.

The National Conference at Lille

The Congress opened in an atmosphere of threats against the revolutionary majority of the Seine. Every question (division of delegates, etc.) was a pretext for provocation. An imposing group of sergeant-at-arms were massed in the Congress Hall and physical vioence was used on the delegates of the revolutionary minority (a comrade of the Seine, Bressler, member of the outgoing National Committee, the highest body of the organization was carried out of the hall unconscious due to blows received.) The young bureaucrats have learned very well the teachings of their elders.

In a more or less excited manner the debates continued Sunday and Monday (vote on the organizational report: 4,082 votes for and 1,384 votes against). Monday afternoon, at the opening of the session, discussion was immediately begun on the following motion:

"Whereas certain comrades have placed themselves on record for their affiliation to the Fourth International and this attitude is incompatible with membership in the Socialist Youth, affiliated to the Second International.

"And, whereas the systematic denigration and violation of the theoretical line of the Socialist Party as formulated by its Congresses cannot be tolerated by members of the Socialist Youth.

"And, whereas the repeated attacks directed against the best militants of the Party and of the Socialist Youth are guided solely by the well-established intention to split the Socialist organization

"The National Congress of the Socialist Youth decrees the complete dissolution of the Bolshvik-Leninist Group as a tendency within the Socialist Youth.

"Further it decrees pure and simple expulsion for comrades who, having taken an active part in this movement, have by their sectarian action contributed to the development of intolerable confusion within our organization.

"In conclusion, the congress decrees the expulsion of the responsible militants: Roussel, Van, Ivan and Maria Crapau, Braudo, Bressler, Pero, Fred Zeller, Genia, Lissansky, Makarowsky, Rigal, Corvin and of all those who in public action follow a policy in opposition to that of the Party."

Attack on Revolutionary Position

The discussion immediately opened on this motion. The attack of the bureaucracy was centered on the position taken against national defense and class peace, for revolutionary defeatism, and also against the appearance of the independent paper of the Seine Federation, "Revolution." The attack was not directed only against the Bolshvik-Leninists, but against the bulk of the majority of the Seine Federation. The International discussion had not yet come before the Congress (the pretext of "affiliation" to the Fourth International was introduced at the last moment) and among the expelled there are some who are opposed to the Fourth International.

Conciliatory attempts have been made (by Mireille-Osmiin in particular). The conservative bureaucracy attacked in haste, so that these attempts would fail.

conducted the legal defense. There was no coordination of the work in the court room with the work outside. The I.L.D. was the moving spirit in the formation of a united front for the defense of the prisoners. The united front succeeded in arousing a storm of protest from the world proletariat. From China to Argentina, there were outbursts of indignation against the capitalist colossus of the Western Hemisphere.

Protest Too Late

We, who participated in the mass movement to wrench Sacco and Vanzetti from the clutches of capitalist law, had no illusions that the overwhelming evidence of their innocence would cause the prosecution to relent. We fully understood that the American bourgeoisie, riding triumphantly the crest of a wave of false prosperity, would take vengeance on the two fearless workers in the class struggle who had dared to raise their voices for the emancipation of the working class.

The mass protest was organized too late, as the case was drawing to its close. The result was fatally tragic. Before the mass campaign could reach an intensity and strength, both in this country and on an international scale, which would have challenged the dominant capitalist class decisively, Sacco and Vanzetti heroically met their death at the hands of the agents of capitalist justice.

It is important to remember that these two martyrs to our cause had no illusions about the ultimate outcome of the case or the nature of the forces which implacably sought their doom. Sacco, especially, saw no hope in engaging in the interminable legal tangle of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence. While he understood the necessity of using the court of the enemy as a forum from which to blazon forth the irreconcilable antagonism of the proletariat, his lack of familiarity with English precluded his taking upon himself the offensive against capitalism which Vanzetti so eloquently carried on. He set himself the task, nevertheless, immediately after his imprisonment of learning English, but never achieved Vanzetti's fluency with the language. The latter has testified in one of his letters that Sacco's warm eloquence in his native tongue frequently brought tears to his eyes.

Heroism of the Defendants

Sacco several times refused to cooperate with the attorney, Thompson, who was representing them in a manner which indicated that he was more concerned with rehabilitating the reputation of Massachusetts justice than with securing the release of the prisoners. It was only at the insistence of Vanzetti, who correctly urged that the battle must be fought with whatever weapons were available that Sacco continued to collaborate with the legal defense. Vanzetti said, "why should we surrender ourselves to the enemy before we have exhausted every means of defense?" And again he said, late in 1928, "Only the thunders of a mighty worldwide agitation and protest could induce the enemy to free us."

Vanzetti never lost sight of the fact that the persecution of the two prisoners was motivated by class hatred. Tirelessly, he pointed out the essential lesson for the working class which the case provided. That he was a representative of a movement which sought the overthrow of the bourgeoisie, nationalist state, the end of imperialism, the establishment of workers' rule, the abolition of the exploitation of the many by the few. That he was being prosecuted, in reality, for his opinions and his activity in the working class movement. That the sly ferocity of the trial judge and prosecutor who convicted him, of the head of the Massachusetts branch of the Department of Justice who cooperated with the prosecution, of Governor Fuller who refused his petition for executive clemency, of the Advisory Committee selected by the Governor to sanction with their fake impartiality the vicious system that condemned him, the jury of middle-class men obedient to the dictates of the ruling class and subservient to post-war hysteria and race prejudice—that all these phenomena were to be explained as the logical outcome of the hatred and fear of the dominant class in society of the suppressed class, the proletariat. This was the lesson which Sacco and Vanzetti continually hammered home—and which they were joyful and proud to write with their blood.

Vanzetti's Immortal Words

After Vanzetti was sentenced, he was permitted, as is customary, to make a statement. His words were transcribed by a shorthand reporter. The words of Vanzetti, spoken in that incomprehending courtroom at Dedham are a never failing source of courage and inspiration to us who are carrying on their work.

"If it had not been for these things, I might have lived out my life talking at street corners to scorning men. I might have died, unmarked, unknown, a failure. Now we are not a failure. This is our career and our triumph. Never in our full life could we hope to do such work for tolerance, for justice, for man's understanding of man as now we do by accident. Our words—our lives—our pain—nothing! The taking of our lives—lives of a good shoemaker and a poor fish-peddler—all. That last moment belongs to us that agony is our triumph!"

On August 22, let all workers commemorate the deathless memory of Sacco and Vanzetti—they were of the flesh and blood of the workers. We of the Workers Party will not merely honor them with words, we will emulate them with our deeds. There are working class parties which no longer lead the struggle against imperialism war. They have left the road of unremitting struggle against war, against bourgeois democracy, the road of Lenin and Liebknecht. Conscious of our Marxist heritage, pledging ourselves to the carrying out of the teachings of Lenin and Trotsky, we proclaim our solidarity with the working class, with Sacco and Vanzetti. We urge those of our comrades who are following the road of the misleaders—the road that can lead only to bitter defeat—to ponder well the lesson of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Let us, also, on this day rally to the defense of class war prisoners everywhere. Let us remember that Tom Mooney, Norman Mini and his comrades are still in San Quentin, martyrs in the struggle against the enemies of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Fur Workers Elect New Leadership

and support right wing candidates."

At the same time the Progressive League and Unity Groups were denounced as cliques and the fur workers were called upon to defeat their candidates, Ben Gold, in a long manifesto, stated:

"I appeal to everyone of you to give the proper answer to these despicable people who have always been against unity and against one union, and who are at present continuing their malicious work against unity and one union."

This was directed at the very people who in the past were spat on and attacked for proposing unity with what Gold then called the "Scab Joint" (Furriers Joint Council).

The campaign to elect Progressives, though partially successful, was weakened by the fact that they were not in one united group standing on a clear cut program. Groups which were formed in the old Joint Council and in the former Industrial Union must now adjust themselves to the new situation. Friendly discussion on the tasks facing them and on programmatic differences dividing them, must be started at once. In this the Unity Group and the Progressive League should take the initiative.

That such a united Progressive group can and should contain members and supporters of different political tendencies, has been shown by experiences in other unions, notably the I.L.G.W.U. The narrow factional and bureaucratic control exercised by the newly elected administration majority when they led the Industrial Union, and their present efforts to unite with reactionaries against progressive forces indicates clearly that there is no time to lose in the building of a united progressive group.

A.F. of L. Skates Face Crucial Issues in N. J.

only form in which the leaders understand these issues—begins to cause a division. Today, it is expressed in the Council sessions in a struggle between the John L. Lewis wing, supported essentially by the needle trades officials, on the one hand, and, on the other, the Wm. Green section of dyed-in-the-wool craft union chiefs. Irrespective of the intentions of either side, the main issue is industrial unionism versus craft unionism.

Rubber and Auto Conventions

This is coming to a head once more in the projected national unions of the automobile workers and rubber workers. It is planned to issue national charters in the conventions that are scheduled for these unions, the former to be held this month and the latter in September. And although it is openly acknowledged in all labor circles that craft unions in these industries will be doomed from the outset, the skilled trades are already being quietly segregated into the craft union fold. The national unions would, therefore, consist practically exclusively of production workers and render them an easy prey to the powerful corporations in control of these industries.

John L. Lewis finds it possible in this situation to cover himself with the progressive mantle of industrial unionism. Essentially, however, this is merely a cover in the general jockeying for positions. Insofar as the basis issues are concerned, all the elders on the Council are guided by more weighty considerations. Above all, they fear the dissatisfaction of the rank and file workers and the possibility of control of these unions by progressive elements.

Both the automobile workers and the rubber workers have clearly expressed their desire for an industrial union. Moreover, in the present federal locals in the automobile industry, a distinctly progressive movement has been launched, receiving its impetus and drawing its inspiration from Toledo. This movement is presenting resolutions to the coming convention for an industrial union comprising all the workers in the auto and auto parts factories. It proposes measures for the election of officials from the rank and file delegates present at the convention, for limitation of salaries to be granted officials, and for prevention of any interference in the affairs of the union by paid A. F. of L. organizers, together with provisions for recall of elected officials any time it is deemed necessary. Finally, the progressive movement proposes to introduce measures for the exemption from dues payments of unemployed members and for no discrimination in the establishment of a union because of race, color, nationality, political beliefs or affiliations.

Lewis Pulling Wires

Of course, such measures are known to prove popular with the rank and file. So the Executive Council finds itself unanimous in its efforts to countermand the progressive movement. Its main attention is centered on the problem of securing control of the important elective offices for its trusted lieutenants. But behind the scenes the John L. Lewis wing pulls the strings for his separate interest in opposition to the craft union officials posing as the friend and supporter of industrial unionism. It appears that John L. Lewis has his own slate to put forward.

The deceptive motivation of the industrial union wing is even more clearly demonstrated in the case of the maritime unions. On the Pacific Coast, the longshoremen, the seamen, the marine engineers, the masters, mates and pilots, and crafts affiliated with the seamen, such as the firemen, cooks and stewards, succeeded in setting up a Maritime Federation. The progressive forces who had advocated this measure became an important factor in the leadership. So this question also looms large behind the scenes at Atlantic City. In face of the danger that the Maritime Federation may pass into the hands of a progressive leadership, unity prevails within the strategy board. It presents a solid front, extending its support to the steamship companies in the attempt to break up the Maritime Federation.

At the Crossroads

However, all these issues are tied up in one knot in the consideration given by the Executive Council to the recently united furriers' union. Shall that unification be permitted to stand? The Executive Council fears that this would be tantamount to an open recognition and an open sanction of activities by revolutionary and Left wing elements within the unions. Here is the crux of the whole trade union problem as the A. F. of L. officials see it. In this they are not in error. Fundamentally, the future of the movement depends upon which policies and what leadership prevails.

SUPPORT THE EIGHT-PAGE
NEW MILITANT.

Free the Sacramento Prisoners!

The formation of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee which was recently announced, is welcome news, indeed. Especially to the eight Sacramento "criminal syndicalism" prisoners now in San Quentin and Tehachapi, will this development give new courage.

Before the trial began in January, the International Labor Defense, informed by the Stalinist bureaucracy that some of the Sacramento prisoners had not paid the proper respect to the District Committee, sabotaged the whole struggle for their freedom. The I.L.D. not only played the case down on the publicity side, but deliberately withheld bail from 16 prisoners for six months.

Not until the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, at the request of Norman Mini of the W.P. and Caroline Decker and Jack Warnick of the C. P., entered the Sacramento struggle, did the fate of the prisoners become a matter of general interest. Since their conviction, the I.L.D. and C.P. have again played down the case. It was the N.P.L.D. which, by its highly successful Appeal Dinner in New York last month, revived the attention of the working class public, and threw the Sacramento boss press into a frenzy of fear lest the Sacramento case become a new Mooney issue.

The N.P.L.D. has also taken a leading role in setting up the new united defense committee. On it are the official delegates of the N.P.L.D., the Workers Party, the Socialist Party, the I. W. W., the League for Industrial Democracy, the National Unemployed League, the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, the Spartacus Youth League and the Y.P.S.L. The criminal syndicalism law being a threat to the entire working class, it is fitting that such diverse organizations should make common cause to overturn the infamous Sacramento verdict.

It is also fitting that the appeal struggle is being conceived of on a national scale. Hearst is shouting for a Federal criminal syndicalism law to supplement the laws now existing in a dozen or more states. The working class has the task of wiping all such legislation off the books and freeing all the victims of it. For this a national struggle is needed.

It is not surprising to read in the new committee's announcement that the I.L.D. has failed to answer letters of invitation. "That organization does not dare come before such a committee as the N.E.A.C. because of its shameful past in the Sacramento case. The Stalinist disrupters have backed down on the charge that Norman Mini is a "stoop-pigeon" but they cannot make anybody forget to sordid spectacle Stalinism made throughout the 8-month struggle preceding conviction. The alternative to admitting their past is to split the defense and commit more crimes to cover up. We may expect plenty of "covering up" from the Stalinists during the appeal fight and plenty of mud-slinging.

This should not discourage the new committee. Its policy in providing an attorney for Norman Mini and calling for the release of all the prisoners is a sound one. The working class will approve it and support it. The W.P., on its part, will back the new committee to the hilt. The fight for the release of Mini and his seven fellow-victims of the California agricultural barons is of deep concern to all class-conscious workers of the country. On to victory in Sacramento!

Imperialist Ring Around Ethiopia

justified in demanding, in a special appeal to the League that he be permitted to import arms, to be in some measure prepared for the impending combat which is taking on day by day more the character of a horrifying reality.

Fascist troops are carrying on an unceasing penetration into the Italian territories bordering on Ethiopia. Already valuable areas are being transported to the French possession of Djibuti from Addis Ababa in fear of a sudden invasion. Considerably outranked in matters of war materials, supplies, etc., it is pathetic to hear Ethiopia's hopeless plea for equal rights to arms from the very people who control them.

As stated in previous issues of the NEW MILITANT, England would like to find an "amiable" solution to the problem. The reason being that it fears the unleashing of a colonial war that may well put an end to British imperialist oppression in Africa. To a large extent that is the case with France, too. These two powers represent the largest holders of imperialist possessions in Africa. An Italian conflict may put an end to it all.

So Laval and Eden with the consent of Baron Aloisi will endeavor to come to some agreement for the "peaceful" partitioning of Ethiopia, even if they have to resort to the legality of applying treaties never recognized by Ethiopia and since repudiated by all concerned. However, even this effort may fail.

Italy is too far involved already. Some 250,000 troops are cooing their heels—if they were physically possible in arid Eritrea—waiting for orders to strike. Besides it does not seem likely that either France or Britain will grant Mussolini's demands for a political as well as economic protectorate. There is also the possibility that the three powers directly involved will decide to cut up and divide Ethiopia into three parts and thus again show to the world what an instrument for peace is the League of Nations. Maxim Litvinoff will again be able to offer his quick remedies for beligerent powers, the world will again have been made safe for peace and Stalin will rest at ease at the safeguarding of the status quo.

For a Soviet Italy

To a large extent Ethiopia stands with regard to the rest of the world in the same relation as some of the Russo-Asiatic nationalities stood with regard to Russia prior to the October revolution. Just as the Revolution emancipated the primitive, feudal and pre-feudal tribes of outlying Czarist Russia so today the emancipation of the Ethiopian people can be accomplished only by the world revolution. Concretely we mean that a Soviet Italy would be the best guarantor for a free and independent Ethiopia. Combined with a Soviet France and Britain the cultural and revolutionary development of Ethiopia would be absolutely assured.

Hence all our agitation and propaganda should be directed to those ends. While it would be impossible for us to reach the Ethiopian masses with proletarian propaganda, for the simple reason that there is no proletariat there, we can and must reach the Italian laboring masses. A time limited boycott against Fascist Italy such as was proposed by the International Communist League and printed in a recent issue of the NEW MILITANT is a concrete application of the task at hand. The boycott must however be so instituted as not to make a negative impression on the Italian proletariat. It must be as effective in its message of class solidarity with our Italian brothers as in its defiance of Il Duce.

It is important for the international boycott to get under way. Mussolini has made up his mind. The League of Nations, with Litvinoff at its head is only a cover for the international imperialist bandits. It is high time the international working class intervened.

AUGUST NEW INTERNATIONAL

IS OUT

The August issue of the NEW

INTERNATIONAL is off the press. Living up to its usual standard, this issue contains especially rich and fundamental material on topics of vital importance to the movement.

The situation in France, which is rapidly becoming the storm-center of revolutionary events, is elucidated in an Open Letter by L. D. Trotsky to the French workers. Questions of particular interest in the United States at the present time are answered in three important articles, one by A. J. Muste on the trade unions and problems of the revolution, one article by J. P. Cannon entitled "The Socialist Party at the Crossroads" and an article on the third party movement by Arne Swabeck.

Of special interest, however, will be the first contribution to a discussion submitted by Max Eastman on the subject "Marxism: Science or Philosophy?" Comrade Trotsky also contributes a second article entitled, "Rosa Luxemburg and the Fourth International." And, finally, there appears in this issue, together with other valuable material, a reply to Olgin's latest fulminations against Trotskyism.

Please remember the combination offer of $2.00 for a yearly subscription to the NEW MILITANT and NEW INTERNATIONAL still holds good for a limited period of time.

Call for Uniting Opposition Groups in Teachers Union

This is the last of a series of five articles on the situation in the Teachers Union—Ed.

Unification of opposition groups within the teachers' union!

That is the road which leads to victory over the Lefkowitz-Linville splitters!

An examination of the programs of two of the largest opposition groups in the Teachers Union—the Progressive Group and the Rank and File—will show that barring minor details both programs are in substantial agreement. Both take the same position on democracy in the union, on building the union, on mass activity, on admission of the unemployed with full membership rights at nominal dues, etc. For a long time, strong sentiment for unification inside and outside both groups have made themselves felt. This sentiment has undoubtedly grown stronger since the liquidation of the Classroom Teachers Groups.

Furthermore, the recent action of the Administration in calling for the "investigation" as a means of getting rid of the opposition has created an entirely new situation. The Administration now has the official sanction of the powerful Green-Wall bureaucracy in its campaign. It is determined to go through with its destructive course. To defeat these powerful forces, more than a united front against expulsions is necessary. It is necessary to confront the Administration, here and at the convention, as one unified opposition in order to impress upon the delegates and the leaders of the A.F.T. the fact that expulsion of the opposition which represents over 40 percent of the voting membership means the destruction of the largest local in the national organization.

A unified opposition, united on a minimum trade union program, boldly and openly confronting the convention, will constitute the strongest factor in convincing the majority of the delegates that they must reject the course of the Lefkowitz-Linville faction as destructive not only to the local, but to the national organization.

The unification of the opposition on a minimum basis has thus become the most pressing need of the hour. Upon its realization depends not only the fate of the opposition, but of the whole union as well. If this analysis is correct, and there can be no doubt of it, why then has the unification not already taken place? The answer is that factional rivalry and the desire for control outweigh, in the minds of the leaders of the two groups, their duty as trade unionists. These are the factors that have thus far blocked the road to unification.

In spite of the difficulties and prejudices which undoubtedly exist there are manifestations that these obstacles are beginning to crumble, although they have not yet been removed. The Committee for Democracy in the Union has paved the way by approaching the representatives of the groups unofficially with a proposal for unification. Mr. Hendley, the leader of the Militants, has stated that a realignment of the forces in opposition has become necessary. The Rank and File has proposed a united front in the elections for the Delegate Assembly this fall, and the Progressives have indicated that they would be opposed to it.

But these manifestations and moves are insufficient. It is necessary to move rapidly even before the convention is opened. Even though it may not be possible to reach a definitive unification before the school term begins, it is possible to arrange a tentative agreement in that direction. Recourse to technicalities or subterfuges under these circumstances may seriously hurt the chances of victory or may even prove fatal to the opposition. The leadership of the groups and their membership have an opportunity to rise to the occasion. They must utilize it. Unification of the opposition is the road which leads to victory over the Administration!

Fight for Sway In Rubber Union

convention and has a good deal of prestige. Since then he has become an A. F. of L. organizer and his position is not clear. The workers will have to prevent a split in their votes or else Claberty's candidate will win.

The progressive bloc will announce a slate of candidates this week too. A serious attempt will be made by the progressives to coordinate the local workers so that they will present a united front against the bureaucracy.

William Green is expected to preside at the convention which means that he, personally, will try to place into office a hand-picked bunch of reactionaries so he can control the rubber workers in the future. His presence will make the progressives' job more difficult but they realize it. One thing however appears certain, Coleman Claberty is definitely on his way out as rubber organizer for the A. F. of L. He has been told he will be removed by virtually every union in Akron. The Mohawk local won't let him even come to any of its meetings!

The convention must be used to place progressives in control. Then the unions must be built up so that they can wage a successful strike for wages and recognition and reduction of the speed-up.

Engrossed in the trade union work, rubber workers are inclined to forget at least momentarily the long time perspectives necessary for the rubber industry to insure the working class correct preparation for its historic task—the overthrow of American capitalism. For this the Workers Party pledges its loyal assistance and support.

'A Few Millions or a Few Marks'...No Difference!

Nazi Fictions and... Cold Facts

A few weeks ago, Ley, the notorious leader of the so-called Labor Front said in an address:

"The differences between men, as to what they consume are very small indeed. Whether you have millions or only a few marks—you can only sit on one chair, you cannot eat a whole calf at once... you can only wear one suit at a time and not twenty. Those who possess fine houses, well, they are to be envied; but they also can only be in one room at a time... all this does not matter at all. If we try to solve the labor problem from the angle of wages we are already on the wrong road."

It is possible that Ley and his nitwits believe this nonsense. They may even claim originality for this interpretation of national "socialism."

German workers, however, cannot be persuaded by this kind of propaganda. They know too well that millions of Marks, fine homes, etc. do make a difference. Their interest in wages in the face of daily price increases is serious; they have not forgotten how to bear pressure on the bosses in the days of a militant trade union policy. When the Labor Front turned them down with the remark that it "has no jurisdiction over wage disputes" 3,000 workers of the NSU works (armaments) went on strike. Nazi officials threatened dismissal and prosecution. It was of no avail. The solidarity was 100 percent effective and prevented disciplinary action. Only after the wage cut was withdrawn did the workers go back to their shops. This is not the only strike in recent weeks: 7,000 workers struck in Chemnitz (Wanderer Works (also armament factories) and also won their demands, glass-blowers in Frauenau, Bavaria laid down their tools against starvation wages.

It is significant that strikes can be organized even under the reign of terror in Germany. The official harmony of all interests, the peaceful relations of capital and labor—more and more workers discover the truth behind this smokescreen of slogans.

What happened to the profits of their exploiters while wages were slashed right and left? 79 companies reported an increase in dividend payments of 36 percent. Comparisons with profits in 1932 show the following:

Profits in Million Marks.	1932	1934
Krupp (armaments)	108	177
Mitteldeutsche Stahlwerke (Steel)	22	33
I.G. Farben (Chemical)	476	565
Opel (Auto Tanks)	25	32
Deutsche Nickel (Nickel)	2	5
Verenigte Aluminium (Aluminum)	8	24

The financing of Hitler's murder gangs proves to be a good investment of the German barons of steel, coal and chemicals. The workers have to pay the bill.

The French Trotskyists on the Conclave Against Class Peace

From La Verite

(Organ of the Bolshevik-Leninist Group in the S.F.I.O.)

"The National Conference Against Class Peace, organized by the United Committee, has been set for August 10. As has already been indicated the Bolshevik-Leninist Group (B.L.G.) is participating in the preparation of this conference.

"However, from the very outset, at the formation of the first committee we insisted in clearly stating our position as set out in the following declaration:

"Declaration of the Bolshevik-Leninist Group
"1. The declaration of Stalin signifies the abandonment of the principles of Leninism on the critical war question on the part of the Communist International.
"We steadfastly affirm our fidelity to the principle of revolutionary defeatism, and the duty of the proletarian in time of war of transforming the imperialist war into civil war. In the present epoch, every war waged by our own bourgeoisie, even if it is in alliance with the Soviet Union, remains an imperialist war. 'The real enemy' is our own bourgeoisie.

"2. To pronounce the betrayal by Stalin by asserting the necessity of maneuvering on the part of the Soviet State is to add to this crime one of deceit.

"Nobody disagrees with Lenin's statement that it is necessary for the Workers' State to utilize the contradictions among the various imperialist states. But a 'compromise' which means harnessing the French proletariat to the wheels of its own imperialist country is no longer a compromise but an act and open betrayal.

"The U.S.S.R. cannot be defended by diplomatic combinations at the expense of the revolutionary proletarian but only by the development of the world revolution.

"3. The German catastrophe had already marked the end of the activity on the part of the Comintern as far as being the vanguard of the proletariat is concerned. Today Stalin has merely signed the death warrant of the Comintern.

"It is indispensable that the new Leninist vanguard be founded on the principles of revolutionary Marxism. Its political and organizational preparations by the regrouping of the most advanced class conscious elements of the working class is the most urgent task of the hour.

"We declare: the Third International like the Second broke its neck on the question of class peace. Long live the Fourth International.

"4. While retaining its own independence and without assuming any responsibility for any other organization the Bolshevik-Leninist group intend to participate in the efforts of the 'revolutionary groups' to initiate a campaign against class peace. It hopes that the various groups taking the initiative in this direction will cooperate in an attempt to hold a united conference.

(Signed)
Bolshevik-Leninist Group"

"It is clear that for us the problem of the struggle against war is inseparable from that of the creation of the organ of the workers' struggle against capitalism. What importance can the regrouping against class peace have if it is merely to consist of organizing in order to agree on a contradictory manifesto which can be nothing but sterile?

"No, this must not be one of permitting the 'pacifists' to sing their hollow phrases or of the pure and simple trade unionists of turning phrases into an attack on Communism itself.

"Just as the only effective instrument of struggle against Class Peace was the creation of the Third International by the Bolsheviks, so too today, all the revolutionaries who really want to struggle not only by words but by deeds, are confronted with the most pressing need to reconstruct the new revolutionary world party, the Fourth International.

"The declaration and manifesto of the majority of the Unity Committee which we have not signed with the comrades of the Teachers Union (of the Red Trade Unions) and the revolutionary groups states: 'We wish to counterpose workers' unity to the splitting influence of Class Peace' which is a perfectly meaningless and confusionist declaration.

"The unity of both the Stalinist and social democratic camps is being effected precisely under the banner of class peace. It is not absolutely essential to counterpose to this organic unity of class peace the struggle for genuine revolutionary unity, that is for the new revolutionary road, the new vanguard of the proletariat.

"Those in the conference who have decided to evade the issue of the responsibility of the leadership of the parties and trade unions in the preparations of class peace would do well to ask themselves why they participate at all in this conference.

"We state categorically: this conference will be absolutely futile unless it enables the revolutionary militants to take a further step towards the creation of the one effective instrument of struggle against class peace: the Fourth International."

Expulsions Hit French Socialist Youth

Entire Seine District Supports Leaders; Pivert Urges Fight

Relatively few of the federations from the provinces were represented at the Congress. The bureaucracy had in its hands a large number of mandates, which it cast in bloc for the expulsion. It must be noted that the federations had not discussed the motion of expulsion and that the vote is completely unconstitutional. 3,667 mandates were for expulsion, 1,534 against, with 331 abstentions.

The majority of the Seine Federation, together with a dozen federations from the provinces, left the hall singing the Internationale.

After the Expulsions

Various indications lead us to believe that the top leadership of the Party (around Blum) were for a severe enforcement of the bureaucratic discipline but not for immediate expulsion. In any case the action having meanwhile been carried out by the bureaucracy of the youth allied with certain elements of the party (Lagorgette), the top leadership of the party can only greet it and acknowledge the split. Reinstatement is an illusion.

The attitude of the Seine delegation during and after the Congress was excellent. In spite of all the corridor maneuvers no cracks took place and our allies remained firmly welded around the Bolshevik-Leninists.

Upon returning to Paris we mobilized our membership to explain to the Seine district how and why the split had occurred. The anger against the bureaucracy is intense. Entire sections have declared their solidarity with the expelled. Immediately the ideas of the Bolshevik-Leninists made a strong impression on the mass of the Socialist Youth of the Seine district: the "democracy" within the party, the betrayal of the leaders, Stalinism (many Young Socialists used to refuse to employ the term "Stalinism" but now have taken it up), the merger of the two bureaucracies, reformist and Stalinist, etc.

Friday, August 2 a mass meeting of the Socialist Youth was held with 400 present. Zeller was extremely emphatic: he developed very clear conceptions on the People's Front, on the role of the two working class parties, on the national defense, on the struggle against war, the term "revolutionary defeatism" which now is only used in France by the Socialist Youth was greeted with endless applause. Finally, speaking of reinstatement, Zeller declared: "They must take us as we are, with all our ideas and our entire program." 55 out of 80 of the Seine groups were represented and the motion of solidarity was carried unanimously.

A few words on the Spartacus tendency, inspired by the S.A.P., and which was our ally at S.L.P. At the present time turbulent discussions are taking place in it. For them "the split is without perspective" and we must obtain reinstatement at any cost. Moreover the split itself is partially the work of the Trotskyists because of their factional habits, etc., and they had provoked the reformists. At the Friday meeting they were shocked at the political offensive of Zeller and its success.

At the present time a number of members of the adult Seine Federation (supporters of Zyromsky) are busy seeking a compromise. They would like to reinstate the expelled non-Trotskyists, Zeller, Corvin, etc. (out of the 13 expelled there are 8 Bolshevik-Leninists and 5 "Zellerists"), perhaps even some Trotskyists; they would throw overboard the Trotskyists who "really are lacking in tact" such as Craipeau, Van, etc., and they would make discipline a little more rigorous.

Manifesto of Struggle

Comrades,

The Socialist Youth of the Paris District have been expelled. The best among us: FRED ZELLER, ROUSSET, CRAIPEAU, BRAUD, LISSANSKY, CORNET, CORVIN, RIGAL, MARIA, with whom we are in complete solidarity have been thrown out of the organization. Simultaneously with the reinstatement of COMPERE-MOREL the whole left wing of our party is threatened. WHY?

Because at the Lille Congress of the Socialist Youth (July 28-29, 1935) as well as in all public activities they have defended our position: AGAINST ALL FORMS OF NATIONAL DEFENSE UNDER A CAPITALIST REGIME, AGAINST CLASS PEACE AS IN 1914.

We, the thousands of Socialist youth of the Paris District in solidarity with the comrades victimized for the crime of having an opinion, appeal to you.

SUPPORT US IN OUR STRUGGLE AGAINST WAR—

By demanding with us the reinstatement of all the expelled comrades.

By strengthening our organization of the Young Socialists of the Paris District, fighting against any national defense.

All comrades will respond to the appeal of Marceau Pivert, issued in his telegram of July 30: "FIGHT BACK! APPEAL TO THE PARTY! SOLIDARITY!"

(signed) Executive Committee of the Socialist Youth of the Seine District.

Some members of the Spartacus group endorse this plan. Needless to say it is doomed to the most complete failure.

Marceau Pivert, who at the present time is away from Paris, has sent letters of solidarity with the expelled. These letters, together with numerous other documents, appear in the special issue of La Verite (organ of the Bolshevik-Leninist group in the S.F.I.O.) which is now on the press.

At this writing we have not as yet received complete reports from the provinces. The Seine-et-Oise Federation, a very important one, is largely with us. Up to the present a score of federations are in their majority with us. In other places throughout the country minorities are coming to the fore. Here is a very characteristic example.

The motion of expulsion was presented to the Lille Congress by a member of the National Committee, who is from the Gard province (center of France) and naturally he cast all the mandates of his federation in favor of expulsion. Only now we have received a letter from a comrade from Gard saying that in his federation at least a third of the members were against expulsion (moreover on the basis of the lying statements of Populaire—organ of the S.P.) and that the rest had not pronounced themselves. A fair example of the "democracy" in whose name we have been expelled.

At the present time the Seine Federation, together with those expelled still occupies the official headquarters. In the coming days we are going to start a great campaign of meetings against war and national defense.

The era of democratic process in the socialist ranks is at an end. A new road to success is opened before us. It is the road of mobilizing the young workers against the betrayal now openly being prepared—the road of the FOURTH INTERNATIONAL!

Ed. Note: The French Stalinists have greeted the expulsions with "A sane political decision. . . . A healthy action."

Peace, Anti-Fascism, Stalinism

By A. J. MUSTE

From events reasonable human beings must draw conclusions. They must evaluate them and then act upon those evaluations. I wish to comment briefly on the conclusions that are being drawn and that ought to be drawn by certain groups from the present Comintern Congress and what it symbolizes and confirms as the present role of the so-called Communist parties and the C. I.

It is not necessary to dwell upon the reaction of the real intellectuals who are capable of independent thinking and of probing below the surface, whose "Marxism" if they are Marxists, is not an extraneous ornament, who are not merely sentimental or professional "friends of the Soviet Union." These elements are drawing conclusions and their conclusions will bring them to us.

Nor do we concern ourselves at the moment with the honest advanced workers or farmers who were not introduced to the revolutionary movement the day before yesterday and whose minds have not been stultified by too long a sojourn in the thought-stifling atmosphere of Stalinism. These elements will also draw their conclusions and those conclusions will bring them to us. That is already being demonstrated by the fact that the younger, more militant Socialists are coming to us and are drawing closer to our theoretical position even when they do not yet draw organizational conclusions; and by the fact that practically the whole of the former Stalinist farm leadership in three northwestern states has recently come to the W.P.

The Lovers of Peace

There are certain groups whose first reaction to the present Comintern is, however, a favorable one. One of these consists of the pacifists of various kinds, those whose absorbing concern is to prevent or put off war. In the past these elements regarded the Soviet Union itself and the Communist International as disturbing forces, against the Versailles treaty, wanting to change the status quo, etc. Now they are impressed by the "peace policy" of the S. U. and think of the S. U. and C. I. as a powerful force against war.

In effect the Comintern wants to them: "The Soviet Union says to state off war in order that there may be time to strengthen its economic regime, 'build Socialism,' strengthen the Red Army for defense against any possible Fascist attack. But while the Soviet Union opposes war for its own reasons, there is no reason why all 'lovers of peace' on whatever ground should not join hands with it for the moment." And thus the League Against War and Fascism, etc.

Few even of the more intelligent pacifists today believe that war can actually be postponed indefinitely or permanently. It is then a question of putting off the evil day a few years, a year, a few months. But what exactly does that mean in the actual situation of today? It means that the capitalist nations get a breathing space to complete their war preparations. Pacifist measures have always meant that and it is no different today. Would any major power hesitate for a single moment to embark on war if it were ready or saw a clear advantage in that course?

Disarmament
A few years ago the Soviet (Stalinist) "peace policy" was a disarmament policy. In those days, when capitalist economy was relatively stable and the political crisis not acute, the Powers could safely talk about armament reduction, etc. In that period, the war preparations appropriate to it could be carried on behind this particular smoke-screen. Where is the disarmament talk now?

Now the "peace policy" is a policy of pacts and alliances. The Powers are lining up in two groups, while feverish increase in armaments is the order of the day. This lining up of rival groups is always the signal of approaching war—not a means of staying off war.

Consider, for example, the effect in Germany of the Franco-Soviet rapprochement when it was in the making. The French course—Versailles treaty, revenge policy, maintenance of status quo, internationalism, etc.—paved the way for the nationalist reaction in Germany and eventually for Hitler. What happened when the French Imperialist government, in making its war preparations entered into a pact with the Soviet Union also? What effect does this have upon the German workers? Can it have any other effect than furnishing Hitler further support in his counter-preparations for war? Is this a "peace policy" or the time-honored way to move toward the abyss?

Consider, friends of peace, that Stalinism has worked out and is advancing a theory of two kinds of capitalist nations—aggressive and non-aggressive, bad Fascist powers and good democratic powers. Such a theory helped pave the way for war, helped to swing the workers and liberals in various countries into support of the war when it came in 1914. Inevitably it must perform the same function today.

It spreads illusions, throws up a smoke-screen behind which the armies, the guns, the gas, are prepared.

Already, as we have previously pointed out in the NEW MILITANT, the effect of such a "peace policy" has been clearly shown in the failure of the Soviet Union to avert one word of protest against the rape of Ethiopia by Italy and against the course of France and Britain in virtually abetting Mussolini's course, although Maxim Litvinov sits as a member of the Council of the League of Nations! Is this promoting peace? Is it staying off war?

Disregard the Marxist answer to these questions, on their own premises and assumptions the more intelligent liberals and pacifists cannot believe that Stalinism has a genuine peace policy, that pacts, Leagues of Nations, etc. will avail to prevent catastrophe now any more than similar pacifist measures did in 1914.

Those Who Fear Fascism
The same elements of which we have been speaking, and others as well, are disposed to think favorably of the C.P. and C.I., to support Stalinist auxiliary organizations, demonstrations, etc., even directly or indirectly, with substantial funds, on the ground that the C.P., etc. constitute a great bulwark against Fascism. A well known intellectual stated the other day that many Jewish people, even means, now follow this course.

The Comintern appears sensible and temperate. The C.P. is a less disturbing factor in the labor situation. All it asks of supporters is that they be "against Fascism." Their class and social status is not affected. They fear Fascism above all else. They welcome this ally, once so unprepossessing, now a very decent and sensible fellow. One may even get the thrill of being something of a "red" himself without making a serious commitment in associating with the C.P. of the Fourth Period!

Unquestionably all liberals, all minority racial and national groups, all who have Fascist interests, do well to fear Fascism and to welcome all allies in the struggle to ward it off in the U.S. We need not pause here to paint the horrors of Fascism. By the same token all elements do well to make sure that their course will really defeat Fascism and that their allies are Fascist—not a broken reed to lean upon!

Anti-Fascists will do well to study carefully the question on which we think we can shed considerable light, as to why the most powerful of all Communist parties, the C.P. of Germany, did not succeed in staying off Fascism there. If, for example, he C.P.'s united front-from-below policies and Social Fascism theory were partly responsible, as the C.P. itself may be thought to have admitted by its precipitate abandonment of them recently, then anti-Fascists will do well to make sure that a movement which could once make such a colossal "mistake" will not make another, that it has indeed changed fundamentally, etc. Or again, war will inevitably mean the abandonment of democratic forms and the establishment of Fascism in one guise or another. If then, as we have shown, the Stalinist "peace policy" is not what it claims to be, is Stalinism an effective and trustworthy ally against Fascism?

Fascism Concomitant of War
Fascism, we say openly, will inevitably seek to resort to Fascism when in any given nation the economic and political crisis becomes severe enough, when it is only by means of an open and brutal dictatorship that it can push down the standard of living and keep the masses in subjection. Liberals and others cling to the illusion that somehow it will be possible to go back to the "good old (democratic) times" under capitalism. But to "go back"—as Fascism does in the economic, the political, the cultural field—means, as Hitler continues to prove daily, back to the Middle Ages, to barbarism, to savagery. The one way to freedom, to advancement in civilization, is the way forward through the workers' revolution.

If now the Comintern, the would-be bearers of the revolutionary standard, also preach a merely defensive war against Fascism, also encourage the illusions that democratic rights can be retained under capitalism, that bourgeois democracies must be fought for, shall those elements which have such abundant reason to fear Fascism be deceived into thinking that this fellow who takes off his rough proletarian blouse and cap and puts on the diplomat's frock-coat and top hat, has thereby become a trustworthy ally, a safe and main bulwark against Fascism?

Once again, actual events are already giving a clear answer. The same Stalinist regime which failed to stay the advent of Hitler today stands with its French imperialist ally in preparing for war against Germany, but raises no voice against the present course of that arch-Fascist Mussolini and is fighting Fascism? Do any intelligent persons among the Jews in the U.S. or elsewhere believe for a moment that given similar conditions Mussolini's attitude toward racial, national or religious minorities would differ essentially from Hitler's? Ask the black peoples of Ethiopia if it does.

Before it is too late, let the lovers of peace and those who dread the advent of Fascism here and in other lands awake to a true understanding of the situation. Let them ponder deeply now while things still hang in the balance, while western Europe, the Americas, have a breathing spell, how war and Fascism may be snatched, and who are dependable allies, or rather leaders in that task.

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

M. V. BOSTON—
Question: What is meant by a "holding company"?

Answer: The "holding company" is one of the instruments by which finance—capital monopolies, or gains control of industries, particularly the public utilities. Usually such control is characterized by the fact that the finance-capitalists squeeze out large profits for themselves without really owning more than a small portion of the industry. This is made possible through the assistance of the government bodies, the so-called public service commissions, which practically "regulate" the utilities, but assume function so that high rates of profit are guaranteed.

This is one example of the many ways this may work. Suppose a utility, furnishing electric power and requiring $100,000,000, is to be built. The government permits the company to charge such rates for electricity that the company can earn 8 percent on its "valuation" (which is usually inflated). The promoters (read banks) sell $60,000,000 in bonds which pay 5 percent, $20,000,000 in preferred stock which pay 7 percent, and keep for themselves the remaining $20,000,000 in common stock, the holders of which control the company since common stock alone has voting power. A "holding company" is then formed which has as its function the "managing" of this $20,000,000 in stock, and $10,000,000 in preferred stock, paying 7 percent, is sold, the promoters keeping $10,000,000 in common stock for themselves. The process can then be repeated so that the promoters emerge with a new company which holds the common stock in the first holding company. By selling $5,000,000 preferred stock in this company, paying 7 percent, the total investment of the financiers is now only $5,000,000, by means of which they completely control the $100,000,000 utility, and obtain for themselves the difference between the 8 percent which is earned by the utility and that which is paid to the middle class bond-holders and preferred stock-holders. (In the example assumed this would be $2,500,000 annually on a $5,000,000 investment, or about 51 percent.) They also appoint themselves and their families to positions of high salaries, or milk the utility by buying materials at very high prices from companies which they own themselves.

It is important to note that this form of financial pyramiding depends for its stability entirely upon the fact that the capitalist government guarantees the rate of profit for the utility. The entire holding company structure would collapse if the rate of profit earned by the utilities were to fall below that required to maintain and preferred stock-holders.

Actually, the holding companies set-up is much more complicated than is indicated by our example; one holding company usually controlling a chain of utilities. In this country, only a handful of such companies, connected to the big banks, control all the utilities.

Question: What is the significance of Roosevelt's fight to prohibit the holding companies, the so-called "Death Sentence" bill?

Answer: Liberalism is the ideology of capitalism in its progressive stage, of competitive capitalism. In the epoch of monopoly capitalism, therefore, the "liberalism" of the Roosevelt government is an atavism, evidence of the fact that finance capital had so completely lost confidence in itself, as a result of the economic collapse of 1929-33, that the middle classes were able to assert themselves.

One product of the pressure of these classes upon the Roosevelt government has been to fight against the monopolies which were strangling them; the latest expression of such struggle being the fight against the holding company, monopoly of monopolies.

The political lease of life granted the middle classes was not of long duration, however. As soon as big capital had its confidence restored through a renewal of profits, it again began to breathe fire and launched an attack all along the line against that part of Roosevelt's liberalism which expressed the interests of classes opposed to it. One of the victims of this assault was the bill which would have prohibited holding companies.

Incidentally, the results of this struggle are an object lesson of the revolutionary thesis that, in the final analysis, the state power is the executive committee for managing the affairs of the ruling class: monopoly capitalism came out of the fray a victor, more strongly entrenched than ever.

The Seventh Congress of the Comintern

by J. Carlo

The Stalinist Congress of Social Patriotic Betrayal

Favors Coalition Gov'ts--Cheers "Lesser Evil"--Treachery Rules

By JOSEPH CARTER

The tragedy known as the Seventh Congress of the Communist International is now being enacted in Moscow. The stage settings were carefully prepared; the actors well primed. The world capitalist press laughs at the farce while the militant workers are amazed at the social democratic theme songs which the Comintern has accepted: social patriotism, social patriotism, capitalist coalition governments.

"No single previous congress has revealed such ideological and political unanimity as this," proudly proclaims Dimitroff, giving eloquent testimony to the hand-picked nature of the Congress delegates. What was once the world staff of international working class revolution has now become a chorus for acclaiming the infallibility of Stalin.

Despite the tragic defeats of the past years, Stalin has constantly postponed the Seventh Congress of the Comintern. Though its statutes call for a congress every two years, the Third International congress is now meeting for the first time in seven years. Not even the destruction of the German working class organizations by Fascism, which impelled the Labor and Socialist (Second) International to hold an immediate congress, could cut short the criminal policy of Stalinism and lead to a congress which would put an end to its fatal course.

The Stalinists feared a Congress. Immediately following the German debacle the leading theoretical organ of the French Communist Party carried "critical" articles of the German Communist Party. These were denounced as "Trotskyist." Doriot, leader of the St. Denis section of the Communist Party, drew some of the more obvious lessons from the German catastrophe—only to find himself expelled. In Czechoslovakia leaders of the Communist Party mildly questioned the course of their German comrades—and were quickly quieted.

The "New Course"

Once "unanimity" was restored, the Thirteenth Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern (December 1933) decided that the Seventh Congress would be held "during the second half of 1934." However, this date and several others later set were also postponed. The reason: Stalin was preparing a "new course": the Franco-Soviet Pact was in the making. Once signed and then reinforced by the infamous Stalin-Laval communique, one other task had to be completed before the Congress could be held, viz., an agreement with the French Social Democrats for organic unity between the Socialist and Communist parties with the proviso that the "Trotskyites" be expelled from the Socialist party and the Young Socialist League. This achieved, the settings were completed for the Seventh Congress.

The speeches at the Congress more or less repeated what the director had ordered. In the name of a rejection of "stereotyped phrasology, pedanticism, and doctrinarism," the essentials of revolutionary Marxism, abandoned in practice by Stalinism a long time ago, is now overthrown even as to theoretical formulations.

Dimitroff summarizes the "new task": "We must learn to interlink the tremendous doctrine of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin with Stalinist determination, with irreconcilability of principle against the class enemy and deviations from the line of Bolshevism, with Stalinist intrepidity in the face of difficulties and with Stalinist revolutionary realism." (Daily Worker, August 15, 1935).

Let us examine this "Stalinist revolutionary realism."

The Struggle Against Fascism
Wilhelm Pieck in his opening address declared:

"It is not immaterial to us what political system rules this or that country. Where parliamentarism and remnants of democratic freedom exist, there in spite of capitalist interference, where it is possible for open fighting organizations of the proletariat to exist, there we defend parliamentarism and democracy against fascism and continue to struggle for the proletarian dictatorship." (Daily Worker, July 27, 1935).

This from a leader of the German Communist Party who yesterday denounced as "counter-revolutionists" those who called for a working class defense of democra-

Abe Cahan Hails the Seventh Congress

Ed. Note: The Jewish Daily Forward, organ of the most outspoken Right Wing section of the Socialist Party, the following significant quotation from an editorial with the very significant title, "A Correct Word from Moscow at Last":

"At the congress of the Communist International in Moscow, Dimitroff made a speech on Wednesday on the sudden turn of the communists towards democracy, and according to the report in yesterday's Times he spoke as follows:

"In many countries the workers are no longer confronted with a choice between communism and democracy, but between democracy and Fascism and the communists therefore must support democracy."

"A correct word comes from Moscow at last, an openhearted declaration that in many countries there cannot now be any talk of communism any longer, and that there is no such thing there, that there are in these countries only two issues, democracy and Fascism."

How is bourgeois parliamentarism to be defended against Fascism? By an "anti-Fascist people's front." Not the united front of the working class organizations for the defense of democratic rights, the arming of the people, the organization of workers' militia against Fascism but a bloc of workers' organizations with capitalist parties for the defense of parliamentarism. The model is the French People's Front: the bloc with Daladier and the Radical Socialist Party. Daladier who, although he had a parliamentary majority behind him, on February 6, 1934 capitulated before the Fascists! These are the warriors against Fascism!

The People's Front is to struggle for governmental power. Dimitroff told the Congress:

"A situation may arise in which the formation of a government by the proletarian united front or anti-fascist People's front is not only possible but necessary, even before the revolutionary seizure of power by the proletariat. At the appropriate moment the Communist Party, supported by an upsurging united front movement, will seize the initiative in forming such a government. The Communist Party will actively support such a government if the government has a platform

"We sign this declaration with both hands, only with two reservations. One is that not only can there be no question in those countries about communism, but that there never was, even in the years when the communists were blowing the trumpets to bring the news that communism on a white horse is at the gates of the city."

"The second reservation is that if there is at present any question between democracy and Fascism it is thanks to the communists."

Against Fascism and reaction regardless of whether the Communist Party enters into the government or not." (Daily Worker, July 27, 1935.)

Support of a bourgeois "anti-Fascist" government! Nay, even participation in such a capitalist coalition government!

And in preparation for such a "people's government" the Communist parties are to seek organic unity with the Socialist party. Even for the United States this step is contemplated. Earl Browder informs the Congress that: "In the process of the struggle we will eliminate the prejudice among the Social Democratic masses that the Communists are splitters of the labor movement, we will further their healthy desire for unity, and discuss with them the question of organizationally uniting all the adherents of socialism." (Daily Worker, August 13, 1935). The time worn centrist prattle of organic unity of "adherents of socialism" is now the slogan of the Stalinists!

Fascism and Struggle Against War

On the struggle against imperialist war, the Seventh Congress again repeated the social patriotic program of social democracy. Pieck declared:

"Should German fascism attempt to conquer the small European states, their war against Fascism will be a righteous war which we will support."

What is this but a plagiarism from the Vanderveldes and De Muns, the Belgium patriots? But, the Stalinists reply, in the last war the small nations were pawns in the hands of the imperialist powers. Quite right! And what reason is there to believe this, a war of German Fascism against the small nations today will not involve imperialist powers on both sides?

But, they reply, German Fascism's attack on the small nations is the first step towards an attack on the Soviet Union. Quite true. However, if France, despite the contrary assertion by Maurice Thorez, is an ally of the Soviet Union, the war will be an imperialist war in so far as imperialist France is concerned.

In his War and the Second International (1916), Lenin made this clear when he declared:

"In brief, war between imperialist great powers... or a war in alliance with such powers, is an imperialist war." Perhaps for the Stalinists this is "stereotyped phrasology, pedanticism and doctrinarism"! For Marxists it is an essential of the revolutionary program against war.

The French Stalinists are ready to support imperialist France if it is allied with the Soviet Union against Fascist Germany. "Defense of democracy against Fascism," "national defense of our country" are now the joint slogans of Stalinism and Social Democracy.

Only yesterday, after Hitler's victory the Thirteenth Plenum of the Comintern (December 1933) declared in its theses:

"The French Socialists (as well as the social democrats of Czechoslovakia, Poland, etc.) carrying out the 'sacred unity of the nation' under the slogans of 'defense of democracy,' and 'defense against German Fascism,' actively participate in the preparations for war against Germany."

Perfect! And now the French Communist Party accepts the same program and proposes organic unity so that the "sacred unity of the nation" can be more effective! The Stalinists, whether French, Czechoslovakian, Polish, German, of American now speak about "our country" in the same sense as the social democrats. The dictum of Marx that the working class has no country under capitalism has been replaced by the social patriotic nationalist conception.

Amid Hymns of Praise for Stalin 'the Great' another 1914 Emerges

Even the Stalinist Sixth Congress of the Comintern (1928), in its resolution on war, declared on this score:

"The proletariat has no country until it has captured political power and has taken the means of production from the exploiters. The expression 'national defense' is nothing but a catchword, and mostly a petty bourgeois catchword to justify war."

The Stalinists further consider, for example, that the French army, could be supported if the Fascist officers are ousted. The same theses of the Sixth Congress stated:

"In imperialist states the attitude of the proletariat towards armies is determined by the following:

"No matter what their form of organization may be, armies are a constituent part of the bourgeois state apparatus, which the proletariat, in the course of its revolution, must not democratize, but break up."

To repeat this conception in the French Communist Party today is considered "anti-Soviet" and sufficient grounds for expulsion!

"Organizational Decentralization"
The Congress resolution on Pieck's report contains the following instructions to the Executive Committee:

"While shifting the main stress of its activity to elaboration of the fundamental political and tactical lines of the world labor movement, to proceed in deciding any question from the concrete situation and specific conditions obtaining in each particular country and as a rule to avoid direct intervention in internal organizational matters of the Communist parties."

The aim of this section is twofold: first, to permit the Communist parties in different countries to pursue diverse tactics depending upon the division of nations into

"pro-Soviet" and "anti-Soviet"; and second, to permit organic fusion with the Socialist parties, leading to the organizational liquidation of the Comintern, at least in its present form.

The second aim is brought out clearly in the statement of Dimitroff in another connection:

"We are even ready to waive the formation of Communist fractions if necessary in the interests of trade union unity." (Daily Worker, August 15, 1935.) Already, the provision for the prohibition of political groups in the trade unions have been accepted by the French Stalinists as a condition for unity between the reformist and Stalinist unions in that country. Trade union fractions have always been considered a principle of revolutionary party organizations. It still remains a principle. But the Stalinist parties are no longer revolutionary organizations!

Social patriotism, class collaboration, ministerialism or capitalist coalition governments, these are the policies of Stalinism! Treacherous betrayal of the working class can be the only result; betrayal on a far larger scale than we have witnessed in the last ten years of Stalinism. Only one instrument can stop such betrayal: the world party of revolution, the Fourth International.

Around this banner, tens of thousands are already rallying. The proceedings and decisions of the Seventh Congress will open the eyes and minds of thousands of others. It is becoming clearer to the more advanced workers that the Comintern is no longer the International of Marx and Lenin.

Dillon to Pack Convention of Auto Workers

Faker 'Somewhere in the West' Organizing Sky Blue Locals

By BURKE COCHRAN
TOLEDO, Ohio, Aug. 19.—Dillon and Co. are girding their loins for the convention of the automobile workers to be held in Detroit, Aug. 26-31. The usually quiet office of Dillon at the Hoffman Building is bustling with activity. Dillon himself is reported to be "somewhere in the middle west." We are informed he will visit Cincinnati, various points in Wisconsin and also St. Louis.

The pleasant news is also released that in the last few weeks the American Federation of Labor has granted charters to two "large" locals in Detroit, while a third "large" local has applied for a charter and will receive one in time to participate in the convention. This epic campaign of organization has not been confined to Detroit alone. Several cities in Wisconsin, in South Bend, Richmond, Ind., Waukegan, Ill., Cleveland, Ohio, Grand Rapids, Mich., Birmingham, Ala., etc. etc. have had new locals formed recently.

Toledo, because of the successful battles waged at Auto-Lite and the Chevrolet plants, has developed a comparatively strong and large progressive group, and to challenge the rotten "leadership" of Dillon. Toledo has therefore become in a certain sense the beacon light for the automobile workers throughout the country. Therefore the Toledo progressives had to be kept out of Detroit at all costs. Therefore even the discredited former business agent of the Toledo federal local 18394 was used by the executive board to put through the motion to have convention delegates hand-picked by the executive board. The president of the union refuses to allow any democratic discussion on the floor; all motions are ruled out of order; the convention call is not even read and twenty cops are stationed at the entrance of the union hall to terrorize the membership and to prevent any distribution of the progressive program.

The Flint Bulek local, it will be recalled, wanted to strike in solidarity with Toledo, during the Chevrolet strike. Dillon had a pretty hard time keeping them out of the fight. It was rumored that some progressives were gaining influence in the Flint local. Therefore one of the militants, Killinger, is brought up on charges by Dillon. The executive committee drops the charges; Dillon proceeds to read him out of the union. No trouble-makers from Flint must be permitted to disturb the convention at Detroit.

Labor Strikes "Not Interesting"
The progressives are demanding an international union with full jurisdiction over all who work in or around automobile or automobile parts plants. This program is (Continued on Page 2)

Congress Passes Harmless Social Security Program

Big Business Unconcerned About Bill; Completely Ineffectual in Improving Workers Conditions; Passes Burden Onto Labor

By A. J. MUSTE

The Roosevelt administration attaches great importance to the passage of the Social Security Bill last week. The measure provides for federal subsidies for unemployment insurance, the setting up of an old age pension system by taxation of employers and workers, special subsidies for aged persons not covered in the contributory plan and subsidies for certain forms of child welfare.

It is set forth by the administration as a partial but substantial redemption of its pledges to do something for the "forgotten man" and to keep the big fellows in their place though not destroying the foundations of the capitalist system itself. It is expected to be a vote-getter for Franklin D. in the 1936 elections. If the Supreme Court should declare this and other New Deal measures unconstitutional, Roosevelt still has his choice of campaigning next year as the champion of the masses against the reactionary few for a constitutional amendment; or if economic conditions are fairly good and discontent not sharp, forgetting about the whole business and campaigning as the man who brought back prosperity and did his best for the plain people.

Neither the present Social Security measure nor the other laws enacted by Congress in the closing days of its long session will do anything to relieve immediate distress. Not until the first of next year does a 1 percent tax on pay-rolls for unemployment insurance go into effect and the full 3 percent tax does not go into effect until January 1, 1938. The contributory old age annuity tax does not go into effect until January 1, 1937. Even after the tax goes into effect it will be some time, of course, before any benefits obtain. So far as the present and immediate future go the hammering away at wage standards via the WPA and other channels is the Rooseveltian gift to the masses. Social Security legislation is a cover under these conditions for the wage-cutting campaign. Little wonder that as the business organs report, no particular enthusiasm is being displayed by the workers over the passage of the act.

Big Business Indifferent
As for the business interests, they are expressing comparatively little alarm over this legislation. They are much more concerned about the measures relating to banking, security and public utilities which Congress is threatening to pass and which might in some slight degree interfere with the piling up of profits and with the "right" of private business to "manage its own affairs." There is good reason for the absence of intense alarm over the social security legislation. In the first place, as we have already pointed out, it is some time before these measures go into effect. In the second place, the (Continued on Page 3)

Farmer-Labor Mayor Again Gives Scabs Police Protection

By Northwest Correspondent

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 19.—Early this morning a mass picket line of five hundred workers battled with police as the latter escorted scores of strike-breakers into the Strutwear plant, where a strike of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers has been on since last Friday.

Roy Weir, organizer for the Central Labor Union in Minneapolis, has been acting as organizer at the Strutwear factory. Weir has been messing around with the situation for months, in a half-hearted, vacillating manner. Finally his hand was forced by the firing of eight union men by the company, with the result that the strike was called without adequate preparation or plan. The blame for the state of affairs is by no means all Weir's, however. Casebeer, an International official of the Hosiery Workers, has been in town for several days now, appearing at union meetings and on the picket line. Casebeer seems to be walking around in a daze, and clings to a policy even more vacillating and aimless than Weir's. Some local workers claim that, for an international official, this man certainly cuts a sorry figure. Others claim that for an international official, he is pretty good.

Last Thursday night it was finally announced that the strike would be called the following morning. Word was sent around, and on Friday morning enough pickets were on hand to block off any attempt on the part of the management to open up the plant. The Strutwear plant (which for years has followed a notorious anti-union and low-wage policy) employs about 1,100 workers, mostly young girls. The eight men who were fired, all skilled machine tenders, form the nucleus of the union. About ninety more workers had signed applications to join the union up to last Friday. Since then scores of other workers have come into the union, chiefly the men workers who do the skilled work of machine tending.

After Friday's skirmish, the plant was quiet over the week-end, though it was continually patrolled by a slight picket line.

Police Open Fire

At 5 o'clock Monday morning the picket line began to form around the entrance of the plant. By 6:30 there were 550 pickets and a good sized crowd in the square. The cops began to arrive in their squad cars, until there were 80 or so policemen on hand, the entire shift. Also there appeared on the scene one of the handsome brown armored cars which the police have insisted were purchased by the city solely to protect payrolls in transport.

Scores of 574 men were on the line, from both the General Drivers and the Federal Workers sections. (Continued on Page 2)

Writer Describes Crisis in Italy on the Eve of the Fascist Adventure in Ethiopia

By J. P. MARTIN

PARIS, July 24.—It is now as clear as day that no "compromise" can avert Mussolini's war in Ethiopia. Is this because of the grand manner of Mussolini or because Mussolini is less "peaceful" than the other statesmen? In fact, if one considers the new Italian campaign in Ethiopia from the juridical point of view, and were to take seriously the initial pretenses, that is to say, the so-called frontier incidents, the insults to the Italian flag and so forth, then Mussolini's undertaking does not appear as a reckless adventure. Millions are not spent nor are thousands of soldiers sacrificed 4,800 kilometers from home for the "honor" of the flag. The bourgeoisie itself scorns such child's play. The truth is that Mussolini would have delayed still further before taking this road, if the difficulties of the internal situation had not impelled him in that direction. It is in this situation that we must seek the causes of the new Italian campaign in Ethiopia and not in the incidents at Ual-Ual or in anything else.

Negro Clerks Upset History

CHICAGO, Ill.—The old story in Negro labor history where the Negro, refused admittance into trade unions has taken his stand with the boss to help defeat organized labor, is being reversed in Chicago today.

In a locality where organized labor has been disintegrating for several decades, Retail Clerks Union 901-B exists as one of the few bright spots. In the period following the inauguration of the "New Deal" several locals of the Retail Clerks Union were established in Chicago. Of all of them the only one to survive and prosper was Local 901-B, which was originally laid out to be a Jim Crow local. Because its sister locals have died natural deaths it has fallen heir to a wider field of action, and although predominantly Negro in composition, it contains an increasing number of white clerks and has lost its "Jim Crow" status.

The most interesting phenomena in this connection is that in a great many cases Negro union clerks have refused to work in stores where the other employees (often white) have been non-union. In many cases these white clerks siding with their white boss against their fellow workers have played the role of scabs. In all cases Retail Clerks Union No. 901-B has failed to lose a single fight in which it was involved. In most cases where an independent store is involved, an hour's picketing in the morning during which all deliveries of bread, milk, ice, and meat are stopped, is sufficient to bring the boss to terms.

The educating of these young workers in the role that they must play as militant trade unionists is being intelligently handled by its president, J. L. Kelly (Negro), and its organizer, F. W. Simington (white). (Continued on Page 2)

Duce Marches Full Speed to War in Africa

Only the International Working Class Can Defeat Him

By MARTIN A. GLEE

Not since the year 1914 has the world been so close to an armed struggle for imperialist conquest as it is today. The stage is all set. Mussolini is prepared to strike. (Nothing will stop him. Late reports record the news that an Italian consul has been shot in Ethiopia. The record of pre-August 4, 1914 is again blaring forth its raucous tunes: War! War! War!

The vain and impossible efforts of the League of Nations to stop war has again been proved to the hilt. The Franco-British-Italian "peace" committee has collapsed. It has been impossible to reconcile the irreconcilable. If Mussolini has not struck till now, it is not because of man-made agencies that has prevented him from so doing, rather it has been nature in the form of drenching rains and muddy trails that has kept it Duce's belligerency at bay. But now the rainy season in Ethiopia is almost over. In September the rain-soaked clouds will clear. It is then that fascist Italy will attempt its conquest in East Africa.

British Hypocrisy

Here it is necessary to emphasize again that this conflict cannot be localized. Too much imperialist booty is at stake. Too many contending influences are at play. Britain, because it has most to lose from an Italian conquest of Ethiopia, has made every effort to content Mussolini with practically unlimited economic control of most of Ethiopia; but Mussolini wants all. So it is hoping for a speedy solution by Italy before the colonial masses of Africa are aroused and before the Italian masses at home throw off the yoke of Fascism. Hence its hastily convened Cabinet decision to let things remain as they are with the arms embargo against both Italy and Ethiopia standing. Such an embargo can only be an aid to Italy and a blow to Ethiopia. Italy has arms and means of manufacturing more. Ethiopia needs arms, has no means of manufacturing any and so the equitable embargo is only a piece of Anglo-Saxon fakery disguised under the name of "equal justice for all."

Meanwhile the Giornale D'Italia, fascist mouthpiece, has declared that any effort at applying sanctions (penalties for treaty violations) by England will be treated as a declaration of war! French anxiety over the maintenance of the status quo in Europe, entirely favorable to her, accounts for her seeming neutrality with regard to Italy's desire in Africa. England's decision to leave the matter for League action on September 4, was probably due to just such pressure from France.

U. S. "Neutrality"

Italy's decision to act has already had its repercussions here in the United States. The "keep-the-U.S. out-of-war" crowd is going through the same antics as in the years immediately prior to 1917. The U. S. is going to be "neutral" for six months. In reality this "neutrality" is designed to benefit Italy. Neither the wolf nor the lamb shall be added in the proud decision. That is, aided by federal means. For there is nothing in the bill to prevent private banking firms from extending loans nor industrialists from shipping non-warlike materials such as steel, scrap iron, etc. to whoever has the cash or the proper credit.

Red Scare in Akron Heralds Convention

By RICHARD FERGUSON

AKRON, Aug. 19.—Having carefully laid the groundwork in its campaign against all progressives in the rubber unions by a top-head-line blast: "Bar All Reds From International" in the Summit County Labor News, the A. F. of L. bureaucracy yesterday succeeded in outmaneuvering progressives at the Goodyear local, and secured the election of its own slate of "level headed" delegates for the convention to establish a rubber workers International on September 12.

By utilizing a handful of misguided officials of the local who accused the progressives of "disrupting" the union, which has been so consistently betrayed by the A. F. of L. bureaucrats for over a year and a half with their sabotaging tactics of stalling and actual sell-out, the A. F. of L. "leadership" has shown just what sort of an international they hope to "give" the rubberworkers. The old trick of rounding up members who have long been inactive in the union for this special occasion to get their three delegates elected, was also successful. The progressives got two candidates as alternates.

Unionists in the other rubber locals in the city will profit further from the experience of their fellow progressives at Goodyear, for it is generally conceded that Coleman C. Claherty, rubber organizer, deliberately picked on Goodyear as being the weakest link in the progressives' chain.

The prospects of electing several progressive delegates from the Firestone and Goodrich unions are good, and with the help from at least three other, but smaller, progressive-controlled unions which have had even more bitter experience with Claherty, these delegates should put up a real fight. Information from the union in the deep south and far west indicate that these locals have suffered heavily from the demoralization following the April sell-out agreement.

Don't Get Old in Missouri!

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—You can get a pension in the state of Missouri if (1) You do not starve to death or commit suicide before you reach the age of 70; (2) If you have been in the state at least (!) nine years and (3) If you can prove that you are destitute and in need of it.

This reactionary piece of legislation, which apparently sprang full blown from the Chamber of Commerce and its tools, the corrupt capitalist politicians, is hailed by the local A. F. of L. press as a great "victory" for the workers and a step forward in the legislative program for "social betterment."

The amount which the lucky ones are going to receive is $45 a month for couples and $30 a month for single persons. Six bits a day for the few days they have left after 70 as compensation for the many years of back-breaking toil they have rendered in producing wealth for parasites while eking out a bare existence for themselves—such is the reward that capitalism offers its worn out slaves when it can no longer grind profits from them in the industries.

Thousands Rubbed Off

Needless to say, there are thousands of working class mothers and fathers who will get nothing. They will be unable to prove their "worthiness" to the "expert" social workers who will take their applications. Many thousands of such old workers are not even getting relief, the discrimination against them being equal to that practised against the young workers.

And, of course, the nine years' residence in the state qualification will rule out thousands just as it (Continued on Page 3)

Retain Henderson in Sacramento Appeal

NEW YORK CITY.—Raymond W. Henderson, noted labor attorney and a member of the State Executive Committee of the California Socialist Party, has been retained an appeal counsel for Norman Mini, San Quentin Prisoner 57608, according to an announcement made yesterday by Herbert Solow, secretary of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee.

In addition to providing Mini's counsel, the committee advocates release of his seven fellow-workers also railroaded by the Associated Farmers Inc. under the notorious California criminal syndicalism law because of union activities. Mini was defended in trial court by Albert Goldman of Chicago, retained by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense. The latter organization is now associated in the National Sacramento Defense Committee with the Socialist Party, General Defense Committee, Workers Party and other organizations.

Henderson is one of the country's leading experts in criminal syndicalism defense. He was the foremost defender of I.W.W. members against frame-ups under this law 15 years ago and also played a leading role in the Imperial Valley cases a few years ago.

"We will not stop with retaining Henderson," Solow stated in announcing the committee's action. "Nobody can present the legal case better than he, but the court which is keeping Tom Mooney in San Quentin does not consider legal arguments by themselves. The judges want to know whether there is popular demand for the release of these innocent young men and women. Our committee will try to rally unions and all opponents of reaction to give dignified, aggressive expression to their feeling against the criminal syndicalism law and the frame-up perpetrated under it in Sacramento by the anti-union conspirators."

As its first step in popularizing the Sacramento appeal issue, the defense committee will issue a five-cent pamphlet on the history of the case, to be circulated by the organizations constituting the joint defense body. The committee has established headquarters at 41 Union Square, Room 707, where further information may be obtained.

this personal plea. I am in desperate need of funds for the finishing of this fight, and I am asking you if you won't help me meet my legal expenses before the California Supreme Court—and the United States Supreme Court in the event that it becomes necessary.

I owe five thousand dollars, and it is ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY that I raise sufficient funds to finish this fight for my vindication. Last week I was down to my last penny, and had to secure a loan of five hundred dollars so that the attorneys could proceed with the taking of the depositions of the witnesses who are in the East and unable to appear before the Court.

Your loyal support has always touched the deepest emotions in my heart and it is with sincere regret that I am compelled to call upon you for financial assistance—which I will use for legal work exclusively.

Spartacan Troupes Stalinist
In First Debate in Middle West

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 7.—In the presence of 40 youth from the Calumet vicinity, the Mid-West Spartacus Youth League and the Young Communist League of District 8 staged a debate on Wednesday, Aug. 7, at Indiana Harbor, Indiana, on the subject, "Resolved: The Trotskyists are not counter-revolutionary." Al Garber, regional educational director of the S.Y.L., upheld the affirmative and the Y.C.L. Gary organizer spoke for the negative.

Goaded on by the continual taunts of Spartacus, as well as innumerable challenges, and bolstered by Olga's recent spurious pamphlet on Trotskyism, the Young Communist League was finally pushed to the wall and forced into a debate before a class in Indiana Harbor conducted by the Spartacus Youth League. This was the first time in the history of the Mid-West S.Y.L., and probably the first time nationally, that the Young Communist League debated with the Spartacus.

Starting with the theory of permanent revolution and proletarian internationalism, comrade Garber pointed out how the Communist International since the death of Lenin had so deviated from its original principles that today it stood side by side with the social-patriotic Second International. He illustrated the effects of socialism in one country on the revolutions in Germany, 1923; China, 1925-27; England, 1926; Germany, 1933 and France, 1935, bringing the affirmation of history to the fact that the Stalinists are the organizers of defeats. As a result the organization of the Fourth International and a new Youth International, based on the principles of Marx and Lenin, now directly poses itself to the world working class.

Puny Stalinist Arguments
The only recourse the Y.C.L. organizer had was vilification and slander. He stated the usual Stalinist idiocies about Trotskyism being counter-revolutionary and pet bourgeois. Trotsky, he pointed out, underestimated the peasantry, refused to be disciplined by the Bolshevik party, was not the head of the Red Army nor the co-organizer with Lenin of the Russian revolution. And finally he asserted that Trotsky, if not directly responsible, was at least indirectly implicated in the murder of Kirov. The high point of the Stalinist's speech was reached when he denied the existence of a pre-revolutionary situation in France.

In the rebuttal the S.Y.L. called the lie to these glanders and quoted Lenin to prove the presence of a pre-revolutionary situation in France. The humorous touch was added to the debate when, after the Y.C.L. rebutted, a member of the

Dunne Slugged
In Clash in Mpls.
Hosiery Strike

Once a crowd of pickets broke through the cops' line and sought to prevent the scabs from entering the plant. Dunne was singled out from the pickets near the door of the factory and was whipped inside the plant by the cops. There he was slugged across the head, thrown across a table in such a manner that several ribs were broken, and then thrown down on the floor and choked.

Later the police patrol arrived on the scene to take Dunne to jail. However the crowd threatened to upset the patrol car, so it was taken away. Finally Dunne was whisked out the back door by the cops, thrown into an armored car and taken to jail. The Local 574 leader was later transferred to the General Hospital where his wounds were treated. After vigorous protest by Local 574, Ray Dunne was released late in the morning on bail furnished by the General Drivers Union.

At one time in the melee, a cop was trying to escort a scissorbill into the plant. The crowd surged around him and the cop drew his gun and fired a shot, but hit no one. One of the office workers of the Strutwear Company, who was actively herding scabs, was beamed with a brick thrown by some one in the crowd. The cops used their saps liberally in trying to break up the picket line. They showed more courage than usual, fortified, no doubt, by the appearance of the armored car with its nest of machine guns.

Farmer-Labor Mayor Sets Record
In the few short weeks that he has occupied the office of Mayor, Latimer, the Farmer-Laborite, has established a record for himself and his administration. This is the second time in the past month that the local police have been used to escort flunks into struck plants. A few Fridays ago Latimer appeared on the picket line at the Flour City plant, where an iron workers' strike was (and still is) in progress, and personally escorted some thirty scabs into the plant with the help

Walter Sukut Dead

Word has come to us of the death of Comrade Walter Sukut of Waukegan, N. Dak. He succumbed a few weeks ago to a heart attack. This is the reason given for his death, but in reality he succumbed to an illness contracted over a long period of time working in one of the Chicago capitalist hell-holes—a red lead factory. When employed there, he was given regular physical examination but at the time of his last examination in 1930, he was laid off. Undoubtedly, the cancer gnawing at his vitals had already progressed far at the time.

Comrade Sukut died a victim of capitalist exploitation. He was a sterling revolutionist, active for years in the general working class and revolutionary movement, and joined the Communist League of America shortly after its formation. He remained an active supporter of the Workers Party from the time of its formation.

OUL March in Bryan
Ohio Wins Relief

BRYAN, Ohio.—A hundred unemployed workers with their families marched on the relief office of Williams, Ohio, last Thursday protesting the inadequacy of the relief and the starvation that was impending if the relief was not increased. This was the largest delegation so far marshalled in this community under the leadership of the Ohio Unemployed League. A meeting took place with Mr. H. M. Brannan, the relief director, and Sam Pollock and George Cole of the Ohio Unemployed League participating.

Mr. Brannan suggested that due to prevailing conditions a man should work for what he could get. Some farmers were willing to pay as high as fifty cents a day, and Mr. Brannan said that they should take it. Sam Pollock explained that the American worker had built up a decent standard of living through years of militant struggle and that this was an attempt on the part of the authorities to lower the standard to that of the coolies. Mr. Brannan said this was communistic talk. Pollock replied, that wanting to eat "was not communistic."

Only five thousand dollars has been the amodit received for the month of August, whereas for the month of July ten thousand had been granted. The eight hundred dollars left over was given out for grocery orders and medical attention. A resolution was adopted at the end of the demonstration, for direct relief, immediate provision for dental and medical care, for clothing, WPA jobs at union wages and supplementary relief to part time workers.

If this is not granted they will be back again next week.

The Manager's Corner

This week we sound the alarm. The campaign for the eight-page weekly is lagging seriously. We are still below one fourth of the total sum required to launch the expanded issue. Very soon the first issue must appear and it is dangerous to delay the collection of the funds necessary.

Not only is the campaign lagging, but instead of a continuous rise in returns on this account, there has been a drop during the last few weeks. During the week ending August 3 we received in contributions, advance subscriptions, club subscriptions and greetings a total of $86.85. During the week ending August 10 the total dropped to $2.60, the week ending August 17 recorded a further drop to a total of $32.50 and this week the total is $32.00.

In regard to this situation we address ourselves primarily to the party branches. A good many of them have given us information of pledges made but the returns have not come in. The building up of the party press, however, cannot be delayed. If we mean it seriously a complete change in regard to responses is necessary. From the New York district we expect the lead. Comprehensive plans have been worked out but they still have to be carried into actual life.

In the second place we address ourselves to our sympathizers and readers. We know that they are all vitally interested in the improvements planned for our press, but we also count upon them to help make it possible by material assistance.

Contributions received from the party branches have brought the Harlem branch up to a point of close competition with the Boston branch. The latter still stands at the amount of $59.50 and the Harlem branch this week reaches a

Candy Makers
Strike Hard

By JACK WALTON
CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 18.—On Wednesday, August 14, the night crew of the Crystal Pure Candy Co. went on strike. The next morning a picket line was thrown around the factory and the entire day crew joined the strike. The strike started as a spontaneous walkout against the firing of four men; but it has since taken on greater aims than the rehiring of these four men.

The conditions in the shop were absolutely unbearable. There were no regular hours of work. There was no time off for lunch. Lunch had to be eaten while working. There were virtually no sanitary conditions in any part of the shop. There was a terrific speed-up. There was only one licensed boiler engineer. When the night crew went to work it was locked in until the next morning. In case of a fire there would have been a catastrophe. And the workers were employed at starvation wages. Under the NRA the men had made 40 cents an hour, the girls 35 cents an hour. All of the girls' wages have been cut. Some of the men's wages were cut to 30 cents an hour. Where the wages weren't cut directly, the boss began to fire the old workers and to hire new ones at 20 and 25 cents an hour. That was the immediate cause of the strike. The average wage in the shop at the time of the strike was $11 a week.

The strike began to get on its feet almost at once. On Friday a strike headquarters was opened. A strike committee of 20 is directing the work. Plans are being laid to establish a commissary by Tuesday. The strikers are divided into picket squads with a captain for each squad, all under the general supervision of Benny Lounda, chairman of the picket captains. The squads go out at regular intervals. The spirit of the strikers is high. The strike was called just when the bosses had received a large number of orders, so the spirit of the bosses is low. On Thursday they asked for negotiations. As yet very little has been decided.

The ranks of the strikers are solid. The company tried to split the ranks by threatening not to rehiring the night crew. But the attempt fizzled out completely. With virtually no exceptions, all the 250 workers in the plant have signed up with Local 279 of the Bakery and Confectionery Worker International Union, affiliated with the A. F. of L.

The demands of the strike are:

1. Recognition of the union.
2. Rehiring of all the old help.
3. Restoration of the entire wage cut.
4. A ten percent increase for the skilled workers. This question will be negotiated, if necessary; negotiations to start before Sept. 15.

Yesterday afternoon a meeting of the strikers was held. Notwithstanding a terrific rainstorm, about 200 workers attended. Brother Topp, of the Joint Board, who is assisting the strike, delivered a long talk on unionism, and the nec-

Workers Party Booms
In the North West

Following up the recent substantial acquisitions to party membership in western North Dakota and Eastern Montana, the comrades west of the Mississippi have recently recorded another noteworthy achievement in party building. Substantial branches of the W.P. were organized last week at Albert Lea and Austin, Minn. Active unionists and agricultural workers are included in the membership. Writing about this development, one of the party organizers states of the new acquisitions: "They are all militant men and women who accept our program, who are eager to learn and anxious to follow the examples they have seen of work in other parts of the labor movement."

White Collar WPA
Workers Protest

A demonstration of eight hundred white collar workers, who called a stoppage from noon to 3 P.M., took place Thursday at the Post Authority Building. The stoppage was called by the City Projects Council, the central projects organization, against the wage cuts which have gone through since the projects were taken over by the Federal authorities.

The slogans at the demonstration called for the payment of back pay, in most instances three weeks behind, the right to sick leave without loss of pay, recalled when the projects came under the WPA, and vacations with pay such as the administration has been granted.

An omitttee to see General Johnson reported that he would see them after their working hours, at five o'clock. The outcome of the meeting was to the effect that he could do nothing, it was all up to Washington. He said that a special grant had been forwarded from Washington which would enable the WPA workers to get 13 dollars to tide them over till the transfer from local to WPA was made. But beware of Generals bearing gifts from Washington.

Many of the WPA workers in the Parks Dept. had to be taken to work in Department trucks, not having the carfare to ride to and from the job. Park Commissioner Moses reported cases of starvation. When a park Commissioner takes time off from his political functions to make statements to the press, even the arrogant General Johnson took notice and listened.

Italy Alive with Unrest on Eve of African Conflict

West Coast Notes

By EARL LANE

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 24.—Pacific coast longshoremen began voting today on the question of handling scab cargo from British Columbia ports where the longshoremen are on strike.

On this question hinges the fate of the present working agreement which expires September 30. Notice of renewal or abrogation of the agreement was due today but I.L.A. officials asked for and received a ten day extension of the time limit.

The Maritime Federation of the Pacific has already voted to sustain the embargo.

Action of the Pacific coast executive board of the I.L.A. headed by William J. Lewis, in ordering a referendum independent of the Maritime Federation can only be construed as an attempt to split the I.L.A. away from the Federation and thus materially weaken the ranks of the maritime unions in the face of the attacks of the bosses.

The truck drivers of the Meier and Frank's department store, largest in the Pacific Northwest, are on strike for union wages and union recognition.

This establishment has as one of its partners former governor Julius Meier, who called out the national guard at the request of the waterfront employers last summer in an effort to break the maritime strike.

Portland workers are once again getting a practical lesson in the role of the state through the fact that a policeman is riding in every truck that makes a Meier and Frank delivery in order to protect the scab driver.

Longshoremen are refusing to handle any merchandise shipped to this establishment.

Organized labor joined ranks with the unemployed and the veterans in a militant protest against the $19 to $24 WPA wage scale, on Saturday, August 17.

A parade through the main streets of the city was followed by a mass meeting in Plaza Park which lasted for several hours.

Organizations which participated in this thrilling demonstration of the growing militancy and solidarity of labor here in this city were: the National Welfare Federation, affiliated to the Workers Alliance; Central Federation Against Unemployment Council; Portland Central Labor Council, comprising 88 local unions, Veterans Union, and the Oregon Truckmen's Association. The demonstration was endorsed by the convention of the Oregon State Federation of Labor, which adjourned the day before the demonstration.

was intended it should. No doubt other states will make similar qualifications. The tremendous population shifts which have taken place as a result of seven years of devastating and unprecedented capitalist crisis will thus play right into the hands of the boss class and its instrument, the capitalist state. Workers who have all the "rights" accorded to "citizens" under "constitutional" law will find that their "citizenship" and "constitutional rights" aren't worth a damn when they apply for relief or a share in the New Deal "social betterment" plan which capitalism has prepared for them just as they have found them worthless in other fields of class struggle.

The labor skates would have us believe that this starvation program for the working class aged is so much better than relief. When a bare subsistence relief role is dignified with the title "old age pension" that is supposed to make a difference. There is an old saying that "a rose by any other name is just as sweet." To which we would add that a lemon by any other name.

pears that it is acting as a steady influence on the iron and steel markets. The possibilities inherent in a conflict between those two nations have not been lost on those close to the trade. Because of difficulties in financing orders, Italy, formerly one of the heaviest importers of American scrap steel, has been absent from that market lately. However, it is indicated that the Mussolini government will return here for its metals—and with funds to finance its purchases.

No laws on the books of capitalism have as yet been enacted to keep steel manufacturers from selling their product.

War Preparations Everywhere.

Coincident with the events in Europe and East Africa the U. S. military machine is going through the most stupendous maneuvers ever undertaken in peace time. Blue armies equipped with all the accoutrements of modern warfare, ten-wheel tanks, poison gas, radio cars, bombers, etc. are fighting imaginary Red armies in an effort to test the war time strength and capacity of the standing army. Austria is already pledged to stand by Italy and has declared its readiness to stave off an attack by Hitler.

The question of utmost importance is: Can Italy withstand a protracted and long drawn out conflict? Elsewhere in this issue there is an analysis of the internal regime in Italy on the eve of the conflict. The misery of the Italian masses is unparalleled. The hungry belt cannot be squeezed any tighter. Add to that the horrors of war and the Italian masses may yet awaken and take advantage of Mussolini's desperate adventure in Ethiopia and put an end to fascism in Italy forever. But for that more than despair is needed. The masses indeed are desperate. What is needed is guidance and help from the outside world.

The Italian Workers Must Act

The cause of the people of Ethiopia is the cause of the Italian laboring masses. There is no conflict between them. Their goal is the same—liberation from fascism and imperialism. The Italian proletariat is being armed with physical instruments of destruction; to these arms must be added the arms of revolutionary ideology. Let the workers and peasants of Italy learn to use these arms against their own oppressors, their own exploiters—the ruling class of Italy.

It is necessary to show the Italian masses they are not alone; that the international working class will be behind them in their efforts to slough off the fascist scourge. Powerful demonstrations against fascism must be organized to bring this message to the exploited of Italy. In this connection it is necessary to speak out against the shameful manner in which the Socialist party, through its intermediary Valente, has permitted the united front movement against Italy's invasion of Ethiopia to peter out. The efforts of the Communist party on behalf of Ethiopia—setting aside days of prayer, etc.—are too disgusting to be worthy of too much comment here. The spectacle of Negro workers breaking up meetings of working class organizations speaking in the name of communism because of Litvinoff's despicable role in Geneva is Stalinism's contribution to the Italo-Ethiopian dispute.

A mighty united front movement must be set up to stem the fascist march on Ethiopia. The international boycott against fascist Italy must get under way. Time is short. Speed and decision is necessary. To the Italian masses we say: Turn Mussolini's war against Ethiopia into a civil war—the enemy is in your own country.

world. The unity of the Italian state was consummated in 1870 under the impulsion of the Northern industrial bourgeoisie. Because of its very weak specific gravity the industrial bourgeoisie could safeguard its hegemony and control over the political and economic life of the nation only by "authoritarian," i.e. reactionary, methods. The regime of Crispien (1887-1896) witnessed the first adventure in Abyssinia. The cities and villages of Italy were still seething: the peasants of central Italy and the workers of the Northern industries were rising, rebelling against the state. Crispien was the "strong" man of the bourgeoisie. He "energetically" suppressed in blood every insurrectionist attempt. Then came Adowa (March 1, 1896). Two Italian generals, 4,000 soldiers and officers were killed there. Others were taken prisoner. The Negus Menelik defeated young Italian imperialism. For five ensuing years the bourgeoisie tried to rule by terror. After the bloody repression of the peasant movements in Sicily (1893) came the repression in Milan in 1898. At the dawn of the 20th century Humbert the 1st was assassinated by the anarchist Bresci. A new period opened. Capitalism was in full bloom. Social reformism flourished from 1900 to 1910. The "revolution" took the road of legality. But not for long. The worker-bourgeois bloc represented by the reformist-Giolitti bloc lost its effectiveness. The worker and peasant masses once more directed their fire at the state. The revolutionary current strengthened and developed. This was the period of Mussolinism, of Mussolini, the "revolutionary" leader. "Red week" (June 1914) found Mussolini at the head of the insurrectionist movement. But with such "leaders" the movement was bound to fail—and in fact, it did fail. This was before the war. From 1915 to 1918 Italy participated in the slaughter. In 1917 we see Caporetto and the revolt in Turin against the war. The revolution was not dead. "Victory" found Italy in complete chaos. The masses of the North and the Center once again rose against the state. Through the mistakes of the leadership the revolution was once again defeated. Came Fascism.

Fascism attributed the cause of the economic and financial crisis to the workers' strikes, the very heavy taxes, the very high prices and the misfortune of the peasants, to the workers also. What has it done? It slashed the wages of the workers to a level below that of the pre-war period; it developed the industrial apparatus, but by that it increased the disproportion between the capacity of production and the possibilities of consumption, thereby diffusing even further the general impoverishment of the population. It prohibited the right to strike, but chaos in production increased at the same time. Taking 1929 as an index, the year when the last crisis began, production fell to 70 percent at the close of 1934. In many branches of industry, particularly textile, machine activity dropped to 40 percent of capacity. Despite the introduction of the 40 hour week the unemployed were far from absorbed into production. Even at the end of June of this year despite the mobilization of soldiers and workers for the Ethiopian adventure there were more than 700,000 unemployed.

Peasants Impoverished

If one wishes to establish what Fascism has given the peasants it is sufficient to take note of the resolution passed by the leadership of the (fascist) Syndicate of Agrarian Technicians of Treviso.

"1) From the agrarian point of view there is an obvious regression in productive activity, particularly aggravated in recent years and made obvious by an inferior cultural activity, a diminishing use of fertilizer, inferior production and an impoverishment of the offspring in livestock; 2) from the economic point of view, a growing pauperization and indebtedness of the big and small farmers on the one side and of the landed proprietors on the other, and of a lack of profit in stables, when there is no loss; 3) from the demographic point of view, a disproportion between the labor force of the families of the farmers and the extension of the land, and a lack of equilibrium between the number of families and the available property, which is the cause of 687 families of the province remaining without land."

Multipled by 92—for there are 92 provinces in Italy—the above figures give a real picture of the grim misery of Italian agriculture. The peasant who had a bit of land and who out of fear of "Boishevism" augmented the ranks of Fascism in 1921-1922, saw all his property disappear with the seizure of power by Mussolini. Deprived of his bit of ground he is forced today to beg for his existence. The same applies to the small storekeepers and the small manufacturers. Fascism has lost its social prop. But the most disturbing problem for it is the problem of the youth.

Youth Rebellious

The young generation, raised in Fascist surroundings, is demanding its right to live. Games, sports, Fascist festivals cannot fill the belly. The youth, returning home from the demonstrations, finds neither bread nor cigarettes and is forced to demand his place in the sun. Unconsciously he is carrying on the class struggle. Corruption and disease have gone to such lengths that Mussolini and his lackeys are compelled to refer in their speeches to the "system," to "fascism," which has outlived its usefulness. But if anti-capitalism in the mouth of Mussolini is only demagoguery, the young people do not stop at formalities; they demand deeds. And it is not without importance that in the ranks of Fascism itself, despite the violent suppression of all class spirit, anti-capitalist tendencies are everywhere gaining ground. Together with the old Marxists being sent to the deportation camps are many young people who took seriously the anti-capitalism of the functionaries of the corporations. A new spirit breathes in the Fascist "jail." The young unemployed graduate, the young worker and the young peasant absorbed in the search of a piece of bread, who in the capitalist countries where fascism is only a threat, constitute the source of eventual recruits which enlarge the ranks of fascism—in Italy, where fascism has ruled for 13 years, they can find an issue for their difficulties and their discontent only on the road of revolution. The bellicose solution is presented to the discontented and aroused youth as the antidote to revolution. Thus the Italian bourgeoisie is doubly interested in supporting the Italo-Ethiopian campaign. 1) because the latter appears as a possible source of loot; and 2) because it offers a "safety valve" for discharging the forces of "revolution" which once again have made their pressure felt in Italy.

Capital Frightened

However, capitalism itself is constantly disturbed by this solution. Where will it lead to in the end? Will not contrary results arise than those desired? Profit is the raison d'être of capitalism. Now, after thirteen years of fascism, the Italian capitalist is full of anxiety for his money. Wasn't fascism to give him peace and security of investment? But, he finds, on the contrary, that the fascism which he supported and helped to place in power, is very costly. Fascism takes the lion's share. What more will it devour? Every form of capital investment gives rise to fear among the money holders. Fear of inheritance taxes turns away investment in real estate. Similarly, the fear of taxation on dividends and rendering deeds nominal makes investments in such fields insecure. The rate of profits on investments in Italy is, besides, very low. A very significant symptom of the state of mind of the Italian capitalist, is found in the fact that from 1928 to 1934 the reserves of the Bank of Italy fell from 12,136 million to 5,832 million liras. That is to say about 7 millions took flight abroad before draconian measures were taken to stem the flight of gold and currency (arrangements governing the movement of capital; defense against exporting money in bank notes or in checks; rigid monopoly of trade in the means of payment, etc.). Equally significant is the general fall of state debts. The ex-consolidated 5 percent converted by authority into "redeemable" at 3.5 percent and which was 88 in December fell to 77 last April and is now 68!

Are we to believe by this that the bourgeoisie is withdrawing its confidence in its fascist "agent"? Undoubtedly a revolutionary crisis will not unfold without extreme manifestations of panic in the property classes. However, we are still far from that. The bourgeoisie has not forgotten 1919-1920; it fears the proletarian revolution at the same time that it is discontented with fascism, which costs very dearly and it already feels the drain of usury. And that is a symptom which must be taken into account in the development of the situation.

For the present, the bourgeoisie and fascism remain solidly attached to each other. In spite of everything, the solution by war in Abyssinia opens a road. But it is a road which can precipitate a catastrophe. This eventuality is not only not excluded but appears very probable.

Even Victory Fatal

Even on the supposition that Mussolini will carry through a victorious war and that this war will be very brief, from September to March, the results may be very disastrous for Italian imperialism. The slipping of the lira, already begun, will assume a dizzy pace. Even if the industries are worked to full capacity for the war, even if the peasant receives a hundred percent more for the sale of his products, the growing devaluation of the lira because of the growing inflation which will be necessary to cover the expenses of the war, will end by creating a situation which will come very near to that in Italy in 1919-20 and that in Germany in 1923. The wages of the workers, the salaries of the employees, fearfully reduced by thirteen years of fascism will be utterly incapable of meeting the feverish rise in prices (although war operations have not yet begun, the prices of fruits and vegetables have already risen 100 percent). The peasant also, in exchange for his products, will receive money which depreciates from day to day. And then, in order to pillage the Abyssinian territories, it will be necessary to impose draconian measures on the entire nation so that speculation, which is protected by fascism and even nourished by it, will not fail to garner its profits. The famous queues known in the last war will form again before the stores. Strikes will reappear. They are already reappearing.

But the war will neither be short nor very easy. Abyssinia, which defeated the troops of Crispien, will not fail to offer a very hardy resistance to Mussolini's troops. The difficulties Italy will face in fighting Ethiopia are enormous if one considers that it will take place in a territory where the Abyssinian mule is the best means of conveyance. Therefore, it can be foreseen that the economic, financial, political and social repercussions of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict will be a thousand times more serious and acute in the interior of Italy.

If one considers only the first reactions to the mobilizations of Mussolini, it is to be foreseen that the hostility of the people towards the bandit war in Abyssinia will become much greater when the operations begin.

Populace Panicky

The fascist press would have us believe that there is enthusiasm for war in Italy. Nothing could be further from the truth. Here is what a correspondent from Italy writes in an emigre periodical (Nuovo Avanti, July 13, 1935) on the state of mind of the masses in face of the war:

"Enthusiasm is conspicuous by its absence... while calls to service are confined to the centers of Italian mobilization, opposition to the war has not assumed in general the forms of rebellion except in isolated cases. In Forlì, for example (Mussolini's home town), the women attempted to prevent the departure of the reservists; there were also an important number of deserters, who were easily captured, and also some violent opposition to public force. In Cagliari (where Mussolini came in person to deliver a speech) a reservist committed suicide because he was refused permission to visit his sick wife. The barracks mutinied and it was necessary to use bombs and tear gas to quell the mutiny."

"Many desertions took place in South Tyrol, with attempts at assassination; but here," the correspondent notes, "there exists a strong Hitlerite movement, the kind that would come from this district, but must be analyzed from another standpoint."

"The reservists called to service, both officers and soldiers, showed the most obvious signs of rebellion when they were about to leave for Eastern Africa."

"A clear symptom in the new situation in the Italian army can be seen in the negligence in external formalities between officers and soldiers! A great disregard of discipline is a sign among the volunteers. The chaotic composition of these corps, in which individuals of the most varying ages and the most diverse physical constitutions are thrown together, has made the antagonism between the army and militia very acute."

"The militia (fascist) has stirred up a lively resentment against itself in the population

Congress Passes Harmless Social Security Program

because of its undisciplined acts and its vandalism.

"Besides, a state of constant vigilance is being born. Rumors, often exaggerated, are current on the sanitary conditions among the troops in Africa. No one believes the official reports. Though in fact, the latter proclaim human losses from unimportant ailments as true.

"This state of mind agitates the fascist regime, which is seeking by every means to stifle news and rumors. They have banned all publicity to mourning caused by the Abyssinian adventure. In Turin, for example, they forced a merchant to remove a notice carrying the legend: 'Gloved because of sons in Abyssinia.' The communications of death are now laconic and read as follows: 'It has been communicated that your son (or husband, etc.) is deceased...' In a note there is a warning not to give publicity to the news."

If fascism fears publicity of a few deaths from sickness in Africa, what will it do when the list of dead stretches out once the operations begin? For we are inclined to believe that the Abyssinians are also good shots. They have demonstrated that very well in 1896 in Adowa. In the wars conducted by "democracies" the so-called "free press" had this advantage over fascism: it could deceive its readers who believed even in its lies. The fascist press is "suspect": the people do not read it and do not believe it. This is an enormous disadvantage for fascism in a war. A dispatch made with the aim of quieting the populace gives rise to vigilance and agitation. This is very significant for the application of the attitude prevalent among the Italian masses: an attitude of distrust which will end with violent explosions. In the degree that this state of mind tends to become general and active, it can transform itself into a truly revolutionary spirit. The strength of fascism arose especially from the inertia of the masses pulverized by violence and terror. Fascism, by the war in Abyssinia, itself is about to give the masses the opportunity lost for years of communicating among themselves and of feeling and wanting the same thing at the same time: the fall of the regime.

A Vanguard Needed!

What is lacking to prepare, to orient, to guide the masses seeking another road than the bellicose solution of fascism and capitalism, their road, a revolutionary road, is an organized vanguard.

The party of the proletariat, the Communist party constituted at Livorno in 1921, has been reduced to complete impotence under the blows of the fascist reaction and Stalinism. The Socialist Party, the old party of Turati, has been reduced, in emigration circles, to a fragmentary carcass. In the emigration circles the fragments of both the Italian Stalinist and Socialist parties have constituted, as a reflection of what is happening in France, a "pact of unity of action." But this "pact" remains without real importance for the masses in Italy. The lack of an organized vanguard, the political and organizational liquidation of the Communist party undoubtedly represents the weakest side of the Italian situation. On the other hand it cannot be separated from the international situation.

The task of the Italian Marxists today is a double and a single one: the struggle for the constitution of the Italian and international party of proletarian revolution.

To aid the Italian masses defeat fascism we must throw all our forces in the balance for the defeat of Italian imperialism in Abyssinia. That depends on the Italian masses, on the active and conscious opposition which must be organized in the interior against the war, but it also depends on the cooperation of the international proletariat.

Without the victory of Hitler in Germany, Mussolini today would not have been able to embark on a war today. A working class policy, a revolutionary policy, today, in London, Paris and Moscow can be of tremendous assistance to the Italian masses in reforming its battalions of world revolution. But it would be futile to expect this cooperation from the two dead internationalisms, the Second and the Third. We must appeal directly to the working class of these countries. And we can and we must do it only in the name of the Fourth International. Such action will open a way into the hearts of the Italian workers. It is not without significance that the only initiative in organizing the international boycott of imperialist and fascist Italy at the outbreak of war in Abyssinia has come from the Bolshevik-Leninists. The banner of Lenin today bears the name: the Fourth International.

possibility of emancipation by the Supreme Court remains. Thirdly, the increased costs of production may always be passed on to the consumer. Fourthly, new machinery, more intensive methods of production to keep down the cost of social legislation for the employer, can and will be resorted to.

In any case the taxes will be comparatively small, 3 percent of the payroll for unemployment insurance and a maximum by January 1, 1940, of 3 percent for the old age pension system. The exchange of a few million dollars in social security benefits for a cut of billions of dollars in the wage bill is decidedly "good business." Let Ma Perkins, Eleanor Roosevelt and the rest of the social workers have a fling. Finally, as experience in other countries has conclusively demonstrated, it is always possible, as the capitalist crisis intensifies, to effect a cut in the magnificent benefits due under these social insurance programs.

Perkins Waxes Eloquent

It is important to note the philosophy back of this legislation. It is based on the concept that the present "revival" in business, the upturn on the stock exchange etc., is the beginning of a real capitalist boom. In a feature article in the New York Times Frances Perkins states:

"The cost of social security will be comparatively small for some years to come. This was deliberately arranged by the committee for the President in order that the incidence of tax might be gradual, as business and workers will be paying this tax in the early years of recovery from depression and before the full prosperity level has been reached."

She becomes positively eloquent in painting the figure of the U. S. under liberal capitalism.

"The foundation has been laid. On it will be reared a structure, through the experience of the years to come, which will prove a haven for the nation's wage-earners in times of economic distress and when they become old and feeble. It will be a refuge also for widows and dependent children. In achieving such results it will likewise benefit all employers and investors by promoting and stabilizing mass purchasing power."

The intelligence displayed by economists, business men, workers and Congress in the passage of this legislation and "the intellectual courage and human insight of the President" have brought "a renewal of faith in the possibilities of life in this great nation as broad as a continent."

Of course, as per the formula of liberal capitalism, this prosperity is to be made "permanent and real" by achieving a balance of consumption and production by "the promotion and stabilization of mass purchasing power without which the present economic system cannot endure."

No Revival at All

The fatuous exponents of liberal capitalism continue to hold forth this hope and doubtless in many instances actually to believe it themselves, in spite of the real facts about the present "revival" of business, etc. as set forth, for example, in the statistics of the U. S. Dept. of Commerce itself. These indicate that there was an increase of about 5 billions in the national income for 1934 as compared with 1933 but when relief wages are eliminated the net share of labor in 1934 was only 64.2 as compared with 65.5 in 1933. This does not take account of the fact that prices during the period rose as fast or even faster than wages so that the real wages of labor have decreased.

According to the same report the dividend and business profits rose sharply from $7,365,000,000 to $8,103,000,000 between 1933 and 1934.

Wage earners in 1934 received only 52 percent of their 1929 income. Property owners received 61.4 percent and men in business for themselves 65.2 percent of their 1929 income. Thus all the indications are that both earned and unearned incomes above $5,000 are going up and that incomes below $5,000 are going down.

Nothing has taken place in these closing days of Congress to cause any change in the program of the masses of workers and farmers, namely, Fight against the Roosevelt wage-cutting program, against the entire WPA set-up, against fake social security, for substantial protection against the risks of sickness, accident, old age and unemployment, at the cost of employers and government. Above all, organization to achieve power and thus to end, before it inflicts still further misery upon the masses, a system whose most liberal and humanitarian exponents can do no better than the Roosevelt "social security" program.

Pioneer Publishers Move to New Quarters Announce Publishing Program

Pioneer Publishers, formerly located at 95 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C. have moved to their new and more spacious quarters at 100 Fifth Ave. where they will be better able to devote themselves to the ambitious publishing program they have now undertaken.

They plan to issue an edition of the SELECTED WORKS OF LEON TROTSKY, six volumes of which are scheduled for publication during 1935-36. The volumes as listed are: 1. The Third International After Lenin. 2. The Stalin School of Fascism. 3. The Revolution of 1905. 4. The Revolution of 1917. 5. Seven Years of World Politics. 6. Problems of the Chinese Revolution—II.

Also included in the publishing program are the selected writings of Franz Mehring and George Plekhanov, a volume on Marxism and Art and the Selected Correspondence of Lenin.

To finance this undertaking a special Publication Fund is being established through the sale of Pioneer Publishers Certificates at $10 each. The holders of Pioneer Certificates, in addition to being contributors to this essential work, also have an opportunity to purchase books at low cost. Pioneer publications will be made available to them at a discount of 30 percent and books of other publishers at 15 percent.

A prospectus with complete details will be sent on request by writing to PIONEER PUBLISHERS, 100 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Shame!

Through the Daily Worker we are informed that Litvinoff, representing the Soviet Union in the League of Nations' Council, voted for the resolution to dismember Ethiopia based on the 1906 robber treaty between Italy, Britain and France, "not because the Soviet Union approves of this treaty, but because the resolution contained a clause pledging Mussolini not to resort to force while the matter was pending, and thus set up an obstacle—no matter how small—to the fascist war plans."

And how is the world to know, we might ask, that the Soviet Union—or more correctly, the dominant Stalin regime—does not approve of this treaty? Where would be the place to proclaim this fact if not exactly where the last of the independent African republics pleaded its case? But that would not have been possible, says the Daily Worker because: "All Council resolutions have to be adopted unanimously." And so, the representative of the Workers' Fatherland joined with the imperialist brigands from the thieves kitchen at Geneva to offer Ethiopia the choice of assassination or suicide.

This closes the first chapter of the recent maneuvers for new imperialist conquests. It unfolded behind the scenes as well as at the front doors of the League of Nations characterized by Lenin as an insurance policy in which the victors mutually guarantee each other their prey. Mussolini replied with an emphatic NO to all the "generous" offers advanced by Litvinoff in his capacity as chairman of the Council. Now Mussolini is about to cast the die, opening up the second chapter of actual warfare for the enslavement of Ethiopia.

Through the maneuvers making up this first chapter stands out most glaringly the shameful role played by Stalin's representative at Geneva, equalized only by the revolting hypocrisy of a MacDonald or a Henderson.

Litvinoff voted for the resolution based on the imperialist robber treaty at the Council meeting held in July. But did this resolution "set up an obstacle to the Fascist war plans?" Or was Stalin correct when he asserted that "if the League is even the tiniest bump somewhat to slow down the drive toward war and help peace then we are not against the League?" Obviously, history has again refuted Stalin. The League was not an obstacle and could not be an obstacle. On the contrary, decomposing, due to the impact of imperialist contradictions, the League furnishes today only a cover for the vile games of bourgeois diplomacy in search for military allies to prepare the new slaughter. Mussolini, adamant in pursuit of his prey, used the League to help break down the competitive resistance of Britain and France. Stalin's representative, covering himself with the glorious name of the workers' fatherland, became a partner to this deceitful game.

This action of Litvinoff is not a mere incident for history to note and pass on to the order of the day. It must be understood as one link in a whole chain of policies pursued by the present day leaders of the Soviet Union. And it is fraught with dangers and treachery. Naturally this system of politics can have nothing in common with the example of the first victorious proletarian revolution, that still lives in the memory of the masses. In Lenin's time no doubt could ever be possible of the fact that the workers' republic and that alone championed the right of self-determination of small nations. Toward the brigands of imperialism the Soviet Union maintained an attitude of implacable hostility and it proclaimed this attitude in words and deeds.

Lenin had no objection to accepting potatoes and arms from the imperialist brigands when the Soviet Union was in need so long as this furthered the cause of the world revolution. In general there could be no objection to any endeavors of the Soviet government to utilize the antagonisms in the camp of the imperialists or even to make certain concessions of expediency. But the fundamental objective must remain the furthering of the proletarian revolution. For Stalinism this fundamental objective no longer exists. It has turned Lenin's formula into political solidarity with the brigands of imperialism.

From the very beginning of the chain of events that have characterized the Stalinist foreign policy of the Soviet Union we sounded the alarm. The reliance on pacts with the bourgeoisie and the entry into the League of Nations could only arouse false hopes in the working masses. New illusions of reformism replaced the revolutionary objectives and served only to disarm the proletariat. From that position there was only a short distance to the final approval of the national defense of French imperialism as expressed in the Franco-Soviet pact. Viewed in this light the actions of Litvinoff at Geneva with regard to the planned fascist plunder of Ethiopia become entirely clear. This action was in perfect harmony with the foreign policy of the Soviet bureaucracy which is also the actual leadership of the Comintern. From the position of revolutionary internationalism characteristic of Lenin's time has now emerged the servile social patriotism of Stalin.

Now the war danger is advancing with seven league boots. This remains the life and death question for the masses of the people everywhere. It is the crucial test for all groupings and tendencies within the working class. The empty chatter about the League of Nations being an obstacle to fascist war plans has been blasted to the skies. Only the application of revolutionary methods of struggle against war can be of real significance.

It is necessary to draw a line and draw it sharply. Between the treacherous policy of solidarity and unanimity with the League Council coupled with alliances for national defense on the one hand and the Marxist position on the other no compromise is possible. For Marxists the slogan remains: the enemy is in our own country. War is inherent in capitalism and the struggle against war is unthinkable without the struggle against one's own imperialism.

Of course, the Soviet Union is threatened in this developing war situation. But it would be an idle dream to place any hopes for its defense on the diplomatic games at Geneva or on military alliances with bourgeois powers. At the first opportunity these powers will strike their own most favorable military alliances and turn with full fury upon the Soviet Union.

As war approaches we sound the alarm once again. We emphasize: There can be no compromise between the policy of national defense and the position of struggle for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie by revolutionary assault. The former can lead only to a repetition of the shameful betrayal of 1914. The real struggle against war must proceed in implacable antagonism to all these forms of social patriotism and against the purveyors of these bourgeois illusions, the Social Democrats and the Stalinists.

They Have One Teacher

By HENRY THURMAN
"We have a uniform program for socialism, the strategy and tactics of the world revolution: one fortress, the Soviet Union; one world party, the Communist International; one teacher, the great Stalin. (Tremendous applause, demonstrations, cheers and singing.)" Chinese Representative at Seventh World Congress.

It is a strange batch of rookies that Stalin and Thorez have drafted to the service of their French allies; no less than Lenin, Marx and Engels are whipped into line under the tricolor to rally the communist proletariat in defense of Laval's brand of culture.

The world has long grown accustomed to seeing Jesus Christ's services borrowed for the endorsement, in turn, of Church politics, monarchy, democracy, pacifism, imperialism, socialism, and of late—anti-semitism; so we suppose that there should be nothing startling about a mere secular leader's being utilized for diverse strange purposes long after his death.

The Stalinist pundits solemnly assure us that Lenin made pacts with the imperialists, and therefore the present Franco-Soviet pact is having got into the automobile, might use it and the firearms for new robberies. Our compromise with the bandits of German imperialism was such a compromise.

"But when the Mensheviks and Socialist-Revolutionaries in Russia, the Scheideemannists (and, to a large extent, the Kautskysts) in Germany, Otto Bauer and Friedrich Adler (let alone Renner and Co.) in Austria, the Renaudels and Longuet and Co. in France, the Fabians, the 'Independents' and the 'Labourites' in England, in 1914-1920, entered into compromises with the bandits of their own bourgeoisie, and sometimes with those of the bourgeoisie of the 'allies' against the revolutionary proletariat of their own country, all these gentlemen acted as 'accomplices-in-banditry.' (Left-Wing Communism.)

But why waste our time on these outmoded instructors of the past, when they have been so adequately replaced as Wan Min bluntly points out in his speech proposing the liquidation of Soviet China and forming of a coalition government:

"We have a uniform program for socialism (in one country) . . . 'One fortress, the Soviet Union (repeatedly two, until the very hour of Wan Min's address!) . . . 'One teacher—STALIN!'"

The Comintern Goes Back to Kautsky
Stalinist 7th Congress Throws Overboard All the Teachings of Marx and Lenin on the State and Internationalism

By JOHN WEST

In 1928, the Sixth Congress of the Communist International met to record the triumph of Stalin over the Marxist opposition, to consolidate the abandonment of internationalism, and to prepare for the utilization of the C.I. in the years ahead, more and more directly in the reactionary interests of the Stalinist bureaucracy and against the interests of the world proletariat. Seven long years of disaster have demonstrated in the laboratory of history the role of the C.I. under Stalin: the structure which once stood dynamically at the head of the revolutionary movement has become solidified as the organizer of defeat, the agent of betrayal.

When an instrument which the working class has forged in the heart of its struggles, to serve its needs, abandons its progressive function and turns against the class that formed it, the working class cannot merely cast it off as a snake casts off its old skin in the new spring. The instrument remains, and remains not as something dead and abandoned, but actively, as a weapon turned against its maker. Veiled with the glitter of former triumphs, it becomes a will-o'-the-wisp to turn aside great sections of the working class from the Marxist road, to confuse, blind, and sterilize them. Just so the Comintern. If it were merely dead, it could be forgotten. But it is not dead. It remains, with all its corrupting power still hidden to many by the coating of early glories, a tremendous obstacle on the path of the working class. The Seventh Congress meets, not to chant the death of the C. I., but in a desperate effort to patch up the rotting structure and thus to raise the barrier still higher across the path. This is the real meaning of the Seventh Congress: it meets, not to organize victory, but to consolidate its position as an obstacle, to attempt to prepare the last stages of the sacrifice of the international working class to Stalinism.

The Flowers of Stalinism
It is, therefore, not surprising to note, in the reports of the Congress, the incredibly low political level of the "discussions." No effort whatever is made, or could be made, at serious political analysis. No opposition on any question is present. No criticism of the past—even such a past—is suggested, beyond mild scoldings about "sectarianism" or "over-zealousness" in the application of the C.I. line. Not one lesson is drawn from the world shaking events of the past seven years. Not one negative vote is recorded against the official resolutions. Any vitality still remaining in the delegates is devoted to 20-minute ovations for the "great leader and teacher of the world proletariat" and frequent singing of the Internationale. But it must not be supposed that this takes away from the significance of the Congress. Rather does it make clear the significance. It is only in such a soil that the flowers of Stalinism can bloom.

The key to the significance of the present Congress can be given in three quotations from the proceedings:
(1) "The victory of socialism on a world scale in a brief historic period is assured if peace is maintained, thus making possible new victories of socialism in the U.S.S.R." (Pieck, quoted N. Y. Times, July 29).
(2) "... Now the working masses are not choosing between the proletarian dictatorship and bourgeois democracy but between bourgeois democracy and fascism" (Dimitroff, quoted Daily Worker, Aug. 15).
(3) "In the present situation how should the toiling masses of Czechoslovakia fight for peace against fascism? They must fight with all means at their disposal for the preservation and deepening of friendly relations between Czechoslovakia and the U.S.S.R., for the carrying into practice the mutual assistance pact between Czechoslovakia and the S. U." (Sverma, quoted Daily Worker, Aug. 19).

The Poison Spreads
The political content of these quotations must be carefully understood. They are theoretical acknowledgments of progressive steps in the degeneration of the Comintern which have already been taken in practice. Launched on the tracks of "socialism in one country," the C.I. could not leave it at that. For the poisoning of one cardinal point of Marxist principle—in this case, revolutionary internationalism—meant that the poison would spread throughout the system. In the end no point can be left untainted. The abandonment of internationalism is not a minor "deviation" which can be merely "corrected." It is a repudiation of Marxism. And it involves successfully the repudiation of every other cardinal principle of Marxism. These quotations mark major stages in the spread of the poison.

Quotation (1) states briefly the theory of socialism in one country, the keystone of the arch of Stalinism. What follows? Peace must be preserved. What then follows? The sections of the C. I. must be converted into peace propaganda agencies each sacrificing the interests of its national proletariat to the construction of socialism in the S. U. What follows? The interests of the Chinese, German, Austrian, French . . . workers must be betrayed to Soviet nationalism. The cause of the proletariat will be advanced and the S. U. defended not, as Lenin demanded, by the overthrow of bourgeois states, by the drive of the international revolution, but by (a) "the independent construction of socialism in the S. U." along with (b) the preservation of the status quo throughout the rest of the world in order to permit this socialist construction. That means, the preservation of the bourgeois governments, in their present relationships, in power, for only such preservation can maintain peace. Not international revolution, but pacifism and diplomacy, the classic "balance of power" methods of bourgeois politics, will protect the S. U. and the construction of socialism.

The Inevitable Conclusions
Quotation (2) draws the correct conclusion: Granted the basic line of socialism in one country, which prevents international revolution, for the sake of maintaining the status quo, the choice of the proletariat in this era is not between proletarian dictatorship and bourgeois democracy, but between bourgeois democracy and fascism. Therefore, the working class is led Democratic theory best stated by Kautsky. No question of principle can be more important: only by the clear and constant recognition of the class nature of the state, of the fact that the bourgeois state in every form is its mortal enemy and must be destroyed, can a revolutionary party sustain a correct strategy in the class struggle. Any watering down whatever of this principle means, necessarily, betrayal.

Two Sources of Degeneration
We can trace consequences of the C. I. degeneration on this point from two directions:

(1) "Defense of the democratic rights of the workers and toiling masses" is, under all circumstances, a correct revolutionary slogan; and leadership in such defense is an elementary duty of the revolutionary party. But how defend these rights, for example, when they are threatened by the oncoming of Fascism? The Marxist answers: "They can be defended only by the offensive revolutionary struggle for workers' power, only by the class organization of the workers, the fighting proletarian united front, the building of the workers' militia, the overthrow of bourgeois rule."

For this correct slogan and the correct method of carrying it out in practice, the C. I. Congress substitutes—"The defense of bourgeois democracy against fascism" (cf. Pieck, "we defend parliamentarism and democracy against fascism" Daily Worker, July 27; Gorkitch, "Real united front work has recently begun (in Yugoslavia). Its aims must be to establish a united anti-fascist people's government tee the victory of fascism, and the concomitant loss of actual democratic rights. The only defense of democratic rights in the present era is the revolutionary struggle for socialism.

Thus the C. I. doctrine can serve only to weaken, disarm, and disarm the proletariat, to prevent the real struggle against fascism.

2. The United Front is of course an indispensable tactic in the revolutionary struggle. But the United Front must be aggressive, militant, fighting, an instrument by which the revolutionary party gains leadership over the masses, joins the working masses in common action, with no sacrifice of program or principle. On occasion, the United Front can even include, as subordinate allies under working class leadership, sections of other classes. But the C. I., after sabotaging throughout the Third Period every kind of United Front, now reverses itself to sanction a United Front policy even more disastrous than no policy at all. "The proletarian United front and the anti-fascist People's Front are closely connected with each other by living dialectics," says Dimitroff, "and the development is from one to the other." This theme is repeated in 50 speeches at the Congress—e.g. Lenski: "The immediate perspective in Poland is the broadest People's Front becoming a decisive factor in the maturing revolutionary crisis. . . ."

What is this People's Front, which is to include "all anti-fascist elements"? It is the logical development of the C. I. conception of a proletarian United Front as carried out, for example, in France. The United Front is, for the C. I., to be purely negative and defensive in character—against war and fascism, in defense of bourgeois democracy against fascism. The United Front represents not a fighting structure for common struggle in action, but a capitulation to social-democratic reformism. Consequently it is only natural that the United Front can "broaden out" into a People's Front including Daladier and the others, whose "anti-fascist" character is shown in their rapid efforts to hide whenever they smell a fascist.

The "People's Government"

3. To complete the picture: The defense of democracy and the People's Front both, again quite logically, lead to—support of or entry into a "People's government" or a "united anti-fascist government." Upton Sinclair himself would feel at home at many of the sessions of the Seventh Congress. A government of the new Labor Party in the U. S.; affiliation with the British Labor Party in Great Britain (cf. speeches of Foster, Browder, Dutt, Pollitt); Florin "favors the slogan: Give us a government of the anti-fascist People's Front" (Daily Worker, Aug. 7); Gorkitch will support the Macek government; and Dimitroff, "great helmsman of the Comintern," sums up "the new realism": "... a renunciation of the formation or support of the government of the united front or People's Front would be impermissible fanaticism." Dimitroff's dialectics go further, in fascist countries, "where a bourgeois-democratic revolution develops, a people's front government can become the government of a democratic dictatorship of workers and peasants." And the latter, no doubt, a workers' dictatorship, and so to socialism in two countries. And the whole process, mind you, by dialectic evolution, without the painful tasks of revolutionary class struggle.

What wonder, then, that we shall be asked to support the next imperialist war? Do not Dimitroff and the others prove to us that support of democratic France and England and Czechoslovakia is the high road to socialism?

And what wonder, then, that so often during the Congress there is mention of organic unity with the Social Democracy? Kautsky himself went no further from Lenin on the key question of the state, on the key slogan, "Class against class"; and it was here that there arose the dividing line that called for the formation of the new party and the new international—the Leninist International. The Seventh Congress turns back, back to Kautsky and his fellow renegades. There is no longer any real obstacle in basic principle to keep Social Democracy and Stalinism apart.

New Signers for the Open Letter

Ed. Note: We print below the first additions to the signatories of the Open Letter to the World Proletariat, declaring for the Fourth International and giving their assent to the establishment of a Provisional Contact Committee which will facilitate this activity. The first letter is from the Cooperative Society of the Friends of the New Age, an independent French organization with strong influence in the trade unions and the Socialist Party. The second letter of adherence is signed by comrade Vereeken for the Internationalist Communist League (Trotskyist) in Belgium. This is likewise an independent group, as we go to press we are in receipt of a copy of "Spartacus," organ of this group, which contains extended comment as well as their signature to the Open Letter. We will reprint sections of their comment in a forthcoming issue.

Paris, July 29, 1935

Dear Comrade,

We have received your documents concerning the Fourth International and our reply follows. We are indeed sorry that these documents came somewhat late, since our leading committees have been disorganized due to the vacation period and we fear that we will not be able to send you a motivated answer before a fortnight.

At any rate, we can say now that, for us, the question of the foundation of the Fourth International is inseparable from the question of the principles and the methods of the building of socialist economy as the first act of the revolution accomplished by the seizure of power.

Our opinion, formulated after exhaustive conferences, is that the defeats suffered by socialism and the Third International flow from the fact that the socialism of the Second or of the Third has not yet found the method of democratic realization of economic construction after the revolution. We believe that new disasters are inevitable if this question is not studied immediately. We can say to you today that although we are ready to adhere in the founding of the Fourth International, we would consider our adherence to be futile unless the problem which we have indicated is placed on the agenda immediately. We will submit our proposals on this subject. We deem it necessary to point this out to you and we beg you to make this known together with the fact that our publications are at the disposal of any of the groups which you may indicate.

Please receive, dear comrade, our fraternal greetings,
(signed) GEORGE VALOIS,
Administrative Secretary.

The following is the letter of comrade Vereeken in the name of his group on the subject of the Open Letter:

"To the I. S. of the I.C.L.: Received your document. An affirmative answer has been elaborated and is now being examined by the comrades of our organization. The reply will be sent and published in Spartacus."
(signed) G. VEREKEN.

to support of bourgeois democratic governments, if only these governments "promise" to support the "peace policy" of the S. U. In other words, abandonment of internationalism logically leads to abandonment of the Marxist theory of the state, which holds that the bourgeois state is under all circumstances the political instrument of the bourgeoisie and consequently on all occasions the irreconcilable enemy of the proletariat and its party.

But with things as they are, peace may not be preserved even at this price. Again, therefore, with iron logic, the necessary conclusion is drawn in quotation (3). To "carry into practice the mutual assistance pact between Czechoslovakia and the S. U." to support the bourgeois government of Czechoslovakia in war against Germany; and, since imperialist powers—notably Czechoslovakia's ally—France—will be involved in such a war, to support likewise French imperialism. Thus, abandonment of the Marxist theory of the state leads, just as inevitably as it led Social Democracy prior to the last war, to an abandonment of the Marxist position on war, to social-patriotism, and preparations for the betrayal of the proletariat of France and all other nations which happen to be, for their own purposes, in alliance with the S. U. to the war makers.

I wish in the remainder of this article to demonstrate further the extent to which the C. I. has abandoned the Marxist theory of the state and has accepted the Social-which will support the Macek government if it takes the necessary firm steps against fascism" (Daily Worker, Aug. 14.) But this means, in effect, support of the class enemy—for a bourgeois democratic government is, like a fascist government, simply one form of bourgeois class dictatorship. To support the class enemy under any circumstances means always to weaken one's own forces, to disarm the proletariat both materially and ideologically. It means to do precisely what the Social Democracy did in Germany, where its support of the democratic Weimar government prepared the way for Hitler.

Bourgeois Democracy and Fascism
It is of course true that the question of what "kind" of bourgeois dictatorship—democratic or fascist—is not indifferent to the proletariat (as Pieck stated in his opening address). But what the proletariat is interested in keeping or gaining is not bourgeois democracy as against fascism, but certain of the rights which the proletariat still has under democracy and loses under fascism. However, the democratic rights themselves, when threatened by Fascism in the era of the decline of capitalism, can be kept only by a revolutionary struggle, only, that is, by the overthrow of bourgeois class rule in whatever form it appears, and the establishment of workers' rule. Bourgeois democracy, left to itself, "defended" by the proletariat, necessarily is transformed by finance-capital to fascism; and thus the defense of bourgeois democracy, far from protecting democratic rights, is the sure way to guaran-

Labor Skates, Mayor, Bosses Form Alliance To Smash Local 574

Minn. State Federation Officials Line Up with Open Shop Employers in Fight Against Militant Unionism

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 28.—Crusading to Make Minneapolis Safe for Profits, an unholy alliance has been formed between Minnesota State Federation of Labor officials, the notorious Citizens Alliance, and the Farmer-Labor mayor, to crush Drivers Local 574, sword and shield of labor in the Northwest.

Behind the closed doors of Mayor Thomas F. Latimer's office the conspiracy to smash militant unionism in Minneapolis was hatched. Spread over the capitalist rags are headlines: "Labor Chiefs Ask Drive on 'Incorrigibles'" and "Racketeering in Strikes Hit by Labor Leaders; Unwarranted Interference by Outside Unions Opposed" and "Citizens Alliance Joins Labor in Racket Fight; Offers Entire Facilities to Help Stamp Out Incurrigibles," etc., etc., ad nauseum.

That the high officials of the State Federation brazenly dare to appear in the broad daylight before all of Minneapolis labor arm-in-arm with the worst foe of unionism, the Citizens Alliance, is a clear sign that they no longer feel secure. No less significant is the fact that, during the famous drivers strikes of last summer, they were very wary of a similar move made by Dan Tobin, mogul of the Teamsters International. The spectre of fighting unionism, dreaded by them far more than any bosses' association, is moving the fakery into action.

"Outside Interference" It is openly admitted by these skates in their joint statement with the mayor that what they are most concerned with is "outside interference" in strikes, failing to mention 574 by name but obviously referring to them. And while ranting against this so-called "interference" (read: solidarity) they deliberately overlook their comrades-in-arms, the Citizens Alliance, which never loses a minute in "interfering." I.e. helping, other employers in a strike situation and is owned body and soul by Wall Street.

The ferocity of their opposition to 574 has as its immediate cause in two recent struggles in this city—the strikes in the Ornamental Iron Works and the Strutwear Hosiery Mill. In both cases members of 574 stepped in after A. F. of L. leaders had hopelessly bungled the situation. In both cases 574 stepped in only on the official request for assistance by the local unions involved. And in both cases the tactics of 574 turned a certain defeat into a favorable chance for victory. As previously reported in the NEW MILITANT, it was Roy Weir, organizer for the C.I.U., whose tactics brought nothing but disorder and demoralization into the ranks of the Hosiery workers. 574 put the strike on its feet and the leader of that local, Vincent R. Dunne, was badly beaten by the cops so that this aim might be achieved.

Uphold Police Action in Strikes The timely and effective action of the Drivers Union has made them the source of hope and courage for all unorganized and newly organized workers in Minneapolis. This is what makes the labor skates so fearful. And because of this they have agreed "to uphold Mayor Latimer if he finds it necessary to use firm police measures to prevent illegal picketing in future industrial controversies." Even open strike-breaking is not beneath them!

The use of police in strikes is nothing new for Mayor Latimer. A demagogue, elected against Bloody Bainbridge, on promise to keep the cops away from strikes, he personally supervised the herding of scabs and provided them with police convoys in the first strike actions under his administration. Everything might have proceeded smoothly, with scabs filling the places of strikers, if 574 had not intervened. Then Latimer could have remained the "friend of labor" and the Farmer-Labor Party might have been able to continue to pose as the "workingmen's party." Discredit-

U.S. Rubber Barons Seek Profits in African War

AKRON, Ohio, Aug. 26.—Rubber workers received a grim reminder of the world significance of Mussolini's brutal aggression in Ethiopia this week as they were ordered to the mechanical departments of the large factories to bring out of storage molds used to make gas-masks.

It is very evident that the rubber barons, who increased their fortunes by the millions in the disastrous World War, already anticipate more bloody profits from the precarious world situation of today.

Teachers Win Victory Over Green Machine

Militants Defeat Move To Oust New York Progressives

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 29.—Progressive forces at the convention of the American Federation of Teachers and the entire labor movement scored a significant victory at today's session. The Leftowitz-Linville motion to revoke the charter of the New York Teachers Union which would have meant expulsion of the progressive elements was defeated by a roll call vote of 100 to 79.

In similar fashion the entire slate of the progressive forces was elected as follows: Raymond P. Lowry, Cleveland, Pres.; Geo. Davis, Cleveland, Sec'y-Treas.; and members of the Executive Council: Chas. J. Hendley (N. Y.), Ralph Abstrom (Minn.), Maynard Krueger (Chicago), Walter Bergman (Detroit), Anna C. Dart (San Francisco), Mary Grossman (Philadelphia), Florence Hanson (Chicago), Mercedes Nelson (Minn.), W. P. Satterthwaite (Seattle), E. R. Weinberger (W. Va.), Claude Williams (Ark.), C. Wells (Wisc.), Mary Merrick (Chicago).

The great surprise of the elections was the election to the Executive Council of Chas. J. Hendley of New York, representing the minority opposition in Local 5 and the defeat of Abraham J. Leftowitz who was also a candidate for that body.

Green's Splitting Telegram A significant factor in the victory of the progressives was the impudent and intimidating telegram from Pres. Green of the A. F. of L. which shocked and aroused the delegates when it was read to the convention at yesterday's session. Miss Selma Borchardt, legislative representative of the A. F. of L. at Washington, and a Leftowitz adherent, admitted on the floor of the convention that she had arranged to have Green send the telegram to the convention at the "psychological moment." But the

Tyrant-in-Chief Bill Green Dictates Auto Union Heads

Overrides Overwhelming Vote of Membership Defeating Dillon for Office at Convention in Detroit

BULLETIN DETROIT, Aug. 30.—Dictator William Green, who crawls on all fours before the bosses and the President, threw into the waste basket the democratic decisions of the convention of the auto workers now in session, overrode the crushing defeat administered to Dillon and his machine, and handpicked the incoming Executive Council and officers from the worst reactionary heels in the auto industry.

BULLETIN DETROIT, Aug. 28.—Burke Cochran, correspondent for the NEW MILITANT, was ordered out of the convention of the United Automobile Workers held at the Fort Shelby Hotel by Francis J. Dillon, chairman, although he had previously received a press card from the resolutions committee of the convention. He has sent in a written protest to the resolutions committee and demanding that he be allowed to sit with other representatives of the press.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 28.—The constitutional convention of the United Automobile Workers, meeting at the Fort Shelby Hotel here in Detroit is entering into its fourth day. As yet the convention has nothing more substantial to report than the adoption of a few minor resolutions and a name for the union, "The International Union of United Automobile Workers of America."

The Dillon machine has come fully geared to this convention. It was determined to place its heavy hands around the throat of the International from the start; to place the automobile worker in a strait-jacket and to dampen his ardor.

The first session opened with a blowing of bugles and a fanfare of drums. First, the usual quota of speeches. Then a delegation of about thirty men was charged "with the honor and responsibility of proceeding to Suite 1873 of this hotel and there conveying to the President of the American Federation of Labor your desire to usher him to this convention." As Pres. Green entered the convention hall the chorus sang "How-do-you-do, Mr. Green?" Then after a long speech full of pathos and deep feeling, Green presented, "with a deep and sincere consciousness of the solemnity of this occasion" a charter to the United Automobile Workers. "There it is," he cried. "It is yours." Quietly down a little, he explained that the charter gave the union jurisdiction over production workers only and that for a temporary period, the officers to function under the charter would be designated by the Pres. of the American Federation of Labor.

Green Pleads, Cajoles, Whines The next day the handpicked resolutions committee began its report. Among a lot of innocuous resolutions, one was slipped in to the effect that Dillon continue to serve as President of the International, with his salary to be paid by the American Federation of Labor. At once, Carl Shipley, a progressive of local 18437 of South Bend was on his feet and offered a substitute that all officers of the International be elected by the convention. Dillon, who acted as chairman, said that the substitute motion "embarrassed" him, as the motion involved him (Dillon) personally. Therefore he would turn the chair over to Pres. Green. Green came forward, suave and prepared. The machine, it appeared was well oiled. Everything seemed to be running according to schedule.

Green began explaining: Now was a transition period, a probationary period; the A. F. of L., like a father was solicitous for the welfare of a child, wanted to watch over the International. "Is it possible," he exclaimed, "that we cannot extend to you the help we are craving to give?" For half an hour he kept alternately threatening and pleading that Dillon be accepted as the President of the International.

As soon as he finished his remarks up jumped delegate after delegate from Toledo, Cleveland, South Bend, Norwood, Kenosha—all the substantial delegations as a matter of fact, and rejected with indignation the attempt on the part of the A. F. of L. to ram down their throats an appointed president. They termed the proposal an insult to their intelligence. All the accumulated bitterness of a whole year; the betrayals, the sabotage of the Dillon office, revealed itself in their indignant but restrained remarks.

For about an hour and a half the delegates debated the motion. Then Green ruled the substitute out of order! The vote was now to concur with the recommendation of the resolutions committee or not to concur. A roll-call vote was taken and the resolution had been defeated by a vote of 1642 to 1128. Cheers greeted the announcement of the count. This was the first test of strength between the progressives and the reactionary machine, and the progressives had come out victorious!

The convention had voted its decision on the matter, but as the good book says, "Man proposes, but God disposes." After the meeting was adjourned, Green informed the press "this has no effect on the status of things." Dillon will be retained in an executive capacity. The convention can appeal on this point to the national convention of the A. F. of L. in October, but the charter clearly states that the executive council can appoint its officers.

"I think, however, that I can straighten this out today to the satisfaction of all parties." And they have been "straightening the thing out" for the last day and a half. They have been caucusing with all of the delegations, soft-soaping, pleading, explaining. What they failed to obtain by coercion they now intend to cheat the convention out of by diplomacy. A "Compromise"—Not a Defeat! It is understood that a "compromise" resolution is being sought. Late Tuesday night, it was rumored that the majority of the delegations had agreed to the election of Martens of Kansas City as President of the International, and that Dillon would act as his "advisor." If this

Pass Guffey Bill; Blow to Mine Workers

Legalizes Company Unions; Stifles Strike Movements

The passage of the Guffey-Snyder Coal Bill just before Congress adjourned undoubtedly brought great satisfaction to the officials at the United Mine Workers headquarters. It has now become law. But what will it mean to the mine camps.

About 450,000 soft coal miners, wracked by the twin scourge of unemployment and low wages, have time and again asserted their demand for a six-hour workday and the six dollar a day scale. The present contract with the coal operators expired on April first and the union officials were empowered to call a strike to gain these main demands; but they preferred to place their hopes in the passage of the Guffey Bill. Three times the projected and again postponed national strike was called off in anticipation of the passage of the bill. It was on the Roosevelt administration's "must" list and it was supported jointly by the large coal operators and the U.M.W. officials.

Cancels Strike Action

Of course, the Guffey Bill will in no sense meet the demands of the coal miners. The fact that it enjoyed the support of the large coal operators should make this perfectly clear. But this is not all. The same as the anticipation of the passage of the Guffey Bill served before to postpone strike action it can now be expected to serve as a means to cancel strike action for the coal miners' demands altogether. This after all is its real purpose.

The Guffey Bill is a part of the legislation symbolical of the Roosevelt regime. Similar in essence to the Wagner Bill it is to serve as a means of what is popularly called, "diminishing the causes of labor disputes." But this merely diplomatic way of saying the bill is designed to prevent the workers from resorting to strike action to gain their demands. With its various provisions the Guffey Bill aims to divert the coal miners from the path of struggle, from making use of their organized power and instead to tie them up in a complicated system of governmental boards.

Power to Big Operators

The Guffey Bill has been called a little NRA for the coal industry. It imposes a code on the industry

POWERS READY Boycott of Imperialist Italy Must Begin Now

International diplomacy is spinning its last threads in the web of imperialist intrigue around the kingdom of Ethiopia. While "neutrality" was being guaranteed affecting both Italy and Ethiopia, it Duce kept laying in war supplies and purchasing the raw materials necessary for the manufacture of arms and munitions. Boatloads of Italian troops are keeping up a steady traffic on the way to East Africa.

More than one quarter of a million men are now camped in the territories bordering on Ethiopia. Only the military command: ready, aim, fire, is needed to set off a conflagration that must inevitably bring all of humanity into a new world carnage.

In the meanwhile, Haile Selassie, king of the Negus, is mobilizing—if it could be called that—750,000 men to stand off the imperialist invasion.

Britain is sending war ships to the Suez Canal, Malta and other outlying naval stations in the war zone.

And Laval, with typical French polish and sophistication has unearthed a pretty euphemism for Mussolini's imperialist war of invasion, calling it a "colonial expedition."

Britain's Game The greatest factor which has so far kept 11 Duce from his desired goal has unquestionably been the attitude of Great Britain. As stated previously in these columns England has too much to lose from a complete domination of Ethiopia by Italy. England wants absolute control for herself of the Lake Tana region, source of the cotton wealth in the British controlled Egyptian Sudan.

France, too, would prefer a "peaceful" slicing apart of Ethiopia with each of the imperialist powers concerned getting "equitable" portions. Ethiopia remaining "nominally independent."

And so the League of Nations is to meet again on September 4. There France will endeavor to get Italy to see the broad, humanitarian way out of the conflict, by taking as much of Ethiopia "peacefully" as she could possibly get by war. For is not France a peace-loving country? It is. Stalin has so declared it. And Herriot shall represent France in the debates on this question. Litvinoff will gain a worthy ally. For is not Herriot a

Armed Vigilantes Terrorize Calif. Agricultural Workers

By C. CURTISS

SANTA ROSA, Calif., Aug. 23.—Santa Rosa is the chief town in Sonoma county from which come the big, red, juicy, Gravenstein apples and hops. The crops are ripening now. The trees are loaded; the branches sagging to the earth. Labor is needed to harvest the apples and hops. The cry is for labor, labor.

Labor does not respond to the cry because the wages offered are not sufficient to maintain even the low standard of life the agricultural workers are accustomed to. The workers are organizing and forming into unions.

A few weeks ago there was a strike of apple-pickers in Santa Rosa. The workers called a meeting. Vigilantes crashed into this strike meeting, dispersing it, and beating up workers. From this period, the vigilantes have been terrorizing Sonoma county. The highest point to date was reached on the night of Wednesday, August 21, when two active militant workers, accused of being Communists, were tarred and feathered and then marched through town for eight hours.

Patriotism and a Drunken Mob The night riders began their activities by taking Jack Green, a sign painter of Santa Rosa. Jack Green for many years was president of the Central Trades and Labor Council of Sonoma County, and up to two months ago was president of the local union of sign painters. He is at present a delegate to the Central Trades and Labor Council.

They then descended upon S. Nitzburg, a rancher. Shotgun fire met them at Nitzburg's ranchhouse. The brave mob of 300 then fell back, and sent for tear gas. When the gas arrived it was shot into the ranchhouse, driving Nitzburg and his family out. They rounded up three others, manhandling women in their attempts to capture their victims. The five were ordered to kiss the American flag. Nitzburg and Green refused, while the others "acceded." Finally they beat Nitzburg and Green into doing likewise, but as a reprisal for their refusal, they shaved the heads of the two and then dumped tar and feathers over them. Shouting, the triumphant mob, many of whom were drunk, paraded the two through the streets of Santa Rosa.

Shipping Clerks Out Solid in NY Strike; Drivers Move Scab Goods

Practically every shipping clerk in the ladies garment industry in New York is on strike. Responding to the call of Ladies Apparel Shipping Clerks Federal Union between 12 to 15,000 walked out on Tuesday. It was an overwhelming response. The union was not prepared to handle such masses and some confusion resulted. With the support of other unions, efforts to perfect the strike machinery are being made.

Besides the usual difficulties such as strike breakers, thugs and cops, the strikers have an additional obstacle to overcome. Truck Drivers Local 102 I.L.G.W.U. is working overtime to move shipments held up by the strike. Feeling against the leaders of Local 102 is running high. Pressure from other unions has been brought to bear on Sol Metz, Secretary-Manager of the Local and other officials and there is some hope that strikebreaking by union truck drivers will be stopped.

Numerous clashes between pickets and company thugs have taken place. The young strikers, in all cases, gave a good account of themselves. Cops and squad cars on horse and foot are getting in their usual strikebreaking. Many pickets have been arrested. One picket, a Negro, who struggled with an armed thug is charged with felonious assault because a shot from the thug's revolver wounded a passer by.

The shipping clerks, some of whom push racks of dresses through the streets, are the lowest paid and the most overworked of all in the ladies' garment industry. They are striking for union recognition, a $25 minimum weekly wage and the 35 hour week.

The strike shows a great need of a change in the structure of the I.L.G.W.U. in the direction of an industrial union, with an agreement to cover all workers in the industry. While the shipping clerks are striking, the truck drivers are at work and in some cases actually doing the work formerly done by the strikers. In the shops, dressmakers and cloak makers are at work and though anxious in the main to support the strike, they are bound by contract. Apparently no attempt was made before the strike was called to arrange for what limited support could be given by the Cloakmakers, Dressmakers, Truckdrivers and Elevator Operators unions. As a result all sorts of charges and challenges are being hurled back and forth. Dressmakers charge the officials of Local 102 with strike breaking, and the charge seems well founded. Metz of Local 102 challenges the Dressmakers to call a sympathetic strike though he knows that they are under a contract, which forbids sympathetic strikes. All of this could be avoided or at worst minimized by the proper conferences being held prior to the strike.

Despite the difficulties, the marvelous spirit of the young strikers rises over all. Many shops have signed on with the union and there is every reason to expect a solid organization of shipping clerks as a result of the strike.

On Life, Liberty and Pursuit of Happiness

By BILL REICH

Log of a Hitch-Hiker

"Hop in boy. We'll be in Naashville by 6:30." The driver, a frayed Rabbitt, hailed from Atlanta and eked out a precarious living selling a life-insurance-magazine subscription combination. The car was a model of five years back and broke down before we had gone far. With a little tinkering we were on our way again.

"Lots of Negroes in this town," I remarked as we passed through a bleak, dingy village.

"Not Negroes, niggers to us," he replied. "There are more niggers than whites in this country."

"Are they mostly sharecroppers?" I asked.

"Sharecroppers or hired hands," he replied.

"Do any own their own land?"

"Hell no," he exclaimed in surprise, "we won't let 'em."

He rambled on good-naturedly. "Our governor was all right until he started to attack the President. We Georgia won't let any man knock Roosevelt, not even the governor. He'll be turned out next election. I'm goin' to see my family this week. I've got a wife and two fine boys. Don't get to see them very often. I'm on the road most of the time. I've got a sweet little daisy in Chattanooga—a blond, and boy how she can love! She went with me for three days last week. She'd sit in the car and read magazines while I made my calls. She's a swell baby, and sensible. Not like most giddy girls you run across. I guess that's why I like her, she's so sensible."

.....

An enormous Cadillac, the back seat filled with luggage, stopped a few feet from my outstretched thumb. A heavy, course-featured woman was the lone occupant. "I thought you were one of the profession," she remarked in a husky voice. "What profession?" I asked innocently. "The show business, the circus. But I see you don't talk our lingo. I'll make room for you in the front seat and you can ride as far as I go. I always like to have a man around, not that they're any good but they make you feel safer." She chattered on. "I work for a circus. My husband's a clown and I work a concession. The show's playing Paducah and I'm taking this chance to visit my old Kentucky home and scout around a bit. I saw in Billboard of an opening in an outfit that's playing Hopkinsville this week. We've been doing hick towns in Illinois and business is rotten. We got the crowds but they won't spend. Some look at the freaks but they steer clear of the big tent. No money, I guess. We heard that business is good in Tennessee and we'll go down there if they lift the infantile paralysis quarantine. My man picked up this Cadillac for a bargain, but god, it's expensive to run. He's going to use it as a taxi this winter."

.....

Much to my astonishment a large furniture van stopped. "I'm going as far as Lexington," the driver cried. I got in and the driver continued. "I work out of Louisville. I'm a contract driver and can haul for only one company. The furniture man that I'm hauling for keeps me busy. He tells me he's sold more during the last year than in any since he started business 25 years ago. Most of the stuff goes to eastern Tennessee and Kentucky. The governments doing a lot down there and the people are buying furniture. I'd make good time if it wasn't for the cops. They're a fright. They boss us around and we have to take 'em. Yesterday in Indiana I saw 'em arrest a guy and they made him turn around on a narrow pavement. He blocked traffic for twenty minutes and when I kicked they tried to arrest me. They tested my truck and made me show all my papers but couldn't get anything on me."

.....

The sun beat down unmercifully. One hour, two hours, passed. Traffic was light. Thoughts of taking a freight took form in my mind. But finally a car responded to my agile thumb. The driver was thin and shrewd. "I promised my wife I wouldn't pick anybody up but you look all right. It's lonesome riding alone."

"How far you going," I asked.

"To Grafton, West Virginia, but not all today."

This was good news as we were in the middle of Kentucky. His story: "I'm a carpenter. I'm working on a PWA project, the Tygart river dam. No, there's no union or any other organization there. Most of the men are satisfied, and if they're not they don't last long on the job. The government has men planted all around to weed out the reds. A hundred or more men are fired each week. There's not many niggers on the job. I wouldn't work with one. If there's anything I hate it's a nigger. They're all right if they keep in their place but ernment officials in Washington, D. C.

His friendship for General Johnson has not been affected one whit by the present serious situation in which Johnson, with the entire government apparatus behind him, has undertaken to smash union conditions and union wage scales on PWA and WPA projects. Johnson's success (read: U. S. government) in this campaign cannot fail to undermine organized labor standards in the building industry and all classes of private employment. Despite the serious situation Meany, representing labor, finds it possible to utter pleasing words about his "good friend," Gen. Hugh S. Johnson.

On Wednesday, Aug. 28, the PWA strike committee met with Gen. Johnson at his offices in the Port Authority Building. According to Harry Van Ansdale Jr., Business Manager of Electrical Workers Local 3, one of the "major" demands by organized labor is reclassification of all building mechanics. Van Ansdale reported to a meeting of striking electrical workers that Johnson is prepared to accede to this "demand."

In reality reclassification of mechanics can only mean one thing: members of A. F. of L. building trades unions are to be reclassified as "mechanics" while non-union skilled workers are to emerge from this jugglery as "unskilled laborers" with a monthly wage rate of $55. Thus while the unions involved refuse to organize the unorganized, the officials of these unions are prepared to monopolize all forms of government construction, city, state and federal, against the non-union building trades workers. These workers, because of their unorganized position, are at present unable to obtain consideration from A. F. of L. officials for united action against the anti-union activities of the government and its spokesman in New York.

Unorganized PWA building trades workers, who apply for membership in the unions of their respective crafts, are informed that they "cannot join" but that "protection" will be given those on strike.

George Meany, Pres. of the State Federation of Labor and Joseph P. Ryan, Pres. of the Central Trades and Labor Council, are both members of Johnson's strikebreaking Labor Advisory Board. While it is generally known that this board, over the signatures of Gen. Johnson, informed a group of technical workers employed by the Park Department that they would be discharged if they demonstrated against Gen. Johnson, it is also known that Ryan and Meany, "representatives of organized labor," themselves members of the above-mentioned board, did not utter one word against the strikebreaking action of the board.

The strike committee will continue in conference with Gen. Johnson and Mayor LaGuardia; but the strike is "in the bag"—betrayed by the Ryans and the Meany for the dubious honor of a seat on strikebreaker Johnson's Labor Advisory Board.

The immediate task confronting the building project workers—A. F. of L. and unorganized—is the creation of a coordinated body of city-wide project workers' organizations with militant leadership. Only in this manner will union standards be maintained and unity between A. F. of L. and unorganized workers established.

"I've read many of Trotsky's works and am inclined to sympathize with his viewpoint." I was astonished by this statement from Mr. X who picked me up in Arkansas. "The trouble with you radicals is that you're not realistic. Huey Long is stealing your thunder. Why don't you take a few lessons from Huey and you'll soon bring about the revolution."

Mr. X has invented a machine that will revolutionize a certain industry. It will do the work of fifty to seventy-five men. (The confidential character of his statements prevent me from being more explicit.) The machine is now on the market but the company that is manufacturing it plans to set aside a large proportion of the profits for the rehabilitation of the men thrown out of work. Perhaps it would be more sensible to use the profits to aid in overthrowing the profit-system and to install a system where labor saving devices would be a blessing rather than a curse. . .

Calif. Vigilantes Terrorize Agricultural Laborers

used against Nitzburg and others. No one else but the police had the bombs nor the guns to fire them.

Police Cooperation

Santa Rosa is not a large town and three hundred men could not organize themselves without police knowledge and connivance. It is definitely charged and proven that public officials, police officials and prominent "honored" citizens were active in the raiding.

U. S. Attorney General Webb, who had given sanction to the vigilantes, by refusing to act in earlier cases in Santa Rosa, had the following statement to make in reply to a demand of the Civil Liberties Union for investigation and action: "There is nothing to investigate."

Let some strikers say "scab" to some strikebreaker and Mr. Webb will be sure to call out all the forces at his disposal to restore "law and order," meanwhile beating and arresting workers by scores. This attack upon the lives of five workers evokes nothing out of him but the implicit support of the vigilantes. Knowing the character of the capitalist state machinery, this need cause us little surprise, no matter how discomfited the San Francisco News, a liberal paper, may be by the declaration of Webb.

The San Francisco News in its timid protest against the Vigilantes has the following to say: "We have every sympathy for growers who see their entire year's work menaced by a few agitators."

How about some sympathy for the underpaid workers, with their substandard existence wages! The position of the News is summed up in the statement: "Could the mob take a better way to arouse sympathy for its victims and to weaken any legitimate case there may be against them?"

The victims' sole crime was that they took a position for the organization of the field workers. To the capitalist class this is a heinous crime. And the News' position is that the vigilante methods do not work in suppressing this crime—these methods merely arouse sympathy for the victims. The News prefers the more regular channels of suppression as offering a more efficient instrument of oppression. To the workers of the state, there is but little to choose between the News' method of "sympathizing with the growers and the vigilante methods."

Made-in-California

Hearst-inspired vigilanteism which is sweeping the state is a Made-in-California variety of fascism. The terror practiced by the small growers, storekeepers, petty officials and hoodlum elements, in the interests

A Foreunner of the Revolution

By A. J. MUSTE

On a mountain side near Old Fort, N. C. hundreds of men and women gathered last Sunday for the funeral of Larry Hogan, Workers Party member and Southern strike leader. The mountain folks from whom he had sprung, farmers, unemployed, hosiery workers, textile workers whom he had organized and with whom he had fought on a hundred picket lines, union officials, composed that crowd.

Editorials in the capitalist press of North Carolina commented on his death which was the result of an automobile accident, pointing to him as an arch enemy of the employing interests, yet paying grudging praise to his courage, skill and power over the masses. Colorful, dynamic, filled with a passion for social change, were the expressions they used about him.

Less than seven years ago Larry Hogan, a young married man of 24 who had come down out of the hills to work in a cotton mill, was not to be distinguished from tens of thousands of Southern textile workers. When, however, a $11.00 wage for a 70 hour week, plus a merciless speed-up, finally forced the workers of the Marion Mfg. Company to revolt, Larry was one of the leaders of the union and emerged from the long strike in which six men were killed by drunken deputies on a picket line as an outstanding figure.

Learning from Life

Larry learned many things during that strike. At its beginning the quartette of which he was the leader was singing "We are building Jacob's ladder, soldiers of the cross." Before many days had passed the words were changed to read: "We are building a strong union, workers of the mill." He had learned, in other words, to use the idealism which had been bred in him in the only realistic way possible under modern conditions, namely, for organizing the workers to cope with the oppression and misery to which they were subjected. He learned the basic fact of the class struggle in modern society and from that time on read men and events in the light of that Marxian truth. He learned, furthermore, that the struggle was not a superficial one but must and with the destruction of the prevailing economic system. He had become a revolutionist. He also learned that within the labor movement itself there are the fighters and the class collaborationists, and decided that his place was with the former.

At the close of the strike he could have eased into a secure position as a trade union organizer if he had been willing to trail along with the machine. He felt instead the need of study in order to discover the intellectual justification for the convictions he had reached in the struggle and to equip himself for translating his ideals into reality. Thus he became a student at Brookwood Labor College which had shortly before been placed under the ban of the A. F. of L.

His course at Brookwood was interrupted by an educational period on the chain gang in North Carolina, the state having found "sufficient evidence" in his strike activities to warrant a sentence, though it had not been able to discover "evidence" on which to convict the deputy sheriffs who had killed six strikers.

Plugging Along

Following the completion of his work at Brookwood, Larry went back to North Carolina. It was a period of dullness and slump in the labor movement. He plugged away nevertheless organizing farmers, unemployed, textile workers, building individuals and patiently teaching them the meaning of the class struggle, helping Pioneer Youth to work with groups of mill and mountain children, etc.

Beginning with the general strike in High Point three years ago a change occurred. In one town after another the workers were ready for revolt and wanted instruction and leadership. In 1933 the Hosiery Workers Union launched large-scale organizing campaigns in the South. Larry was a member of the staff and called upon incessantly for strike organization activity. Characteristically, he was on the way from High Point to Durham for a strike meeting when his car was crowded off the road and the accident which in a few days brought on his death occurred. Characteristically also, during this summer he had backed up his father and other progressive natives around Old Fort in having Negroes as well as white children at Pioneer Youth camp in spite of the suspicion and opposition of many of the neighbors. He had plans for putting up in the mountain retreat where he was building his own little house, a couple more buildings to house a training school for organizers. "Pick out the promising young fellows and girls," said Larry, "who emerge in a strike, take them to Old Fort for a month and teach them something of what it is all about, send them back into practical activity, bring them back again for further instruction after six months or a year; that is the way we will

Crumbs for America's Starving Children

Millions for "Defense"

By G. R.

While the bosses and their government appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars to protect their interests at home and abroad they hand out a few miserable crumbs to the workers. Their motto seems to be: Millions for "defense" but little or nothing for the starving children of the American working class.

Almost every day newspapers all over the country carry such news items as the following:

"About 3,000,000 children in the rural districts of the United States have been deprived of schooling during the whole or part of the school term of 1933-1935 because of insufficient school funds."

"In making public these figures recently the United States Office of Education stated that over 37,000 rural schools were unable to operate the full school term because of lack of funds. In 477 rural districts funds this year were insufficient to pay teachers salaries for even one month. In some of the districts schools remained open only because teachers served in a missionary capacity."

The appropriation for 1936 for the Office of Education was $251,780 while the appropriation for forage only for army horses is $602,317. Or maybe we will run across a headline like the following:

"3,000,000 Children Under 16 On Federal Relief Rollo."

"The result," says Katherine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, "is seen in increased sickness and death rates in families with curtailed incomes, in malnutrition among children, in curtailed educational facilities, closing of schools and restricted budgets for health services."

Safe for Capitalism

Meanwhile big-hearted "Uncle Sam" grants the army the tidy sum of $341,348,261.

While millions of children are growing up in illiteracy in the "cultured" U.S.A., while schools are closed down and teachers go without pay, while the infant mortality rate mounts higher and higher, more than a third of a billion dollars goes to make the United States safe for capitalism, for the defense

Must One Live?

Ed. Note: The following is written by Erich Wollenberg, one of the outstanding revolutionists in the German labor movement. A soldier during the war, he became in turn the military director for the German Communist Party in charge of all military preparations for the abortive 1923 insurrection, the editor of the Rote Fahne and other leading C.P. dailies. Prior to the triumph of Hitler he was exiled to Moscow for his stinging criticism of the fatal course of Stalinism. He is now in exile a member of the International Communist League. It is translated from "De Internationale" (April 1935), theoretical organ of our brother Dutch party, the R.S.A.P. by comrade B. Roede.

By ERICH WOLLENBERG

1915. Before Dunaburg.

Night. We lie in a trench 200 metres above our main position. On the right, scarcely 10 metres separate us from the Russians, on the left about 40. Through the unpardonable stupidity of our battalion commander, we are left, just 15 of us, to "defend" some meaningless piece of ground. Of a sudden we hear moaning "Comrades—help me—water—help." About 5 metres in front of us there lies a straggling German soldier. Help is impossible. The Russians keep up an incessant firing. Two of our comrades have already been shot in the head. A lasso is made out of leather straps—it is thrown to him—we pull. The wounded comrade howls like a beast in pain, and lets the lasso go. A soldier ventures over the breastworks and drops dying in the trench. "Mother..." A second ventures on, and so crawls to his death. Upon this the command is given, "No needless sacrifices!" But again—"Comrades... help..." A third soldier defies discipline, and disobeys the harsh command. With a bullet in the chest he tumbles back into the trench.

What drives these people to their death? Do they attach no significance to the principle that "one must live?" Does not that principle properly apply to them? On a false front they stand, these soldiers. They fight on the front of foul and blood-soaked German imperialism. But they die for a glorious cause; these great lovers of humanity are fanatics in the cause of solidarity.

They risk their lives because they cannot endure that even an unknown comrade die without help.

March 1918. On the Somme.

Ten paces in front of the English lines, there lies a German soldier. His chest shot through with English bullets, his right leg riddled by German bullets, and in his left thigh there protrudes a piece of German shrapnel. He still lives despite his terrible suffering. He moans and cries piteously "Mother! Water! Mother!" A burly English soldier crawls towards him. But the German wants to live and cries out "No, no, no, no..." He tries to crawl away. He does not want to be shot, he does not want a knife thrust in his heart. The English Tommy lies next to him. Swabs and dresses his bleeding chest, and bandages his leg. He thrusts his water bottle towards him, but the German is afraid: "Poison?" The Englishman smiles, and raises his head to take a swallow. A German bullet pierces his brain. The smiling-distorted visage of the dead man stares out upon the sorely wounded

German, who now greedily gulps the refreshing drink. What drove this person to his death? Why did not the principle that "One must live" apply to him? He stood on a false front, this English soldier. He fought on the front of foul and blood-soaked British imperialism. But he was a lover of human-kind—a fanatic in the cause of solidarity, and he died for that glorious cause: he risked his life in order to assuage the suffering of a sorely wounded fellowman—an "enemy" who fought on the other side of the line.

July 1934. Oranienburg concentration camp.

Erich Muhsam, the revolutionary writer and fighter, the great lover of human-kind, the great fanatic in the cause of solidarity, is confronted by an S. S. who says: "If you do not hang within two days we shall lend a hand."

The comrades heard and understood what that meant. Erich promises solemnly "never to afford satisfaction to the fascist beasts," not to take his own life. He divides among his comrades his few belongings. They thank him, and press his hand, knowing only too well how soon that hand will be forever cold; their heads become more deeply bowed, their eyes stare more vacantly toward the ground. Not a single comrade throws his head up. Nor do the eyes of a single one take on a look filled with unswerving determination. Not a single comrade says, "Erich we won't let them murder you without resistance. We will not tolerate in silence your being taken from our midst like a beast that is to be led to the slaughter. Erich, that principle that 'one must live' does not apply to us. We are not worms that crawl on the earth and that cannot rid themselves of life. Erich, we will mutiny!"

Muhsam, the great fanatic, the believer in the staunchness, the fighting spirit, the insurgent spirit of man, remains silent and waits. He is silent when the executioner comes and calls him away. Sadly he looks toward his comrades who cast parting glances at him through eyes full of anguish and sorrow. But Muhsam seeks not grief, not sorrow nor desperation—what he seeks is pride; he seeks a fighting spirit, he seeks the spirit of revolt. He seeks among his comrades a lover of human-kind, a fanatic for the cause of solidarity—but a single one—and he finds him not. That is the greatest tragedy in the terrible end of Erich Muhsam. Not one among his comrades rises up, not one revolts against the murder, not one leaves the "safe" trenches, of putting-up-with-everything. Why is not Muhsam retrieved by his comrades? Why do not the prisoners create an uproar? Why do they not form a living wall around him, that neither club, butt-end nor revolver shot can break down? Why do they not fasten themselves about him, and so shield him, till numbed by death they are torn from off his body? Why does not Oranienburg revolt?

They fight on a correct front, these anti-fascist prisoners in Oranienburg. They wage the only righteous war, the revolutionary fight for liberation from the yoke of capital, imperialism and fascism. But no one risks his life for the glorious cause of solidarity. No one attempts to save his comrade from death.

"Navigare Necesses est, vivere non." "To go to sea is necessary, to live not." Whole generations of sailors—from great-grandfathers, grandfathers to grandsons and great-grandsons—rest, faithful to that proud principle, in their watery graves somewhere on the bottom of the sea.

Leonidas and his men, saved the cause of Greece by blocking the passage of Thermopylae with a living wall, which the Persians had to hew stone by stone, had to conquer and kill, man by man.

The Jacobins of the great French revolution marched, under the banner of "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," singing to their death.

The revolutionary history of Russia—from the Decembrists down through the Narodniki and terrorists to the Bolsheviks—has, more emphatically than ever, revealed anew the old truth, that one idea, one nation, one class can hardly live and conquer unless the bearers of the idea, unless the vanguard of the class are great believers, are fanatics, who not only know how to give battle, but are ready to fight though they know it may mean death.

The German working class, like no other in the world, has shown in a thousand street battles: 1918, 1919, 1921, 1923, 1929, that her best representatives, fanatics in the struggles for freedom, know how to fight, and how to make sacrifices.

Is the lack of revolutionary solidarity exhibited in the murder of Muhsam, an isolated case? Unfortunately no. Germany is the only terror-infested country where, in its concentration camps and S.A.-baracks no mutiny has yet occurred in spite of all the terror, torture and murder. Perhaps—one may object—the storm of indignation and protest might not have been able to save the life of Muhsam. Perhaps, on the whole, is not the resistance of prisoners entirely useless? Here there is no evidence to support this contention. One thing is certain: putting-up-with-everything distorts the character of the revolutionary, breaks his backbone, wastes the living spring of revolution, and because of that seems always to be "useless." Hitler fascists terrorize, torture and degrade the German people because they, the people, do not revolt; and because of their patience, their humility, of their submissiveness, their raging passion continues. Everywhere and always, it seems that those who would live and conquer must be prepared to risk their lives.

Skeletons Out of the Comintern Closet

'Pacifist' and 'Warlike' Nations

By HENRY THURMAN

Communist International, No. 18, September 15, 1935, contains a significant article entitled "How The Labour Lieutenants of The Bourgeoisie 'Fight' Against Fascism." In the light of recent events, the following paragraphs from page 593 burn with meaning:

"Just as Carl Legien in August, 1914, so Leon Jouhaux now (still before the war) openly seeks to utilize the machinery of the Amsterdam International in the interests of one imperialist grouping against another, contrasting the 'pacifist' nations to 'belligerent' nations, the 'lands of democracy' to the 'land of dictatorship'."

"The Belgian Social Fascist, Auguste Devine, in the Central Organ of the Belgian Labour Party, People's, explained the meaning of the war discussion of the Amsterdam trade union bureaucracy sufficiently clear:

"One hears young people saying now: should a new war break out, we will not fight any more; we will reply by a civil war."

"In all cases? We ask. Think of it. Tomorrow the National Socialist government may start a new war. ... Supposing the German people ... do not revolt against their rulers and the fascist bands appear on our borders ready ... to repeat the murders and devastations of 1914. ... Will you let them do this?"

"What! you declare yourselves ready to die in the fight against the fascists here, while on the day that you are faced with the German fascists you will throw away your arms and refuse to defend our women, our children and socialism?"

"No one will believe you. You are fooling yourselves. Our young socialists are no more cowardly than were their fathers ... and like them they have no intention of betraying the cause of labour."

"In this way does the trade union bureaucracy use the belittling aggression of German fascism to mobilize the masses in their capitalist countries for the best preparation of their national bourgeoisie for war. Under the disguise of a struggle against fascism, by which is meant foreign fascism only, the conditions necessary for a 'civil peace' are created even before the proclamation of war. The enemy outside one's house may be sometimes more dangerous to the working class than the enemy within one's own house," is the way the 'Socialist Herald,' organ of the Menshevik white emigres, sums up the situation." (Communist International, No. 18.)

The Socialist Herald is the same rag of Dan and his Menshevik colleagues that supported the Menshevik line of Stalin in the Chinese Revolution (1927). Now Thorez, who boo-hoos for the protection of French culture, womanhood, socialism, and everything else from the fascist hands of Germany, finds himself lined up all over again with his master's old advisers.

Just as capitalists ought never to put their love for a woman into writing, so socialists who want to venture into the bypaths of opportunism should write their principles in vanishing ink.

Green Dictates to Auto Union arrangement carries the victory won by the progressives will prove to have been a pyrrhic one. The progressives unfortunately have no man of their own, dynamic and experienced enough to win the approval of all the progressive delegations. They have more over come to the convention with no slave prepared, thus making it easy for the reactionary machine to divide their ranks on the question of delegates.

What will perhaps prove to be of even greater importance than the election of candidates will be the question of jurisdiction, which it is expected, will come up tomorrow. The machine has not dared as yet to put the question on the floor. They have been "cooling off" the delegates today by having such eminent "trade unionists" as Charles Ogburn, Prof. Selig Perlman, etc., address them. The progressives are not being diverted, however. They are pledged to fight for an international with jurisdiction over all men and women employed in or around automobile or automobile parts plants and they are preparing to fight for full jurisdictional rights on the floor of the convention.

Boycott of Imperialist Italy Must Begin Now sincere friend of the Soviet Union? So Stalin has stated. The imperialist spiders are waiting, aided and abetted by Stalin and Litvinoff who to this day have not uttered so much as a word either of warning to Italy or encouragement to Ethiopia.

But it is necessary to speak out. This is not going to be a war against Fascism. Rather it will be a war against imperialism. And as such the defense of Ethiopia, its people and independence is the elementary duty of the international working class. What is involved at the present moment is not an evaluation of the merits or demerits of Haile Selassie and his regime; what is important is that Ethiopia is a weak and backward nation which has a right in having its national independence safeguarded. That being the case everything possible must be done to see that Mussolini is defeated in his adventure.

A defeat for Italy would be of tremendous value in undermining the hold of reaction on the masses of Italy. A victory for Ethiopia would be a clarion call to all the oppressed natives and colonials in ment stares Latimer in the face, even as it did Bainbridge. There is one salvation: crush 574.

Needless to say, the Citizens Alliance jumps at the chance to pull the irksome thorn of 574 from its side. Jubilant, it notes the actions of the labor fakers and mayor "with a keen sense of gratification, encouragement and hopefulness ... and takes this opportunity of offering the entire facilities of our organization in cooperating ..."

The entire plan is carried through under the lie of "industrial peace." The employers are to take care of the "incorrigibles" in their own ranks and the unions are to do likewise. The open-shop, wage-slashing Citizens Alliance has already learned the new tune. They boast: "This (being fair to labor) is, and has been one of the main functions of our organization." And the labor leaders give them a helping hand by pointing out "that if the employers would make an effort (!) to require the owners of industry to pay living wages these disturbances would largely disappear." How simple it is to make an "effort" and fail!

To put over the offensive against the wage standards of labor they must make it palatable, by calling it "industrial peace" and they must make it possible by beginning a drive against the spearhead of resistance, Local 574.

The opening gun in the campaign against the Drivers Local was to have been a "test case" regarding a dispute between 574 and the Glenwood-Inglewood company. And here the unholy alliance suffered its first defeat for the bosses of this company signed up with 574, granting all its demands. The brass check press tries to save face by saying that the agreement was made with "employees" although in the very next sentence they are forced to mention that Farrell Dobbs, Secretary-Treasurer of 574 was one of the negotiators.

When Tobin accepted the blessings of the Citizens Alliance last year, he thought that 574 was finished. But they came out of the strike stronger and more influential than ever. So he revoked their charter. But to no avail. 574 emerged from this struggle with more members and more support. Even the Central Labor Union was forced to endorse its case against Tobin. Now Tobin's counterparts in Minnesota, perhaps at his instigation, are taking the same rocky road.

They are bound to failure. For 574 does not stand alone. Behind them are thousands of Minneapolis working men, in and out of the unions, who will rally to their support. And in this struggle they will learn who the real "racketeers" are.

Africa to rid themselves of the yoke of foreign imperialism. Workers in industry supplying materials for Italy must be brought into the struggle on the side of Ethiopia. The methods of strike, sabotage and boycott must be resorted to in an effort to cripple Mussolini's war machine.

Let the workers of all countries understand that a blow at Italian imperialism is a blow to reaction at home!

Question Box

By A. WEAVER

M. D., BROOKLYN—Question: Why, if the capitalists benefit by inflation, was there such resistance on the part of the French capitalists to a reduction of the gold content of the franc, particularly if we bear in mind that the American capitalists apparently benefited by reducing the dollar's gold content?

Answer: It is not true that the capitalists benefit, under all circumstances, from an inflation, and they regard it with mixed emotions. Inflation means indirect wage-cuts for the workers, and correspondingly more surplus-value, the money bags benefit. Insofar as, in the early stages of a "devaluation" of the currency, they are better able to undersell their competitors on the foreign market, the financial gentlemen are pleased. Insofar, however, as their income is of a fixed character (e.g. interest on government bonds) they are greatly annoyed by an inflation, since this amounts to a reduction in their real income.

For the capitalists of France (the classical country of the rentier) it is the latter consideration which outweighs all others, since they have a very large share of their wealth invested in government bonds. The internal debt of that country, i.e., the government bonds held by the rentiers, is over 12 billion dollars, whereas the total national wealth probably does not exceed 50 billions.

Because on the other hand the American capitalists expected to at least balance their losses and gains from an inflation they raised no tremendous howl against Roosevelt's reduction of the gold content of the dollar. It might also be added that the economic collapse of 1932-33 hardly gave them any choice.

Question: Why would it have been necessary for the French government to devalue the franc, and how did cutting the wages of the French workers obviate this?

Answer: The possibility that it might have been necessary to reduce the gold content of the franc developed, not because of insufficient gold reserves to meet whatever demands might be made (the gold holdings represented over 80 percent of any claims which might have been made on them but from the need of balancing the budget.

How was this to be done? Reduce military expenditures? A ridiculous idea for imperialist bandits. Raise more taxes? The peasant and shopkeeper were loaded as heavily as the traffic would bear. Two alternate methods were left, by which the balance could be made up: 1. Cut the wages of the government workers, or 2. On the basis of a reduction of the franc's gold content, which would make such a procedure financially sound, issue enough additional currency to meet expenses.

The first threw the burden directly on the backs of the workers; the second would have shifted at least part of it onto the rentiers. In this manner the class antagonisms between proletariat and capitalist were directly reflected in the debates over the currency.

As was to have been expected, Laval, uttering the necessary words about saving the glories of France, etc., protected the interests of the coupon clippers, thus providing the Stalinists with the ideal moment to begin defending the "remnants of bourgeois democracy."

A. W., BROOKLYN—Question: What reliable literature, explaining thoroughly in a simple manner both sides of the "Permanent Revolution" as opposed to "Socialism in One Country", can you recommend?

Answer: It is very difficult to list the theoretical works defending the "theory" of Socialism in One Country because, to all intent and purpose, they do not exist. The entire theoretical reservoir of the Stalinists consists of two quotations from Lenin, which don't mean what the Stalinists claim, followed by the assertion that this proves their point. Your editor knows of no single Stalinist work devoted solely to this subject and you will find that whatever is said by the defenders of the "theory" usually appears as an apparently unimportant appendix to some other work. You will find an authoritative defense of the "theory" by Stalin in his "Problems of Leninism" (1934 edition, International Publishers), particularly in the chapter entitled "The Question of the Victory of Socialism in a Single Country" in which he apologizes for the fact that he once held the view that Socialism could not be built in a single country.

For a criticism of the "theory" and for an explanation of the "Permanent Revolution" the following are sufficient to occupy your reading time for quite a while: "Criticism of the Draft Program" and "The Permanent Revolution" by Trotsky; also the appendices to the first and third volumes of the latter's "History of the Russian Revolution."

Chicago Candy Strike Spiked

A.F. of L. Skate Turns Winning Battle into Defeat

By JACK WALTON

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 26.—On Thursday, Aug. 22, the Crystal Pure Candy strike ended. Today the 250 workers returned to their jobs. The overwhelming majority have not had their wage cut restored; that is to be negotiated. The slab men and cooks received a 5 cent an hour increase. If within 30 days the majority of the workers are members of the union, then the boss will recognize and deal with them on that basis.

But in that time, the bosses will undoubtedly make a strong attempt to win the majority to their side. And when one remembers that the workers are all broke and that they will not get a substantial check until Sept. 10, thereby keeping them from paying initiation fees and dues, one realizes how strong the boss is. The boss has thirty days in which to defeat the union. The union will be able to sign up people and collect the necessary money to make them real union members only from Sept. 10 to Sept. 22. It was on this sort of agreement that the strike was settled.

Effective Strike
At the time of the settlement, the strike was still on the upswing. The spirit was high and getting better. The picket lines were strong. Nobody was working in the shop. The strikers and their families were being fed. Hardly any trucks had gotten through Berry Landau's flying squads. That very day a truck had been stopped from picking up a load, notwithstanding the fact that the riot squad pulled a gun on Berry and told him not to molest the driver. The next day a strike bulletin was to appear, under Landau's editorship. The boss was begging for negotiations and had already proposed the above compromise agreement. Everything pointed toward a successful strike. But on Wednesday evening the international sent down Jack Sanford, general organizer in charge of the candy industry.

He came to the strike committee meeting that night and immediately demanded the exclusion of Landau on the technical charge that the international did not permit "outsiders" to attend strike committee meetings. Landau pointed out that he really wasn't an "outsider" since he and Mike Pretula had organized the spontaneous walkout into a well-functioning strike; and that he had been elected to the strike committee by the unanimous vote of the strikers. The bureaucrat remained adamant. The strike committee was bluffed into according to his demand, and later to the settlement. Francis Heisler, who, as attorney for the Non-Partisan Labor Defense, had been invited to work with the strike committee, was also forced to leave.

The Strike Meeting

A strike meeting was called for the next day. It had been decided that only those who worked in the shop at the time of the strike be permitted to attend. At the same time Berry and Mike (the "outsiders") continued in charge of picketing. The strike committee was not supposed to tell anyone what the terms of the settlement were. But some of those who were opposed to the settlement asked Berry for advice. The W.P. members immediately began to organize an active opposition to the settlement among the rank and file.

In the hall, before the meeting was officially called to order, Landau asked for the floor. It was granted. He devoted a 20 minute speech to attacking the agreement. He also pointed out that the bureaucrats wanted to oust him from the meeting not because of the technicality, as they would have it; they had not proposed it when he and Mike were working 16 hours a day to make the strike a success; but because the labor fakers knew that if Berry and Mike were able to speak to the strikers, no sell-out would be perpetrated. When he finished, a prolonged roar of applause followed him from the room.

The bureaucrats then proceeded to put over the sell-out. They talked for two hours. Toward the end of that time the strikers started coming into the corridor to ask Landau and Pretula for advice. When the bureaucrats finished speaking the strikers began to yell for "Berry." The moment he walked into the room and was greeted by a roar of applause, the bureaucrats arose and began to leave.

The chairman of the strike committee called upon the strikers to support the international or follow Landau and lose the right of joining the union. That turned the tide. After Landau left, a member of the Young Communist League District Bureau, who happened to be there as a representative of his union, took the floor. He objectively supported the bureaucrats by merely telling the strikers that if they stayed out two weeks more they would win more of their demands; and did not attack the proposed agreement.

However, the pressure of the W. P. fraction had been strong enough to get the meeting recessed and send the negotiations committee over to the factory to try and get more concessions. During the recess, the W.P. and S.Y.L. passed out a leaflet calling upon the strikers to stand by Berry and Mike and to fight for complete and immediate union recognition.

The meeting reconvened a half-hour later. The negotiations committee had gotten nothing more. The settlement was put over on a disgusted and discouraged strike meeting.

Today the advanced workers are being organized into a Progressive Group to make a union shop out of Crystal Pure and to introduce progressive, militant policies into the union; and eventually, a leadership that will reflect those policies and the real interests of the rank and file workers.

Spartan Comrades Ask Assistance for Activity

Comrade Gould's enforced leave strikes the organization a blow at a crucial moment. He had just begun to straighten out our affairs which had suffered from his absence on the tour, other comrades' summer leaves, and the summer slump generally. Above all, he was taking steps to meet our most pressing financial obligations by systematic canvassing of our sympathizers here in New York City and an intensive campaign of letter writing.

We therefore appeal to all readers to help us meet the emergency created by Gould's illness. Send contributions to Jane Ogden, acting national secretary, 55 E. 11th St., New York City.

Socialist Youth of Paris Raise Banner of Revolution; Urge General Strike Against Laval's Decree Laws

Youth Leader Appeals for Revolutionary Action

By FRED ZELLER

Secretary of Seine Federation of Young Socialists (From "Revolution")

The French political situation is unwinding at the pace we long ago predicted. After the experiences of Flaudin and Bouisson comes Laval and his decree-laws. New wage reductions are imposed on the workers in order to make up the financial deficit, to save the franc and maintain the regime. At the same time they are reducing the buying power of the falling masses and aggravating the crisis, one of the fruits of the system.

Placed before this dilemma: an incurable and decaying capitalism dragging millions of people in the wake of its fall, or the destruction of the regime by revolution, Laval and his lackeys have chosen. They feel themselves supported by big financial capital and by the militarized fascist gangs and armies, and they count on the weakness and lack of resistance of the workers' organizations. They will pursue their offensive up to the very end and by that very fact we are every day approaching closer to the inevitable denouement.

Revolt is mounting in all corners of France. Everywhere the workers, dissatisfied with their living conditions are reacting violently. In Paris at La Place de l'Opera the public service employees took to the streets. In Brest, in Lorient, in Toulon the munition workers declared strikes and demonstrated in tens of thousands in the streets and were attacked by the Garde Mobile and the army. Blood flows, the dead strew the streets. The coercive apparatus functions in full swing. The bourgeoisie, trembling with fear, wants to drown in blood the rightful revolt of those who will not bend to its will. When a regime must resort to such extreme solutions it has already lost control of the forces it believed domesticated.

Redouble the fire. Enough pacifist meetings and platonic demonstrations. The French working class wants to fight with the maximum chances for victory; the glorious demonstrations at Brest, Toulon, etc., have just proved that to the hilt.

All the workers must be mobilized for resistance to the government offensive. Never has the situation been more favorable than now for revolutionary struggle. Away with half-measures, away with palliatives, away with nerve-quieting sedatives! The millions of exploited feel that now they must seize complete power to bring order into the situation, to eradicate privileges and abuses of all kinds and to exterminate fascism. They feel that the problem before them is entirely one of revolution. Let us coordinate the efforts of the workers over the entire country and prepare for the insurrectionist general strike, different from the "demonstrative strike" of February 12 which was made against and not for something. The enormous crowd which passed in review at La Place de la Nation and in all of France lacked a precise aim, perspective and a revolutionary direction.

Some will say that dignity must be maintained. Dignity for us is the struggle against fascist barbarism and for the salvation of civilization! Let us denounce the Radical leaders who are at once in the Peoples' Front and in solidarity with the murderers of Brest and Toulon!

We will obtain Bread, Peace and Liberty only by expropriating the capitalist bourgeoisie by force, by the general strike.

Workers violence will expropriate the Banques, the Financiers, the Merciers, the Schneiders, the Wendels who support the fascist regime.

The hour of the transference of power has arrived. Now let us organize in the factories, the yards, the shops, the neighborhoods, strike committees on which the government of workers and peasants will rest.

Forward for the heroic and decisive struggles under the banner of the socialist revolution!

A Word to the Young Communists

(From "Revolution")

Under the title: "Revolution or Counter-Revolution," "L'Avant-Garde" (Vanguard, organ of the Young Communist League (J. C.) of France) for this week attacks our periodical and develops an extensive article to the internal life of the Entente of the Youth of the Seine. The editors of L'Avant-Garde dare to state "Without mixing into the internal affairs of the J. C.," and then, out of mutilated and falsified quotations they build up an edifice of absurd tales. We would not dare to invoke the name of Lenin!!

"Without mixing into the internal affairs of the J. C." we would like to pose several questions to the militants of the J. C.: Are the young communists in agreement with the transformation of L'Avant-Garde into a petty bourgeois democratic paper, a tribute of Pierre Cot (a violent partisan of French imperialism and former Radical minister)? Are the J.C. satisfied when L'Avant-Garde limits itself to printing in bold characters: "Make the rich pay" without saying who will make the rich pay, nor how?

Comrades of the J. C., without going any further, are you in agreement with the attitude of your press on the bloody events at Brest and at Toulon? L'Avant-Garde remains on commenting on the action of the young Brest worker Chevalier, struck by rifle fire when he ripped down the tricolor flag, the flag of Versailles, the symbol of rotting capitalism and of the decree-laws.

L'Avant-Garde is silent. Probably in order not to embarrass Messieurs the Radical leaders who are covering up in the government the assassinations ordered by Laval. Can you tolerate this declaration of L'Humanite: "They (the fascists) outrage the tricolor flag which the workers placed at the head of their procession beside the red flag on July 14 and these provocateurs are protected by M. Laval..." (L'Humanite, organ of the C. P. of France, August 10.)

The young worker, Chevalier, a provocateur? Struck down on the orders of Laval-Herriot? Chevalier an enemy of the people for wanting to tear down the tricolor flag of the exploiters?

Decidedly, L'Avant-Garde is on a fine road.

NUL Demonstrates at Newark City Hall

NEWARK, N. J.—As the first bombardment in an intensive campaign against the WPA slave wages, the Association for Adequate Relief, Newark section of the National Unemployed Leagues picketed seven of Newark's eleven relief stations, and city hall in advertisement of a mass meeting held in the Newark City Hall.

The mass meeting held at night was attended by 200 workers who enthusiastically approved of the plans for further organization of the unemployed and a militant campaign of action against the entire relief setup.

Tony Rammaglia, president of the NUL, evoked a storm of applause when he said "they call us reds for doing things like this, but damn it, I'd rather be red than yellow, and fight for the right to live decently." The speeches of I. Rosenberg and J. Kotz of the Association for Adequate Relief and of Bill Morgan of the Bloomfield City Workers Assn. were also well received. The meeting wound up with announcements of classes, lectures and socials to be run at the Unemployed League speakers, indicates that the unemployed of New Jersey are on the move and more will be heard from them in the near future.

James P. Cannon, editor of the NEW MILITANT, will deliver the first of a series of four Sunday night lectures on the Fourth International on September 22. The series will cover: the bankruptcy of the Comintern, the 4th International and the coming war, the 4th International and the struggle against Fascism and forces and prospects for the 4th International.

Comination tickets for the series will be sold for forty-five cents each. Admission to individual lectures will be fifteen cents. The series will be given at Irving Plaza, Irving Place and 15th St.

Editor's Note

The articles published herewith are reprinted from a special two-page edition of "Revolution," organ of the Socialist Youth of the Seine District of France. Devoted to the revolt against the decree-laws of the bonapartist Laval-Herriot government at Toulon, Brest and le Havre, they breathe the very spirit of revolution. Together with the Bolshevik-Leninist group they raised the only revolutionary voice in all of France, the Stalinists and the Social Democratic leaders being too interested in covering up Herriot, Paganon, etc.—ministers in the government and responsible for the murder of the workers in the seaport and arsenal cities—with whom they are in alliance in the so-called "Peoples' Front."

In fact, L'Humanite, organ of the C.P., has not a word of criticism for Herriot and company. All of their miserable scribbling is taken up with the obnoxious pink tea liberal aim of establishing the blame for the murders—as if there could be any doubt on this score—and none of it with calling for solidarity and more extensive strike action against the decree-laws throughout the country.

Although the issue of "Revolution" containing the articles below was confiscated by the police the Young Socialists managed to distribute more than 5,000 copies. Simultaneous with the appearance of this paper, the Bolshevik-Leninists pasted up posters all over Paris calling for the general strike and a struggle against class peace. These were mutilated and torn down systematically by the Stalinists, the fascists and the police. A fitting alliance indeed!

As one of the articles explains the Socialist Youth of the Seine are sold behind their expelled leaders. The committee appointed by the C.A.P. (National Committee) of the S.P. to explore the possibilities for reinstatement has already met and refused to intervene for the expelled comrades. This committee was composed of notorious reformists including Leon Blum, who after some highly hypocritical remarks on how good a conciliator he admits himself to be and how much he inconvenienced himself and how difficult the task was made for him, states the reasons for the committee's decision:

"First we clashed, as is shown in the letter from Zeller, with the conditions posed by him and his friends as a prerequisite and which we could not even consider: the pure and simple null and voiding of the decisions of Lille.

"Then, because in the course of the conversations a poster appeared on Saturday in the name of the Youth of the Seine and the issue of 'Revolution' published the same day, did not permit us the hope that any agreement to henceforth respect the discipline of the party would be made in good faith."

With crocodile tears the lackey of the bourgeoisie concludes: "This declaration cut me to the quick. But it was necessary." (Populaire, organ of the S. P., Aug. 15.)

In touching unanimity the organ of the Young Stalinists of France, L'Avant-Garde, echoes Blum's outspoken hatred of the expelled revolutionists with the difference that their depraved frenzy lacks Mr. Blum's polished restraint. They speak about the "justice" and the "correctness" of the expulsion and quote approvingly one of the worst reactionaries in the Socialist Youth who vents his bile on the Bolsheviks.

Their howls are in vain. The spirit that animates 'Revolution' is the spirit that animated the Bolsheviks in October 1917. Not all of the combined Mensheviks in France in 1935 will be able to withstand its irresistible force.

Chronicle of Events - Brest and Toulon

The Price of the Decree-Laws

(From "Revolution")

July 14: The Peoples' Front demonstrates for liberty but forgets to protest against the decree-laws.

July 17: MM. Laval, Herriot, Regnier, Paganon, etc., decide to retrieve nine billions from the bones of the poor.

Immediately, protests of the workers break out throughout the land. Everywhere meetings and demonstrations. But nothing is done to organize an irresistible strike movement.

July 19: Despite the government prohibition, 50,000 small functionaries of government.

August 7: Huge funeral services for Barraer in Brest. The workers have returned to work on the orders of the trade unions.

In Toulon, provoked by the military orders, the workers demonstrates and workers demonstrate.

Postal employees, railroad men, public service employees, workers in private industry demonstrate every day in an ever widening scope. They demand the abolition of the decree-laws.

The Radical leaders maneuver through the Peoples' Front to hamstring the movement.

In the vanguard of the protest movement are the great ports. Already, in Havre, the personnel of the "Normandie" had gone on strike.

The workers of the arsenals, submitting to a rigorous discipline, but also determined and disciplined, full of hatred for the military system, demonstrate vigorously against the starvation government.

August 3-4: The workers demonstrate in Brest and Toulon against the reduction in their wages. The protest is unanimous. The maritime police chief, the police organize systematic provocations, by occupying the arsenal at Brest.

August 5: The Brest workers are driven back, bayoneted at the gates of the arsenal; the workers react on masse. They reply to the military proclamation, to the provocations of the bourgeoisie; at the station they fraternize with the railroad workers and delay the departure of the train to Paris. They bear onward to the sub-poll station, resisting the charges of the troops and shouting for the abolition of the decree-laws.

Barraer is killed by a musket ball; hundreds of workers are wounded; more than a hundred arrests are made.

The trade union leadership gives no concrete goal to the movement, contenting itself with inviting the workers to join them.

August 6: The repercussions of the struggles at Brest are enormous in the entire country and in all the ports. In the absence of a general strike movement of solidarity the workers in Toulon and Cherbourg demonstrate vigorously. Resentment mounts.

The workers want their demonstrations to attain its real aims. They want to defeat the government of the decree-laws, Laval-Herriot, which has become the state vigorously, en masse. The authorities charge into them and fire. The blood of two dead redden the pavement. Fearing for the fleet, the naval officers give orders to weigh anchor. Street battles continue all through the night.

August 8-9: Thanks to the pressure of the Peoples' Front, the workers return to work.

There are 3 dead, 200 wounded, 100 workers arrested. And the delegation of lefts... decides to send an investigation committee!!

The Entente Continues

(From "Revolution")

At the National Congress at Lille the bureaucracy expelled from the Socialist Youth (J.S.) our comrades Fred Zeller, Corvin, Roussel, Lissansky, Genia, Van, Braude, Kigal, Ivan and Maria Craipeau, Peril, Makarowsky, Bressler, members of the Executive Committee of the Seine district or of the Federal Committee of the Seine-et-Oise district, on the pretext of violation of discipline.

We consider this decision scandalous, illegal and unconstitutional. Our comrades were expelled because together with the J.S. of the Seine they fought against national defense and class peace. We do not accept this decision and we consider our comrades as always and more than ever members of the Socialist Youth! 65 groups out of 70 in the Seine District are in solidarity with them and 30 groups in the Seine-et-Oise district have declared themselves similarly as well as numerous federations and groups in the provinces.

The groups must not listen to the wreckers and the splitters. They have only one Executive Committee and only one Federal Bureau; those which have been regularly elected at the last Administrative Congress at Boulogne and which continues to direct the activities of the Entente.

We will return in detail to the Congress of Lille and its scandalous sessions in the next number of "Revolution."

TO THE SOLDIERS

The Workers in Uniform Will Not Fire At Their Brothers in Civilian Clothes

(From "Revolution")

As the blood of the workers flows in the various regions of France we address ourselves to you, sons of workers in uniform. Comrade soldiers! They are deceiving you! They are forcing you to march in the name of the "nation" against your brothers. There is no united nation; there are only exploiters on the one side and exploited on the other, the parasites and the workers, those who spill the blood of the workers and those who want to defend their lives by relentless class struggle. There are two sides of the barricades!

Will you play the game of the exploiters? Will you march with those who would reduce to misery your fathers and your brothers? And when you have received "the distinction of the fatherland," as veterans, they will cover you with flowers, if they need you, if not they will reduce your pensions so that Monsieur Schneider can continue to coin money out of your blood and your skin. Will you be the tools of those who murder your own?

No!

Under the uniforms beat the hearts of workers. You have nothing in common with the officers who are in the pay of the butchers. They keep you under arms for two years. Hundreds of your own kind perish there like dogs and the Schneiders thrive like crows from your young bodies.

Comrade soldiers! Your place is at our side! You are part of the great family of workers! There are no barriers between the proletarians under arms and those in the factories! We demand for you political rights, the right to express yourselves, the right to make felt your ardent desire for peace and your ferocious hatred of those who are preparing for war, playing with your skin as an unimportant commodity. We demand for you the right to mingle in the life of the country, you, whom they call "heroes" but will not grant any voice.

Soldiers, do not forget that you are not alone! The workers grasp your hand. Your brothers are defending you and calling upon you for common struggle! Listen to this appeal!

Soldiers with us!

—The Executive Committee of the Young Socialists of the Seine.

Teachers Win Victory Over Green Machine

"psychological moment" proved a boomerang for the Right wing. Delegate Kiker, legislative representative of the Ohio State Federation of Teachers, declared in an interview:

Denounces Green as Hitler "What I said on the floor of the convention was that according to the fundamental law of the land, anyone has a right to belong to any political party or to practice any political philosophy he desires. There is no regulation of the A. F. of L. to determine political affiliation. Yes, I spoke of the telegram as being from Mr. Hitler. I cannot see where Mr. Green had any right to step into the question."

The struggle over the revocation of the charter of Local 5, the outstanding issue before the convention, began in the sessions of the Executive Council which met before and during the convention, but which was deadlocked over the issue by a tie vote. The representatives of the United Committee to Save the Union, Chas. J. Hendley, Ceila Lewis and Ben Davidson, were given an opportunity to present their case to the Executive Council and the Convention. Their arguments made a profound impression upon the delegates. Many delegates resented the fact that the matter had been brought to the convention without authorization from the membership of Local 5.

The Lefkowitz delegation arguments for revocation were a rehash of the old red herring of Communist domination now worn threadbare throughout the labor movement. They quoted from C. P. publications appearing during the "third period" to prove that the progressive elements were out to wreck the unions of the A. F. of L. They charged the opposition with seeking to foster these policies in Local 5 despite the fact that the United Committee to Save the Union was made of elements representing all shades of opinion, seeking to save the union from mass expulsions, which would have wrecked it. The Lefkowitz administration threatened to resign if they did not have their way.

Reputable Administration Lies In the debate the progressive delegates brought out these facts: That the membership of Local 5 had not given the Lefkowitz delegation any authority to ask for the revocation of the charter; that no responsible organ of the union such as the Executive Board and the Delegate Assembly which the administration controls had ever voted for such a proposition; that the overwhelming majority of the membership opposed the investigation as well as the revocation.

It was stressed that the Lefkowitz delegation had brought revocation issue to the convention because they had lost the confidence of the membership of Local 5 and because they realized that they would soon be ousted from office. The significance of the Green telegram was seen as one which not only concerned Local 5 and the existence of the American Federation of Teachers but one which concerned the entire trade union movement. In other words, Green, Borchard and Lefkowitz had issued an ultimatum to the trade unions of the country that unless the militants were expelled from all unions that they would wreck them.

It was a tragic spectacle to see Lefkowitz and Lenville, who had once played a progressive role in the labor movement, even to the extent of having been affiliated with the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, and basing itself on a militant trade union program; these erstwhile progressives were now allied with the reactionary Green-Wool machine; not only to defeat the progressive labor movement but wreck the very organization with which they had been associated for many years and had helped to build up.

Green's Avowed Treachery

In a private interview which the writer had with a delegate whose reliability can be vouched for, an account was given of an interview this delegate had had with President Green in Washington this summer. He quoted Green as saying that in his opinion the most important issue before the A. F. of L. at present was that of industrial unionism versus craft unionism. If the industrial unionists won out, then Green and his cohorts would secede from and split the A.F.T.

The treachery and disloyalty of these labor fakery and the A. F. of L. was never better illustrated than by these remarks. That is why the action of the A.F.T. in repudiating the Green policies are so extremely significant for the entire labor movement in the present and future struggles. A victory for Green would have meant the immediate wholesale expulsions of all progressives. But the fight of the progressives is not by any means over, it has just begun. Green is determined upon expulsions.

Today it is the duty of all progressives of different shades of opinion to unite their forces as they did at the A.F.T. convention because great battles are ahead. This must be considered as being only a partial victory, much greater and more difficult battles are ahead of us. A complete and permanent victory can only be assured if the progressive forces will unite on a realistic basis to realize their aims. A complete review of the convention will appear in the next issues of the NEW MILITANT.

Defense Conference To Aid Jailed Clerks

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 26.—This Friday, August 30, 8 P.M. at 140 South 11th Street, a conference is being arranged to aid the five arrested fruit clerks facing jail terms.

The conference is being called by the Fruit Clerks Union of Philadelphia, Local 713, in conjunction with the N.P.L.D. and other labor organizations and prominent liberals.

John Dublin, Paul Hirsch, Isadore Klein, Tom Holmes, and Al Lichtman are the five fruit clerks awaiting court. Lichtman is charged with "threat to kill"; Dublin is charged with "malicious mischief"; Holmes, Klein, and Hirsch are charged with "malicious mischief, disorderly conduct, inciting to riot." If convicted they face long terms in prison.

The arrests arise from a militant strike conducted by the Fruit Clerks Union at the Blue Ribbon Fruit Market, Upper Darby, Pa.

and the Public Market, Phila.

That these cases are frame-ups which were utilized by the bosses and the police to break the strikes are obvious from the fact that in Lichtman's case there is no evidence at all against him and in Dublin's case the boss himself is the only witness and in the cases of the other three, the bosses' wife is the only witness.

The Fruit Clerks Union calls upon organized labor to help smash the frame-ups, which are attempts to break the union. Money is very necessary. Send funds to Lou Roberts, Secretary of the union, at 4156 Poplar St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Green Backs Lefkowitz & Co. In Splitting Teachers Local

Aim to Revoke National Charter as Revenge for Defeat at Convention; Progressives Must Rally Resistance Now

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—A startling new development confronted the Teachers Union of New York, Local 5 of the American Federation of Teachers with the announcement by Henry L. Lefkowitz, President, and Abraham Lefkowitz, Legislative Representative, of their intention to turn in their resignations at a meeting of the Executive Committee. All of the other officers of the local, elected last spring by a small majority, would follow suit, it was announced.

This splitting move comes as the aftermath of the stunning defeat of the Lefkowitz-Linville forces at the recently concluded national convention of the American Federation of Teachers.

Seeking the revocation of the charter of Local 5, which would have meant the wholesale expulsion of the left wing, they were rebuffed on the convention floor by a vote of 100 to 79. In their attempt to head off the rising sentiment at the convention in favor of the united progressive elements in the local, whose spokesmen argued against expulsions and for the right of minority groups to exist, the panic-stricken New York leadership called upon William Green himself to intercede in their behalf. His telegram to the convention, a high-sounding ultimatum calculated to terrorize the delegates into line, was overwhelmingly rejected.

Struggle on National Scale

This announcement gives quick substantiation to the statement in the last issue of the NEW MILITANT that the victory of the left wing at the Cleveland convention was but partial, that greater battles were ahead. The planned resignation of the New York leadership, in the light of the struggle at the national convention, presents a grave danger, which a mere few months ago was scarcely foreseen. The danger of split has, with startling suddenness, broken through its local confines, and is heading straight towards the national organization itself.

Banking on Green's support, the Lefkowitz-Linville clique is clearly out to tear apart the American Federation of Teachers. Not only are they depending upon a substantial number of die-hard supporters to follow them out of Local 5, but they are also counting upon the secession from the Federation of a number of influential out-of-town locals.

The national convention of the A. F. of T. takes place next month. That the A. F. of T. will be under attack there is a foregone conclusion. Green can very well be depended upon to lead the assault. The aim of Green-Lefkowitz-Linville is clearly to seek the revocation of the charter of the A. F. of T. and to charter the secessionists as the new national organization.

Threat to Progressives

Thus the situation in the Teachers Union of New York takes on a new, nationwide significance, profound in its implications. Any move against the American Federation of Teachers at the coming convention of the A. F. of T. will be a dire threat at all progressive forces in the labor movement. A victory for Green (a two-thirds vote is required for the revocation of the charter of a national union) would not only be a disastrous setback for the teachers' movement; it would also set up a towering obstacle in the path of progressive unionism.

A great responsibility now rests upon the United Committee to Save the Union, the united front of left-wing forces in Local 5. Quick, firm, bold steps must be taken. The fight must be broadened. Lefkowitz-Linville must be clearly exposed to the membership as unprincipled splitters; the new Executive Council of the national organization must be brought more closely into the fight; every effort must be made to rally the A. F. of T. membership to the support of the A. F. T.

Publish Pamphlet on Sacramento Case

NEW YORK CITY.—"Union-Smashing in Sacramento—The Truth About the Criminal Syndicalism Trial," a 36-page pamphlet selling for 5 cents, has just been published by the National Sacramento Appeal Committee. This thorough-going analysis of the origins, course and results of the trial is simultaneously an absorbing, dramatic story of the class struggle in California and of the role of capitalist courts in that struggle.

The pamphlet is written by Herbert Solow, well-known journalist who spent four months in California last winter directing the Sacramento work of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense. Solow is now secretary of the National Sacramento Appeal Committee.

Copies of the pamphlet, which contains prefaces by Sam S. White of the San Francisco I.L.W.U. and Travers Clements, well-known author, may be obtained from the N.S.A.C., Room 707, 41 Union Square, N.Y.C. The committee has announced that bundle orders may be had at reduced rates.

Rubber Workers Indignant Over Detroit Auto Deal

AKRON, Ohio.—Warned by the treachery of William Green, A. F. of L. president, at the auto workers convention where he showed his reactionary tools into office, the rubber workers prepared this week for a sharp struggle to prevent the A. F. of L. bureaucracy from pulling the same trick at the coming convention to form an international rubber workers union.

In fact, some of the Akron delegates and also out-of-town workers are so incensed that there is a serious possibility that the unions will be split and the delegates walk out of the convention if Green tries a "Detroit Deal" here.

Fairly good results came from efforts of progressives to co-ordinate their work with out-of-town delegates in a common anti-A. F. of L. bloc in the coming convention. A strength is expected from this bloc.

Talk has already gone around among the rubberworkers that "if they put Clabery or some other stooge in office like they put Dillon in at Detroit, we'll walk out with 90 percent of the delegates."

However, progressives are urging all delegates to rally around a fight within the regular convention and not let the independent international union idea gain headway for it will weaken the strength of the bloc in its fight against Green who will be here to try to play the same role he did in Detroit.

CANNON LECTURE SERIES

Beginning with Sept. 22, comrade James P. Cannon, editor of the NEW MILITANT, will give a series of lectures "On the Road to the Fourth International" at Irving Plaza, Irving Place and 15th Street. The lectures will be given on consecutive Sundays.

The Sacramento Case A Statement by the National Committee of the Workers Party

Eight young men and women, organizers of the exploited agricultural workers of California, have been railroaded to the prison hells of San Quentin and Tehachapi for terms up to fourteen years. In the terrorist, anti-labor atmosphere built up by the California bosses after the San Francisco general strike, a hand-picked middle-class jury convicted these eight under the notorious Criminal Syndicalism law. Despite the legal terminology of this instrument of capitalist reaction—is that they courageously organized farm workers and led them in successful struggles for higher wages.

The Sacramento prisoners will be the forerunners of a host of labor victims to this law, unless the Sacramento convictions are reversed under the pressure of the labor movement.

Organized labor everywhere has denounced the criminal syndicalism laws as a union-smashing device. The Sacramento convictions, revealing the stark anti-labor character of these laws, are a most important opportunity to rally the labor movement against the criminal syndicalism laws.

Spartacus Continues Struggle Begun 15 Years Ago on I. Y. D.

International Youth Day Embodies Traditions of Anti-Militarism; Revolutionary Youth of Today Fight under Same Banner

By SAM GORDON

N. Y. District Educational Director, S.Y.L.

Twenty years since that great day in 1915, and the SPARTACUS YOUTH LEAGUE again celebrated International Youth Day.

But I.Y.D. is not just another holiday to us. In some respects, it is THE holiday of our organization and the living youth because it is the concentrated expression of a big part of what we stand for and fight for.

I. Y. D. began as a resurgent movement. It woke to life wide strata of young people demoralized by the crime and tragedy of 1914. It became a powerful insurgent movement. The force it stirred up did not rest until, with other help and hands, they built the Young Communist International.

Treachery Everywhere

We wait today from moment to moment knowing that war is crowding close to us. Back in 1915 it was already raging on a world scale. Betrayed by the leaders in whom they had placed trust, young factory hands, students and field workers stumbled and were driven into the trenches. Typical of the general disaster to the youth movement, Robert Danneberg of Austria, secretary of the International Bureau of Young Socialists, turned social-patriot and howled in the hyena chorus with the rest. The revolutionary movement ran to low ebb.

"Already influenced by the activity of the International Left, preparations were made for the holding of an international conference of the youth. This conference was held in Bern, Switzerland on April 4, 1915. It established the International Union of Socialist Youth. There were present 13 delegates from nine countries. It marked a turning point in the development of the youth movement.

"The Bern Conference, which was the forerunner of the Young Communist International, decided on the convening of a day of demonstration against militarism on an international scale. There was born International Youth Day, which has been celebrated now for twenty years by the Communist youth of the world. The conference decided on Oct. 3, 1915 as the first International Youth Day. The call was sent out to all countries and to all youth organizations calling upon them to demonstrate against the war and against militarism. During those years these anti-war demonstrations assumed tremendous proportions. In many countries they represented the only voice against the war, drawing in thousands upon thousands of adult workers. Since 1915, every year witnessed a world-wide demonstration against war and militarism. These demonstrations grew larger and larger as the years passed. The slogans of Bern became watchwords of the revolutionary youth."

(YOUNG SPARTACUS, September, 1933.)

The Answer of October

The program of the conference gave a partial answer to the question: what should we young revolutionaries do?

Spartacus Plans Int'l Youth Day

"Plans for International Youth Day have been completed," is the report of Bill Streeter, district organizer of the S.Y.L. "Realizing its paramount significance we intend to make it an occasion where the principles of revolutionary internationalism, of revolutionary struggle against war are reiterated."

The district office of the Youth League announces that its plans include rally meets in all parts of the city. A torch light parade, planned for Saturday night, Sept. 7, will start out from 420 E. 19th Street at 7 P.M., march down Ave. A to 7th and Ave. A; after a short meeting, to 10th St. and 2nd Ave., for a final mass rally.

Max Shachtman, Jane Ogden, Bill Streeter and others will address a mass indoor meet at Irving Plaza Hall, 15th St. and Irving Place, Sunday night at 8:30. The program for the meeting includes a presentation of "Lightning Red," the Newton Dames Group, and other items. Spartacists and their friends should keep these evenings free. Don't forget the dates.

Green Extols Capitalism on Labor Day

Lauds Hunger Regime; Silent on Falling Wages

By JACK WILSON

CANTON, Ohio, Sept. 1.—After a string ensemble softly played "I Love You," William Green, reactionary president of the A. F. of L., surrounded by a chamber of commerce president, some state politicians, two priests and a coterie of conservative trade-unionists, preached the philosophy of class-cooperation at a dinner given here in his behalf—and then went into a veritable frenzy to whip up another "red scare."

His after-dinner speech and the dinner itself would have been the envy of a rotarian or any other bourgeois club. But this was but a prelude to and an indication of what workers, waiting throughout the country to hear what he would say, would actually get.

Green spoke before an audience of not over 2,500 workers, a sign of his rapidly declining prestige and an ominous warning of how he will fare in the future with the workers. Coming fresh from Detroit where he had treacherously foisted an ultra-reactionary leadership on the new auto workers' international union, Green still dared to shed crocodile tears over "our democratic rights for which we must fight."

He meant his right to continue betrayals of labor, as for example, at the coming rubber workers' convention. Green told the workers, whose standard of living has been falling to an even more miserable rate than before the Roosevelt administration, that "The nation is emerging from a long-continued period of distressing and painful economic experience," and also that "the economic horizon is becoming brighter."

Horns and Wings

Making a "fine" distinction between "decent employers" and "ruthless, irresponsible employers," Green pledged himself to help the "decent employers" against the competition of the latter in the hope they might toss him a few bread crumbs, so to speak.

Despite the rubber strike betrayal, the Chevrolet strike compromise, the failure of the A. F. of L. to try seriously to organize basic industries on industrial lines; the clubbing down of WPA wages by the Roosevelt administration; the increased misery for the unemployed; despite these and hundreds of other glaring facts that speak eloquently of the failure of the A. F. of L. top leadership, Green bragged of "substantial progress" made by him and his cohorts.

He had nothing but praise for the so-called "Federal Security Act," whose provisions are meaningless to those unemployed in obtaining even an existence. Outside of saying "Congress and the administration made a grave mistake" when they failed to accept and apply the prevailing wage

Litvinov Talk Veils Powers Bandit Deals

Shies away from Internal Regime of Fascist Italy

With Italy sparring for time and the League of Nations sessions contributing greatly in the shadow-play of appealing to "public opinion," the final dress rehearsals are being completed before Il Duce marches his fascist hordes into the kingdom of Ethiopia.

The recent session of the League was convened primarily at the behest of British and French imperialism to make one more effort at a "peaceful" rather than military partition of Ethiopia.

The positions of England and France had been made clear before. England desiring "peace" for fear of its African colonies. France ready to back Italy so long as some guarantee could be given it of the status quo remaining undisturbed in Europe.

The "surprise" of the first day's session in Geneva was not the Italian delegate's demonstrative departure, nor even the plain spoken words of the Ethiopian representative, Jeze, but rather the speech of Maxim Litvinov, the first spoken words of the representative of the Stalin bureaucracy to the League of Imperialist Bandits. "...I am bound to declare, with regret," declared Litvinov, "with regret (!) my inability to agree with the attitude which the representatives of Italy wish to adopt."

Diplomatic language you say, but whose diplomacy? The diplomacy of imperialism or that of the proletarian state?

Again: "I have to make a statement upon a question which does not directly affect the interests of my country but which may have the gravest consequences for the fate of international life (!), for the whole of the League of Nations (how touching!) and consequently, sooner or later for our own country."

First things first as they say. Since when has the fate of the Soviet state been linked up with the fate of the Thieves Kitchen of Geneva? It is nothing but a slander to the masses of Soviet Russia to link their fate with that of black reaction.

And still more: "I am certain that there is no one here who feels in sympathy with the internal regime of Ethiopia as described in the documents submitted to us."

What about the internal regime of Italy about which Jeze had at least a few words to say? Yes, "comrade" Litvinov, how about the internal regime of castor oil Italy!

"Investia" has something to say about that. In an editorial on September 6 it declares: "In its estimate of the Italo-Abyssinian conflict Soviet public opinion (read Soviet bureaucracy) does not consider Italy's internal regime." No, not Italy's internal regime, that might offend a "friendly" nation, but let us by all means judge backward Ethiopia's internal regime. What a disgusting spectacle. Rather had Litvinov not spoken at all than have once again dirtied the names Soviet and Communism.

How Long Now?

Concluding the Italo-Ethiopian item on the agenda a committee of five was appointed to sift the matter once more and again try to find a "peaceful" solution. Italy did not object too strenuously to such a committee. Reports from East Africa have it that the rainy season is unduly prolonged this year.

French pressure must have counted considerably, too, in finally determining Italy's delegates to abstain on the proposal for a committee of five. It is likely that Laval, in private conversation, had insisted that the continued backing of Mussolini might prove embarrassing at home if Italy were intent to break them and there.

It is also quite likely that France will suggest that Italy be granted economic control over Ethiopia, with the right to establish what will amount to virtually a military protectorate.

But the traffic through the Suez Canal is dotted with boatloads of troops from which the flags of Italian fascism fly ominously in the breeze.

Fink AFL Leadership Sabotages Then Betrays KC Battery Strike

By STAN DOLSEN

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 17.—The National Battery strike was settled by a committee of strikers this morning. Called originally for recognition of the union and the reinstatement of five men discharged for union activity, the strike was mishandled from the start by the A. F. of L. leadership in charge. The men, all new to the labor movement, are members of the United Auto Workers, Local 19720, this local also including the organized workers in the Chevrolet and Fisher Body plants of this city. "Boasting" a membership of 250 out of the total working force of 2,500 auto workers, with only 10 to 20 percent of these attending regular union meetings, the National Battery strike presented a splendid opportunity for the reestablishment of the prestige of the union in the eyes of the auto workers and recruitment of the mass of disgruntled workers who had dropped out since the strike of last year.

Situation Favorable

Odds were overwhelmingly favorable for an early and complete victory for the strikers. The busy season—June to December—was commencing. Fully fifty percent of the men struck immediately (on an overnight decision of the union and those entering the plant were favorable to the union and practically all others promising to come out if the A. F. of L. would furnish the additional pickets so glibly promised by President Homer Martens of the Auto Workers and Policy of the Teamsters. Instead of the 500 pickets promised—a dozen Teamsters and quarrymen were supplied. No effort worthy of the name was made to prevent men from entering the plant. The strikers all green men, had confidence in President Martens, who assured them the strike was being handled in "Washington" and that they must by all means "conduct themselves like gentlemen" in order to impress the public and the company with "our absolute fairness in this matter." After four days of peaceful picketing, an anti-picketing injunction was obtained by the company on the flimsy frame-up charge of "dynamite threats." Martens and Polley immediately withdrew all pickets including the four allowed under Missouri state laws, and the company immediately filled up with scabs and additional forces to take care of the seasonal increase in production.

Four days later four pickets were placed back on the line, Martens maintaining that "the strike strategy and tactics" laid down by Missouri State Law (a picket's enough to win any strike) was an age-old axiom of Sam Gompers and must be strictly lived up to by "his" union. So the battle of labor was transferred from the picket line to the cozy little court house, the balance of the men being held off the line for two weeks while the injunction hearing was repeatedly set back by the judge.

Progressive Plans
When the injunction was first issued, Martens was immediately called upon by an experienced West Coast progressive, who presented a definite program of action. Pressure was likewise brought to bear by the Chevrolet Shop Stewards Committee. Martens thereupon agreed to put the following proposals into immediate effect:

1. Reestablish and reinforce the picket line and stop scabs.
2. Broaden the strike committee through the election of three additional battery workers, and delegates from the Chevrolet Shop Stewards and Auto Workers.
3. Secure the cooperation of the American Workers Union (unemployed) for picketing.
4. Mobilize Chevrolet and Fisher Body workers and all other union men possible at a public mass meeting to get pickets and finances necessary to conduct the strike.
5. Issue 30,000 boycott notices to the public and picket Montgomery-Ward, Western Auto, and other distributors, definitely naming trade marks.
6. Issue publicity to the men in the plant.
7. Immediately raise demands for sharp increase in pay, overtime rates, etc. as an effective aid in pulling men in the plant, as well as maintaining the morale of the men on strike. . . .
8. Contact St. Paul and Chicago plants in an endeavor to spread the strike.

As is always the case with Martens' promises—they were either not carried out or so emasculated as to be entirely useless. The men, totally inexperienced, and kept completely in the dark as to the actual situation, led to repeatedly by this preacher-labor faker, did not awaken to a realization of the situation until the lifting of the injunction and their return to the picket lines. Martens, Polley and Dyer, President of the C.L.U., laid the blame on the heads of the strikers themselves, with Martens telling them openly that it was up to them to get back into the plant as best they could.

Martens Insinuates Relief

The men now thoroughly aroused, raised the demands previously outlined; the strike committee was doubled. Arrangements were made with the American Workers Union to supply pickets. Immediately after the Strike Committee left Martens went over their heads, cancelling the agreement with the A.W.U. and in the morning when the A.W.U. workers, unaware of the cancellation notice, arrived on the picket line they were told to withdraw by Martens, Polley and Bledsoe who threatened to withdraw their pickets and all A. F. of L. support if they did not do so.

In spite of this, the new strike committee, now completely awake, succeeded in pulling eleven green men out of the plant and with three-fourths of the men in the plant newly-hired scabs and green, production was thrown clear out of gear. The establishment of a mass picket line at this time would have brought about complete victory.

But Martens did nothing to mobilize either the members of the auto union or assist in any way. Instead a series of arrests of strikers, some at his instigation, occurred. In spite of this the workers tried to extend the strike to Chicago and St. Paul, sending the new chairman of the strike committee there. At this time the company offered a settlement. But Martens and Polley stalled the matter off—then after a number of days announced that they could do nothing more for "you boys." On Saturday four members of the strike committee designated by the men made the following settlement:

Settlement Agreed to

1. Reinstatement of all strikers without discrimination, including the five originally discharged.
2. A shop grievance committee of 6, 3 strikers and 3 scabs.
3. Payment at rate of time-and-a-half for all overtime above 48 hour week. Sunday work to be paid for at rate of time-and-a-half.
4. Recognition of departmental seniority rights.
5. Recognition of the union refused, but right of men to belong to union without discrimination and to wear their buttons in the plant conceded.

The previous settlement offered provided for elections to be held with only those working in the plant prior to the strike voting. This would have given the strikers control. Three former employees who refused to scab and arrested in picketing were refused any guarantee of employment though the committee put up a fight. However, with the danger of a break in the strikers' ranks evident after ten weeks of this "Dillon man" leadership the settlement was agreed to. And another example of what the Kansas City auto workers have in store for them under the Dillon-Martens leadership in the none too distant future was enacted before their eyes.

Faker Undermines K.C. Auto Union

By STAN DOLSEN

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 17.—Since the settlement of the 1934 Chevrolet and Fisher Body strike 54 cases of union workers dismissed on the usual flimsy excuses of the company have all been decided against the union.

Insistence on the part of the militants that all cases be decided by the union directly were pushed to one side—the President's auto board situated 800 miles from the plant at Detroit (just a nice little walk for the men) being much more suitable for the carrying out of the purpose both Martens and the company officials had decided upon. . . . the firing of the militants. Whether decided behind the office doors or just a happy, spontaneous thought on the part of both, one may judge for oneself. However, for months Martens withheld all results of the Detroit Appeal Board from the membership!

Democracy in Union a Farce

Not a semblance of democracy exists in the union meetings, Martens refusing to entertain motions whenever they in any way contain a germ of genuine unionism. Progressives seldom get the floor. The greater part of the time is allotted to "stooges," "innocents" and the "harmless." Even this concession is limited—Martens is very careful to hog the floor himself. Once in a while the "innocents" show signs of dissatisfaction and a growing lack of appreciation of the great man—a tendency that can best be curbed by withdrawing even this limited amount of democracy! In the National Battery strike, not a striker, not even a member of the strike committee was given an opportunity to report or to express his views or to bring forward any proposals before the enlarged body.

On the other hand, a special speaker, the Rev. Myers of the Consumers Cooperative Association was brought in to speak to the assembled Chevrolet-Fisher Body and striking battery workers. This gentleman's organization purchased scab National Batteries in bulk for its members during the entire strike!

Though only an organized progressive group can break this down, no such group is even in a formative stage. There are individual progressives, but they have not yet come to realize the pressing need of an organized group if the union is to be saved. Martens utilizes his previous training as a sky pilot with considerable skill. Recognizing clearly the implications of Section 7a and the opportunities existent for a gentleman of his ilk, he became an ardent exponent of labor. Leaving the regular church, he launched a Labor Church. As this project also had its limitations he secured work at Chevrolet and shortly after blossomed forth as president of the union. Polley, fake progressive business agent of the Teamsters whose remark, "that he made Martens' possibly gives the clue for Martens' immediate employment by a company which is so careful about hiring "labor agitators."

Present Course Leading to Disaster
If the present condition of the auto union continues, the loss of the great majority of the Chevrolet workers, of the 100 splendid women members, their demoralization and disillusionment in this kind of unionism; the hiding from the union membership of the decision of the Detroit Auto Labor Board on the cases of the dismissed employees; Martens' craven attitude towards the company on the one hand and his deception, evasion and failure to rally the slightest support for the fighting Toledo auto workers on the other, and his treacherous conduct in the battery workers' strike—if all of this does not drive home to the workers the necessity for a complete check on Martens' present power and a sharp turn from the course the union is now pursuing—then nothing less than disaster, a complete miserable collapse faces the union during the coming year.

Only the organization of a progressive wing and the publication of a progressive auto workers' bulletin can change the present disastrous course of the union. It is possible through the bulletin to bring the real issues before the auto workers whether within or without the union, to bring about a restoration of democratic rights, to break the stifling grip of this budding labor faker and propagate the principles and ideals of militant unionism. This course, and only this course, can bring about a sharp change in the internal life of the union. Furthermore it is the only line of action that can restore the confidence of the auto workers in unionism and achieve complete organization and unity of the auto workers in one militant, progressive union.

The Manager's Corner

As announced elsewhere in this issue, the week's receipts on the 8-page weekly campaign shows a welcome improvement over the last two weeks. But we still have reached a total of only $596.81. Still to go is $1,404.19.

The problem now is to keep a steady improvement a steady rise week by week, increasing the speed so that the time of the conclusion of the campaign will not be far off.

This week's remittances in the campaign were as follows:

Grand Total $596.81

The New York branches have not yet gone very far in the realization of their extensive plans for the campaign, but they are on the way. None of them has as yet reached their quota. The Harlem branch is coming nearer and is still well in the lead. The comparative standing of the New York branches is as follows:

Branch	Contribution	Quota
Harlem	$61.78	$ 86.00
West Side	47.90	105.00
Center	41.50	130.00
Flatbush	26.25	30.00

The Los Angeles branch has advanced from its previously recorded $10.00 to a total of $30.00 contributed, and the New Haven branch from its previously recorded $4.50 to $17.50.

SETTLE BUNDLE ACCOUNTS

This month the Philadelphia Kensington branch has set an excellent example in clearing up entirely its account with the NEW MILITANT which on August 1 had fallen to the extent of $23.60. Comrade R. Lee contributed $10.00 toward making this settlement. Now, the Philadelphia branch is on an equal footing with the Minneapolis and Boston branches which previously settled their accounts in full.

For the Chicago branches (three branches) Comrade John Ritz made a donation of $5.00 toward the payment of their account with the NEW MILITANT. But the total amount due for bundles received, instead of decreasing, has further increased. On August 1 there was a total amount due from the Chicago branches of $45.98, on September 1, it rose to $48.53. However, the Allentown branch has moved forward to the dubious honor of being the worst delinquent insofar as any one single branch is concerned. On August 1 it owed a total on the NEW MILITANT bundle account of $27.50. On September 1 this amount had increased to a total of $37.50. The branch has failed to make any settlements since May 2.

The branches in the Bay region, California, San Francisco, Oakland and Berkeley, show an almost equal record. Between them they owed on August 1 $19.00. By Sept. 1 the amount had increased to $28. No payments have been made by these branches since July. The Pittsburgh branch owed on August 1 $25.00. On September 1 the amount was $26.54. The Detroit branch owed on August 1 $17.20. By September 1 it had increased to $19.20. The Columbus branch owed on August 1 $14.40. By September 1 it had increased to $15.30. The Center branch in New York owed on August 1 $9.40. By September 1 it had increased to $14.25. The Bronx branch in New York has a similar record. On August 1 it owed $9.40; by September 1 the amount had increased to $15.30. The New Castle branch owed on August 1 the amount of $11.20. On September 1 this had increased to $12.20. Finally, the Toledo branch has a bad record of $8.00 due on August 1, and $11.50 by September 1.

It is needless to mention the fact that most of these branches are in equally bad standing insofar as their accounts with the NEW INTERNATIONAL is concerned. And it is necessary to add, we may ask, that this intolerable negligence in making settlements for accounts imposes a severe strain on the office of the Party publications. To the same extent it becomes a strain on the Party and a factor hampering its work. There is only one conclusion to draw from this situation: namely, that their duty to the Party and its press is to take steps immediately to make substantial payments on their accounts and to shoulder their responsibility in this matter as units of a revolutionary party should do.

Green Extols Capitalism on Labor Day

principle on WPA work, no criticism of the anti-worker, capitalist-controlled Washington administration was made!

Green again offered as his solution for the inherent contradictions of capitalism with its devastating toll of unemployment, misery and slavery of the working class, the 30-hour week.

But it wasn't what Green said alone which showed so clearly his poverty as a labor leader and the sources of ideas for betraying the fundamental interests of the working class.

It was in what he didn't say that he was so clearly exposed!

Amnesia Grips Bill

With world imperialism about to send millions of workers to horrible death in war which will inevitably draw America in, Green made no mention of the Italian Fascist aggression in Ethiopia!

With the federal government drastically reducing relief to unemployed, bringing untold misery, not one word was said in condemnation of these criminal policies!

With the sky father Coughlin attempting to build an independent company-dominated auto workers union right on the heels of the bonafide auto workers convention, Green fears to think even of the consequences let alone exposing of Coughlin!

With all the black, infamous record of Roosevelt and his administration with its serious consequences to the welfare of the working class—the effects of the NRA, the spending of hundreds of millions for war preparations but not much for relief; the role of the government, as strike-breaker in every strike; and so on—with all this record, Green ignores the administration, in fact, he praises it for bringing "economic recovery" to the capitalists!

Thus, in every serious problem facing the working class, we get from Green exactly what one would expect from a labor faker. . . . The working class gets nothing!

P.S. The Minneapolis truck drivers will be interested in knowing who the clergyman was that sat with Green enjoying a fine, fat meal. None other than Rev. Francis J. Haas! He's still up to his old tricks, trying to fool labor. But thanks to the Minneapolis drivers, we have the Indian sign on him.

mpis
tuesday,

dere emily,

well kid, i hope yure avin a good time in new york, which yure sure deserv after workin without no vaksun for 16 years dont fall for none a those union square peasants an be sure an get those books i asked ya to. stuff is happenin hear thich & fast. a iron workers strike, a strike at Strutwear, a lathers strike an a fur workers strike. they all cum to us at 574 an ask for help an we giv it to em. from the way the bosses is threaten to pick up an moov outa town, you wud think all the factories in minneapolis wuz on roller skates or sompun.

by-the-by, emily, dont forget you an me has got a sub contest on fer the NEW MILITANT. this is the weigh i feel about a workers paper, kid, you remember when we joined the Party after the strike las summer, we both sed we wuz in this thing to win if it took all r life an then sum, we seen then that the job cant be dun in 1 city or 1 state or 1 country even but must be dun in all the countries. all rite. if that is r job, less get to work. the thing we got to do is to bld the Party in America. the weigh to bld the Party is to get members. the weigh to get members is to let the workers no what we're doin an what we think about things. the weigh to let the workers no is by reachin em with our literachor an espeshully the NEW MILITANT.

from the weigh r farmer-labor mayor is usin the cops to eskort the finks past the picket lines, its hi time we got goin on this. from the weigh the stalinists is tellin us what nize peepul the top hats at the League of Nations is, an that there is good bosses and bad bosses, its hi time we got goin on this. hell, emily, a geez cud read the daily worker from now to then an never no what the score wuz. an the socialist is just as bad, emily. a socialist is just a farmer-labor geez with a black ribbon on his i-glasses anyhow.

it is only ourselves, emily, the Workers Party which has got the rite line an nos how to deliver the goods an win for the workers. i goss we seen that in minneapolis, eh, emily?

so you see what the 1 job is—on the "must" list, as the pres. & i sed. its to get readers for r paper and to raise enuf dough so that the paper can be bigger an offener. so far i got 6 subs for the NEW MILITANT, an i rased 4 bucks for the paper from buys which is freinly to us an likes the way we get things dun, and i kicked in with a days wages for the paper.

most of us here in town did the same thing, but r expensis is purty high an we cudnt send all the dough to the paper but had to spend sum of it here on the head-1/4s, so now we are goin to kick in another days wages for this month to the paper, an then we'll hev paid r share to the new 8-pager.

god nos, kid, the bosses papers is gettin wuzer an wuzer, what with that fink, daddy warbucks, an ol man heart's ads an the crappy handlin a strike news. if we're ever goin to get anyplace—as we r—we gotta hav a big paper of r own, a daily paper which will go to 1,000's of workers. the 1 step to this is the 8-pager, an i dont begrudge any wurk or donasshons on my part to make it click. rite now r spehul task is to get subs an dough for the paper. i no you av yure ma giv more'n yure share to the fund, but try an get all the subs ya kin from yure frens in new york, remember, kid, whichever 1 a us has the least subs by sept. 15 treats me to a dinner at red goldens. by that time you'll be back here, an we'll see whose who.

sochully, things has bin rite pleasant. las saturday i went to the Spartacus affair given at the Party head-1/4s, an nites i usually hang around the 574 hall, which they got all fixed up on the 2 floor with tables on a bar, very pleasant like. guys cum up there with there wives and girls an sit aroun an hav a glass a beer or so, an there is a geetar an a mandoline playin, an evry once in a while a guy will get up an dance a jig, or another guy will sing rocked in the cradle an a deep an evryone aplauds an has a swell time. las nite i got up an rested the mask of anarchy by Shelley which you taut me, an ended up with ye are many, they are few, join the Workers Party. it got over big. get those subs, an hurry home.

yours,
Mike.

A Letter from M. Pivert

To the Comrades Expelled by the National Congress of the Socialist Youth of France at Lille; July 30, 1935

Through "Populaire" (Organ of the S.P. of France—Ed.) I learned of the decision on your expulsion and the circumstances preceding it. I regret not being able to return to Paris to aid you in securing reparation of this injustice. I am in solidarity because this is the first time in the party that they have expelled comrades only for serving socialist ideals, with faults to be sure, but also with tangible results: the development of their organization. I am in solidarity because I believe there is revealed in this procedure an extremely serious political significance which must bring to your side all those who sincerely and not in phrases stand for revolutionary unity.

Revolutionary unity without comrades like Fred Zeller or Makovsky (leaders of the Seine District of the Socialist Youth—Ed.), members of my group is a fraud. The splitting action perpetrated by comrades who have been artificially lined up against you and who do not understand its import (or who have utilized your errors) may have disastrous repercussions not only for the Party but for the entire labor movement.

The first thing I request of you is to do nothing to aggravate matters: to demand of your comrades remaining in the organization that despite what has happened they devote themselves to the development of the Youth (organization—Ed.). You have the right to defend those conceptions which you hold dear. For that, the doors of the Party are immediately open to you. Do not be discouraged, you will not be alone in defending the rights of minorities to live in a democratic Party like ours. Issue an appeal to the Party at once—this ought to bring the Party to revoke an impermissible decision if it is true to its structure. This appeal must be tentative and must allow you to continue your practical work without interruption inside the Seine Federation, if at the same time, and I strongly hope so, the majority which you have won remains loyal to you.

It is in order to aid you, if you believe it useful in your defense, whether by utilizing these lines or by using them in helping you address your appeal to the Federal Bureau and the Bureau of the Party that I occupy myself in discussing the grievances concerning you which you have written me.

The Problem of Factions

Lagorgette (Right wing leader of the Socialist Youth—Ed.) condemned factions and proposed to dissolve them. There is nothing new in that. At a certain Federal Congress at Montreuil the adults launched an extremely heavy and vicious attack on us because of our faction, the "Bataille Socialiste."

Does that mean that they did not belong to any faction in the Party? I do not want here either to examine or analyze such a position. I say merely that it is the undeniable right for comrades of the Party and the Youth who think in this or that way to meet together, to act in concert for the development of the propaganda of their tendency, to visit groups, to seek votes on the eve of a Congress, to designate their representatives for Party functions. You have the right to demand this option, and no more: it is impossible to go any further, that is to say, up to official exteriorization (although in fact it is difficult to conceal ones group preferences in public action). But that, that is what we have always done in the whole life of the Party. That is what we have always done in cases of decisive battles against ministerialism and we have practiced it with Paul Faure, with Zyromsky, with Louis Levy, with Severas, without ever thinking that one day that would be a motive for expulsion... against another faction than ours.

I also read with regret the demand of Mireille Osmun: "Renounce factional activity," and that individually. What is the meaning of this? As for myself I would never sign it. More precisely I say: in the hour when complete unification approaches, the rights of minorities becomes most precious with the single condition that the factions do not hinder the regular work of the Party. I have always seen confused comrades—who have no strong principled position and are often embarrassed by the choice which the existence of factions imposes on them—struggle against tendencies and factions.

You have therefore the right to justify your appeal to the Party by referring to the constant practice of the internal life of the Party. From this point of view the "dissolution of the Bolshevik-Leninists" has no meaning, if they do not at the same time dissolve the other official and secret factions... but then it is impossible to apply such a decision.

As to the especial quality of the Bolshevik-Leninists, and here I will say quite clearly that a psychological error has been committed by those among you who assume this name. Incontestably there is confusion here, and those who expelled you have utilized the weapon which has been given them; if you are loyal to original Bolshevism, you do not accept the democratic structure of the Party, equality for all tendencies and for all members. They therefore impute to you the intention, which has long been that of the Communist Party, "to bore from within," to demolish the socialist organization, in order to win the leadership, but with another structure. All the confusion exploited against you arises from that... And it is necessary to dispel this notion (as the adult Bolshevik-Leninists must also do) under pain of driving the present conflict into a blind alley. The Socialist Party has, in fact, victoriously struggled against all attempts of the C.P. to bore from within. It is instinctively levelled against all attempts at renewing such methods. But I never understood your return to the Party as a method of this kind. You would certainly have avoided the exploitation of your label against yourselves, if you had proclaimed your will to submit to the rules of internal propaganda in the same degree and with the same rights as the other ideological currents in the Party. This is one of the points you must insist upon. And even if, in the aim of obtaining satisfaction, the label Bolshevik-Leninist or Trotskyist has to disappear from circulation, I am certain that you would not hesitate to change it... The essential thing is not to wear the label of an enchanting name but to apply oneself in following the teachings it implies.

But all this does not apply to comrades like Fred (Zeller—Ed.) who are not in the Bolshevik-Leninist group, at least to my knowledge! For the latter the measure is even more unreal and takes on such significance that all minorities threatened by the same token must band together in solidarity!

On the "Illegal" Nature of the Expulsions

I maintain now that the expulsions decided on by the National Conference of the Youth are incompatible with the statutes of the Party. It is not within the province of a congress to transform itself into a High Court and to condemn (since they have neither instruction nor defense, and the delegates to a congress are not judges). From top to bottom in the Party there are control commissions which judge. That is the juridical argument which has always been made against our demands to expel the traitors from the Party. That is why the Federal Bureau of the Seine, which demanded the expulsion of Poggioli... but which permitted him to remain at the head of socialist municipalities despite serious breaches of discipline in electoral action, against which I revolted in advance, cannot impartially apply an inadmissible decision in your case. After a control commission hands down its verdict there is still the possibility to appeal to a higher body. Such an appeal was made in the case of a notoriously disqualifying gentleman, like Duchanel, who still has his party card. Therefore one cannot consider your expulsion as final for it is impossible to imagine different disciplinary rules for the Youth and the Party. Then the latter is particularly lenient with renegades and traitors, Marquet was not expelled, nor was Bouissou, nor was Comper-Morel (he is even going to enter. I hope in this connection, that Lagorgette will press the demand of expulsion against this gentleman which he accepted with Perigaud and myself).

For comrades careful in keeping the Youth in their place, I think that the action perpetrated lacks deliberation. It would have been necessary to begin by declaring the motion of expulsion unacceptable for one never knows where that will lead to. If in a group, if in a Federation, a Bolshevik-Leninist majority declared, as a reprisal, the expulsion of this or that minority as counter-revolutionists and disloyal to the real fundamental bases of socialist action, where would we be then? In the same way I set myself against this sectarian conception and I rise with indignation against the sectarianism of the majority of the Conference: this or that opponent is in the way? I disdain to answer this (it is too easy!) I believe that many of the young comrades who voted for your expulsion (or whose mandates were utilized in this aim) will regret the deplorable action which has just been perpetrated. As to the editor of "Populaire," Daniel Mayer, I consider his contemptuous comments as an infamy. No! This is not the way we treat young comrades like those whom I know well and whom I have seen at work in direct action and this is not the way to answer them. It is a bad internal regime which we will surely be in, I am certain, if everyone does as he wishes.

The Motives for the Expulsion
In the motion of expulsion there are certain unacceptable considerations and others which might be justifiable but I persist in believing are unacceptable in your case.

To come out in favor of the 4th International? It is the right of the Youth and the Party to appreciate the present situation of the

The Moral Guardian of Capitalist Exploitation

The Church, Fascism and War

By RICHARD ZOITZMAN

Born in an era of chattel slavery, flowering in the epoch of feudal serfdom, declining with and as a loyal servant of capitalist imperialism, the Catholic Church has unflinchingly condoned and glorified the exploitation of man by man. As a beneficiary from the system of organized robbery the Church fears any slight change, any piece of enlightenment which might threaten the status quo and therefore its own income.

At one time the Church was able to organize its own force to combat progressive movements of a past century. The Jesuits were such a spearhead against the democratic bourgeoisie. Developments today however have put the Church in the position of having to depend on finance capital and its gangster formations for the preservation of the present system. It hails and helps every reactionary measure, every downward step which capitalism must take in its efforts at self-maintenance, asking in return only that its "Peter's Pence" be not interfered with. When this latter happens then indeed does Rome thunder against the "excesses of Fascism," as in Germany today, only then do its dupes picket German consulates, declaring "the Church is anti-fascist." Since when?

Unqualifiedly blessed is the venomous arch reactionary Gil Robles, head of the Spanish fascist Catholic Action. With what rage and bitterness do workers recall how, during the February 1934 uprising in Austria, the priesthood went from house to house, appealing to the sons of the wealthy to join with the Heimwehr butchers in putting down the starving proletarians. Today, labor's standard of living having been reduced forty percent, with all unions and workers' organizations under government ban, Austria stands a Rome anointed

Just across the Rio Grande in Mexico, the Christero Guerrillas snipe at workers parades from churches as a Christian protest against "Socialist Education" in the schools, and the curtailment of Catholicism's power and income. At the moment that the Coughlins, Bishop McConnel, and other Christy demagogues beat the tin pan of pseudo radicalism for "social justice," and a "more equitable distribution of wealth" etc., Rome throws its moral and material weight behind capitalism's murder gangs whose sole purpose is to reduce the workers to abject pauperized slaves.

Even programmatically the Papacy upholds Fascism. In his Quadragesimo Anno encyclical of May 24, 1931, Pope Pius states that "Corporations will be appointed as the supreme authority over capitalism. As true and genuine organs and instruments of the state they co-ordinate and direct the activities of the unions in all matters of common interest. Strikes and lockouts are forbidden. If the contending parties cannot come to an agreement, public authority intervenes."

Like the Church of Stalin, the Church of Rome finds certain capitalist wars to have progressive features. In two pronouncements on the subject of Mussolini's preparation for war against Ethiopia, His Holiness plausibly remarks that the dead would be compensated for by the conversion of the survivors to the Faith. This three crowned vampire proceeds in his second message to describe with what "horror" he regards a war of conquest, concluding however that a struggle for "expansion is something different, and entirely justifiable."

The international workers' revolution alone can remove this parasitic organism. Only socialism can render such a growth impossible.

Editor's Note

Because of their extraordinary importance for the revolutionary movement of France as well as their educational value everywhere we publish herewith the letter of Marceau Pivert to the expelled Socialist Youth of the Seine District of France and a reply to some of his comments by comrade Leon Trotsky. Comrade Pivert is the leader of an influential left wing group called "Bataille Socialiste" in the Socialist Party of France (S.F.I.O.). As previously reported in the NEW MILITANT the ousted revolutionary youth leaders are gaining support everywhere. In a recent issue of "La Verite," organ of the Bolshevik-Leninist group in the S.F.I.O., just arrived from Paris, there appears a whole series of protests against the expulsions and greetings of solidarity with the expelled.

two Internationals and to hope for a better one, with or without changing the number. Did not the Spanish Young Socialists consider leaving the Second International? Does anyone believe that formal discipline and expulsions can add luster to the prestige of the Second International? Or does it prevent the workers from wanting complete unity? I myself am also a member of the Second International on paper, but no one will prevent me from believing that it no longer has any real existence... and from saying it. I am not the only one who thinks this way. Are they going to expel me?

Systematic denigration, that is, criticism of the point of view of those who think that everything is going well. The right of internal criticism. The right of free choice of the best solutions to the problems posed by events and which the Congresses of the Party have not foreseen, much less resolved. You must proudly demand all of this in your own field, in our activity in the Youth with the care of winning the young generation for socialism. What you must add, is that you have never had the intention of having any other policy than the Party's on essential questions; that is not possible (even though the Belgian Young Socialist Guards have obtained a hundred times more freedom than you on this subject). But certain questions are still being debated in the Party... and it is delaying in taking a position, the question of the struggle against war, for example. We demand the right to examine them as "practises," one might say, and to make our position known. If this is the main grievance they have against you, then I reproach the framers of the motion of expulsion for lack of courage. Would they be expelled if the Youth defended to the letter the position of Blum or Zyromsky on the problem of national defense, that is to say, "In case of aggression by Hitler we will shoulder arms"? No, they would not! Now, I declare that this position does not conform to the regular decisions of the Tours Congress with which I am well acquainted and which Lagorgette has undoubtedly not forgotten. No, under no pretext, consequently, even the pretext of aggression, must the Party lend itself to the propagation of the acceptance of war. If that is the real motive for your expulsion, then it should be said frankly, openly. We will draw from that—we adults who have maintained an attitude of courtesy, even of comradeship which we do not regret, in our discussions—the inevitable consequences. We understand that it would be necessary to struggle by other means than slithering words against the opponents of factions who want to expel us from the socialist community, before perhaps dragging the proletariat into a new 1914... And if this is not the question, then what is at the bottom of your expulsion? And if it is not the problem, then all the rest has only a mediocre importance and provided you emphasize your will to serve the Party, with your methods and your doctrinal preferences, developing them as you have done in the Seine, certainly your reinstatement must be speedy.

Finally I do not believe that they can seriously prove that your position or your action is "anti-unity" or responsible for "intolerable confusionism" in the ranks of the organization. But in any case, there is no impartial arbiter who can judge that this or that responsible comrade must be expelled. And if it is a question of a political line, then all those who have voted for you should be expelled (and are we to suppose that these people really believe that your followers would desert you)? If it is a question of precise facts, of propaganda contrary to the interests of the party, then a control commission must study the documents and decide.

In summary, nothing justifies a measure so fraught with dangers. In the degree that you are able to follow my suggestions, appeal, remain solidly organized, expelled or not. The Party must be consulted. In the last analysis it is it which must straighten matters out or aggravate them. Give it confidence! Fraternally yours,

MARCEAU PIVERT.

"Labels" and "Numbers"

On the Subject of the Letter from Marceau Pivert to the Expelled Comrades of Socialist Youth of France

By LEON TROTSKY

The letter of Marceau Pivert on the expulsions of the leaders of the revolutionary youth of the Seine, despite its laudable aim, reveals some incorrect ideas, which, in their development, can lead to serious errors. The true task of a Marxist is to warn the young comrades against these errors.

Pivert himself accuses our comrades of committing a great "psychological error" by assuming the name Bolshevik-Leninist. Since "original Bolshevism," according to Pivert, denotes the democratic structure of the party, equality (?) for all tendencies, etc., by their very name the Bolshevik-Leninists give the bureaucracy of the Party a weapon against themselves. In other words: the "psychological error" consists in an inadequate adaptation to the psychology of... the bureaucracy of the Party.

This opinion of Pivert represents a very serious "political error," and even a series of errors. It is not true that "original Bolshevism" denotes the democratic structure of the party. I advance the absolutely contrary affirmation: there was not and there is not a more democratic party than that of Lenin. It depended only on the advanced workers. It did not know the hidden, masked dictatorship, and the no less fatal one, the bourgeois "friends" of the proletariat, the careerist parliamentarians, the drawing room journalists, the whole parasitic coterie, which permeates the ranks of the party to speak "freely," democratically, but tenaciously holds on to the apparatus and in the final analysis, does anything it pleases. This kind of "democracy" in the party is nothing else than a replica of the bourgeois democratic state, which also allows the people to speak "freely" but leaves the real power to a handful of capitalists. Pivert commits a very great political error by idealizing and embellishing the hypocritical and fraudulent "democracy" of the S.F.I.O. (S. P. of France—Ed.). (Such curbs and paralyzes the revolutionary education of the workers, drowning out their voice by the chorus of municipal councilors, parliamentarians, etc., who are imbued to the marrow with their bones with egoistic petty bourgeois interests and reactionary prejudices. The task of the revolutionist, even if the march of developments obliges him to work in the same organization with the reformists, these political exploiters of the proletariat, consists not in taking the attitude of a disciple and of maintaining a lying friendship towards the agents of the bourgeoisie, but of opposing as clearly, as harshly and as unrelentingly as possible, the opportunists, the patriots, the absolutely bourgeois "socialists" before the reformist masses. In the final analysis those who will choose and decide will not be the Blums and the Zyromskys but the masses, the millions of exploited. The party must be built on and for them.

The Name and the Masses
The misfortune of Pivert is that up till now he has not broken the umbilical cord which binds him to the small world of the Blums and the Zyromskys. On every new occasion he looks at his "friends" and feels their pulse with anxiety. It is this policy—false, illusory, unrealistic—which he offers to the Bolshevik-Leninists. They must, you see, renounce their own name. Why? Does the name frighten the workers? On the contrary. If the so-called "Communists," despite all the betrayals and all the crimes which they have perpetrated, retain an important section of the proletariat under their banner, it is only because they present themselves to the masses as the bearers of the traditions of the October revolution. The workers do not fear either Bolshevism or Leninism. They demand only (and they are right): are these the real or the false Bolsheviks? The task of consistent proletarian revolutionists is not to renounce the name Bolshevik, but to show their Bolshevism in action to the masses, that is, the spirit of absolute devotion to the cause of the oppressed.

The Meaning of Bolshevik-Leninist
But why then—insists Pivert—cling to a label? Instead of "following the teachings which it implies"? Now does not Pivert himself wear the "label" socialist? In the field of politics as in all other fields of human activity it is impossible to proceed without "labels," that is, without designations and appellations as precise as possible. The name "socialist" is not only inadequate but absolutely deceptive, for everyone in France who has a mind to, calls himself "socialist." By their name the Bolshevik-Leninists say to each and all that their theory is "Marism"; that it is not the denatured and prostituted "Marxism" of the reformists (like Paul Faure, J. Longuet, Severas, etc.) but the true Marxism restored by Lenin and applied by him to the fundamental questions of the epoch of imperialism; that they base themselves on the experiences of October, developed in the decisions of the first four Congresses of the Communist International; that they are in solidarity with the theoretical and practical work accomplished by the "Left Opposition" of the Communist International (1923-1932); finally that they stand under the banner of the Fourth International. In politics, the "name" is the "banner." Those who renounce today a revolutionary name for the good of Blum and Co. will tomorrow just as easily renounce the red flag for the tricolor flag.

Pivert proclaims the right of every socialist to hope for a better international—"with or without changing the number." This irony, a little misplaced on the "number" (entirely—alas—in the spirit of the philistines of the S.A.P.) represents a political error of the same order as the irony on the "label." Politically the question is posed as follows: Can the world proletariat struggle successfully against war, fascism, capitalism under the leadership of the reformists or of the Stalinists (that is to say, Soviet diplomacy)? We reply: it cannot. The Second and the Third International are outlived and have become obstacles on the revolutionary road. It is impossible to "reform" them, because the whole composition of their leadership is radically hostile to the tasks and the methods of the proletarian revolution. Those who up till now have not understood the collapse of the two Internationals cannot raise the banner of the new International. "With or without changing the number"? This phrase is devoid of meaning. It is not by accident that the three old Internationals were thus numbered. Every "number" signified a distinct epoch, a program and methods of action. The new International must not be the sum of the two corpses, as the old social-patriot Zyromsky dreams, surprised in his unexpected recognition of the "living" "negation" of these corpses and at the same time the "continuation" of the historic work accomplished by the preceding Internationals. In other words: it is a question of the Fourth International. The "number" here signifies a perspective and a distinct program, that is a "banner." Let the philistines wax ironical on the above. We must not imitate them.

The Crime of Hiding the Banner

The aversion for "labels" and numbers in politics is as dangerous as the aversion for precise definitions in science. In one case as in the other we have before us the infallible symptom of lack of clarity in ideas themselves. To invoke the "masses" serves in this case only to cover his own hesitations. The worker who believes in Vandervelde or Stalin, will, undoubtedly be an opponent of the Fourth International. The worker who has understood that the Second and Third Internationals are dead for the cause of the revolution will immediately place himself under our banner. That is precisely why it is criminal to hide this banner under the table.

Pivert is deceiving himself when he thinks that Bolshevism is incompatible with the existence of factions. The principle of Bolshevism organization is "democratic centralism" assured by complete freedom of criticism and by groupings together with a discipline of steel in action. The history of the party is at the same time the history of the internal struggle of ideas, of groupings, of factions. Certainly, in the Spring of 1920, in time of terrible crisis, of famine, of cold, the 10th Congress of the Bolshevik Party, which at that time counted 17 years of existence, suppressed factions, but this measure was considered exceptional, temporary and was applied by the Central Committee with the greatest degree of prudence and elasticity. The real annihilation of factions began only with the victory of the bureaucracy over the proletarian vanguard and rapidly led to the virtual death of the party. The Fourth International will not suffer in its ranks from mechanical "monolithism." On the contrary one of its most important tasks is to regenerate on a new, higher historical plane the "revolutionary democracy of the proletarian vanguard." The Bolshevik-Leninists consider themselves as a faction of the International which is being built. They are completely ready to work hand in hand with other truly revolutionary factions. But they categorically refuse to adapt their policy to the psychology of opportunist cliques and to renounce their own banner.

Trends in Wage Levels

By ALBERT GLOTZER

Some weeks ago the New Republic printed a chart indicating trends in salaries and wages that is highly interesting and instructive, showing how in the most recent years of the crisis, particularly from 1933 to 1934, salaries increased and wages held their own, after a heavy decline in previous years, despite the supposed aid to wages in the form of the NRA. The figures according to the New Republic are taken from two sources, the Securities Exchange Commission for salaries and the U. S. Department of Labor for wages.

The report on salaries are for the leading officials of the outstanding companies in this country and for wages, the average of the workers in the corresponding industries. Weaknesses in the report are many. It does not contrast the salaries and wages for the years 1933-34 to the years preceding the crisis. It does not show the salaries for subordinated officials whose incomes are not far below the highest paid officials of any company. Likewise the report, being purely factual lacking any kind of analysis, does not show that for the officials, salaries did not stop with the opening of the crisis nor during its entire existence.

Important Facts Omitted

On the side of wages the report does not indicate whether these wages include also foremen, salesmen, office workers, etc., which in most cases would raise the average. As in the above, it does not compare wages for the years 1933-34 with those preceding the crisis. Being factual it does not mention the fact that wages in this period were raised on an average because of forced employment through the NRA and indirectly through government projects. That too would raise the average wage. Such a fact as the years of unemployment and the loss of income for the mass of workers is not mentioned. Thus no average wage over a period of five to ten years is presented. Such a figure would again depress the average to a far greater level than is presented in the report.

Granting all the weaknesses indicated in the above it is nevertheless possible to gather the trends in the report. The report concerns itself with 107 leading companies including such as the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Diamond Match Co., International Business Machines Corp., Montgomery Ward and Co., Pullman Inc., Standard Oil Co., Westinghouse Electric, U. S. Rubber, Goodrich Rubber, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., etc., etc. While the automobile industry and most of the tobacco companies do not appear in the report, steel, textile, coal, transportation and the like are reported on.

Taking the 107 companies the average salary paid to the leading official is somewhat over $61,000 a year, for the year 1934. Ten officials out of this total received between $100,000 and $300,000 (the top salary). Forty officials received a salary ranging between fifty and a hundred thousand dollars while a like number received between twenty-five and fifty thousand dollars. The remaining salaries ranged between ten and twenty-five thousand dollars a year. The inclusion of automobile and tobacco would find additional numbers in the upper brackets, these industries paying enormous salaries to its officials.

Roosevelt's Protest to the S.U.

There is something of a mystery in the recent sharp protests of the United States to the Soviet Government against the activities of the Comintern. On the surface, at least, this move conflicts with the foreign policy of U.S. imperialism. The U. S. still wishes the Soviet Union to act as a check against Japanese aggression in the Far East; U. S. corporations still wish to increase their markets in the Soviet Union; and the Administration, not yet ready for war, naturally realizes that a serious blow to U. S.-Soviet relations would aggravate the war crisis.

The protest letters must, therefore, be understood almost entirely in terms of the internal situation in this country. And within the country, not on the international field, lie the possibly dangerous consequences that must be guarded against.

During the closing months of the 74th Congress, Roosevelt completed the political strategy which has guided his course during the past year. After successfully blocking all significant social reform measures during the opening months of the session, he consolidated his position as a liberal reformer by championing the Wagner Bill, the Guffey Bill, the Utilities Bill, and the "Tax the Rich" program. In this way, while granting nothing substantial to labor and the masses generally, Roosevelt aimed to block the moves to build a Third Party to his left, and to force the "progressives" to continue supporting him in the 1936 campaign against the Tories to his right.

However, during this period the attack from the right redoubled in bitterness and extent. Indeed, by now probably the majority of the bourgeois press is lined up against Roosevelt. In its attack, the old charges of "Soviet Washington," "Roosevelt regimentation," "Communist attacks on the Supreme Court and the Constitution" are being featured. These charges, for all their absurdity, have a certain effect on the confused and frightened middle class.

To this factor must be added the requirements of Roosevelt's ally, the bureaucracy of the A. F. of L., which, to maintain its position against the discontent in the trade union ranks, is anxious to start a real drive on "communists"—that is, is anxious to smother the upsurge of any militant left wing. To win the 1936 election, Roosevelt must keep the bulk of the middle class and of higher paid labor behind him.

Consequently, with Congress adjourned and not in a position to raise complications, with Japan temporarily quiet, and with Soviet trade below expectations, Roosevelt was in an easy position to dissociate himself publicly from the taint of Communism.

This is the real explanation of the protest letters. By their means, Roosevelt said to the middle class: "Of course I am a reformer and a liberal and against the Tories. But I am a safe and sane reformer, and I will never do anything to upset the established order. Don't let the wicked bankers scare you with their talk about Soviets and Communism. Just look what I do to Communists, and the way in which I tell their fatherland where to get off." And he said to the A. F. of L.: "This will show you where I stand. You play along with me, and I'll help you out."

Unfortunately the matter cannot stop at that, at the level of a cheap political trick no doubt thought up by Roosevelt's strategist, Postmaster Farley. The effect of the letters is to strengthen the attempts to get a real Red Drive under way. The vigilantes of California, the Citizens' Alliances and Chambers of Commerce, will interpret the letters as tacit permission to go ahead on full steam. And, what is worse, it will strengthen the hand of Green and Woll in their efforts to start a real "purging of the ranks of organized labor."

This is the danger of the letters; and it must be blocked at the start. The Red Drive means, as it has always meant, a drive against every progressive and militant fighter in the labor movement and its allied forces. And the only way to meet it is to fight back, and fight hard.

company paid an average of $30 a week and certainly not over $30. Fifty-four companies paid wages between twenty and thirty dollars a week, these being divided equally between those paying twenty-five to thirty dollars a week and those paying twenty to twenty-five dollars a week. Thirty companies paid an average of between fifteen and twenty dollars a week, the remaining 23 companies averaged between ten and fifteen dollars a week for the same month.

The figures reveal that the Cluett-Peabody Company paid an average wage of $12 a week, the Beechnut Packing Company $13, Pet Milk Company $13, Phillips-Jones Corp. $12, U. S. Tobacco, $14, etc.

All the above figures represent the average for the month of Dec. 1934. While they may not be entirely accurate for a complete survey for all industry over an entire year they do represent the trends in the leading industries.

One thing is positively clear: The owners of industry received either slight losses in comparison to the pre-crisis period, equal salaries or in many instances greater salaries. But not for any period did their salaries cease. The workers, for the most part, suffered losses. In considering these wages it must be borne in mind that the great unemployment periods during a single year would depress these averages sharply, bringing them to even lower levels than the now already low figures when related to the minimum needs of workers' families, even according to the U. S. Department of Labor standards.

Marxist Conception Confirmed

The collapse of the NRA will serve only to further reduce wages of workers. Almost immediately upon the announcement of the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court a few weeks ago, wages took a sharp drop, hours of work increased, and then the one presented in the New Republic would only bear out the trend indicated in its report. But the report is sufficient in itself to demonstrate the complete validity of the Marxian conceptions.

The increasing differentiations between the classes pushes for a greater class consciousness on the part of the American working class and their increasing will to struggle. This has already been present in the wave of strike struggles occurring in the last two years. They are bound to become more intense in the immediate future. The heavy reduction of the standard of living of the American workers will only help to drive them further on the road to class consciousness.

The general standard of working conditions worsened. The collapse of the NRA, the long periods of unemployment, the increase in the cost of living, the spread of wages to include more than one family, but taking in relatives, etc., all further depress the real average of workers' wages. The polarization between the owners of industry, the capitalists, and the workers, are presented very sharply in the report. A more absolute analysis walk through the market.

It is undoubtedly true that union dressmakers are giving much greater support to the strike than any other section of the industry. Sympathetic strikes or stoppages of one, two and three days duration were called unofficially by dressmakers wherever scabs or thugs appeared. In some cases all shops in entire buildings were out 100 percent. These unofficial stoppages led by militant union members and the assistance given on the picket line added to the magnificent militancy of the shipping clerks themselves, are the brightest spots in the strike. Individual settlements are being made by many shops, the officials of the I.L.G.W.U. aiding in such settlements. At the same time conferences with the Manufacturers Association are continuing.

Despite the assistance given by the dressmakers it is clear that such spontaneous actions "from below" is no adequate substitute for a general strike called officially by the union. The unsympathetic—not to say strikebreaking—attitude and actions of the reactionary leaders of the Truck Drivers and other local unions, has done much to nullify the unofficial support given by some locals, particularly by Local 22.

Lessons of the Strike

The first lesson hammered home by the strike is the imperative need of making the I.L.G.W.U. a completely industrial union including all auxiliary trades, striking as one, fighting as one and under a unified leadership.

The second lesson—and the realization of the first—depends on it—is the necessity of uniting the ranks of militant progressives in all local unions coupled with an energetic campaign to place progressives in the leadership of the unions.

Despite all difficulties the strike has every chance of succeeding. Continued and increased financial and picket support to the strikers, coupled with continuous mass picketing and solidarity by the striking clerks themselves will result in the establishment of a strong shipping clerks union and a considerable improvement in wages and conditions.

fense organization known as the National Sacramento Appeal Committee has been organized in New York.

The Bee, which did a good deal of poisonous buzzing at the time of the Mini Appeal Dinner of the N.P.L.D. in New York, not long ago carried a column of squawks because the New York Nation told its few unpleasant truths about its yellow role in the criminal syndicalism frame-up.

Raymond W. Henderson, noted Bakersfield defense attorney, has begun work on preparation of the appeal brief for Norman Mini, Prisoner 57606 in San Quentin. It is expected that in another week the court stenographer will turn over the transcript of the proceedings of the 74-day trial and that the appeal hearing will take place before the end of October. The National Sacramento Appeal Committee is in need of funds for the appeal, and has called on all opponents of the criminal syndicalism law to contribute.

The Crime of the Auto International

Writer Discusses Significance of Green's High-Handed Domination of the Detroit Convention and the Tasks of Progressives

By BURKE COCHRAN

TOLEDO, Ohio.—As a culmination of a year's hard work, during which time their forces were tested in a dozen different battles, the automobile workers sent delegates to Detroit to set up an International union in the automobile industry with full autonomy within the statutes of the American Federation of Labor. The union they expected was to have full jurisdiction over all who work in or around automobile or auto parts plants, it was to be democratically controlled and officers were to be elected by a majority of the delegates in the convention and they were to receive salaries comparable to the wages received by the workers in the plants. Instead the delegates came back with a charter of a craft union with jurisdiction over production workers, with all officers of the new International handpicked by the president of the A. F. of L., Bill Green, and salaries of officers jacked up to as high as $8,500 per year.

The cruel blow that struck the automobile workers was deliberately aimed and it has weakened their organization as effectively as a successful onslaught of an open shop campaign. But that roar of mighty protest which rose from the floor at the Tuesday session of the convention, when the delegates rejected with indignation and scorn the proposal to appoint Dillon, is a sign of that inexhaustible vitality which has carried the automobile workers forward despite the sabotage and betrayals of the corrupt bureaucracy.

Although most of the union delegates are comparatively new to unionism, the majority of them expected some railroad and were doing all they could to prepare themselves for it; but such open, cynical perfidy, such an arrogant disregard of even the formalities of democratic procedure; such flagrant violations of their expressed wishes—that came as a surprise to even many a die-hard.

The Work of the Bureaucrats

The executive council of the A. F. of L. deliberately pushed the young automobile unions into the labyrinth of craft unionism; it artificially created craft divisions which do not exist in the industry and cynically imposed upon the automobile workers a leadership which they do not want and for whom they have no respect. They have placed their heavy hands around the throat of the young International and deliberately attempted to involve the union with the plague of jurisdictional disputes. They are attempting to cut the membership up into half a dozen different unions and thus effectively paralyze their activity and destroy their militancy. In addition they harnessed the automobile workers to an incompetent and corrupt bureaucracy which has taken over the powers of the organization with a heavy dictatorial hand, although it heard expressed on the floor of the convention the contempt and hate for it, on the part of the overwhelming majority of the delegates. Ostensibly, Green and Dillon routed the progressives at the convention. The charter of the International limits its jurisdiction to production workers; Dillon and his machine hold the entire national apparatus in their hands. Actually, Green and the executive council suffered one of the most serious setbacks in recent years. The heavy, cumbersome machinery of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, which appears cunning and well oiled only when serious opposition is lacking, was forced to reveal itself in all its nakedness. No camouflage, no subtle maneuvers were possible here. All of Green's eloquence went for naught. After his first defeat on the floor, he no longer dared chance a vote on any important question.

He bluntly informed the delegates that their voting one way or another made no difference. He was forced to come out with the cold, unadorned ultimatum that the delegates must accept his conditions, or he would smash them! The reverberations of this ultimatum will be heard for many a day in the labor movement of this country.

Strength of Progressives

The progressives, who have organized themselves in a very serious manner since the Chevrolet strike, in their determination to oppose the Dillon machine, have now the duty of reconsidering the scope of their work, in the light of what happened at the automobile convention.

At the Detroit convention, the progressives commanded more strength than they themselves expected. Almost every delegation representing the real unions: Toledo, Cleveland, Norwood, South Bend, Kenosha—voted with the progressives. The only real large local supporting Dillon was the Seaman B. dy local 19059 of Milwaukee. Otherwise the Dillon machine received most of its strength directly from the small locals of a membership of twenty to perhaps a hundred, and some who probably came representing not so much membership as their good intentions; locals such as the ones in Detroit, Flint, Lansing, small locals in Wisconsin, etc., etc. The progressive strength proved larger than expected not because of last minute additions to their bloc, but because the early stages of the fight on the convention floor revolved chiefly on the basis of anti-Dillon sentiment and against any appointment of officers. The Toledo delegation, counting some 38 votes, were actually the opponents of the progressives in their own local, and were not elected by their local membership, but handpicked by the local executive committee. The pressure of the progressives in Toledo was great and for it, on the part of the other side had no other program of their own, plus the combined pressure of the progressives from the other cities at the convention pushed the entire Toledo delegation to support the progressive bloc at the Detroit convention.

The progressives, although they had come to the convention partially prepared to do battle were not anywhere near organized to the extent of the reactionary machine. The progressives had no slate, and no possibility of agreeing on one at the convention. Had the question of candidates come up for a vote, the delegations would have split wide open.

The Enemy to Overcome
The progressives made a splendid showing at this first convention, but even the short experience has made it obvious that a real progressive group that is to challenge the "leadership" of Dillon, cannot be made up of scraps and patches. It must be systematically built up around a broad program which can command the interest of the great majority of the automobile workers. All unreliable elements, all local union "politicians" who sprout up around election time, must be ruthlessly eliminated.

Long ago the progressive movement of the A. F. of L. in this country came to the conclusion that the fight for a progressive program in the trade unions involves simultaneously a struggle of ruthless extermination with the present "leadership" of the A. F. of L. which is the most venal and stupid of the whole world. To these leaders, the needs and desires of the rank and file workers are as foreign as the customs of the Zulu tribes. They dread the very thought of struggle and fear the development and growth of young progressive movements, as they fear the plague itself. When they find their positions and salaries endangered, they are ready to collaborate with the police, the bosses, with anybody to smash the insurgent movement, even though they may wreck a whole movement in the process. The present fossilized leadership of the A. F. of L. stands today as one of the greatest obstacles in the path of the automobile workers. They will have to be swept aside, before the automobile unions can develop to their fullest potentialities.

It seems, from observing recent trends in the American Federation of Labor and the trade union movement in general in this country that many of the new unions in the mass production industries are beginning to occupy a more conspicuous place in the A. F. of L. and are beginning to displace in importance, to a degree, the older building trades unions.

The automobile industry is led by the most self-confident and aggressive combination of industrial magnates and financiers. It is one of the few remaining branches of industry which is still able to create its own "prosperity" without benefit of the federal government. This business combination is least inclined to "sentimentality" in relations with its employees. They will not yield an inch of ground until they are forced to do so by the combined strength of the automobile workers. That, it is obvious, can only be accomplished on the picket line; but that is precisely the place where Dillon is least interested in going. The automobile industry is super-centralized and integrated. The automobile workers, split up into a dozen different craft unions, are least capable of fighting the confident and ruthless barons of the automobile industry. Again the present leadership and its policies block the road!

The reaction, on the part of the progressives to the treachery of the Green-Dillon machine was very healthy. They did not allow themselves to be provoked, or fall into the trap of quitting the unions, and leaving, at this time, the bulk of the inexperienced workers to the tender mercies of Dillon. They are preparing to appeal the decision of the executive council to the A. F. of L. convention in October; meanwhile they are going back to their locals to strengthen their numbers and to prevent all attempts at splitting them up.

They are beginning to realize that to challenge the leadership of the bureaucracy means the beginning of a battle of ruthless extermination; and that the battle once undertaken, cannot be stopped halfway. Dillon will spare no effort in building up his machine. He will spare neither effort nor cost to destroy the insurgent movement of the progressives. For that he has the support of the whole A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

Despite the heavy task and all of the obstacles involved, the progressives can come out of this battle victorious. If they succeed in arousing the still untouched thousands of automobile workers in the industry, whose interests they represent, if they push their progressive program and win ever wider support; if in addition, they rely upon the progressive groups of all the other unions, especially in rubber and steel, they will have created a movement which will prove itself invincible in battle against any and every foe.

Discontent Grips St. Louis

First Successful WPA Strike Prelude to Other Actions

By St. Louis Correspondent

ST. LOUIS.—A strike of WPA workers employed on a St. Louis County highway came to a successful conclusion when 800 men came out, formed a picket line and stayed there until their demands were granted.

The men had been cut from 65 cents an hour to 45 cents an hour. They demanded the return of the former scale. In the original contract the government had stipulated that the rate of 65 cents be paid. When the cut came the Federal Authorities said nothing, pretending to know nothing about it. However, the "reminder" of 800 strikers on a picket line and fighting mad brought them around and they ordered the workers' demand be granted. This strike was not led or initiated by any unemployed organization or relief workers association although such organizations participated.

The different A. F. of L. crafts employed there, particularly those crafts affiliated with the Building Trades Unions of St. Louis County were the leaders and initiators. It is the first strike in which the Building Trades have taken an active and official part in any of the relief projects in this part of the country. But if present indications mean anything it will not be the last.

That the labor skates, with an eye to the favors which will come their way in supporting generally all "elvic improvements," should also support the program of the bankers and the real estate companies in the present issue was a foregone conclusion. But the Building Trades are beginning to ask questions. And so persistent is the pressure of the workers that the leader of these organizations are lining up and the ground is being laid for a nice battle in the very near future. In spite of the fact that they are assured by the fakers that the prevailing hourly rate (meaning the union scale, we suppose) will be paid they are not satisfied. They have their eye firmly fixed on the $19-$34 monthly standard set by the Administration as a "security" wage and rumblings of revolt are plainly to be heard.

Prelude to Wage Slashing

With some 30,000 workers in St. Louis "living" on the "security" wage of $10.80 a week, what will happen to the wages of the "fortunate" ones who are receiving $15 to $18 a week? Or as to the wages of the building workers who receive such fabulous sums as $35 or $46 a week—for a month or two out of the year? The establishment of the $10 weekly scale for relief workers is but the prelude to a gigantic wage slashing attack against the workers in private industry as it was of course intended to be. And that is the answer which the building trade workers are arriving at.

One of the biggest jobs in this project will be the wrecking of the old buildings. On all previous jobs the wages for this work, which is both hard and dangerous, has been 10 to 15 cents an hour. There is nothing to indicate that it will be different on this one. The workers employed to do this work are unorganized and are hired through some wrecking company to whom the contract is let. They are mostly Negro workers.

On the one or two Park projects which are going on in the city there have as yet been no strikes, but discontent is rife. Only a few dozen men are employed at present. But if 30,000 are given jobs by November 1 as the Administration plans at wages of $10 a week which will force down the living standards to below that of even direct relief for many, it is safe to predict that St. Louis will become a hotbed of strikes. The Building Trades who are almost the last among the organized workers to withstand an attack on their wage structure, will not give up so easily. And in their struggle they will sweep along thousands of others who want more than fine phrases and empty promises.

tionists do? The program was not complete; the necessary sections were to be supplied later, and the words were to be written in the fire and steel of the October revolution.

But the fact is, the conference did call for international demonstrations against the war-mongers. How the hearts of the revolutionary youth, bitter from a year of betrayal and from the waste and horror of organized mass murder, must have swelled passionately at the call! IYD revitalized the depressed youth fighters, and for once, it even set in motion whole masses of adult workers who had needed just this spark.

Our national Spartacan organization finds similar task today. As they in the midst of the war raised a clarion call for mass action, so we in the midst of reaction issue a call for revolutionary struggle against war.

Spartacus Alone Shows The Way

Just as the Berne conference found itself the vanguard youth group of the day, alone on the international field in its opposition to the war, today the SYL in America is the only voice among young people telling the truth about a system rotten with greed and privilege, and alone among youth groups stands for the Leninist slogan:

"Turn imperialist war into civil war!"

The young Socialist hears his leader tell him: there are several ways of stopping war, and if necessary we will go the limit (perhaps). But pledge ourselves to the revolutionary, the Bolshevik way out?—never. The young Socialist will yet see a good section of his party leadership consorting with the war-mongers (as some of them are already doing abroad) and urging him, as Dannenberg did before them, to join up with the colors.

The young Stalinist, militant and eager to follow in the steps of Lenin, is already learning that Stalin supports the war plans of the French bourgeoisie; that the Seventh Congress of the C.I. favors coalition (unity with capitalists) governments; that the 5 point program of the C.P. on war is completely reactionary and pacifist; that the Stalinist leadership has gone back to Kautsky, social-patriot and renegade, for its reasons to support the wars of "peaceful" capitalist governments (!!) against warlike ones.

And so we find ourselves in close alliance with the anti-war pioneers of Berne. Across the years we extend a comradely hand. We say: what you dared and tried to do, we also can and are trying. We too know how it feels to see the world saturated with the poison of imperialist brewed hatred, to see the world rush careening toward another tide of blood, to hear the voices of betrayers in workers' ranks cover with high sounding phrases the poisoned bait: "Join the next war to save democracy!"

We will pound away all obstacles. We will build. We will fight. We will conquer.

The Best Answer to Slander!

"I have just finished Olgin's booklet on Trotskyism," writes M. G. of Massachusetts, "which I am answering by enclosing a $10.00 check for the 8-page NEW MILITANT." An answer worthy of a revolutionist!

The Los Angeles branch sent in a contribution of $20.00 this week, and the New Haven branch sent in a contribution of $13.00. Together with other contributions received, this week's total in the campaign for the 8-page weekly has been brought up to $69.70. This represents a welcome change. The previous week brought a total of only $35.15, and the week before that, ending August 24, recorded the lowest point of only $32.00.

The campaign is thus taking on new life and bringing better results. It should be a spur to the many Party branches, readers and sympathizers from whom we have not yet heard. All shoulders to the wheel and we shall soon reach our goal—the 8-page weekly.

Minneapolis Labor Hits F-L Mayor

Two Workers Dead, Many Wounded, By 'Farm-Labor' Cops

BULLETIN

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 14.—A tense situation here. Red scare planned. Indictments possible. Grand Jury absolves police and calls for additional police forces. Farmer-Labor mass meeting condemns police and Mayor Latimer. F-L speakers weak and vacillating with exception of Scott and Balaban. Wm. Brown, president of Local 574 demands expulsion of Latimer from party. Latimer booed and jeered by crowd.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 13.—Two workers are dead, thirty wounded, and hundreds gassed as a result of a murderous police attack on strike pickets and supporters at the Flour City Ornamental Company's plant here. Five thousand pickets, strike sympathizers and spectators gathered in front of the plant late Wednesday night. Without warning the police opened fire with tear gas on a group of strikers holding a meeting in a vacant lot across the street from the plant. Following the gas barrage which was fired from armored cars, the police fired volley after volley into the crowd. When the meeting was broken up, guns and clubs were turned on the spectators.

Two Dead

Eugene Casper, 18 years old, shot through the chest by a police bullet, died on the way to the hospital. Melvin Bjorkland, 21, died with a bullet in the chest, died on the street. Young Casper was crossing the street followed by a friend, when a policeman drew a pistol and deliberately shot him down. He was not a striker. Among the wounded in the hospital are men who were smashed down by police clubs while walking home with their wives.

Since the brutal police attack on Wednesday, mass meetings and demonstrations of protest have been held. Farmer-Labor Party Mayor Latimer, who attempted to defend his actions at a mass meeting of 2,000 Farmer-Laborites, was booed and jeered. On leaving the hall he engaged in an argument with an iron worker and as a result is nursing a cracked mouth. The election, who cracked himself in the election to remove Bloody Johannes and his kind from the police force, is being bitterly denounced by the workers. William Brown, president of Local 574 was enthusiastically supported at the Farmer-Labor meeting when he demanded the expulsion of the Mayor. After the meeting was hurriedly adjourned by the Farmer-Laborites, Harry Menville of the Iron Workers and Mickey Dunne of 574 addressed the crowd.

"Farmer-Labor" Police

Following Wednesday's battle Mayor Latimer issued a weaselly statement in which he attempted to place the blame for the butchery on the strike leaders and on Tetzloff, manager of the plant, at the same time covering up the police by stating that "all police guns were locked up in the squad cars, but some of the officers must have found themselves in a tight spot and gone and got their guns." The Hennepin County Grand Jury, after "investigating" the murderous attack of the police, and following reports by Mayor Latimer, the Chief of Police and the Mayor's "Labor Board," made up of three time labor leaders, three union hating bosses, and presided over by Doctor Prosser, author of the "Proctor Plan," for blacklisting union members, brought in a report calling for additional police and completely exonerating the police force for the murder of Eugene Casper and Melvin Bjorkland, and the wounding of thirty others.

The police gangster attack on the workers of Minneapolis is but another part of the campaign of labor fakery, Mayor Latimer and the Citizens Alliance to break down the militant spirit of organized labor and is particularly directed against Local 574. The spirit of the workers is high, and they are determined that the murderous police attack directed by Mayor Latimer shall have no more success in 1935 than it had when directed by Mayor Bainbridge in 1934.

Conflict Continues In Teachers Union

Prior to the opening of the convention the Executive Council of the A.F.T. met in executive session to consider the report of the investigation committee concerning Local 5. Members of the Council stressed the fact that the body had not been formed and had not authorized the investigation and that the committee

Teachers Meeting

A. J. Muste, former vice president of the American Federation of Teachers, and T. Stamm will speak on the present situation in the New York Local of the A. F. of T. at a meeting to be held at Irving Plaza, Wednesday, Sept. 18, at 8 P.M.

All teachers and other workers interested are invited to be present. There will be questions and discussions from the floor.

The Executive Council had before it a majority report, presented by President Lowry and Executive Secretary Hanson, which rejected revocation of the charter, referred the matter back to Local 5 for settlement and called for the appointment of a mixed committee of teachers and labor leaders to be authorized to step in and straighten out the difficulties. The minority report, presented by Selma Borchart of Washington, called for the revocation of the charter. The Council was thus presented with three propositions: first, a motion

Burning Problems Face 55th A.F.L. Convention

By ARNE SWABECK

Problems of unusual importance face the fifty-fifth annual A. F. of L. convention, scheduled for October 7, at Atlantic City. Some of them cause new conflicts in the movement. Bill Green and his cronies at Washington may watch with dismay the challenge to their position and policy. They do not yet anticipate a direct threat to their leadership; but the fear of progressive tendencies is beginning to haunt them like a nightmare.

Fundamentally this is the outstanding issue before the coming convention. A living movement is compelled to respond to the pressure of conditions under which it exists; and the lower strata of the officialdom as well as the state federations and city central bodies, that are closer to the rank and file membership, begin to reflect this pressure. In several respects they come into conflict with the top bureaucracy and so, while the progressive tendencies are still very much undeveloped and confused, their existence begins to worry the leadership.

This official hierarchy has received some serious blows to its bureaucratic method of domination and control of the movement. Its to revoke the charter, which was lost by a tie vote of six to six; second, a motion to refer the matter to Local 5, without any action, which was also lost by a tie vote of six to six; and third, a motion to appoint the committee as recommended by the majority report mentioned above, which was carried by a vote of eight to four.

The representatives of the opposition in the local were given a limited opportunity, in the form of ten minutes each, to present their case before the vote was taken. The majority in the Executive Council was anxious to arrive at a compromise agreement with both factions in the local in order to avoid the necessity of bringing the matter before the convention. The administration of Local 5 turned down all offers of conciliation. Dr. Lefkowitz declared that the motion passed by the Council had no legal standing and that he would refuse to recognize it. He presented the Council with an ultimatum in the form of an application or a new charter signed by twenty-five members of Local 5, and threatened that if the charter was not revoked and a new charter granted to his group, he would bring the matter before Green who would see to it that the charter of the American Federation of Teachers was revoked. Later, Bernice Rogers, delegate from Cambridge, Mass., and member of the Council, told the story to the convention on Friday, adding that this threat was like a machine gun pointed at the body to put them "on the spot."

The Executive Council which consisted of a majority of liberal and conservative teachers were flabbergasted. One member, unwilling to believe his own ears, said in a dramatic tone, "Will you repeat that again, Dr. Lefkowitz?" The representatives of the opposition expressed their willingness to a policy

"red scare" campaign has been given a setback. Its policy of organization is being challenged and its time-honored political policy is subjected to a severe scrutiny.

In turn this despicable officialdom becomes more perfidious and moves closer toward a more outspoken reactionary position. This is the inevitable logic of antagonistic tendencies and it can only become more pronounced the more the conflict intensifies. Finally the struggle must result in the victory of the one or the other. The question of leadership and policy is completely interlocked with the very life of the movement. With the increasing pressure exerted upon the workers by the weight of capitalist exploitation progressive tendencies are bound to make their way in the trade union movement no matter how much the top leaders fluninate against them. But the latter know no other recourse than to lean more directly on their alliance with the enemies of the movement, by more complete collaboration with the bosses and in more outspoken support of the capitalist parties.

FDR Tells Bosses To Drop Fear

'Breathing Spell' Note To Howard Shows Masses Bear Load

In an exchange of letters with Roy O. Howard, owner of the powerful Scripps-Howard newspaper chain, Roosevelt last week gave the middle class another reassuring pat on the back. The letters were a follow-up to the Soviet protest notes of the week before, and were designed to blast the growing anti-Roosevelt blots now coming from the Hearst papers, the New York Herald Tribune, the Chicago Tribune, and the rest of what Roosevelt likes to call the "Tory" press.

Howard wrote, in his letter to Roosevelt, as a "friend of the Administration." He stated that many business men had been following along with the President as sympathetically as they could, but that they were becoming disturbed over Roosevelt's continued championing of "radical" legislation. He mentioned the Utilities Bill and Roosevelt's Tax Program as two particularly troublesome items. What, he wanted to know, were Roosevelt's plans for the coming period?

The "Breathing Spell" Roosevelt's answer was divided into two principal parts. The first, and longest, was a defense of the measures he has taken, especially a defense of the Tax Program. The second, and the one that the newspaper headlines have been playing up, was the statement that his program had been "substantially completed," and that he was now able to promise business a "breathing spell."

The defense of the Tax Program, if read carefully, was perhaps more revealing than Roosevelt intended it to be. He showed by means of Treasury Department statistics how the percentage of the Federal income derived from "consumers' taxes"—taxes falling primarily on the masses—had risen during the past seven years from around one-third to nearly two-thirds. This meant a corresponding decrease in the percentage derived from Income Taxes, Inheritance Taxes, etc. How, in the face of this, asked the President, can anyone object to the reasonableness of increasing the Income and Inheritance Taxes in the higher brackets? This question was accomplished by long paragraphs about "sharing the burden," "a juster distribution of the nation's wealth," and the usual Roosevelt demagoguery which has been familiar since his campaign days.

It is in this way that Roosevelt aims to keep his liberal and reformist standing with his middle class followers. He is the champion of all against the "inordinate" claims of any group or class. And in this way he continues to draw the teeth from the sporadic efforts to start a liberal or progressive Third Party movement for the 1936 campaign. If you want to share the wealth or

"Militant" Confab Proves A Failure

The Socialist Call "Institute," held at Bound Brook, New Jersey, September 7-8, which the "Militants" had privately boasted would produce a Left wing bond together by a revolutionary program, was instead an inconclusive and muddled gathering which took no definite steps.

Two months after the last meeting of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, which declared war on the Left wing through the so-called "peace pact" with the Right wing, and only a few months before elections will take place for the biennial national convention, the leaders of the "Militant" Socialists still persist in taking no decisive steps to build a fighting Left wing.

The futility of the "Militant" leaders' arrangements for the two-day "Institute" is characterized by the fact that one of the most important of the four sessions held was turned over to Norman Thomas, whose capitulation to the Right wing at the last N.E.C. proved to the hilt the hopelessness of the "Militants" leaning on Thomas for support. Despite his abject capitulation, the "Militants" invited Thomas to what was supposed to be a Left wing caucus meeting, and gave Thomas a five minute ovation when he rose to speak.

Ever fearful of what the Right wing will say if they attempt to organize a real caucus, the "Militant" leaders invited all members of the S.P. and the Y.P.S.I. to come to the Bound Brook "Institute," with the result that the 200 present were a heterogeneous group who could not possibly agree on a program.

Following the typical social democratic methods of organizing a conference or convention, the "Militant" leaders cluttered up the four

Stalinists Hail Laval Argument

'Sanctions' Pleas Conceal Jockeying for War Positions

Laval's speech in support of England's position against Italy in the Ethiopian dispute marks a new stage in the unholy alliance of Franco-British imperialisms, the Popular Front in France and the Second and Third Internationals. The pacifist gestures of Roosevelt both in regard to "neutrality" and the invocation of the Kellogg Pact are on a par with similar acts of his worthy predecessor, the peace-loving President Wilson.

The French minister, who on January 7, 1935 had struck a bargain with Mussolini understood to give the latter a free hand in Ethiopia, astounded the diplomatic world by proclaiming at the League of Nations Council meeting:

"France is faithful to the League covenant. She cannot fall in her obligations. . . I rejoice with my country [over Sir Samuel Hoare's speech], which understands the full necessity of close collaboration with Great Britain for defense of peace and safeguarding Europe."

This cementing of the Franco-British alliance recently, seriously threatened because of the Anglo-German naval agreement which officially recognized and sanctioned German rearmament, is hailed on all sides as a victory for peace.

"Sanctions" against Italy—economic and military measures—are implied in the speech of Laval. The Second International, the Third International and the International Federation of Trade Unions have urged sanctions against Italy. The president of the British Trade Union Congress recently declared:

"There are formidable powers of coercion to be applied in the economic sanctions of the League. They are clearly stated in Article XVI of the Covenant. They constitute a compound group of economic, financial, and military measures. . .

"It is a grave responsibility to counsel measures which may cause war. But what is the alternative, from the trade union standpoint, to this policy? War is a certainty, anyway, unless Italy is restrained." (British New Leader, September 6, 1935)

In a word, the British trade union leaders are ready to support the British imperialists to declare war.

The French Socialist and Communist parties add their voices to this imperialist front by calling upon the British Labour party for agreement with the program of Franco-British imperialisms. Among the demands of these social-imperialists is: "The closing of the Suez Canal to all Italian military transport."

By whom? Obviously by the anti-Italian imperialist powers. And the war among the imperialists which will follow will be loyally supported by these hysterical and treacherous "friends of peace."

Confidence in Pierre Laval and Sir Samuel Hoare to prevent war in Ethiopia or a world war, is preparation for a new world betrayal of the working class. The immediate interests of each imperialist power are constantly changing, leading to new alignments. France, which wants "peace" in Europe—since for the time being it is satisfied with its conquests on the continent after the last war—fears that the recent Italo-German mutual recognition of one another's "needs" means a threat to France; and that therefore a more solid alliance with Great Britain is imperative. At the same time she fears that regardless of Mussolini's promises last January, Italian aggression in Ethiopia will be extended, in view of the renewed Italo-German alliance, into French colonial possessions in Africa.

British imperialism is similarly afraid of Mussolini's encroachments on its colonies in Africa.

Confidential Report by Oneal to 2nd International Reveals Situation in the Socialist Party of U.S.

For the Session of the Executive Committee of the Socialist and Labor International.

Brussels, August 16-18, 1935.

Point 3 on the Agenda

SITUATION IN THE SOCIALIST PARTY OF THE U. S. A.

Memorandum Presented by James O'Neal.

(Received by the Secretariat of the L.S.I. August 9, 1935.)

July 31, 1935.

To the Secretariat of the L.S.I., Brussels, Belgium.

Comrades:

The members of the Socialist Party greatly appreciate the interest shown by the L.S.I. in the conflict in the American movement, and it is in reply to the request of Secretary Adler that I present the following report concerning the

The following document, which throws such a revealing light on the situation in the Socialist Party in this country, is the report submitted to the session of the Executive Committee of the Second International, which met last month in Brussels, by the American member of the Executive, and leading spokesman of the Old Guard in the S.P.—James O'Neal. This confidential report was received by the NEW MILITANT from an entirely authoritative source in Czechoslovakia. We obtained the report in a German translation, from which the memorandum printed below is re-translated into English.

origins of this conflict. However, before beginning the report itself, I am happy to be able to communicate that at the session of the National Executive Committee of the Party, which took place in New York City on July 13 and 15, an agreement was arrived at which put an end to the open conflict and promises to restore the unity of the Party. Enclosed I am sending you a copy of the agreement reached between the National Executive Committee and the New York State Committee. While the conflict extended to a whole series of cities and states, it is in New York that it was most violent and it is deemed that peace having been concluded in the state of New York, the entire Party will eventually be able to unite.

Obviously, the differences on what Socialist principles and tactics should be, are not completely eliminated by the adoption of this agreement, but the agreement is a source of hope inasmuch as it regulates some of the most irritating organizational, tactical, and jurisdictional questions which rose out of the conflict regarding Socialist principles. After this promising introduction, I shall now briefly review the origins of the dispute.

The Labor Movement One of the principal problems that has always confronted the American Socialist movement has been to establish fraternal relations of collaboration with the trade unions. As a result of certain historical factors which cannot be enumerated here, the American trade unions have been, with very few exceptions, isolated from the Socialist movement. Many errors committed by the Socialist movement in the past have contributed

By BILL REICH
Among the Patriots...

The Liberty League has secured 56 prominent reactionary attorneys to pass privately on the constitutionality of New Deal legislation and suggests Al Smith for President. In 1919 W. R. Hearst remarked: "Smith has always been too close to Tammany and to certain public service corporations to make him an ideal public official." Al Smith replied: "Hearst is a particularly low type of man. He hasn't a drop of good clean red blood in his body." Recently Hearst announced: "I think Alfred E. Smith would make a powerful candidate for President. He is the accredited leader of the Democratic Party. The genuine Democratic Party should not have its honored name stolen by the autocratic Atlantic party of Karl Marx and Franklin Delano Roosevelt." Father Coughlin slinks from the Roosevelt bandwagon and crawls aboard the Hearst-Smith-Liberty League outfit: "It is an admirable characteristic of Mr. Hearst to put aside personal animosity as he has done in suggesting Alfred E. Smith for the Presidency. Roosevelt's policies are un-American. Norman Thomas is a piker compared to him. After all, Thomas stands for a fairly good brand of American Socialism but Roosevelt stands for a poor brand of Russian Communism." The good Father is also interested in capturing the auto workers from the A. F. of L. with his Automotive Workers Industrial Association. He says, "Labor shouldn't direct its action against the bosses because all we have in Detroit, except Henry Ford, is a bunch of straw bosses carrying out the orders of bankers." My advice is not to say to hell with the stockholder and capitalist but to say 'charge more for your car and take less in profit and pass the money on to labor'.

Soak the Rich...

W. J. Cameron, Henry Ford's publicity agent, says, "Every form of attack has been made to gain control of the Ford Company. Banks have been pulled out from under it; unions have started strikes there; men have come with hundreds of millions of dollars to buy it. Now comes this tax-the-rich idea. We think it is simply a break-up-Ford idea." Oscar De Priest, former Negro Congressman from Illinois, states: "This 'soak the rich' legislation is striking at the Negro's best friend—the wealthy employers of the big factories of America, such as Henry Ford, Standard Oil, General Motors and others. If they are soaked we will be drowned!" Roosevelt's share-the-wealth taxation program will raise less than $2.75 per capita annually. In some states sales taxes cost as high as $100 annually per capita. Detailed Treasury figures show that in 1935, 61.3 percent of all Federal taxes will be paid by consumers while only 38.7 percent will be borne by persons best able to pay. In 1930 the conditions were reversed; consumers paid 31.8 percent of the total tax bill, the well-to-do 68.2 percent.

Science and Invention...

Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraphy, has presented Mussolini with the latest device for transmitting "death waves" which he claims will revolutionize warfare. Ethio-plans will have the honor of being murdered in the latest scientific fashion. Julius Streicher, Nazi Jew baiter, advises the use of a small pendulum as a divining rod for detecting Jews. "Jewish blood," he says, "belongs to lead and zinc, products of radioactive decay, while Aryan blood belongs to gold and platinum." In June the Statistical Bulletin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. attributed the 1934 increase in the birth rate as "the direct result of an upward trend in the economic tide." The current issue attributes the increase as being due to a lowering of the standard of living. "The birth rate is well known to vary inversely with the income class of the family and highest birth rates are found among the economically least favored classes." It is almost certain that families on relief have a higher birth rate than non-relief families.

Prosperity...

The Chicago Tribune reports the number of "paupers" trebled by the dole. Of Illinois 300,000 relief cases, 66,500 are classified as "unemployable." In New York City, General Johnson reports 40,000 people or one sixth of the unemployed on relief as being too ill to work, mostly from malnutrition. The U. S. Department of Commerce reports that the national income increased 10 to 15 percent in 1934. Alexander Kotchevsky, Houston, Texas, dancing master, has introduced a new dance characterized by leaping, flying movements and wide steps symbolizing the return of prosperity.

Stalinists Launch New Phoney Labor Party in San Francisco Opportunist Platform Is to Right of Epic; Devised to Catch All Voters

By CHARLES CURTIS

SAN FRANCISCO.—"Labor Unites with Liberal Democratic and Radical Forces for the Municipal Elections" is the heading of a leaflet stating the program of the San Francisco Municipal Labor Party, which was ratified on August 31. The Labor party being formed under Stalinist aegis in San Francisco, key labor city in California, is an indication of the nature of the Labor parties the Communist party is going to form throughout the state. For this reason it deserves the attention of workers nationally.

The program for the proposed Labor party calls for everything from 100 percent unionization of the city to abolition of one-man street cars; from a demand for referendum, to free school books; from a unified publicly owned transit transportation system, to a statement of opposition to vigilantism; from the improvement and extension of vocational training, to a demand for the freedom of Tom Mooney.

The program lists 21 demands and slogans. The mass-class Labor party so loudly touted by the Stalinists, reveals itself to be a catch-all to attract votes on any basis. But the burning question to literally hundreds of thousands it leaves untouched. To these hundreds of thousands enrolled in the Epics and Utopians, besides thousands of unemployed workers, the present capitalist crisis has driven one fact home: capitalism is an outworn system that must be replaced with a new social order.

Upton Sinclair, on the platform of "End Poverty in California" and "Production for Use," polled nearly a million votes in the gubernatorial elections of last year. The overwhelming majority of these votes were protests against the present system, and for socialism, although a confused type of socialism as popularized by Upton Sinclair in his "production for use and not for profit" platform.

That the methods proposed by Sinclair to attain socialism, would and could not lead to the desired goal, but somewhere far off from it, is very true, but right now we shall not deal with this aspect of the question.

Although nearly a million California voters cast their mandates for a new social order, the fact of the matter is that the proposed program for the Stalinist-inspired Labor party does not even contain a word about the necessity of the abolition of the capitalist system, and the establishment of socialism.

The program of the Stalinist conceived and executed Labor party limits itself to the struggle for immediate demands. The program does not base itself upon the idea of the overthrow of capitalism, but merely to the patching up of this system. It is silent concerning the burning question of the era: capitalism or socialism. The elementary teachings of Marxism-Leninism concerning the use of parliamentary elections to propagandize the revolutionary solution by the workers of their problems, is thrown overboard by the Communist party. The highest aim of the parliamentary struggle seems to be for the Stalinists to give the workers the idea that capitalism can be reformed. The mistake is two-fold: first, not to utilize the interest aroused in politics around election periods for the advocacy of the revolutionary solution, and second, in giving the workers the illusion that any gains of a substantial nature can be won through parliamentary struggle.

As a matter of tragic fact, the Epic movement, having as its central slogan, Production for Use (in addition to a series of immediate demands), is far to the left of the Stalinist-created Labor party, which bases itself solely upon the struggle for immediate demands, and does not even place before the workers the need of a new social order. The program of the Labor party cannot even be called reformist; the best description that can be given for it is Left-liberal.

The self-proclaimed vanguard of the working class, instead of leading the workers to the broad highway of revolution, is dragging them to the abyss of the most craven type of reformism. The masses have seen the necessity of a new social order (confused though they are as to the means of attaining this social order), but the Labor party does not even pay lip service to this ideal.

The Workers Party of California, however, places before itself an altogether different task. It does not drag behind the masses; it does not strengthen their illusions in parliamentarism. To those workers convinced of the necessity of replacing capitalism by socialism it points out the only real way of attaining this goal; through the scientific method of Marxism-Leninism, the workers' dictatorship over the capitalist class, as a temporary stage to the free communist society. To the workers still imbued with faith in capitalism, it shows the need for a new social order.

Philly Fruit Clerks Ask Aid for Members Facing Jail Terms

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Readers of the NEW MILITANT are aware of the fact that five fruit clerks are facing long terms in prison if convicted as a result of strikes they conducted in Delaware County and Philadelphia.

Certain wisecracks in the labor movement are spreading the rumor that "there is nothing to these cases," "you guys are just making a big howl about nothing," etc.

In reply to these people we want to cite a few examples of "justice" in Delaware County:

1. In March, 1930 Roy Peitz and Tom Holmes were convicted of "sedition" and received $5,000 fine and 1 to 20 years in County Jail, and two years, respectively. These two workers were trying to organize a union in the Viscose Mill (world's largest manufacturers of rayon) in Marcus Hook, Pa. The "sedition" consisted in giving out a leaflet which advised workers to organize into a union and if necessary to "protect yourselves against police brutality and interference." This was construed by the "just" court to mean "sedition."

2. In the spring of 1932 two young workers, John Adams and Harry Roth were arrested in Chester, Pa. (Delaware County) and charged with "sedition" because they advocated in case of war the workers should "turn their guns against their oppressors." They did one year in jail as peace.

3. There were two other workers who were sentenced to 90 to 180 days in jail because of unemployed activities.

Speaking of Delaware County, we wish to quote from the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger, September 9, 1935:

"Governor Earle yesterday at a 'Cornhill' on the Grace Farm, Swarthmore, attacked the McClure organization, declaring 'of all the corrupt political organizations, there was never anything in the United States to equal this.'"

Furthermore, "justice" is a Delaware County is not entirely restricted to Delaware County—Al Lichtman, one of the five fruit clerks, was just sentenced to a $1,000 cash bond to keep the peace in Philadelphia County in spite of the fact that the only "evidence" against him was the testimony of the boss son.

Now Messrs. Wisecracks, do you see what Earle says about Delaware County, the stronghold of the McClure gang? Do you think that "gentlemen" of the calibre of McClure and his henchmen, who send workers to jail for years when they try to organize a union or conduct unemployed or anti-war activities, will hesitate to send up union members when they have conducted a three months militant strike?

Shipping Clerk Strike in New York Ended

ILGW Heads Paralyze Militant Battle of Striking Workers

The shipping clerks' strike is over. The strikers returned to work Thursday without winning their wage and hour demands, and without union recognition. They have a promise from the bosses' associations to pay a $15-$16 minimum for a 44-hour week. At a meeting of the strikers held Wednesday afternoon the "settlement" was put forward by the leaders of the union as a "victory" and accepted by the clerks. Under the conditions the clerks were given little choice in the matter. The stoppages called in various shops in support of the strike had all been called off. Numbers of clerks had returned to work. It was either a case of accepting the terms offered or carrying on with badly weakened forces. But to call such a settlement a victory is quite another matter. It was anything but a victory. An analysis of the causes for such a setback is the first step towards winning the next battle.

To begin with, the refusal of President Dubinsky and the I.L.G.W.U. to give the shipping clerks a charter as a local of the I.L.G.W.U., placed, from the start, a great handicap on the local. As a part of the I.L.G.W.U., with the prestige of the I.L.G.W.U. behind it, and backed by it in their organization campaign, the local could have been put on a real mass base before strike action was considered. The responsibility for this failure lies not with the clerks but with the leadership of the I.L.G.W.U. who turned down the request for a charter.

Secondly, as a Federal union the local was given the "support" of the officials of the Trunkers Local 102. This support was of the kind that a scaffold gives a man about to be hanged. The truck drivers went on strike simultaneously with the shipping clerks, and settled their strike at the expense of the clerks. In other words, they applied the noose and then kicked away the "support," leaving the clerks dangling in mid-air. Metz, manager of Local 102, has a record that is known, and not favorably, throughout the I.L.G.W.U. This action was in line with that record. President Dubinsky, who sanctioned the settlement by Local 102, cannot by later financial support and statements wipe out his share of the responsibility for this act.

Thirdly, when the shipping clerks responded to the strike call in thousands, the inexperienced and youthful strike leaders were unable to properly organize the strike. It was then the bounden duty of the I.L.G.W.U. to loan capable and experienced organizers to the clerks. Again, the failure of proper functioning of the strike machinery cannot be placed on the young and inexperienced militant leaders, but on those who could and should have furnished the experienced leadership.

Again, though unofficial support was given to the strike by some locals and particularly Local 22 through the calling of stoppages, this support was sabotaged by the reactionary leaders of other locals, instead of "benevolent neutrality" with unofficial support, the reactionaries were officially silent and unofficially sabotaging the strike. This was clearly seen by the stoppages. Such stoppages being mainly called in the dressmakers' shops and usually initiated by members of

Cannon to Lecture on 4th Int'l In Series Starting this Week

Why has the Communist International degenerated from a revolutionary world party to a bureaucratic organization of social patriotism? What is the program of the Workers Party for the impending war? How can the militant workers prepare themselves against Social Democratic and Stalinist betrayal? What are the lessons of the struggle against Fascism in Germany and France for the workers of the United States? What are the forces and prospects for the Fourth International? These and other questions will be answered in the series of four Sunday-night lectures "On the Road to the Fourth International" to be given by James P. Cannon, editor of the NEW MILITANT, beginning September 15, at Irving Plaza Hall.

The lecture titles are: September 22—From Lenin to Stalin (the Downfall of the Communist International); September 29—Working Class Policy in the Impending War (Revolutionary Defeatism vs. Social Patriotism); October 6—The Struggle Against Fascism (Historical Lessons for America); October 13—The Road to the Fourth International (Forces and Prospects for a New World Party Under the Banner of Marx and Lenin).

Great interest in the series is expected. Tickets for the four lectures will be sold in advance for 45 cents for the series. Individual admissions will be 15 cents, that is, if there is sufficient room. Order tickets in advance from district office of Workers Party, 55 East 13th

Local 22. By the overwhelming response to the strike call and by their militancy on the picket lines, the shipping clerks could not be ignored. Financial support was generously given by the I.L.G.W.U., and President Dubinsky was forced to intervene. This belated intervention could not save the strike. It did, however, gain the "settlement" and by that may pave the way for a future victory.

The shipping clerks and all progressive forces in the I.L.G.W.U. should now press for the unity of the local with the I.L.G.W.U. They should carry on a vigorous organizational campaign. They should force recognition of the minimum wage in all shops—all as part of the preparation for a united struggle with the dressmakers in the general strike scheduled for next January.

Committee to Save the Union. A word must be said concerning the activities of the delegation sponsored by the United Committee to Save the Union, a delegation consisting of about sixty teachers from Local 5, who came to Cleveland at their own expense to oppose the wrecking of their local by machinations of the Lefkowitz outfit. The delegation conducted itself in such a dignified and impressive manner that it served to refute the calumnies heaped upon these teachers by the Lefkowitz-Linville crowd. In their private discussions with individuals and groups of delegates they always received a fair and courteous hearing in presenting the minority's side of the case. The members of the delegation, by their intelligent conduct, contributed in no small measure to the victory that was achieved.

7. The Lefkowitz and Linville Shadows in the N. Y. Press. In conclusion we are compelled to reply briefly to the statements which have recently appeared in the New York press by Dr. Linville and Dr. Lefkowitz, which are as false and unfounded as they are distasteful to the American Federation of Teachers. They state that the defeat of their proposal to revoke the charter of Local 5 and the election of a progressive slate was achieved by an unprincipled combination of left wing elements and of office-seeking reactionaries. It is true that in the convention there were two progressive caucuses: one led by Maynard Krueger of Chicago and the other by Clyde Kiker of Toledo. These caucuses negotiated and achieved unity of action upon the principled basis of a program which called for: 1) rejection of the revocation demand; 2) public repudiation of the Green telegram; 3) Active opposition by President Lowry to the Lefkowitz-Green conspiracy to intimidate the convention; and 4) Agreement upon a common slate for national officers and members of the Executive Council. This united front of all progressive forces on a principled basis is a symbol of the new spirit of realism which has manifested itself recently in the struggle to overthrow the reactionary Green machine and their allies Linville, Lefkowitz and the Right wing Socialists.

—A TEACHER.

Conflict Continues In Teachers Union

of conciliation, they were willing to confer with the administration, under the supervision of the Council, in order to arrive at a working basis which would result in the effective functioning of the union.

Impressions of the Delegates. It is interesting to note that the delegates to the convention represented a good cross section of the teachers of America. There were present teachers of all ages: the gray-haired and dignified one nearing the age of retirement, the mid-aged and the younger generation, representatives of all teaching levels from elementary school to college. There was also present a sprinkling of Negro delegates from Arkansas, Georgia and Washington, D.C., as well as a delegation of teachers from Cuba who told the convention of the repression of the labor movement by the present reactionary regime. Politically, every shade of opinion was represented. Because the convention was so representative it demonstrated that the A.F.T., though still a small organization compared to the total number of teachers, had become a vital force among the teaching body. It showed also that even the most backward and most difficult to organize of the white collar professions, the teachers, are organization into trade unions: as an organic part and not merely as an ally of the labor movement. Reports presented to the convention showed that progress toward mass organization has already been made in a number of localities. In Cleveland the union movement has succeeded in organizing 2,500 of the 4,500 teachers and has secured recognition by the Board of Education. In Philadelphia, the local which was organized about a year and a half ago with a membership of seven, has grown to over a thousand due to the activities of the progressive leadership. In Arkansas, the land of sharecroppers and closed schools, and payless teachers, 42 locals have been organized within less than two years. A number of union teachers have also been active in organizing sharecroppers, a phenomenon which gives additional significance to the union movement.

3. Report of Officers of A.F.T. The report of President Lowry was highly academic in character, containing the usual progressive platitudes. It did, however, contain a summary dealing with the fundamental problems which the organized teachers face. He stressed five problems: the education of the teacher to a fuller knowledge of current social problems, factional division, fear of dismissal or union activity, closer fraternalization with organized labor, and finance. The weakness of his report consisted in the fact that he offered no tangible program or recommendations whereby these problems might be dealt with.

The report of the Secretary-Treasurer Florence C. Hanson was more interesting from a factual standpoint. It is interesting to note that the organization received $28,003 in form of per capita dues and that Local 5, N. Y. supplied $6,852 or approximately one fourth of the total amount. "This fact brings out better than anything else the importance of Local 5 in the national organization. As to membership the report shows that the national organization consisted of 195 locals of which 84 were locals organized this year. The A.F.T. has now a total membership of approximately 15,000, a gain of 451 percent in the number of locals and 12 percent in members. There was a loss of ten locals, which was unusually large, but.

"In face of the attacks upon the teacher union movement this is a remarkable record. Some of our newest and smallest locals have held their position in the face of strong opposition. A barrage of hostility was opened in Ohio last year. It has been intensified this year. In Toledo where attempts have been made to dismiss the teacher leaders, with success in one case. In Massillon, Ohio, the superintendent endorsed by Local 330, the president and vice-president of the local were not reappointed after a vigorous contest. Please note that Massillon 330 shows a growth. Continuous press accounts put out by the Ohio Chamber of Commerce and the Society of American Federations branding the American Federation of Teachers as radical and communistic and its officers as communists have increased the difficulties of holding and building locals. In spite of this, however, the Ohio membership has more than held its own." (From the annual report of Secretary-Treasurer Hanson.)

We have quoted from this report for various reasons. First it illuminates the role which the Lefkowitz-Linville-Green combination is playing in branding hundreds of members of Local 5 as communists—it is exactly the kind of language which the open-shop, labor-hating Chamber of Commerce and the professional patrioters are using to prevent the organization of teachers in their efforts to smash the locals already in existence by securing the dismissal of teachers who are active in union organizing.

In New York Lefkowitz and Linville, assisted by the capitalist press, and the Right wing Socialist press, the New Leader and the Forward, are preparing the ground for mass dismissal of teachers by their campaign of union wrecking and slander.

The second problem which Mrs. Hanson's report raised are the means to be employed to defeat the terroristic campaigns of the Boards of Education, the Chambers of Commerce and the professional patriots. In the Wagner Bill, the Federal government was compelled to recognize at least on paper, the right of workers to organize in unions of their own choosing, and to bargain collectively with the bosses. This fundamental right, for teachers, is not recognized by local and state educational and governmental authorities. This can only be obtained by teachers through their own efforts and struggle and by the closest association with the labor movement. In the teacher field, the company unions, which take the form of local and state associations affiliated with the National Education Association, have been entrenched for a number of years under the guise of neutral professional and academic organizations. Actually they are the agents of the Boards of Education and the employing interests as has been attested time and time again by the position which they have taken on such questions as retrenchment in education, salary cuts, tenure, academic freedom and loyalty oaths. The struggle for the unionization of teachers, a struggle which until now has not received the attention it deserves from the progressive labor forces, has now become one of the important problems of the movement. The unionization movement, as seen in this light, means not only the winning of the teachers; it means the winning of the youth of America—the future generation—for the labor movement. It means also the forging of powerful forces that will aid in the defeat of fascist tendencies.

4. Teacher Tenure and the Treacherous Role of Company Unions of National Education Assn. The teachers of New York State, due largely to the activities of the Teachers Union, are fortunate in having secured the enactment of permanent tenure laws for those possessing permanent licenses. A few other states have also passed such laws. However, in most states this important right has not yet been secured. In such states teachers are usually hired individually on an annual contract basis, which contracts contain clauses regulating their personal life and often violating their most elementary right as citizens. In addition they can be dismissed for any reason and for no reason whatsoever. Under this system of annual contracts, mass dismissals have taken place under the policy of economy and retrenchment pursued by local boards of education. Bids have been advertised for the vacancies thus created, which has resulted in pitting teacher against each other in an effort to secure these jobs. In North Dakota, for example, as a result of this racket, teachers' salaries have been reduced to about an average of thirty dollars a month. In some states, as in Arkansas, no salaries have been paid for some time, and what salaries teachers have obtained have come from the Federal relief funds.

Again and again the question of tenure was raised in the convention and the term company unionism was frequently used. Evidence was presented which showed that the efforts of the union movement to secure tenure for all teachers were defeated by the opposition of the local and state affiliates of the National Education Association, controlled by the superintendents. The company unions specifically mentioned were the Pennsylvania Education Association, the Ohio Education Association, and the California Teachers Association. In certain academic quarters (see for example The Social Frontier, edited by Prof. Counts who ought to know better), the National Education Association has been treated as though it were merely a useful or at worst a harmless academic professional society. The reports of the delegates concerning the activities of this organization left no doubts as to its company union character. The problem of exposing and defeating these company union outfits has still to be worked out by the teacher union movement.

5. The Struggle for Academic Freedom. Another problem which was much in evidence at the convention was that of the fight against violations of academic freedom expressed in the dismissals of teachers for opinions expressed in the classroom, for activity in the labor movement, and in the movement for loyalty oath legislation initiated by the Hearst press. A number of victimized teachers addressed the convention, among them being Victor B. Jewett of California, who was dismissed for expressing an opinion upon aspects of life in the Soviet Union; and Dr. Winslow N. Hallett, a teacher at Cedar Crest College in Pennsylvania, who was dismissed as a result of his efforts to organize teachers and the unemployed in Allentown, Pa. In Toledo, Columbus, and Massillon, Ohio, a number of dismissals have taken place during the year because of similar activities. The convention, voted, of course, to give active support to these teachers in the effort to secure their reinstatement.

6. The Delegation of the United

Burning Problems Face Fifty-Fifth A.F.L. Convention

MARCH OF EVENTS

F.D.R. Warns Soviets...

Through Secretary of State Hull, Roosevelt has given warning to the Soviet Union that he expects Russia to keep its pledge given at the time recognition was granted. Hull makes it perfectly plain in his statement to the press that what America had in mind in demanding Litvinov's signature to Article 4 of the pledge was one institution and one institution only: the Comintern. "The language of the above-quoted paragraph irrefutably covers activities of the Communist International, which was then, and still is, the outstanding world communist organization, with headquarters at Moscow." Since Kres-tinsky rejected the protest of the United States against the holding of the Seventh World Congress of the C.I. in Moscow, Hull warns that the official relations between the two countries may be seriously impaired.

Meantime Walter Duranty expresses for the Stalinists their utter amazement that this Seventh Congress should in any way be confused with the earlier congresses which really aimed at advancing the interests of the world proletarian revolution. Duranty tells the bourgeoisie to look beneath the left phrases at the political realities as expressed in the entire course of Stalinism, and not to take too seriously the mere echoes of the past that have no more real content so far as the C.I. is concerned. But in the matter of relations between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., it is not so much any violations of a pledge that counts, as does the main aim and objective of the American bourgeoisie in the near future. These aims concern the period preceding the Second Imperialist World War for redivision of the world.

Aim of U.S. Capitalism...

Press comment stresses that Roosevelt was motivated in his present move against the Soviet Union by the exigencies of the coming Presidential elections. He desired to rob his reactionary critics of one of their main arguments proving Roosevelt to be "radical": his attitude towards the Soviet Union. But it should be clear that while this is undoubtedly involved, Roosevelt would never have taken this further step toward the break of relations with the Soviet Union if it had not been in line with the major interests of the capitalist class. It follows on the basis of the refusal to grant Russian credits, and on the heel of the withdrawal of consuls and military attaches from the Soviet Union. It is thus a renewed guarantee to Japan that the United States will not aid Russia when the Japanese start the attack.

Recognition of the Soviets came at a time when Japan was threatening a rapid advance and deeper penetration into China. Involved in the domestic crisis and unprepared for a military conclusion, the American capitalist class found it necessary to impede the advance of Japanese imperialism by threatening a military alliance with Russia. This move succeeded for the time being, but could not be a permanent solution of the problem of the Pacific. When Japan resumed its conquest and plunder of China, America changed its course and decided to push Japan into a war of intervention against the Soviet Union. This would weaken both and permit the United States to step in at the moment of exhaustion to defeat its Japanese rival as well as the Soviet Union which would meantime be taken care of from the West through the attack by Hitler.

It is with this strategy in mind that the U. S. is now engaged in a vast project of militarizing the entire Pacific, establishing air bases and naval bases in all its possessions and as near to Japan as possible. Every move with respect to the Soviet Union thus has Japan in mind also. H. B. Hinton, writing in the New York Times of Sept. 1, emphasizes this: "Far Eastern experts were called into consultation and the situation was viewed from a perspective including Japan. Our official students of Russian affairs know that Maxim Litvinov, the People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs, obtained at least two years of security on his Far Eastern border when he negotiated the recognition of his government with Pres. Roosevelt. Russian relations with Japan almost immediately took on a better aspect, the Chinese Eastern dispute was settled. . . . What Hinton fails to add is that the American imperialists also secured by this means the holding back for the same period of Japan's march into Asia, at least of the speed of this march."

American diplomacy subordinates all other tasks to this major task: the defeat of Japanese imperialism. The neutrality law—so-called—is a move subordinated to this same aim. The United States wants to have no entanglements in Europe. Her interest in peace is the same profession in words and violation in deeds as that of Mussolini who pours his troops into Africa, or Baldwin who rushes the British navy into the Mediterranean. Similarly Roosevelt is setting the guns in the Pacific and smoothing the path for the air and naval raiders in the coming war. Sept. 2, 1935

Fear of Progressive Tendencies in Labor Movement Disturbs Officials

are apparent as the A. F. of L. faces its fifty-fifth annual convention. The heaviest blows to the bureaucratic domination and control of the movement have come from two widely different directions: from the teachers union and from the newly constituted international union of automobile workers. The first was, by far the most decisive.

At its recent national convention the teachers union administered a serious rebuke to the "red scare" campaign of Bill Green and Co. and rejected by a firm majority vote his arrogant demand for expulsion of its New York local which he charged to be under Communist influence. Not content merely with this rebuke the convention elected the entire progressive slate for officers and executive board. When this happened Bill Green had not yet finished his personal supervision of the convention of the newly constituted automobile workers' union. There also he suffered a reverse. The assembled delegates refused to give a vote of confidence to his handpicked crew of officials. Green had his way by use of sheer autocratic measures, but the attitude of the delegates constituted a challenge to his leadership and gave him an indication of what he may expect in the future from the workers in the mass production industries.

Political Policy Challenged

These, however, are not the only manifestations disturbing the tranquility of Green and company.

Their policy is challenged or at least subjected to serious questioning, elsewhere. The Oregon State Federation is going leftward. Its recent convention came out in condemnation of the profit system and voted to establish a new political party. No doubt there was as yet little clarity on what kind of a party is needed, but the outward policy of rewarding friends and punishing enemies amongst the agents of privilege does not at all find the same favor as before in trade union ranks. That holds true also for the Connecticut State Federation of Labor. It has decided to conduct a referendum vote of all local A. F. of L. unions in the state on the question of creating a labor party. Likewise the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, now in convention, is giving serious consideration to the labor party question.

These latter manifestations become doubly significant in view of Green's constant reiteration of fictitious labor gains achieved by legislation in the capitalist Congress and presented by him as real. These he hails as new progress in relations between capital and labor. Undoubtedly the Executive Council report to the convention will attempt to bolster up its record with these fictitious gains. The trade unionists may not understand so well the language of the law as the lawyers have entered on the statute books. Their attitude is much more likely motivated by a realization of the effects of these laws on their organizations and on their attempts to struggle for better conditions. It is hardly necessary to assume that they have a conscious aim of creating a large reformist party or that they envisage great parliamentary victories. Rather the manifestations in the direction of new parties and labor parties represent a desire to break with the policies of the past and to get a square deal by their own efforts. This aspect invests these manifestations with their greatest significance.

Retreat in Face of Bosses Assault

They are closely tied-up with the whole question of working class economic standards. And it is precisely in this respect that the incompetence of the A. F. of L. leadership is the most glaring and where its return to greater parity and a more reactionary position is the most outstanding. The logic of the opposition encountered in the living movement drives it inexorably in this direction because, like the capitalists, this leadership has vested interests to protect.

Many grandiose proclamations were issued from A. F. of L. headquarters against the coolie wage level set by the WPA relief administration. Much active lobbying was conducted in Congress and at its committee hearings. The scale of $19 to $24 repeated Green, and all his cronies after him,—and they were correct—will tear down the whole American standard of wages. But the coolie scale went into effect. And, out of sheer incompetence to ward it off and downright sabotage of the struggle against it by the A. F. of L. officialdom, the American workers now face this scale as their basic standard. In this field things are much more real than are the so-called favorable labor laws on the statute books. And in this field the miserable capitulation to the coolie wage scale sacrificed important trade union principles and squandered many real gains attained in hard-fought struggles.

Bankrupt Union Leadership Must Be Challenged by Awakened Membership

Faith in System of Exploitation

But the A. F. of L. Executive Council does not intend to tolerate any of the new manifestations in the trade union movement. It rallies to the support of the capitalist system and its present spokesman who so shrewdly put over again the old capital and labor relations in a brand new clothing. It backs up Roosevelt's declaration that the economic emergency is passed and supports his promise of a "breathing spell" for business. It is preparing to strengthen his political fences for 1936. In the most contemptible fashion it hails the present upswing as the "healthiest thus far," for it is "due chiefly to inherent economic strength. . . . Dividend payments in August exceeded last year by $11,000,000," says the Executive Council report preparing to whip it up at the coming convention; for are not these higher officials all interested in dividend payments? What other feature is "healthy" about this upswing? It cannot be the employment feature, for in regard to this the Executive Council states: "Employment this Spring has been below last year's level although production was higher." In other words: with the upswing, proclaimed as healthy by Green and company, unemployment is growing and the speed-up system is growing with it. And the Council statement further makes clear that while the cost of living continues to rise, recording in July this year 62 percent above last year, the share of the workers in the total national income had dropped from its 21.9 percent in 1929 to 18.1 percent in 1934. A "healthy upswing" indeed.

Crucial Issues Still Remain

In face of these facts the decrepit A. F. of L. leadership proclaims as healthy an upswing accomplished entirely at the expense of the workers, through increased exploitation, and it reiterates its faith in this system of exploitation. This, let us not forget, comes also as a prelude to the coming convention. It makes only so much more clear that this leadership remains wedded to capitalism in theory and practice and depends upon the active forces of capitalism to sharpen its own class in order to deal the more effectively with any opposition to its reactionary policies and bureaucratic domination.

But the crucial issues still remain to be decided in the future. The coming A. F. of L. convention may proceed in comparative calm and without the serious conflicts yet coming to the fore. Nevertheless the reactionary course of its corrupt regime lays the trade union movement ever more open to new capitalist assaults. "What direction the workers will take when facing these assaults should not be in doubt. That can be clearly ascertained from their attitude and their actions up to now."

In the coming battles both ideas and leadership will be put to the test.

Roosevelt Assures Business It Will Get New "Breather"

get old-age pensions, go not to the ghost of Long or the dreams of Townsend, but to the sane and sound original share-the-wealther and old-age-pensioner, Franklin D. Roosevelt. He is a past master at stealing thunder; and making it crack for him.

Roosevelt Program a Fraud

The easiest way to expose the Roosevelt hypocrisy, on the share the wealth Tax Program as on old age pensions or any other presumable liberal reform, is to compare what Roosevelt actually does with the high-sounding phrases he is so fond of. The Roosevelt Tax Program is a fake through and through. It does nothing whatever about eliminating tax-exempt securities, the means whereby the majority of the very rich escape practically all income taxation. It does next to nothing to regulate so-called "personal holding companies," another favorite device whereby the wealthy report "No Income" while they live on $10,000,000 a year. And, if all of its provisions worked as the Treasury itself predicts, the whole Program would net only a little over $200,000,000 yearly—a mere drop in the bucket of the Federal income, which would leave "sharing of the burden" within a fraction of the percentages which Roosevelt himself gives.

This does not mean, of course, that the present Tax Program is the last in the rise of income and inheritance taxes. This will come, will have to come, but it will wait for the most part until after 1936. And at that time it will be not the higher brackets that will share the burden, but the lower income range. The ones who will be really hit will be from the same middle class which Roosevelt now so widdlingly tries to charm with his paper blows at the Tories.

Roosevelt does not, however, in his letter to Howard, stop on a Left note. As in the case of the Soviet correspondence, he is anxious to assure the public that, though he is a real reforming liberal, through and through, yet he is a safe and sane liberal—nothing that a sensible business man, or an owner of a large newspaper chain, need be worried about. He has no new upsetting acts up his sleeve; he grants business a breathing spell; his program is substantially completed.

Profits Mount

And well might Roosevelt feel that, for the moment at any rate, his program is substantially completed. Profits are once more rolling in. The automobile companies are doing their biggest business since 1930; steel, since 1931. General Motors and General Electric have just raised their dividends. The Stock Market is continuing its longest sustained advance since the crash. Merchandising expects the biggest year since 1930. The army and navy have the largest appropriations in peace-time history, and a new high in personnel. The chemical companies are operating full time. Electric output has been up during several weeks, to all time highs. Business will indeed have to have a breathing spell—for at least long enough to add up the profits.

Naturally, a few details are not yet taken care of. Unemployment seems to remain close to its low levels. Real wages have been declining during the present year. The Schechter Decision has given an impetus to a wide-spread increase in hours. The influence of WPA is rapidly lowering relief standards.

Indeed, somehow or other, the present partial revival of prosperity seems to be leaving out the working class altogether. It is a prosperity exclusively designed for the "business men" about whom Howard and Roosevelt so solicitously correspond. And this is no accident. Capitalist prosperity was always of a kind that gave 90 percent of its relative benefits to the capitalists, and a poor 10 percent to the masses. It always meant a prosperity for profits, with perhaps a few dollars extra for the workers as a by-product. But now, in the decline of capitalism, with the expansive and self-reviving powers of capitalist economy exhausted, "prosperity" becomes a grotesque caricature even of its former self. Prosperity—that is, profits—can be rehabilitated only by the impoverishment of the masses. No possible business upturn can absorb any large section of the unemployed, and the contradictions between wages and profits—always present but often hidden during the advance of capitalism—becomes glaring and open.

Roosevelt's program is substantially complete—at least it is his own words, that say so. We can stop, then, to taste the favor of the New Era he promised. It is for the working class to make judgment.

New War Alliances

On one and the same day, the Daily Worker printed the following comments on the Ethiopian situation: On September 14, 1935, page 1: "Laval Asks Concessions for Italy and Military Rule Over Ethiopia." On September 14, 1935, page 4, in the column conducted by Harry Gammon:

"The last important bulwark of the League for a possible support of Italian Fascism has given way. In an unwilling, but quite definite speech, Premier Laval has spoken with the voice of the French masses, and not his own war of de la Roquette, and the de Wendels, of the Comité des Forges, the war munitions makers and the pro-Fascist exploiters."

And what of Ethiopia, the pawn in the imperialist game? The independence of this small country of less than 11 million people, living under semi-federal conditions, has in the last decades been dependent on the conflicts among the imperialist powers themselves. Even this tenuous independence is now threatened by Mussolini.

If Mussolini is to be repelled it can be accomplished only by international working class action. The quarrel between France and England against Italy is a conflict of imperialist powers; war between them is immediate cause. To support imperialist "sanctions" against Italy is to pledge support for this imperialist war which will go far beyond a "defense of independent Ethiopia."

The genuine independence of Ethiopia requires arousing the colonial masses of Africa against their predatory masters, the French, English and Italian imperialists and an active movement of solidarity by the workers in the advanced countries. Such a movement will also have its effect on the masses in the colonies and semi-colonies of imperialist America who are oppressed under the iron heel of Wall Street.

The task of the workers of the United States is to expose the hypocrisy of the Roosevelt government in its "neutrality" position, to get the railroad men, longshoremen and seamen to refuse to handle any munitions, arms or foodstuffs going to Italy. Means must be found to give material aid to the Ethiopian people in the struggle for independence.

The slogan of "Boycott Goods for Fascist Italy" has been launched by the International Communist League. Everything in our power must be done to arouse the masses for the revolutionary struggle in defense of the Ethiopian people and against imperialist war.

This is possible only by an uncompromising struggle against those in the ranks of the labor movement who wittingly or unwittingly aid in the deception of the masses as to the aims of French and British imperialism and prepare for a new world slaughter and betrayal. In every working class organization, the militant voice of fraternity with the Ethiopian people should be raised.

SMALL QUESTION BOX

The September 11 issue of the New York Times asks, on its editorial page:

"Can it be said that the Russian wheat is being sold to Italy by the Comintern over which the Soviet Government has no control?"

We can see no objection to making the proper reply to this question. The answer is:

"No. The Russian wheat is being sold to Italy by the Soviet Government over which the Comintern has no control."

Rubber Workers Convention Rejects Appointed Officials

above Green to assimilate one or two of them in the international union as a sop to the workers. This depends on how strong the opposition to the bureaucracy becomes.

Plans to carry a protest to the national convention of the American Federation of Labor are being made in the event Green and his cohorts use the outrageous methods which marked their actions at the auto-workers convention.

The rubber workers likewise feel certain that the convention will be miraculously revived by Claherty out of town in order to assure the bureaucrats of automatic control of the sessions.

Rubber Workers Aroused

The indignation aroused by Green's treacherous methods in Detroit has been reflected among the workers here who have seized eagerly all reports from the autoworkers convention and most of the delegates realize what sort of a convention they are facing.

The ample warning received by the delegates from the experience of autoworkers will probably have a two-fold effect. Oil in the form of minor concessions to the rubber workers will be used by Green to smooth the "troubled waters." A crystallization of more anti-bureaucratic forces will strengthen the small progressive bloc elected as delegates.

Feeling for an independent union has not been entirely allayed as rubberworkers recall vividly to mind the two-year history of their struggle for an international union which threatens to be climaxed with another betrayal.

Expulsions from the spring of 1934 thwarted a move for an international union. Then the United Rubberworkers Council was formed at a national convention to head the unions but Claherty became president and again kept the reins of control.

Now after months of delay, a convention is to be held which all indications say will be another "Detroit affair."

struggles which were of a vital interest to the working class as a whole.

But when the United States entered the World War, the American Federation of Labor and the majority of the unions supported the war whereas the Socialist Party became an anti-war party. The old Socialist militants who survived the persecutions of the war period think that their position was right, that they could not have acted differently.

The different positions of the trade unions and of the Socialist Party toward the war alienated these two movements from each other. This marked the end of the collaboration between the two movements. With very few exceptions, the trade union movement slipped towards a conservative policy and the Party became isolated from the organized working class. While we were thus isolated, the war came to an end and the Party had to fight against a powerfully organized Communist movement in its midst which led to the splitting of the Party in 1919. Three Communist parties were organized by former members of the Socialist Party, while inside the Party there still remained members influenced by Moscow. The fight inside the Party continued for a number of years, producing a serious loss of membership; the morale of the Party continued to decline and discouragement took hold everywhere.

Contrary to the European countries, the United States emerged from the World War prosperous. Generally speaking, the workers were content and Socialist propaganda made no progress among them. With the exception of a slight depression in 1921-22, the period from 1916 to 1929 may be called the Golden Age of American capitalism. There was relatively little unemployment, and wages and working conditions were, on the whole, satisfactory to the workers.

In the course of this period, the Communist organizations conducted a violent war upon the trades unions and the Socialist Party. In certain cases the Communists destroyed the trade union organizations and exhausted the workers before the employers. The trades unions, for their part, declared war upon the Communists. However, they did not yet establish with sufficient clarity the distinction between the Communist and the Socialist position, with the result that our Party was looked upon with suspicion if not with a virtual hostility by a large part of the organized workers. It must be said that certain Socialists, notably among the numerous so-called "intellectuals" and among the inexperienced youth, whom our position against the war had attracted into the Party, did a good deal to provoke this hostility by their harsh criticism of the trade union movement. Meanwhile, there was also a decline in the membership of the Communist Party, and bitter internal struggles provoked expulsions and splits.

The Crisis

The great industrial crisis which began in October, 1929, produced a new situation. The Socialist Party which numbered more than 100,000 members in 1919, had fallen down to less than 10,000 members. With the sharpening of the crisis, new elements joined the Party. The growth was not very consistent and even today the membership is only about 18,000. Many of the new members were young people who had just quit high schools or colleges and there was a considerable difference in age between the Party veterans and the new members, which produced an abnormal situation leading to conflicts and disharmony. Ignorant of the objective conditions which led to the decline of the Party, of the Communist movement and of the trade union movement, the younger elements concluded that the veterans were responsible for the weakness of the Party.

At the same time, the trades unions were, at the outset, so absorbed by the problems raised by the crisis, and which even threatened certain trades unions with disruption, that it was difficult to recruit members for the Party among them. However, with the continuation of the crisis, the trades unions little by little abandoned a number of their views and their conservative policies. Up till then they had been very little interested in social legislation. But since 1929 they have progressively changed their attitude and they are now fighting for numerous important measures of this kind, and the prejudices against the Socialist Party are disappearing little by little. In the meantime, the Communists continue their intrigues within the trade unions and toward the end of 1934 the American Federation of Labor issued a new manifesto declaring war on the Communist movement.

Since 1932

The conflict inside the Party came out into the open at the National Party Convention held in 1932, when the new elements sought to remove Morris Hillquit from his post as National Chairman. Hillquit, while going to the extreme limit in his attempts to reconcile the diverse elements and to contribute to harmony inside the Party, had a clear and firm position on the fundamental questions of principles and tactics. He always considered that it would be impossible to build up a genuine Socialist movement in the political field unless mutually friendly relations and collaboration between the Socialist Party and the American trade union movement were established. He also considered that in view of the very nature of American institutions, it was an indispensable condition to all progress and all Socialist success to base ourselves entirely upon democratic and constitutional methods of political action. And that is why, since 1922, he had more and more violently condemned every attempt to flirt with the Communists and their sympathizers and had just as vigorously opposed the Socialist Party being drawn into alliances with various types of bourgeois reformists.

The essence of the question at the Milwaukee Convention was not the personality of Morris Hillquit but the conception of Socialism which he held. However, during the underground campaign which was conducted against him for several months, especially outside of New York City, his opponents spoke of "Americanizing" the Party, dwelt upon the fact that he was a foreigner by birth, accused him of submitting to the old traditions of the European movement, and also made use of the popular prejudice against New York which is intimately linked with American nationalism and with the agrarian tendencies of the south and the west. Hillquit was reelected by a very small majority, but his opponents obtained a strong representation in the new National Executive Committee; he was then afflicted by his illness which ended with his death in October, 1933, and which gave them the upper hand.

When the National Convention met in June 1934, the division inside the Party had become very serious and the events in Europe had contributed to increase further the fundamental differences of opinion. The defeat of the working class in Germany and in Austria, the seizure of power by the Nazis, the danger of a new war, and the discouragement which resulted from the continuation of the crisis, had strong repercussions upon the immature mind of the membership and above all, upon our youth. They began to despise cynically the whole European movement and argued that the defeat was due to the "old policies and the old leaders." They argued that the program of the Party had to be radically revised "to the Left."

Inside the Party, a very distinct Communist faction was formed and various Communist groups blandly sent their members into the Party and into the youth organization in order to "bore from within." The new elements obtained the majority on the National Executive Committee during this convention, which also adopted a new Declaration of Principles which aroused controversies the like of which had not been seen in so violent a form since the struggle with the Communists in 1919. United front attempts with Communist organizations also contributed to the conflict.

The new Declaration was adopted by the membership in a referendum by a vote of 5,933 against 4,872, that is, by a majority of 1,061. Its opponents declared that it was a step towards a Communist declaration and its supporters denied it. The Oregon state organization withdrew from the Party and the Indiana state organization organized a referendum for withdrawal from the Party when its charter was suspended and later revoked. The struggle between the two groups continued. In November, 1934, the vote for the Party declined in five or six states, and in these states a strong decline in membership was recorded. Altogether the Party lost 5,500 members, the activities of the Party were paralyzed and the National Bureau was incapable of gathering the funds necessary for the continuation of its work.

Another argument against the new Declaration was that a score of states or even more had adopted draconic anti-syndicalist laws which endangered the very existence of any party which alluded to the use of any form of violence or illegal methods for the accomplishment of its aims. The Oregon Socialists withdrew from the Party because of a severe anti-syndicalist law existing in this state, because they believed that by accepting the new Declaration the Party would be unable to continue its activities.

The United Front

Since the Russian Revolution, the Socialist Party had followed an unchanging policy with regard to Soviet Russia. It demanded the recognition of Russia and the establishment of trade relations with Soviet Russia, while rejecting all the united front offers which it received from Communist organizations, and demanding the restoration of democracy for the Russian working class. This was the Party policy up to the 1932 convention when a tendency manifested itself, changed this policy in favor of a united front with various Communist organizations for "specific aims." This also contributed to extend the conflict existing in the Party.

The entire trade union movement was mortally opposed to the Communist movement and the Socialist veterans considered that to conclude a united front with the Communists would be to conclude a united front against the organized working class. It would be to abandon the fraternal relations which were developing between the Party and the trades unions in spite of the internal conflict in the Party. The Party organization of New York State, the oldest state organization, counting the largest number of members, was the most categorical in its opposition to the united front and in its opposition to the new Declaration of Principles. That is why the State of New York was the center of the Party conflicts.

The Youth Movement

These various ideological solutions and tendencies in turn affected the organization of the Socialist youth (Y.P.S.L.). It was influenced by all the "Leftist" forms of ideology and politics. In two months it produced two Communist groupings, one of which joined the Trotskyists en bloc. At its last National Convention, it raised the age limit to 30 years which, if it is permitted, will make it a rival party to the Socialist Party. In New York City the local section of the youth movement came into conflict with the Party organization, which resulted in a split within this section, but as a result of the peace agreement of July 13-15 it is hoped that a united youth movement will soon be reestablished.

Organizational Conflicts

From the intellectual conflict there naturally arose conflicts between the national, state and local organizations and the youth movement, centering for the most part around the State of New York. Since its organization in 1901, the Party had been based upon the conception of "State autonomy." That is to say, the state organizations have always enjoyed the exclusive jurisdiction with regard to problems concerning affiliation, propaganda, election campaigns, etc. This form of organization flowed from the experience undergone with the Socialist Labor Party, which had centralized all power in the hands of the National Executive Committee, which abused arbitrarily this power in order to crush all opposition to its decisions by the expulsions of members, of sections and of State organizations.

The jurisdictional decisions adopted during the conflict between the local and State organizations have been too numerous and too complicated for an attempt to discuss them here. The result of it was accusations and counter-accusations of bad faith and of illegal or arbitrary actions, the essential point of this form of controversy being constituted by the power attributed to the State organizations and to the National Executive Committee. Here, however, it was above all the veteran members of the Party who defended the powers of the State organizations, whereas the new members gave their assent to the powers demanded by the National Executive Committee.

Summary

In summarizing the situation in the United States, it can be said that the conflicts in the Socialist Party are due essentially to a new movement arising out of the world crisis with all the abnormal phenomena which it involves. (1) The War. The youth are so obsessed with fears of a new world war that they want to put an end to the anguish of these apprehensions. Hence, the attraction that any pseudo-revolutionary program holds for them. (2) The Crisis. For five years millions of young people have been unable to find employment and this has led to a morbid psychology of vengeance against capitalist society which hardly promotes intelligent reflection. (3) Russia. Premature reactions toward the Five Year Plan and the tremendous Communist propaganda on the "seizure of power" have influenced the opinions of new members to a certain degree. (4) The European Defeat. The defeats of the working class in Germany and in Austria and the reverse suffered by our Spanish comrades foster the point of view that the blame for them devolves upon the organizations and the programs of the Socialist and Labor parties of the world, and that they must be completely reorganized. They consider that the veterans are incapable of doing it and that this task falls to the youth. (5) Fascism. They have a morbid fear of fascism and in general they believe that its rise in Europe could have been prevented if the youth with its vigor, its enthusiasm and its clearer views upon social and economic forces had been invested with the leadership.

Many of these new elements did not come from proletarian families, but from the liberal professions and the petty-bourgeoisie, above all from the colleges, the theological schools and the universities. They constitute a raw material which a workers party does not find it easy to assimilate because they bring with them the ideologies of their class. The hope of the Socialist Party rests in bringing into the movement an increasing number of men and women coming from the working class, above all workers who have been educated by the trades unions. They will have a stabilizing influence on the Party and will guarantee it a strong proletarian base.

The agreement which I am enclosing to you is the first step accomplished towards this stabilization. The veteran comrades have displayed tolerance and patience in their efforts to avert a fatal split. However, they have not shown themselves inclined to condone any compromises with certain ideas and certain programs which would be just as fatal to the Socialist movement of the United States, but to the international, to maintain a healthy party of the working masses free from all utopian ideas and rejecting dangerous adventures, a party based upon the interests of the proletarian class and not upon emotional reactions and fears. We have good reason to hope that the Party has now accomplished a turn in the sense of such a movement and that our comrades will do all that is possible to bring peace and unity into its ranks.

I should like to insist strongly on the fact that all those who are concurrently called the "Old guard" have not for a single moment projected or desired a split in the Party. We have openly exercised our rights to discuss the principles and the policy which were the cause of the disagreements in the movement, and in the states and the cities where our point of view carried we have, naturally, by the regular Party methods, fought the tendencies which, in our opinion, threatened to isolate us from the organized labor movement, to obscure the differences between Socialism and Communism, and to undermine the faith of the young generations in democratic and peaceful methods of labor action. That has been the case notably in New York.

The danger of a split became genuinely imminent during the first half of this year when the so-called "militants," confident in the majority they believed they had in the National Executive Committee, demanded of this organ to "reorganize" the New York movement—that is, to expel all the members and to readmit only those who were in agreement with them or who promised to obey their orders. Obviously, if this threat had been carried out the expelled majority would not have been disorganized and would not have disappeared from political life. The demand for this categorical measure becoming more and more violent, it nevertheless appeared quite obvious that the majorities of certain states and strong minorities of others could not tolerate such an expulsion en masse and the "reorganization" proposed for New York would have produced a split of the Party on a national scale. When the National Executive Committee met on July 13-15, it appeared that among its members only three out of eleven were determined to vote for the expulsion en masse of the New York Socialists. The New York Committee was then invited to confer with the representatives of the national organ, and an agreement was worked out which was ratified by two-thirds of the votes of the National Executive Committee and unanimously by the New York Committee.

We may hope that this agreement will lead to the reestablishment of a spirit of good feeling in the ranks of the Party, to the dissolution of organized groups and factions, will permit the elimination of practices which have up to now caused needless friction, and will thus put us in a position to work together actively to build the Party and to propagate its ideas while discussing as comrades the differences in the theory and in tactics.

The American movement has always been a very weak link of the international and we are fully conscious that it is our duty and that upon us devolves the responsibility towards the comrades of all countries to build up in the United States a strong Party, a party which will be able to contribute to the struggles of the masses of all countries and which will fulfill its duty in every crisis that may confront the working class here or abroad.

Fraternally yours,
(Signed) JAMES O'NEAL.

France Faces The Crisis

Labor Displays Its Readiness To Battle Against The Regime But Socialists and Stalinists Sabotage Struggle

By H. FRANK ROBERTS

France is today pregnant with change. The imminence of imperialist war and the exceedingly acute growth of internal contradictions are hastening the convulsions which will exert a decisive influence upon the march of events in Europe and in Africa. The government of Laval-Herriot is a stop-gap. It cannot for much longer maintain its precarious balance between class forces moving toward decisive conflicts. It seems to be generally expected that the Laval cabinet will give way either to a cabinet of the extreme Right which will base itself not on a parliamentary majority but directly upon the Croix de Feu and other Fascist groupings, or a Radical government headed by Daladier and supported by his allies in the Front Populaire, the Socialist and Stalinist parties. A government supported by or including de la Roque, which may take power, if need be, with the help of a coup d'état engineered by the General Staff, would mean the launching of an immediate intensified offensive against the organizations of the French proletariat. A government of Daladier, loyally supported by Blum, Cachin & Co., would be a further step in the gross and staggering betrayal of the French workers inherent in the Front Populaire. If French finance capital entrusts the direction of its government to a so-called "Left coalition," it will be because it can count on that betrayal. The Front Populaire promises not revolution but "civil peace." It stands committed not to revolutionary defeatism in the event of war but to the support of the French bourgeoisie in the holy war against German Fascism.

The events last month at Brest and Toulon showed that the French workers want to fight for their bread and that to carry it through they are prepared to wage and win the struggle for power. But the Front Populaire desires not struggle but civil peace. Listen to Jacques Duclos in an article headed "A Government of Peace? Yes!" (L'Humanité, Aug. 23, 1935):

"The (Laval) Government is heading for battles between Frenchmen at a time when we must concern ourselves with giving work to the unemployed and stimulating national economy. We certainly want a government of peace which will not marshal the workers in uniform against the workers in the factories and offices. We certainly want a government of peace which will unite all Frenchmen in defense of their bread against the two hundred families which pillage the country. . . . But, to realize the union of France working under the aegis of a government of peace, we must have an end to the policy of the government of national disunity. And the Communist party, declaring itself ready to support a government of the Left, demonstrates its concern for national recovery and for a real peace." (My emphasis—R.)

This, today, is the language of the "revolutionary vanguard" of the French proletariat! Not "battles between Frenchmen" but the "union of France," the unity of "all Frenchmen"! Not the struggle for power, but "national recovery" and an end to "national disunity"!

In the name of national unity, the French Stalinists have embraced as their own the Tricolor standard of the French Republic, the flag of the French bourgeoisie, red with the blood of the workers of 1848, 1871, 1914-18 and of 1935. When the preparations for the parade of July 14 were being discussed by a joint Radical-Socialist-Stalinist committee, the Radicals indicated their desire to carry the Tricolor. The Stalinists readily assented. But, added the Radical delegate, our party is weak here in Paris and our flag display will seem puny next to the combined forces of the S.P. and C.P.! Whereupon the Stalinist delegate voluntarily offered the services of the C. P. sections in the parade as carriers of the Tricolor—if the Radicals would be good enough to provide the flags! And so it was done.

On July 14 Paris was treated to the spectacle of communists on the march, with the Tricolor side by side with the Red flag at their head, singing the Marseillaise! And at the head of the parade was Daladier, denounced not so long ago by L'Humanité as the murderer and assassin of February 6 and whom now they call to power! "We do not abandon to the enemy the Tricolor flag of the Revolution," said Marcel Thorez in a speech before the Seventh World Congress of the Comintern, "We do not abandon the Marseillaise, song of the soldiers of the Revolution." (L'Humanité, Aug. 5, 1935). Was it so long ago that the Communist International proclaimed for the Chinese revolution: "We will not abandon the blue banner of the Kuomintang to the enemy"? The tragic betrayal of the Chinese workers marshalled by the Comintern behind the blue banner of Chiang Kai-shek will now be repeated, if the Comintern has its way, for the French workers, marshalled behind the Tricolor standard of the French bourgeoisie.

Another incident of the July 14 demonstration reveals the extent to which the Stalinists have carried their capitulation to the Radicals—i.e., to the French bourgeoisie. The socialist section of the 20th ward carried a banner which read: "Down with the Decrees of Laval-Herriot!" The Stalinist leader of the same district rushed over in a rage just as the parade was starting and ripped away the name of Herriot! Herriot is in the government and stands responsible for the starvation decrees of Laval—but he is a Radical and therefore not to be offended!

The fierce clashes at Toulon and Brest the first week in August—when workers trying to defend their livelihood came into bloody conflict with the armed forces of the state—brought forth from the organs of the Front Populaire—the charge of provocation! It was to be expected that the organs of French capitalism, like Le Petit Parisien and Le Matin would refer to the demonstrators as "rabble." But what could workers have thought who read in Populaire, the Socialist organ, that "human scum" were responsible for the demonstrations, and in L'Humanité that the Toulon and Brest events were due to "persons living on the fringes of labor" carrying out as "provocateurs" their "job as incendiaries"! These scum, rages Vaillant-Couturier, the Stalinist No. 1 Publicist, "outraged the Tricolor flag which the workers put at the head of their processions, next to the Red flag, on July 14!"

And as a political conclusion from the Toulon events, the French Stalinist party issued special instructions to watch out for provocateurs who are trying to incite the workers to onward acts!

In all France only one revolutionary organization is fighting hard and courageously to block the path of treachery down which the Front Populaire is leading the working class. That organization is the Bolshevik-Leninist group of the Socialist party which alone in France today is upholding the banner of Lenin and Liebknecht for revolutionary defeatism in the event of war, which alone is calling for the armed mobilization of the working class in the fight against Fascism and which when the crisis breaks will alone be capable of providing the revolutionary point of polarization to which the workers, betrayed by the Second and Third Internationals, will be able to turn. The Bolshevik-Leninists of France are carrying on the struggle for the Fourth International against terrific odds but with incomparable courage.

"Militant" Confab Proves A Failure

sessions with a multitude of platform speakers, leaving very little time for discussion from the floor. The little time there was for discussion was limited to five minutes per speaker. Thus little clarification could result from the "Institute." Even one of the "Militants," Frank Trager of Baltimore, denounced the arrangements of the conference, during the session on the Labor Party, and demanded that arrangements be made for a serious discussion of this point. An extra hour was given to the Labor party question, out of which resulted the only arrangement for additional discussion; Paul Porter and J. N. Thurber being authorized to hold a conference on this question preceding the A. F. of L. convention.

The first session, "The Road to Socialism," was given over to two main speakers, David Berenberg, who is essentially a Right winger, and David Felix, who is typical of the Right-Contrist contemptuous of "theory." The short hour's discussion that followed saw a number of Yipsels come out for the dictatorship of the proletariat, while Zam, ex-Lovestonette, declared against including this fundamental concept in the theoretical program.

The second session was largely given over to a meandering speech by Norman Thomas on the "Practical Problems of the Party." Frank Trager also spoke on the agricultural situation, taking an empirical approach with no hint of the problem of a proletarian strategy toward the diverse elements who constitute "agriculture."

The third session, on the Labor Party, was occupied mainly with speeches by Paul Porter and minor trade union functionaries, merely giving pictures of the various situations in the trade union movement. There was no time for discussion. Frank Trager at this point denounced the arrangements which prevented discussion.

Pacifist Leads War Discussion
The fourth and final session on "War and Fascism" was given over to a paper by the pacifist, Devere

Allen, and to speeches by Amicus Most, Mary Fox and Ernest Erber. Most denounced Allen's paper as "sloppy thinking" but himself took the same pacifist line of "stopping war." Mary Fox expressed the general desire of the "Militants," who desire a Socialist "American League Against War and Fascism," merely objecting to the present League because it is Stalinist-controlled and not because of its pacifist program. Fox, however, was very pessimistic, describing the sabotaging of the Right wing and the labor fakery of any attempt to build on the basis of the unions. Erber, newly elected chairman of the Yipsels, was the only speaker who came near to a Leninist line on the war question.

Albert Goldman was the first speaker in the discussion, criticizing the pacifism of the "Militants," and introduced a series of points, which were referred to an editorial committee. He was strongly supported by Francis Henson, secretary of the Revolutionary Policy Publishing Association. David Felix, speaking on Goldman's proposal said: "Here is a man who comes from a group (Trotskyists) who have long discussed this problem. We're children on this. It's like good whiskey. We want it once in a while, but we're not really ready for it."

All proposals went back to the editorial committee, since the proposed "Militant" program was not officially adopted.

Program Ambiguous

The program, written by the ex-Lovestonettes, Zam and Becker, on behalf of the top caucus of the "Militants," deserves the sharpest criticism. It is highly ambiguous on the fundamental questions of the proletarian revolution, envisioning a working class government arising only out of the defense against Fascism rather than as an offensive movement, giving no hint of the nature of the civil war attending the conquest of power, and slurring over completely the proletarian dictatorship as the period of transition from capitalism to socialism. It does not even declare for socialization of industry without compensation to capitalists! It is thoroughly pacifist on the war question, saying nothing about transformation of imperialist war into civil war. Its analysis of American capitalism has no section on the farmers, but incidental references show it to conceive, in typical social democratic style, of the farmers as a homogeneous class. In Lovestonette fashion, it goes even further than "most Militants," and calls not for a Labor party, which would be bad enough, but for a Farmer-Labor party. To cap it all the trade union section contains not a whit of criticism of the trade union bureaucracy. In succeeding issues of the NEW MILITANT this Contrist program will receive the extended criticism it merits.

The Revolutionary Policy Publishing Association, whose newly re-elected secretary, Francis Henson, at the last "Institute" session affirmed the desire of his group for unity with the "Militants" on the basis of a revolutionary program, held a conference in New York on August 23-25, with representatives present from Michigan, Missouri, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Tennessee, Buffalo and New York City.

The conference adopted the general line of a document, which will be published in the next issue of the Revolutionary Socialist Review, which among other things criticizes the "principle deviations" of the Communist International on the war question and the class struggle, repudiates national defense, and declares against any type of coalition government. Other documents were adopted which will shortly be analyzed in the NEW MILITANT.

The 'Thieves Kitchen' and Workers' Policy in War

Reformists and liberals of all shades and varieties are fond of calling Marxists "sectarians," "dogmatists," fantastic "extremists." This is the way in which jelly-backed individuals always describe those who have principles and who take them seriously. It is a verbal cover that reformists use to hide their own cowardly refusal to face facts and draw conclusions.

Nowhere is this more evident than on the question of war. Reformists are grievously "offended" when Marxists are not merely scornful of every form of pacifism but fight mercilessly against it. "So many good people," the reformists complain, "are honestly and sincerely against war; we must all join with them and if enough of us genuinely wish for peace, then peace will surely come." But Marxists have an inconvenient habit of looking beneath men's wishes and hopes to the material reality underlying them. Consequently they reply that pacifism, far from being a force against war, in practice aids the war-makers; they describe pacifism as the hypocritical front for imperialism, a means whereby, under the pretense of opposition to "war in general," this particular war—whatever it may be—is made morally respectable.

Lenin's Analysis of the League of Nations

In a similar manner, reformists objected to the Marxist analysis of the League of Nations. "The League," said the reformists, "may not be perfect. But it represents a great step forward. It symbolizes the desire of the peoples for peace, after the carnage of the Great War. We must aid in strengthening it." Alas, once again the Marxists spoiled the party. No, they declared, the League is not an agency for peace. On the contrary, it is only a gauging up of the imperialist robbers. Its purposes, its real purposes, are: (1) To make an imperialist united front against the post-war threat of international proletarian revolution; (2) To enforce the Versailles Treaty, and ensure the hegemony of France on the European continent; (3) To protect the colonial empire of Great Britain and to prevent any attempt by Germany to regain its colonies; and (4) to provide a legal and moral coloration for the next war which the dominant imperialist powers undertake.

This analysis of the League, made by Lenin at its foundation, holds as firmly today as ever. The only alteration is to realize that the League is becoming outworn even for these purposes. The issues of proletarian revolution, preservation of France's continental position, and prevention of German colonial recovery, have been intensified to a point that takes them outside the League orbit. Nevertheless, the League has still its role to perform. Before it is thrown into the discard, it can still be used triumphantly for purpose (4): to provide a legal and moral coloration for the next war which the dominant imperialist powers undertake.

Crime of Stalinism

Herein rests one of the great historical crimes of Stalinism. The League can fulfill this function effectively, a function that strikes to the very heart of the working class, solely because of the Soviet Union's entry. Hopelessly discredited by

Rubber Workers Ride Over Green Machine

By JACK WILSON

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 16.—Delegates here were rallying around the banner of their autonomous new international union, the United Rubberworkers of America, this week to consolidate the gains of their tremendous victory over William Green and the A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

Led by progressives, the delegates resisted successfully every effort of Green to choke down their throats through threats and intimidation the reactionary leadership of Coleman C. Claberty, symbol of the betrayal policies used in the past two years by the bureaucrats in the rubber industry.

Cannon to Speak Sunday Night on "Lenin to Stalin"

"From Lenin to Stalin, the De-generation of the Communist International," is the subject of James P. Cannon's lecture this Sunday evening at Irving Plaza. It is the first of a series of four lectures "On the Road to the Fourth International."

Lenin, the leader of the Bolshevik Party, the founder of the Communist International, is the symbol of revolutionary Marxism. Stalin, head of the Soviet bureaucracy, revisionist of Marxism, symbolizes the distortions and falsifications of the early Comintern theories and practices which are responsible for the working class defeats of the last decade.

The social democratic scribes of our time try to pass off "Stalinism" as a logical continuation of "Leninism." They write that the Leninist theory of the dictatorship of the proletariat leads to the dictatorship of the leaders within the party, to the stifling of workers' democracy and the supremacy of the bureaucracy. Stalinism conspires with the social democrats to make effective this distortion of Lenin's views.

All the more important is it therefore that a sharp contrast be made between the Comintern under Lenin and the organization using the same name, under Stalin's domination.

The lecture "From Lenin to Stalin" will clearly reveal the unbridgeable gap between Leninism and Stalinism.

The other lectures of the series include: Sept. 29—Working Class Policy in the Impending War! Oct. 6—The Struggle Against Fascism; Oct. 13—The Road to the Fourth International.

They refused to compromise whatsoever on the issue of democratic election, sending Green fleeing from the convention with the roar of their protest over his dictatorial policies at the autoworkers convention, ringing in his ears.

Refuse to Bar Communists

They wiped out of the proposed constitution a clause which would bar "communists" from the new unions.

They told Green bluntly that the "A. F. of L. leadership today is too antiquated to give the workers in mass industries correct leadership."

They declared they would appeal to the national convention the ruling of the executive council of the A. F. of L. that the rubberworkers couldn't organize on an industrial basis.

Backed by unions in Akron who are already sending protests to Washington, the delegates are demanding Green withdraw his threat of no financial support to the international unless he can appoint Claberty.

They passed resolutions unanimously protesting the Italian Fascist aggression in Ethiopia and urging the workers of the world to unite in a fight against German fascism.

Progressives Take Heart

At this writing, the delegates were preparing the groundwork for further action against Claberty and Green in order to prevent them from still obtaining control of the new international by hook or crook.

Anti-Claberty forces in the Central Labor movement took heart at the victory of the progressives and immediately voted back into good standing delegates whom he had succeeded in ousting.

The Akron typographical union passed a resolution demanding that their international officers fight for financial support of the new rubberworkers international at the next meeting of the executive council and they sharply criticized Green for his threats against the rubberworkers.

Tarov Makes Escape From Stalin Prison

The heroic Russian Bolshevik-Leninist, Tarov, who has been in prison and exile since 1928, has made his escape and is now in Asia awaiting financial aid from his international comrades to enable him to make the journey to Europe where he will unfold the full story of the bestial persecutions and tortures inflicted on the Bolshevik-Leninists in the Soviet Union. Comrade Tarov, a locksmith by trade, is the first Bolshevik-Leninist to escape from a Stalinist jail.

Comrade Tarov spent three years in exile and four years in prison, the Werchne-Uralski "Isolator." In this one prison alone 485 Bolshevik-Leninists were confined. After a great hunger strike, during which they were subjected to terrible beatings and tortures, they were dispersed to various other prisons. The hunger strike was declared because the prison terms of the comrades were automatically extended from two to three years after the original sentences had been served. The intention is not to let our comrades get out alive.

During the hunger strike, which lasted 18 days, the prisoners were artificially fed, beaten and shot at through the windows of their cells. Several comrades attempted to commit suicide.

In the near future we will be able to publish extensive and detailed information about the conditions in Stalin's exile camps and prisons. Already, from this brief report, the situation of the Bolshevik-Leninists in the Soviet Union is shown. The Stalinists are seeking to annihilate them physically. They can pursue this course only because the truth has been hidden from the international working class. The escape of comrade Tarov, and the information supplied by him, will now make possible a campaign to mobilize proletarian public opinion throughout the world. We must set ourselves resolutely to this task.

First in order is the collection of a fund to provide comrade Tarov with the necessities of life and the means to travel to Europe. Every internationalist must regard it as an urgent duty to contribute to this fund. Collections will be received by the National Office of the Workers Party, A. J. Muste, Secretary, 55 East 11th Street, New York City.

Mass Uprising against Traitor 'Labor' Mayor

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 16.—Not for a year has Minneapolis had such a hectic week of working class struggles as took place during the past week. On Monday, September 9, around 9 o'clock at night, a group of strikers and sympathizers staged a demonstration at the Flour City Ornamental Iron Company, where a strike of structural iron workers, Local 1313, A. F. of L., has been in progress for about two months. Again on Tuesday night, over 5,000 demonstrators gathered at the plant, to be finally scattered at midnight by repeated police charges. Armored cars patrolled the district, drenching block after block with tear gas, and mercilessly clubbing men and women.

Scores were injured by the police, acting under the orders of Mayor Tom ("Let 'em have it") Latimer, Farmer-Laborite.

Latimer Convicted As Murderer At Mpls Mass Trial

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 17.—A jury of more than 800 workers met last night and after hearing testimony on the massacre of pickets by the Minneapolis police unanimously convicted Farmer-Labor Mayor Thomas Latimer and his administration as exclusively responsible.

The public trial, widely reported in the local press, was held under the auspices of the Minneapolis Committee of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense. Francis Heisler, Chicago attorney who represented the N.P.L.D. in the Fargo "riot" cases early this year, and who will shortly take the Fargo appeal to the North Dakota Supreme Court, acted as prosecuting attorney at the mass trial.

Latimer having announced he would hold his own investigation of the murders committed by his police, the N.P.L.D. tried on Sunday to get in touch with him to discuss methods of establishing the truth of what caused the massacre. When Latimer evaded the N.P.L.D., a public statement was issued by the N.P.L.D. asking him to hear its witnesses and to permit its attorney to cross-examine witnesses assembled by the Mayor.

The N.P.L.D. also declared that, should the Mayor abandon the hearing or forbid the N.P.L.D.'s participation, the N.P.L.D. would hold a trial of its own.

While the white-wash hearing was going on in the Mayor's office, leaflets appeared, announcing the N.P.L.D. mass trial. Attorney Heisler visited pickets, by-standers and neighbors of the Flour City plant where the massacre occurred, and last night appeared before the workers to present the truth about Latimer's police.

Wednesday night climaxed the picketing demonstrations. By nine o'clock in the evening, over 5,000 workers and sympathizers had again gathered outside the plant. A double shift of police and half-a-dozen armored cars were on hand to greet the crowd. Within the plant were over a dozen imported Pinkerton thugs, armed to the teeth, protecting two scabs. It was this provocation, staged by Walter Tetzlaff, plant owner, which had aroused the ire of Minneapolis workers. At eleven o'clock sharp, things began to happen. There are many differences of opinion as to just how events developed. Some workers on the picket line claim that the first shots came from the Pinkerton gangsters within the plant. Others say the cops, after tear-gassing the crowd across the street from the plant and driving them back between the houses, whipped out revolvers and began to fire hysterically into the crowd. Other cops fired shotguns into the demonstration from the confines of the armored cars. Inspector Fritz Ohman, on the other hand, when questioned Friday by the grand jury, said, "It just started. No one knows just how."

One fact is indisputable. Aside from slight injuries sustained from thrown rocks, no cop was hurt. Two innocent bystanders were instantly killed from gunshot wounds in the chests. An eye-witness has described the death of 18-year old Eugene Casper, killed on his way home from a church gathering: "I saw a policeman shoot Casper as he was crossing the street in a little trot. Casper staggered when struck by the bullet. He walked on a few steps, tried to say something, and then slumped to the ground." Aside from the two killed, a dozen or more were injured by police gunfire. Dozens more were injured by the clubs and blackjacks of the cops. One woman was struck in the head.

"Flying Squadrons" Tie Up WPA Projects in Allentown Strike

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Sept. 17.—With every one of the 1017 workers on strike, WPA projects have been closed tight in Allentown and surrounding communities in protest to 140 hour-$55 per month wage scale being foisted on the unemployed of Pennsylvania. Hundreds of pickets organized into flying squadrons persuaded workers in Catasauqua, Northampton and Trechters to join the strike which is being conducted jointly by the Pennsylvania Unemployed League and the Keystone Workers Association.

The following demands have been formulated: 1) A minimum wage of $1 per hour. 2) A minimum of 30 hours per week. 3) Recognition of the principle of collective bargaining. 4) Weekly pay. 5) Pay for rainy days. 6) Adequate compensation for injury. 8) No discrimination against strikers or members of unemployed organizations.

Militant Women Picket

The strike started on Sept. 11 when an attempt was made to open the first WPA project. Four hundred men threw down tools after working for two hours. Picket lines were immediately formed and kept on every job. Militant women were instrumental in preventing scabs from working, on one occasion taking picks, shovels and wheelbarrows from the scabs and throwing them into the river.

Henry Mack, district WPA director, issued an ultimatum that all workers who did not report for work on Monday, Sept. 16, would be struck from the relief rolls. When Monday came, over a thousand pickets were at hand. Not a pick or shovel budged. Afraid to carry out their threat, relief officials ordered a two-day holiday with pay, offering the excuse that Tuesday was election day. They extended the deadline to Wednesday. But huge picketlines on that day again showed the solidarity of the workers and the projects remain 100 percent closed. So far, nobody has been cut off of relief.

Strikers' Spirit Strong

In spite of adverse propaganda in the capitalist press, the spirit of the strikers remains solid and the community sympathetic. A daily bulletin, Strike News, is issued by the strike committee to inform the public of the true state of affairs. Daily mass meetings open to the public are held.

At a conference on Sept. 15 attended by 25 delegates from as many labor organizations, including the Central Trades and Labor Council, the WPA strike was unanimously endorsed and a committee was appointed to work in conjunction with the project workers' strike committee in conducting the struggle. The conference called upon the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor to support WPA strikes wherever they occur and offered to do anything in its power to aid in winning the local strike, even to the extent of calling a general walk-out of all union labor.

Organizations at Conference

Among the organizations represented at the conference were: The Central Trades and Labor Council, International Ladies Garment Workers, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Carpenters and Joiners, Brick Layers, American Federation of Teachers, Typographical Union, Electrical Workers Union, Stagehands, Keystone Workers, Citizens Welfare League and the Pennsylvania Unemployed League.

On Monday, Sept. 16, when Ray Bader, local labor faker, appealed to the strikers to go back to work pending arbitration of the demands before the WPA appeal board, he was given a loud and long Bronx cheer. At a mass meeting later in the day, the strikers passed a resolution condemning Bader's strike-breaking appeal and calling upon the Central Trades and Labor Council, of which he is secretary, to take appropriate action in the matter.

Capitulation Planned by Stalinists to Right Wing Of Teachers

Reports reaching us from reliable sources state that the trade union opposition groups under the influence of the Stalinists in Local 60 and 22 in the I.L.G.U. and in the Teachers Union have announced their willingness to dissolve and even give up their opposition to the administrations in these unions. This policy shows that the local Stalinists have not been slow in carrying out the new class collaborationist policies adopted by the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International and already carried into practice in France in the unity agreement between the two central trade union bodies: the General Confederation of Labor and the Red Unions, which provides among other things for the dissolution of trade union factions. In practice this means the capitulation to the policies of the reformist bureaucracy. This new policy is also in line with the policy of the Stalinists to make blocs and election agreements with shady careeristic cliques and reactionary elements, the most glaring examples of which were those made in the recent elections in Local 22 and attempted in the Furriers Council.

Plan Expulsion of the French Bolshevik-Leninists as War Nears

By H. F. ROBERTS

The bureaucracy of the French Socialist Party has openly announced its intention to smash, if it can, the revolutionary left wing represented by the Bolshevik-Leninist group. In the face of the imminent threat of war the Socialist and Stalinist bureaucracies with one voice call for "pressure on the League of Nations" and the extermination of the revolutionary left wing of the French labor movement. Shouting loudly to drown out the rumble of tomorrow's war and of tomorrow's betrayal, the bureaucrats hope to silence the one voice in France which is calling for the revolutionary mobilization of the masses for the seizure of power, for the proletariat's only answer to the threat of imperialist war—the overthrow of the war-mongers and imperialist freebooters.

A set of special decisions adopted by the Permanent Administrative Committee of the S.F.I.O. (French Socialist Party) on August 28 (Populaire, August 30) call for the excommunication of La Verite, organ of the French Bolshevik-Leninists, which is "no longer to be regarded as an organ of the Socialist Party." Populaire is expressly forbidden to mention or cite from the columns of La Verite, or to publish any announcements of meetings of any groups in any way connected with La Verite. Party members who help distribute this journal are to be informed that they are carrying out work "prejudicial to the interests of the whole party and of the International to which they belong." Finally—and here is the threat itself—the committee decided to "request that the very next National Council of the Party take any measures, however grave they may be, against the comrades responsible for the editing of La Verite, as are required by the interests and unity of the Party."

The "Crime" of La Verite

What, according to the French Socialist bureaucrats, has been the crime of La Verite? That representative little sheet, it seems, has been guilty of "outrageous attacks" on good, sterling revolutionaries, the coming Italo-Ethiopian war. What this program and protest amount to, we already know. Aristide Briand himself was never more eloquent than the Socialist and Stalinist leaders of today who offer the workers of the world no other way out of the war danger but reliance upon the League of Nations, the league of what Lenin called "imperialist brigands." In France last month the Young Communist League, self-styled "vanguard of the proletarian youth," offered to hurl itself into the struggle against war by inviting the Socialist Youth to join it in a delegation to Geneva to "exert pressure" upon the League of Nations!

Spectre of New Party

What, then, is going to happen? This annoying left wing, these bothersome Trotskyists with that scurrilous journal, La Verite, insist upon exposing these policies as policies of betrayal. They insist upon exposing the bankruptcy of the two old internationalisms and call for a new, Fourth International. Their voice is beginning to be heard by broadening sections of the French proletariat. What is it that the bureaucrats fear? They fear the spectre of a new revolutionary party in France which will cut loose once and for all from the bankruptcies of reformism and Stalinism. They are afraid that this new party will win to its banners a section of the French proletariat large enough to put a spoke in the plan for social patrie betrayal!

Ample evidence of this perspective is already at hand in the situation which exists today in the French Socialist Youth. Readers of the NEW MILITANT know that in August the first barrage of the anti-Bolshevik-Leninist offensive was laid down with the expulsion of thirteen leaders of the revolutionary Socialist Youth of the Seine Federation. The majority of these were Bolshevik-Leninists. Since the expulsions, which took place early in August, the Socialist Youth organization throughout France has been thrown into turmoil. The new and "safe" committee installed in the Seine Federation by the bureaucrats has been unable to establish its leadership. Instead 65 sections of the Seine Federation and 30 out of the 44 sections in Seine-et-Oise have solidarized with the expelled leaders. On this support the Bolshevik-Leninists and their allies led by Fred Zeller knew they could count. But all during the month of August the fight was carried out to the provinces with results to date which already prove to the hilt that a large section of the revolutionary youth of France is ready to assume its full responsibilities in the struggle against war, against Fascism—in the struggle for power. Letters of solidarity have poured in from the Federations of the Rhone, Pyrenees Orientales, Haute-Savoie, Var, Alpes Maritimes, Angers, Puy-de-Dome, from Morocco and Algeria, from the Maritime Alps, Morbihan, the North, Bouches-du-Rhone, Indre-et-Loire and others.

Youth Support Left

The last issue at hand of Revolution, organ of the left-wing youth, reports that "half of the Federation of Loiret is in agreement with the revolutionary left." A letter from the Orleans leadership says: "We urgently await your directives." In the Federation of Gard one section, that of Ales, writes that the little group of eight adherents of the left of a year ago has now grown to ninety and that they are all awaiting orders. From the group in Nimes comes word: "The hour has come to show the struggling proletariat the road to victory. . . . Forward to the battles of the future!" A youth comrade writes from Tarn: "Words fail me, but I bid you keep courage. Do not forget you have comrades behind you!" The secretary from Lot: "I can assure you that the Federation of Lot is entirely in solidarity with you." From Grenoble in the Federation of L'Isere: "The Socialist Youth of Grenoble declare themselves prepared if necessary to follow their comrades of the Seine along the path of revolutionary action against the capitalists." From the Federation of Finistere: "We have decided to govern our future conduct by the instructions of the comrades of the Paris region." Scores of such letters, official communications from whole sections of the youth, overflow the columns of Revolution. Step by step but surely the revolutionary youth are drawing the necessary conclusions from the reformist-Stalinist betrayal.

Voice after voice joins those of the Bolshevik-Leninists and their allies. In Paris, the unemployed organization of St. Denis, counting in its ranks 8,000 workers, has announced solidarity with the revolutionary left wing. The Communist Youth of St. Denis, expelled from the Stalinist Party, announced on August 10, its readiness to work with the expelled youth leaders for "the regrouping of truly revolutionary forces."

Convulsions in S. P.

It is this ferment which is driving the bureaucracies of both parties to hasten their unholy union and to sharpen, if they can, their blows to the left. The attempt to amputate the living, vital left wing of the French Socialist Party will not take place without terrific convulsions within the whole party.

mple, winsday

dere emily, well kid, things is shure hot n heavy here, what with all the strikin goin on between the workers an the bosses. for the past 2 nites there has bin hevry picketin goin on at waiter tetzla's bordin house, the Flour City Iron cunpny, ya no, he brot in a lotta gangstirs with machine guns an bombs an summa the scabs is livin in the plant with the gangstirs. las nite about 5,000 pickets an frens gathered at the plant, marchin aroun an yellin at the finks. there wuz a lotta yung kids with slingshots, an they had more fun peggin away at the rats in the plant. finally mayor latimer's cops cum up with there armored cars an gas guns an giv it to the crowd, an a big fite broke out.

the bosses an the mayor an summa the fakirs like honest john cunningham has aggrived out a industrial piece polly, which is just like the ol commitee a 100, only with a clean shirt on—an will probly get about as far. honest, r farmer-labor mayor can pucker up his face an talk about Law an Order just like ol bainbridge used to. what the bosses mean by Law an Order is that they got the worker down an is sittin on his bed. an evry time he wriggles, why thats disturbin the Law and Order.

ya no, emily, the difference between us an the guys that vote farmer-laborite is that we got sum-merys an they havent. like sum 1 sed, the memory a the working class is in its Party. but the workers aint mind readers an so the way we refresh there memories all the time is to get em readin r paper, the NEW MILITANT. an by the way, i got 2 more subs last week, what did you do? ya better get goin, baby, or yure goin to owe me that meal.

we had a swell tag day the other sunday up in north mpls for the NEW MILITANT—8 of us collected $12.40 in a couple hours, almost evry house wud giv us a nikkel or a dime. one house we cum to, there wuz Spaniards livin there, an i sed Buenas Dias like ol gonzales used to say bak in turtle creek, remember. the Spaniards sed Buenas Dias, an i cudnt think of what to say next, so i just shoved the coleskun can an a Workers Party tag at them. oh, sez one of the yung Spanish fellas, its to fite fascism, eh. sure, mister, i'll kick in. ya cudda knocked me over with a crow bar, emily, here i wuzt expekting they knew what i wuz all about. the guy gave us 2 bits, to. next sunday about 20 of us is goin out agin, an we shud raze about 25 smackers. yure oughta pass the word aroun, emily, this is 1 good way to raze money for the paper. with things gettin so hot all around the whole U. S. baby, we gotta have a daily paper, an thats all there is to it. the 8-pager will be a long step in that direksun. if a comrade is serious about his or her work, why theyll go thru alot to get that paper.

we was sittin aroun the head-1/4s after the meetin the other nite talkin, an jack pulled a good one. he sez, i dont mind a scab who goes aroun lookin ashamed an sinlins in the back door of a plant. but when i sees a scab with a smile on his map walk rite in towards the front door, why then i see red, an i juss have to give em the works. i gess thats about the way mosta the workers feel, eh, emily, which is why the bosses an the cops is havin so much trouble here in mpls an all over the country. an once all the workers gets to feelin this way an actin this way, why we'll all get sunwuhers. the 1 step is to get em to read r press, an thats why i feel so keenly about the campaign for the 8-pager.

yure ma sent me down a brace a ducks las week, kid, an they sure tasted good. a course they were outa season. but then the farmers up aroun turtle creek never were great ones for believin in law or the seasons. when theyre hungry, they go out an get it, which seems rite sensibol to me.

i appreciated that LA VERITE ya sent me. unfortunately, i cant read french without my glasses. an i never had no glasses, emily, so ya mite as well save em. or teach me french when ya get home. tho its bin sum job to master the english language. i'll sure be happy to see ya soon.

The Party at Work

BOSTON

A successful lecture with comrade James P. Cannon was held Friday evening, Sept. 13, at 6 Byron St., Boston. The subject, "The 7th Congress of the Third International," was a very attractive subject and it brought the most class conscious workers to the meeting. The lecture started at 8:30 and, with a free discussion and question period, went on for three and a half hours. The appeal which comrade Larry made to help us finance our revolutionary work brought the response of $38.00. That shows that the workers in Boston are very sympathetic and respond to our work.

The plans of the Educational Committee include a few classes a week and lectures, so our headquarters are not large enough for the work which we will carry through next winter. A committee was elected to look for new headquarters.

This week a meeting of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee was held which worked out plans for future work. A united front open air meeting will be held at the Boston Common Sept. 29, where many organizations will be invited to participate. It was also decided to have a conference and to invite all political organizations, unions, and fraternal organizations. The date will be announced.

Our Spartacus Youth League is growing rapidly. Many members came in this week and, with the plans they are going to carry through this winter, a strong organization will be built up in Boston.

MINNEAPOLIS

The Minneapolis branch has instituted a series of Tag Days. Every other Sunday morning from five to ten couples cover the North Side selling "Fight Fascism" tags. On Sept. 1, over twelve dollars was raised. Another Tag Day is scheduled for Sunday, Sept. 15. All comrades are to meet at the Labor Lyceum at 9:30 A.M.

Delegates from a number of other working class organizations are co-operating in the building of a local committee of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense. Two committee meetings have already been held, and a larger delegat conference is planned for the near future, where the Labor Defense work in this section will finally get under way on a strictly non-partisan basis.

A dance-and-card party is planned for October 5, to be given in the branch headquarters at 631 3rd Avenue S. A new entertainment committee of seven members has just been elected, and has already held its first meeting. The committee and the entire branch is working hard and swinging enthusiastically into the autumn season.

Over twenty dollars worth of Workers Party literature was sold by the Minneapolis branch during the month of August.

Budenz and The Stalinists

The revolutionist in the modern world has no trustworthy guide except the principles and method of Marx and Lenin—to be used, of course, not as a dogma but a tool and a weapon. Those who go off the Marxian road even at what appears to be a small angle find themselves in the end in a swamp, far indeed from their starting-point and from the goal toward which they thought they were heading.

Making these observations at this particular time is prompted by the recent course of Louis F. Budenz whose resignation from the Workers Party the NEW MILITANT announced some months ago.

Last year Budenz was among the first in the American Workers Party to cry out against the subordination of the C. I. to the Soviet foreign office. "The first thing we know," Budenz shouted in anger and disgust, "the C. P. will be calling on us to fight in the U. S. army in the next war on the plea that there is an alliance between Roosevelt and Stalin!"

But Budenz had no time for the study of Marxist-Leninist theory. All that, he said, was logic-chopping, "theology," etc. Furthermore, Budenz wanted an "American" revolutionary party, by which he meant not only a party which would apply Marxist-Leninist principles to the realities of the American scene (a sound requirement) but that, for example, we must build a party here first and only after that concern ourselves about international problems and organization!

In March he blossomed out in the Modern Monthly with an article setting forth in a solemn and somewhat pontifical manner the fantastically absurd idea of achieving the abolition of capitalism in the U. S. by an amendment to the Constitution! Today he talks like an under-cover recruiting agent for the Stalinist party. In the present period, when it has capitulated to social-democracy and social-patriotism, the C. P. will of course have no qualms about welcoming an advocate of "revolution by constitutional amendment." Budenz on his part is drawn to an organization which has become so "realistic," which shouts even more eloquently and uncritically than he was wont to do about "American revolutionary traditions"—though Stalin now openly approves the "defense" plans of French imperialism, though the C. I. openly propagates the concepts of "good" and "bad" capitalist powers and of defending "bourgeois democracy," though the secretary of the Young Communists brazenly tells the Young Socialists of France that they will be "traitors" to the working class if they seek to overthrow the French state in a war in which France and the Soviet Union are allies! Clean forgotten by Budenz, it would seem, his fulminations against these things when the tendency was by no means so completely carried out and so openly registered as by the recent Comintern Congress.

The next step presumably is for Budenz to step forward as an official of some "non-partisan" C. P. innocent outfit.

Vigilantism Shows Growing Peril To West Coast Labor

SAN FRANCISCO.—Vigilantism, which started its activity as a movement against the red, alien agitators, has, as predicted by the Workers Party, developed until now it is being used as a method to deal with men whose only crime is that as A. F. of L. organizers they incur the displeasure of the lumber barons of Oregon.

This is the report from the capitalist press of September 9.

Challenge Lovestone Group to Debate

The Lovestone group, which continues to talk about the "reform" of the Comintern after its social-patriotic betrayal, has been challenged to debate in the following letter. The NEW MILITANT will print the reply to this challenge as soon as it is received.

September 18, 1934.
Communist Party (Opposition)

Comrades,

In view of the Seventh Congress of the Comintern and the decisions of your recent national conference, the Workers Party proposes that representatives of our respective organizations debate the question: the Fourth International or the reform of the Comintern?

You no doubt recall that the debate on the same subject a year and a half ago between Jay Lovestone and James P. Cannon aroused great interest. Comrade Cannon has signified his readiness to defend the Fourth International in a second debate in the light of the new developments.

We urge that you consider the matter and reply at an early date. A joint committee can make all the necessary detail arrangements.

DETROIT NOTES

By BURKE COCHRAN

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 15.—On the heels of the betrayal of the automobile workers by the top-officialdom of the American Federation of Labor in setting up the International union in the automobile industry, the Mechanics Educational Society of America has inaugurated an organization campaign to stage a comeback in the Detroit area, today, at its first mass meeting, held at Carpathia Hall. Mathew Smith, national secretary of the society, reported on the plans for the campaign and the enthusiasm which the Detroit locals have shown in the organization drive. The recent action of Green in handpicking the executive committee of the new automobile International has made joint action and cooperation between the A. F. of L. and the M.E.S.A. much more difficult and has convinced anew the members of this society that they must remain as an independent union, at the present time.

The automobile unions in Detroit are still in a very precarious state and the recent action of the A. F. of L. at its automobile convention has helped sow more confusion in the trade unions and has added indecision and hesitation to the whole movement.

The various federal locals of the A. F. of L. in Detroit continue stagnating; Dillon is threatening that "a campaign to unionize 141 U. S. auto plants will be in full swing by Oct. 1"; but Dillon has been threatening the automobile workers with an organization drive for the last year.

A new savior of the automobile workers has entered into the Detroit ring; none other than the justice-loving radio priest—Father Coughlin. This unscrupulous demagogue is already beginning an attack against the A. F. of L. International union on the grounds that the officials were appointed and were not democratically elected by the membership. Without question this attack will meet with a sympathetic reception on the part of many automobile workers.

At the Dodge-Chrysler plant, the local union, which arose out of the collective bargaining board of the Automobile Labor Board, has after a long evolution become a bona-fide independent union with considerable influence at the Dodge plant. Recently it has decided to start an organization drive for all Dodge workers and, at the suggestion of some member, Father Coughlin was invited as the first guest speaker. The Father has remained to help the union officials "direct" the campaign; he is attempting to use his position at the Dodge local to organize new "Coughlin" unions, based upon peace and justice and to take the whole thing in tow to his "League for Social Justice." As a result, the union is now engaged in a death struggle between two factions—"Pro-Coughlin" and "Anti-Coughlin."

Those workers who favor allowing Coughlin to remain only have in mind, of course, the building up of their union; but they must realize that Coughlin can only wreck their union and make it an adjunct to his reactionary "League for Social Justice." Father Coughlin demagogically attacks the A. F. of L. leadership for a lack of democracy, but as was suggested at a recent meeting of the Dodge local, no one has ever heard of any elections ever taking place in the "League for Social Justice." These attacks have all the earmarks of a home-grown variety of propaganda used by Hitler or Mussolini in their own respective countries prior to their seizure of power; after they seized power, they smashed the trade union movement by open and undisguised terror. Coughlin is interested in exploiting the dissatisfaction of the workers with their own treacherous trade union officials only for his own reactionary ends; the automobile workers, in order to grow and build fighting unions must steer clear of Coughlin!

Manager's Corner

Our contributions this week toward the eight page weekly did not reach even last week's low point. However, many party branches have made a prompt response to a call for finances to take care of other needs of the party press. This helps to secure its economic foundation and makes the coming enlargement of the present weekly more feasible. But even this support leaves the campaign for the total sum necessary to launch the eight-page weekly still far short.

We have to date collected less than one third of this sum, and, while we look out first of all for a secure economic foundation before the expansion actually takes place, we cannot afford to delay. The season more favorable for activities of this sort is here now. It should be taken advantage of. We would urge in particular that our supporters now concentrate on activities to obtain more subscriptions. Let us remind you again of the prizes for the best sub-getters. The prizes offered are, for a total of 10 yearly subs ($2.00 each) or 20 six months subs ($1.00 each), turned in by one individual: "History of the Russian Revolution," by Leon Trotsky. For a total of 5 yearly or 10 six months subscriptions, a bound copy of the "Correspondence of Marx and Engels."

These prizes apply only for new subscriptions. During the week we have received the following amounts:

Contributions
Berkeley branch $ 5.50
Boston branch 8.75
Los Angeles branch 1.50
West Side branch, N.Y.C. 3.00

R. Gardner, Brooklyn, N. Y. 1.00
Flatbush branch, N.Y.C. 1.00
Boro Park branch, N.Y.C. 2.50
East Side branch, N.Y.C. 1.00
Total $24.25
Advance Subscriptions
Schlossberg, Boston 2.00
H. Lewis, New Castle 1.00
Club Card Subs
Center branch, N.Y.C. 3.00
Previously reported $31.31
Grand Total $66.56

From the point of view of total contributions the Boston branch is now back in the lead, having again outstripped the Harlem branch. The Boston branch has made a total contribution to date of $70.25. Next comes the Harlem branch with a total contribution of $68.40. The West Side branch, N.Y.C. follows with a total of $56.40; Center branch, N.Y.C. $49.40; Kensington branch, Philadelphia, $37.78; Minneapolis branch, $33.50; Los Angeles branch, $31.50; Chicago branches (three branches) $30.25; Flatbush branch, N. Y. C., $28.50; Bronx branch, N.Y.C., $22.50; Newark branch, $21.50; New Haven branch and Boro Park branch, N. Y. C., $17.50 each; East Side branch, N.Y.C., $12.75; Astoria branch, N.Y.C., $11.50; Brownsville branch, N.Y.C., $10.55; Youngstown branch $9.00; Detroit branch $8.00; branches of Cleveland, Kansas City and Gulfport, Miss., each $8.00; Berkeley branch $5.50; Pittsburgh branch and St. Louis branch $4.00 each; Davenport branch $3.50; Utica, N. Y. branch $1.50; and Charleston, W. Va. and Cleveland branch $1.00 each.

Toledo Militants Lead Winning Strike of 400 at Defiance, Ohio

DEFIANCE, Ohio. — Production at the Defiance Pressed Steel Co., largest employer of labor at Defiance—was at a complete standstill for two days, as over 400 workers walked out on strike, at the call of the Defiance Local No. 1p of the Mechanics Educational Society of America, after the company had flatly turned down the contract proposed by the union, establishment of the 40-hour week, time and a half for overtime, no discrimination against union members, seniority, 50c base rate and a signed contract. For two days a mass picket line of 350-400 men and women employees of the Pressed Steel Co. kept the plant shut tight as a drum. Late Thursday afternoon, the management gave in to most of the union demands and the workers accepted the agreement, by a vote of an overwhelming majority.

At first glance, there is nothing extraordinary about this comparatively small strike. The Defiance Pressed Steel Co. is one of the many independent companies around the Toledo area engaged in the manufacture of automobile parts. Competition in the field is very keen, and the management obviously could not afford to hold out for very long, if the union ranks remained solid. The strike took place in a small town and involved only some 400 workers; nothing different in this strike than any one of the thousand petty disputes between labor and capital that occur every year throughout the country. And yet a study of this small strike contains a clue to a great deal in the development of unionism in this country, since the NRA.

First, there has been no strike in Defiance within the memory of anybody living in the town. There is absolutely no labor tradition of any kind; a few of the more skilled workers had worked in railroad machine shops and have had previous contact with unionism but were lost among the overwhelming majority of the men and women who had come off the farm only several years ago, and whose ties with the rural sections were not yet entirely severed.

National Guardsmen in Strike
Defiance is not only a typically peaceful Ohio town removed from the battle and strife of the larger cities, but has in addition the reputation of being a particularly reactionary city. It boasts a large vigilante committee and one of the largest national guard contingents in the Toledo area. At least eight percent of the Pressed Steel strikers belong to the National Guard and were present in uniform at the Auto-Lite strike in Toledo, gassing and attacking the strikers of the Auto-Lite plant.

But there is something relentless in the workings of the capitalist system with its large, disciplined armies of factory workers. The very people who but yesterday were used by the industrialists of Ohio to smash any attempt at organization on the part of the automobile workers are today themselves employed in the same factories and are driven inexorably onto the path of unionism and strike against their employers. And the very people whom they gassed and attacked come down to Defiance to lend them a helping hand in the battle against their common enemy! Many of the boys, no older than 17-18 years, have had their fingers cut off because the company finds it cheaper to operate without any safety devices on its machinery. The wages paid are in many cases almost half of what a worker would receive in Toledo for the same work. The naive and ignorant farm boys of 1933 have had a taste of what a factory workers' life means, and have become the strikers of 1935!

Naturally, with the inexperience of all of the strikers and their lack of understanding of what a strike implies, the first day of the strike was like a nightmare. The picket lines looked like a Sunday picnic; nobody had the courage to boo the scabs as they walked out of the plant; the management was trying to divide the strike committee and thus break the strike.

That night about a dozen M.E.S.A. men came from Toledo to attend the mass meeting at Woodmen's Hall and help organize the strike. Burke Cochran of M.E.S.A. local No. 4 of Toledo remained at the request of the strike committee to organize the picket line and put some spirit into the strike. Next day, with Earl Streeter, secretary of M.E.S.A. local No. 4 acting as spokesman for the strike committee, and Burke Cochran in charge of the now spirited and well-organized picket line, the strike really began looking more like a strike. The local newspapers began running large scare headlines (Defiance has never seen a strike before) and the strikers began commanding the sympathy and moral support of all the farmers and small business men around Defiance! No more than 6 or 6 scabs entered the plant during the whole day, and as previously stated the management met with the strike committee and at about two o'clock in the afternoon agreed to most of the strikers' demands.

The Defiance strikers did not possess any superior intelligence or greater class consciousness than the ordinary mine-run of men in any other Ohio city of 10,000. On the contrary, there probably was not an illusion that these men were not burdened with at the beginning of the strike. They were afraid that the company would move out of town; they thought the mayor was on their side and fighting for them; they thought that Col. Light, head of the National Guard of Ohio, who had been sent in by Gov. Davey, was "impartial"; they thought the deputy sheriffs were "neutral." But it was surprising how their class instinct saved them in almost every situation, that arose, and how the spirit of "fight" and solidarity communicated itself to everyone of those 400 workers on the first picket line they had ever walked!

In Ohio today you probably cannot travel 100 miles in any direction but come up with some plant employing over 150 workers. In every rural community the farmers' sons or daughters are employed in the neighboring steel plant or auto-parts plants, etc. It is becoming more and more difficult for the capitalists to artificially divide the rural communities from the cities, because the factory system has bound them together. When faithful national guardsmen are beginning to strike and walk picket lines the capitalist class has good reason to tremble for its property and monopoly of wealth.

MARCH TO VICTORY . . .

From the Daily Worker of Sept. 17 we clip the following:

"The March of Victory"
(To the tune of "O Susanna")
Words by JAMES CASEY

If you want more jobs
If you want more pay
And want to have your say
Then line-up for Carl Brodsky
And for C. A. Hathaway.

CHORUS

Unit! Fellow-voters!
You can make things turn your way;
Vote the C. P. with Carl Brodsky
And with C. A. Hathaway!

For an end to all high prices
For the sales tax, not a cent;
For relief we want more money
For us all, a cut in rent.

Not since Simon Squibbs ran for dog-catcher in Tonawanda have we seen such a popular program as the one embodied in this song. With songs like that and a platform and candidates that smell equally as good we really believe the C. P. has the edge on Tammany Hall in the 8th Assembly District. A tip for Casey: an excellent quartette to sing that song—Phil Frankfeld, Bill Dunne, Jack Stachel, and George Mink, with Amter at the piano.

"OH SUSANNA"

If all articles written in the Daily Worker on the united front, the Labor Party, trade unions, fascism and democracy were placed together, they could be sung to the tune of "Oh Susanna" and would fit in well with "It rained all day the night I left, the weather was so dry; the sun so hot I froze myself, Susanna, don't you cry." . . . "Mighty Casey" could arrange it, in between managing the Daily Worker and conducting Hathaway's "Share-the-wealth" campaign.

PROOF OF CHRISTIANITY . . .

Al Smith, the great American statesman, in a recent speech, stated "The United States is a Christian country. We are the only country that puts on its cash money: 'In God we Trust'." . . . And he might have added, the only country where you will find tens of thousands of signs saying "In God we trust, all others pay cash."

CROOKED GOVERNMENT . . .

In the same speech, Al took a crack at Mexico for its attacks on the Catholic clergy. "What about Mexico? A Congressman recently told me that of 28 state governments there, 26 are crooked." Well, Al, even that is a better average than we can find in the U.S.A.; but, of course, a Tammany brave like Al, a friend of the devout and honest John Curry—God rest his soul—can speak with authority on crooked government.

SHADOWS OVER LOVESTONE . . .

The Lovestone Group is in an embarrassing position. Its business during its five years of existence has been defending the theories of Stalinism, criticizing the "ultra-left" errors of the individual sections of the C. I. outside the U.S. S.R., and denouncing Trotskyism. At last, after years of patient service, the reward seems to be just around the corner. "Real progress" was noted in the C. P. It was "coming to our position." Letters were exchanged. "Happy days are here again!" became the theme song of the Communist Party Majority Opposition Group. But alas and alack, without consulting either Lovestone or Brandler, the C. I., with Stalin not only at the head, but leading all others by several lengths, caught up with and surpassed Lovestone; and with a dazzling speed that left the reformers dizzy with success, went over to a social-chauvinist position. Enough is enough, and 200 percent success is too much. Lovestone did some fancy squirming. First, the French and American sections were blamed for "confusing the matter"; but at last the horrible truth must come out; and with bitter blasts at Trotskyism, Lovestone was forced to announce "Shadows of 1914 over C.I." Even Wolfe, whose anxiety to do all others, acknowledged that "degeneration threatens the C.I." Some in Lovestone's ranks are still ready to shoulder a rifle for Uncle Sam if Stalin says so, but others place "world revolution as the only real defense of the U.S.S.R." Between these two, the revolutionary and the chauvinist position, Lovestone and Wolfe teeter back and forth with eyes longingly cast on the fleshpots of Stalinism. The "mass workers" haven't said much as yet; but if they could be induced to swallow their disgust with the antics of the Stalinists in the needle trades, chauvinism would just make a good chaser.

MARCH OF EVENTS

By JACK WEBER

DESTRUCTION THREATENS ROBBER LEAGUE

The League of Nations was organized by the victorious Allies after the first World War to safeguard their plunder against the attacks of the defeated powers. Its function as the "organizer of peace" was to maintain the status quo, to guarantee to the imperialists their colonial possessions and the right to exploit the colonial peoples. The attempt by Mussolini to seize Ethiopia is a threat to the very existence of the robbers' League precisely because it ends the truce, threatens the status quo, and reopens all the antagonistic issues temporarily "settled" by the first World War. Rearmament and realignments of the advanced capitalist nations are the preparations for the assault by each against all for a new division of the earth. One after the other, each great power that is forced by its internal economic crisis to seek desperately for a solution by outward expansion, quits the League in order to be free to act without hindrance. First it was Japan in order to plunder China, then Germany to rear for expansion to the East, and now Italy for the swallowing of Ethiopia. Not even the bourgeois press tries to foster any illusion that France or Great Britain is in the least concerned about the fate of the Ethiopian people. Each of these powers, with a tremendous colonial empire, is acutely aware that the "deprived" states aim to capture part of the plunder it took earlier. It is the fear of the deep repercussions of Mussolini's adventure that causes England and France to threaten Italy with sanctions to force a compromise without war. But the very threat is driving Italy out of the League.

ATTITUDE OF BRITISH LABOR

The Ethiopian crisis is a class issue of fundamental significance. It becomes the test of the working class movement in all countries. For in face of the threat of the second World War, the working class must once more take a stand on the question of defense of the national capitalist state in an imperialist war. The answer of the British Labor Party and of the official labor movement is a shameful betrayal of the proletariat. The demand of the official labor leaders for the support of the League of Nations in the applications of sanctions, means not the support of the Ethiopian people against Italian aggression, but the support of English imperialism against Italian. To suppose that the League of Nations could act in the interest of the exploited peoples, is to place confidence in the English capitalists. Where is there any demand that the English ruling class give up British Somaliland, or India or Egypt? How is it that no voice is raised by the "official" movement against the small war just started in India, against the mere punitive expedition into the territory of the Mohmands in the Northern native states? It is by such fakes as the support of "sanctions" that the leaders of British labor tie the workers to the bourgeoisie, enlist them for national defense and for the support of English imperialism. True there is a small minority of "left socialists" like Cripps who warn the workers against putting their heads in a noose by supporting sanctions and who point to British imperialism. But these elements organize no real mass movement against British imperialism and its role in the next World War. The Bolshevik-Leninists of England, who understand the need for rallying the masses against the enemy at home, who set forth clearly the steps necessary to convert imperialist war into civil war, are too meager a force as yet to exert much influence. They have before them the tremendous task of building the revolutionary party.

EFFECT ON BRITISH GENERAL ELECTIONS

The betrayal of the working class by the Labor Party in its class collaborationist attitude on the war danger plays directly into the hands of the ruling class in the coming general elections. By covering the national capitalists with the cloak of national defense and the supposed desire for peace, the Labor Party leads the workers to believe that in the national emergency the bourgeoisie may be trusted with the power. If it is all right to conduct a war, if necessary, the masses will prefer to leave things in the hands of those who are more experienced in such matters. By showing this readiness for civil peace in case of war the Labor Party aids the bourgeois campaign of patriotism. It furthers, whether it likes it or not, the armament propaganda, for sanctions mean the need for force to back them up and force might just as well be as effective as possible. Thus the Labor Party is helping to defeat itself in the coming elections. The masses will prefer to give support to the masters directly rather than to their lackeys in the labor movement.

Plan Expulsion of French Bolshevik - Leninists

Out of these and out of the ferment now shaking the ranks of the youth, a unified process which will sift the revolutionary gold from the reactionary and reformist dross will begin to clarify itself.

The initial reaction among the leftward moving masses in both the youth and adult parties to the attempts of the bureaucracy to amputate the left-wing takes the form of a stiffening resistance to this amputation. It is expressed in the Youth now, for example, in a widespread sentiment against the expulsions of the revolutionary youth leaders and the demand for their reintegration into the party. Far from heeding this demand, the bureaucracy now moves forward to its next step, the expulsion of the Bolshevik-Leninists from the adult party.

From this, coming at so critical a moment, increasing sections of the workers, both in and outside the parties, will in the heat of events swiftly draw the necessary conclusions. The voice of revolutionary internationalism, calling today for the Fourth International, will redouble in strength. As the war crisis hits France and all Europe in full force, it will bring forth a resounding echo from the very depths of a proletariat unwilling to let itself be strangled or shattered to pieces against the guns of an imperialist enemy of its own bourgeoisie. Blum, Cachin and Co., with all their conspiracies, will only uncover themselves before the French workers as the traitors they have become. The struggle of the Bolshevik-Leninists of France for a revolutionary solution to the problems of the day will be carried a mighty step forward.

Anti-Union Conspiracy Revealed in Chamber of Commerce Letter

NEW YORK.—The operations of a secret and heavily financed apparatus set up by bankers and businessmen to control the California State Legislature and courts, and large-scale preparations by the California Chamber of Commerce to launch an anti-union drive, are revealed by a confidential letter of the Chamber, made public today here by the National Sacramento Appeal Committee, 41 Union Square.

The letter, dated August 7, on the official stationery of the powerful Stockton, California, Savings and Loan Bank, and signed by fourteen leading industrialists, financiers and ranchers of the Golden State, after taking credit for the defeat of "many radical and unsound tax measures," goes on to boast that the Chamber, by securing the enactment of legislation enlarging the powers of the Attorney General, "proved perhaps the most important factor in winning the recent trial" of eight Sacramento unionists.

This boast refers to the conviction of Norman Mini, 26-year old ex-West Pointer and Workers Party member now in San Quentin Prison, and seven other union organizers, sentenced to 14-year terms under the notorious criminal syndicalism act and to the recent statute, admittedly passed by the pressure of the Chamber of Commerce, which enabled the Attorney General to remove, as prosecutor District Attorney Babcock and substitute Neil R. McAlister, who had just failed of re-election but who was in the pay of banking interests in the Sacramento valley.

The signers of the Chamber letter characterize the low-paid agricultural workers who organized unions as "agitators who are fomenting strikes and trouble," declare "the

August 7, 1935

Dear Sir:

At the last Legislature our California State Chamber of Commerce was able, by vigorous opposition, to defeat many radical and unsound tax measures. It also secured legislation that will prove beneficial to all California business. It is continuing its efforts for economy in county budgets and for the elimination of many duplicate services in state and local governments.

The State Chamber is now active through its Councils in all sections of California in vigorously combating all subversive influences that threaten to overthrow our government. It feels the growing menace of radicalism must be stamped out.

We find that as soon as one community has dealt properly with these agitators who are fomenting strife and trouble, they move into other communities where there has been no training in organization to effect them.

It appears that the only effective means to combat the situation is state-wide leadership for training community leaders in this work. The problem is costing us all money and is undermining the very foundations of our business and social structure.

At the recent election the State Chamber secured the enactment of four measures calling for better administration of justice. One of these measures, Constitutional Amendment No. 4, giving to the Attorney General the power to uniformly and adequately enforce laws in the various counties of the State, proved perhaps the most important factor in winning the recent trial of communists in Sacramento.

These matters are so important to business in California we feel we must call them to your attention, feeling that you will want to do your share to support the Chamber in the fight it is making.

It is vitally important that the Central Valley district subscribe its pro rata of the funds necessary to carry on this fight and we would greatly appreciate problem is costing us all money," and "must be stamped out." They propose, therefore, that "the only effective means to combat the situation is state-wide leadership for training community leaders in this work," and then refer to the Sacramento convictions as an example of the kind of work the Chamber wishes to push throughout California. The letter concludes with an appeal to the rich Central Valley district to "subscribe its pro rata of the funds necessary to carry on this fight," since "the need for immediate, organized, united effort on our part is obvious."

The letter thus substantiates the charges made in the National Sacramento Appeal Committee's pamphlet "Union Smashing in Sacramento," by Herbert Solow, that the Sacramento convictions were part of a state-wide conspiracy of anti-union employers to use the criminal syndicalism statute to destroy the trade unions.

In a letter just sent to the N. S. A. C. by Raymond W. Henderson, Bakersfield Socialist and noted labor attorney, he reports that the transcript of the trial record will not be delivered by the court until Sept. 28. As soon as it is delivered Henderson will begin work on the Mini brief.

PROGRESSIVE ISSUES CONFRONT THE A.F.L.

By ARNE SWABECK

Bill Green and the whole A. F. of L. leadership was challenged at the rubber workers' convention. It suffered another heavy blow, directed simultaneously at its methods of bureaucratic domination and its reactionary "red baiting" campaign.

Coming, as it did, right upon the heels of the defeat administered to this leadership by the teachers' convention, the rebuke by the automobile workers' convention and the manifestations of certain progressive elements elsewhere, the issues involved are sure to loom large as a prelude to the fifty-fifth annual A. F. of L. convention.

The new-born rubber workers' international union refused, by a vote of 44 to 9, to accept certain A. F. of L. charter provisions, presented to the convention by Green, which would confer upon him the right of appointment of officers for a probationary period to be left at his discretion. With that vote the convention also rejected his choice of handpicked officers.

Overwhelmed by this decisive vote, Green had to beat a hasty retreat. He accepted it, packed up his belongings and left for the more tranquil atmosphere of his home town Conshohocken, Ohio, where he still remains a deacon of the Baptist church.

Problem of New Unions

These recent experiences cannot be easily ignored by the A. F. of L. officials. No doubt they are beginning to ask themselves some serious questions and preparing to straighten their own fences. But there are many difficulties to overcome, particularly in regard to the new unions.

It was with the greatest reluctance that they had agreed in the first place to grant international union charters to these unions. They fought to the last against the idea of granting industrial union charters and accepted it in principle only to sabotage it in actual practice, as they have done so far. But they are still faced with the dilemma of pressure from present economic conditions out of which grow the demands of the rank and file workers. These demands begin to crystallize into distinctly progressive tendencies. Naturally this is much more marked in the basic and the mass production industries where exploitation is most ruthless. And here the A. F. of L. officials will be much more closely bound up with the development and growth of these unions than has been the case in the past.

Old Basis Undermined

So long as the hidebound craft unions of the skilled trades formed the backbone of the movement matters were comparatively simple. These workers enjoyed certain privileges and questioned much less the doings of their union officials. The unions could be managed fairly easily and the bureaucratic regime solidified. It was not so difficult for the latter to make all kinds of shady deals with the bosses. Much has now changed. Many of the privileges formerly enjoyed in the skilled trades have disappeared. Mass production has advanced and the unions of the skilled trades play a far less important role. For the future the very existence of an effective trade union movement depends upon its ability to build up a solid backbone of unions organized in the mass production industries. Despite the official reluctance that must be the orientation.

Trade Union Democracy

It is very interesting to note that the change toward the new conditions places as the first point on the agenda the question of trade union democracy. This was inevitable. Only by means of its bureaucratic control were the reactionary officials able to function effectively as the agents of capitalism and prevent the unions from engaging in serious struggles for their rightful demands. As a result the unions were stunted in their growth and their power of organization remained largely ineffective.

The free and unhampered development of the trade union movement therefore demands democratic union control as a first prerequisite. It becomes a first class progressive issue and it will play an important role in the crystallization of a progressive movement in the trade unions. The attitude to this issue will be of a determining character in the test for leadership.

In these recent experiences the fact that the progressive tendencies reflect the needs of the movement and represent its vital interests is verified once again. On the opposite side, the retarding reactionary influence of the A. F. of L. top officials is just as clearly revealed. Not only did the latter attempt to maintain its control by the celebrated steam-roller method, but they actually succeeded in preventing the new-born international unions in automobile and rubber from taking on their necessary industrial form. According to the charters, the shop crafts are to be organized as heretofore in their old craft unions, separate and apart from the production workers.

Industrial Unionism

In the light of recent economic changes, the question of the industrial form of organization is only reinforced as a progressive issue. It is likewise connected up intimately with the future life and growth of the trade union movement. If the unions in the mass production industries are to meet the ruthless onslaughts of the gigantic corporations effectively, this form of organization is imperative.

At the time of receiving their charters, both the automobile workers and the rubber workers' unions appeared with greatly reduced ranks. The reason for this is not difficult to find. It was due essentially to the sheer incompetence and downright treason of the A. F. of L. officials who had been in charge of affairs up to now. Still, with an aggressive policy of organization, there are undoubtedly good prospects for the building up of strong unions in these industries. For the life of the movement as a whole this is necessary; but this has very much to do with the kind of leadership.

Progressives Grow in Struggle
It is no accident that more voices are heard every day in the trade unions demanding an aggressive policy of organization. In many instances on a local scale the demand has been carried out in practice, and thereby the progressive tendencies gained. Wherever unions have set to work, organizing aggressively without fear of the bitter struggle that it involves and ready to meet the sacrifices that it imposes, progress has been made. A good timber for a new and progressive leadership is being seasoned in such struggles.

The coming A. F. of L. convention cannot escape facing these issues in one way or another. Of course, they will not be reflected at this gathering in the same direct and decisive manner as in the general field of the class struggle. The labor party issue will most likely appear. There is little chance that very many distinctly progressive spokesmen will slip into the convention hall. But it is to be expected that perhaps several of the well-paid officials already now in or near to the higher councils, out of fear of the potential progressive movement for one reason, or due to pressure from below for another, will take up some of these issues in order to appear as spokesmen and head off the actual crystallization of a genuine progressive movement. When that occurs it is well for real progressives to be on guard.

Political Tendencies
It is yet too early to speak of a progressive movement already in existence. Only tendencies in that direction are manifested so far; and much confusion still prevails among these tendencies. Where they appear they represent, generally speaking, a combination of elements of various degrees of political consciousness. But in most cases they are not yet strongly influenced by the workers' political parties.

Without at this moment going into the positions that these parties hold in regard to the problems of the trade unions and the issues and struggles within them, it is necessary to remember that the building up of a progressive movement is a first class political job. But it will also be a test of these parties, not only of their ability to organize the movement, but above all of their ability to influence it in the direction of political consciousness. There will be a struggle of political tendencies in this movement.

It should not be difficult for the revolutionary party to meet this test. But there is more required than merely to counterpose its program to those of the other political tendencies and parties. It will be necessary also to take over the responsibility for active, persistent and devoted work right on the firing line of the movement.

'Thieves Kitchen' at Geneva

the withdrawal of Japan and Germany, by the miserable showing in the Manchurian and Chaco affairs, the League has been kept actively alive only because of the prestige and new blood pumped into it by Stalin. Litvinov, in the League, speaks with the voice of the Workers' State, but his words are the words of the British Lion.

Whoever doubts this, let him review the facts.

Why does Great Britain try to preserve "peace"? Why does she object to Mussolini's campaign in Ethiopia? One glance at the map gives the answers. (1) Italian rule over Ethiopia would threaten the sources of the Blue Nile, and thus put Egypt at the mercy of Italy. (2) Italian expansion in Northeast Africa threatens the Suez Canal, the route to Britain's colonies—"the life line of the Empire." (3) Increasing Italian strength in the Mediterranean, together with the development of air fighting, have already placed in jeopardy the British route from Gibraltar to Port Said. Malta, for example, is already helpless. (4) A serious conflict between Europeans and native Africans would promote unrest or even rebellion on the part of the natives throughout the British colonies. (5) Great Britain would likewise enjoy sharing in the exploitation of Ethiopia. Two further reasons, of a somewhat different kind, must be added: (6) Great Britain fears the repercussions on the European proletariat of the possible failure of Mussolini to conquer quickly. Such failure might well prove a mighty impulse in awakening revolutionary consciousness. (7) The National Government, faced with an election in the near future, wishes to consolidate England internally around slogans of "national unity" before the war danger, against the chance of a production industries are to meet the ruthless onslaughts of the gigantic corporations effectively, this form of organization is imperative.

and so do the diplomats of every other nation.

Imperialist Bargains
The present League session is, then, seeking a "solution" of the Ethiopian question. That is to say, it is seeking a deal that will reconcile these requirements on the part of Great Britain with, first, France's need to get British guarantees against German aggression on the Continent, and second, the drive of pent-up Italian capital for an outlet together with Mussolini's desperate necessity for consolidating his rotting internal regime.

But whether or not the "solution" is found, the fundamental issues are not altered in the slightest. War will be not stopped, but merely postponed, and postponed for a short time only. The solution will be not a triumph for the peace-loving League, but an imperialist maneuver of the most brazen and reactionary kind. Its sole purpose will be to strengthen temporarily the lines of the world imperialist forces.

Working Class "Sanctions"

The elementary duty of Marxists is clear beyond argument. It is for them to sound the alarm against all the machinations of the imperialist powers. It is for them to expose every facet of the war dangers. And this means not merely to fulminate against the tyrant Mussolini, and to beg the League to step in to save the world. It means to expose every step of the League's robber course. It means not to call on "peace-loving Great Britain" to close the Suez Canal and apply sanctions—but to reveal the rottenness of British imperialist policy beneath the mush-mouthed peace talk.

It means to call on the international working class, the only force against war, to apply its own sanctions, to make its own boycotts, to voice its own material and ideological solidarity with the Ethiopian masses—rejecting all talk of "national unity," all pretense that a capitalist nation is ever or will ever be "peace-loving"; and to call on the working class at the same time, not to cease its own class struggle before the war danger, but to intensify a thousand-fold the revolutionary fight at home.

And it is to explain this—these elementary working-class principles that Litvinov uses the public forum of the League meetings, and that the C. I. uses its press throughout the world. The direct opposite is true. Litvinov speaks in the League as the stooge of Hoare and Eden. Even in phrasing, nothing distinguishes his remarks from those of the agents of British imperialism.

Policy of Betrayal

And what of the sections of the C. I.? Do they "make up" for Litvinov's diplomatic necessities? Quite the contrary. In Sept. 18th's Daily Worker the Communist party calls on Great Britain "to close the Suez Canal"; it appeals (on the front page) "For united action of—the international working class? How naive, comrade, to suspect that Stalin still has his eyes even partly turned toward the international working class. No—the united front of all nations to prevent war on Ethiopia." So thoroughly has the Communist party now gone from the Third Period rejection of the united front, that united fronts are to be made—with the political instruments of the class enemy. In Great Britain, the Communist party calling for sanctions applied by the government, supports thus the building up of national unity and lays the full basis for acceptance of imperialist war on the part of Great Britain as (shades of the United States in 1917!) a war to prevent war.

Workers, this is the witness of betrayal. Before it is too late, reject capitulation. Turn from "national unity," take your eyes off the "national governments" of "peace-loving nations," tear the mask from the League, and drive from your ranks the social-patriots who make ready to give you up to the war makers.

There is only one force against imperialist war: the international proletariat. There is only one solution for war: the international revolution.

Rubber Workers Ride Over Green's Plans

Already rubber workers began to rejoice the union from which they had fled after the A. F. of L. bureaucracy's treacherous betrayal this spring during the strike threat.

The only serious threat on the horizon which faced the delegates was the perplexing question of selection of officers. There is a possibility of a split between Akron and out-of-town progressives over which man should become president.

Defeat Green 44 to 9

Smashing through every treacherous move, every ruse and false argument, the rubber workers brought to a brilliant climax their terrific fight for democracy by overwhelmingly voting 44 to 9 against a resolution which would sanction Green's appointment of president.

The blunt repudiation of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy and its disastrous policies in the rubber industry was so decisive that Green, to save his face, declared, "I accept your judgment as final. No one can ignore the preponderance of your vote."

The defeated resolution would have given him the approval of the convention to appoint Coleman C. Claherty, his rubber organizer, as president of the new international. But, as predicted in the NEW MILITANT, the rubber workers were so incensed at Claherty and his policies that his defeat was a foregone conclusion.

To show how strong the anti-bureaucracy feeling was, it is only necessary to realize that the resolution defeated was a compromise by the bureaucracy to the delegates. It specified that all other officers be elected. All Green asked was "let me appoint Claherty."

Green Threatens Delegate

When Green spoke for the resolution he threatened Thomas Burns, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., a leader for democracy, because of an alleged association with a dual union movement in the rubber industry.

Burns took the floor in his defense and flung back into Green's teeth every argument used against him. In fact, he proved that Green had appointed Phillips, a dual unionist, to a high post where Burns first met him. Burns proved that Green, not he, had associated with the dual unionist.

The progressive bloc began its fight for democracy by presenting Green, when he arrived at the convention, with a petition signed by 40 out of 47 delegates asking for democratic procedure and election of all officers. From then, Green and Claherty were on the defensive.

The bureaucracy went so far as to threaten reporters time and again, newspapers said, for printing accounts of the inner-struggles and thereby, indirectly, exposing each move of Claherty and Green. Mention of the "auto workers' convention by anyone brought panic to the bureaucrats."

Green Bars Industrial Unionism

Although delegates were prepared to fight for industrial unionism, Green effectively stopped that by reading a mandate from the executive council which declared that those who accepted the international charter must obey the following provision: "To organize all rubber workers in mass production of rubber products, same not to include building and construction employees; making and installing machinery employees, and employees engaged in maintenance work or in work outside the factories."

In other words, the seven craft unions in the rubber industry will keep their independent existence and the rubber workers are left facing the possibility of disastrous jurisdictional disputes.

Green told the delegates, "You can neither accept, reject, or change this charter. It is conferred on you." A move to fight the provision at the next convention of the A. F. of L. has begun.

"Surprise Move" of Bureaucrats

The bureaucracy tried a "surprise move" the second day. A resolution, introduced out of order, was presented for appointment of Claherty. Only two out of seven of the resolutions committee had signed it. It was supposed to be 21st. Nothing was said of the majority resolution which asks for election of officers, through "non-concurrence" with the majority.

An illegal clause was attached to the resolution. It requested financial aid of the A. F. of L. The two-fold clause was thus introduced so that the delegates would vote themselves out of financial support from the A. F. of L. if they didn't vote to accept Claherty. Everybody saw through the move.

Green took the floor, urging the passage of the resolution. His stooges followed but to no avail. The central theme of their false arguments was, "If we don't let Green appoint Claherty, we'll have no money to support the new international."

Progressive's Reply

A progressive neatly shattered Green's argument that the international needed money, should accept money and therefore pass the resolution. He answered, "We need your money, we'll take your money and support, but that has nothing to do with the question of election of officers."

"We can have our own president and officers and still take your money. In fact, we hope to!" he added as Green blustered. "We aren't voting down the support of the A. F. of L. by defeating the resolution. That part doesn't belong in the resolution and we'll change it later."

Another delegate scored the A. F. of L. leadership as antiquated. "We need an industrial base for the A. F. of L. if it is to survive."

Powerful and blunt argument by S. H. Dalrymple, president of the Goodrich local for the right to elect officers added much weight to the cause of the progressives as Dalrymple is recognized as one of the leaders in the rubber unions.

"We've been promised for two years our own international. The rubber workers will join us if we keep our pledges. I would rather go down defeated after fighting my best for democracy than face the charges of the workers who would say we betrayed them," Dalrymple pointed out.

Thunder of Protest

When the roll call vote began on the resolution of appointment of Claherty, a tense silence reigned, shattered only by increasing "Noes" which continued until they sounded like a thunder of protest against Green's machinations and trickery.

Enraged beyond control, Claherty charged Burns and others of "distorting and lying about their past." A heated argument followed with delegates lambasting both Green and Claherty for lying. Burns even arose and called Claherty a "g—d—liar."

A constitution was adopted after clauses barring "communists, I.W. W.'s and members of other dual union organizations" was changed to exclude naming of political parties.

"We'd do better to exclude all republicans than communists," a delegate argued.

Another clause preventing caucusing on union questions outside the local hall also met with defeat as progressives continued to establish democracy in the new international.

Both clauses had been placed in the draft of the constitution on the request of Claherty who saw in them powerful weapons against the progressives if he became president.

Progressives Prepare Slate

The progressive bloc which has been able to rally most of the delegates with it on every vital question is preparing a slate of candidates for officers and also watching for further moves by Green to attempt to regain control of the international.

Resolutions asking A. F. of L. help to aid financially the new international were expected to be introduced and passed. This will again place Green on the spot. He pledged support of the convention even though defeated.

Pay for officers was picked as: president, $3,200; vice-president, $2,700; secretary-treasurer, $3,000. Union dues are $1 per month and initiation fee, $2.

The preamble of the constitution has a clause recognizing the class struggle and declaring that the international will do all necessary to further the economic and social advance of the rubber workers. It recognizes the failure of capitalism and the necessity for its abolition.

Rubber Workers Took Big Step Forward at Akron Convention

By JACK WILSON

A tremendous step forward in the direction of organizing workers in basic industries was taken by rubber worker delegates at their convention which formed an international union through the far-reaching consequences of their actions.

The rubber workers repudiated by an overwhelming majority the antiquated craft union, class collaboration policies of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy as represented by Wm. Green and the executive council.

They broke the stranglehold of the officialdom over the rubber workers' unions which had virtually ruined the trade union movement in the rubber industry and reduced once powerful unions into mere skeletons.

The rubber workers did what the auto workers and other unionists had not succeeded in doing—cleansing their ranks of the Clahertys and other misleaders who only lead them from one defeat to another.

Adopt Militant Program

The rubber workers adopted a militant program for organizing through drives the rubber industry—one of America's leading open shop industries.

The rubber workers, through fighting successfully for the election of their own officers, smashed Green's avowed intention of appointing their officers and gave him a blow which will have even greater repercussions at the coming national convention of the A. F. of L. for the rubber workers are prepared to fight with other progressives for industrial unions and thus wipe out the craft base for the present bureaucracy.

Officers were picked whose personal honesty is beyond question, who have the confidence of the rubber workers, who are earnest, sincere and continually learning the meaning and significance of the class struggle. The president is a man who already is rallying the ranks of the deserted rubber workers around the banner of the autonomous international with immediate increases in membership.

Learning Through Struggle

This much they have done. In addition the rubber workers learned much through fighting. They tore away the illusions from their own eyes of the "greatness" of Green and his cohorts.

Workers in all unions who have been fighting desperately against efforts of the bureaucrats to curb them can and should take heart from this notable victory against reaction in the labor movement.

There are many reasons why the rubber workers have been able to win, so far, in their struggle for self-control with its consequent favorable possibilities.

The lessons of the auto workers' convention aroused the Akron delegates to a boiling point of indignation which made them sensitive to every move the bureaucrats attempted at the convention.

The crime of the auto workers' international brought home sharply the truth of the ideas constantly pointed out to them by a small group of progressives that the bureaucracy would do anything to keep in power and they must organize to fight against such reaction with its fatal effects on the unions.

Behind this immediate cause lies the long and hard work of forces like the Workers Party to point out the correct road to the rubber workers in their search for paths which would lead to a strong union movement.

Efforts of progressives who arose from the working class itself without stimulation but through bitter experience with Claherty and Green, came to a climax at the convention.

The result of the convention attests once more to the fact that only through careful education and work along class struggle lines can the working class prepare itself to march forward to increasing victories.

Build a progressive bloc with correct policies based on the experiences of Minneapolis, Toledo, Detroit and the other scenes of class struggle!

Rally forces around the slogan of democracy in the trade union movement. Protect the rights of militants who lead in every fight against the betrayals of the officialdom of the top!

The rubber workers have won a victory, but that is only a start.

Every local must have its progressive bloc carrying on a daily struggle for the ideas accepted by the convention so that those delegates who stood by the bureaucracy go down defeated and exposed to their fellow-workers.

Organization Plans

The resolutions on organization call for special efforts to bring the workers back within the fold of the union. Sentiment for rejoining the unions is strong in Akron and throughout the country since the hated bureaucrats went down in defeat. No time should be lost to take advantage of this fact.

Special plans must be made to unite completely with progressives throughout the country so that a solid bloc will confront the A. F. of L. executive council and its antiquated ideas at the forthcoming national convention so more workers in basic industries and elsewhere can be made free from the stranglehold of the present leadership.

No Compromise with Misleaders

An uncompromising struggle must be waged against the misleaders in the future. The seven craft unions in the rubber industry must become amalgamated in the new international. Demand that the next national A. F. of L. convention grant that right. The clause in the new charter confining membership only to rubber workers engaged in production of rubber products must be eliminated so all employees in the rubber shops can join in one great union.

The Workers Party has continually served in the past as the beacon light for leadership in the struggle to build a powerful labor movement in the rubber industry. It first warned the workers of the coming spring betrayal. It first called for building a progressive bloc to rally all forces at this convention against the hold of the bureaucracy. It pledges itself in the future to do everything in its power to aid the workers in their fundamental battles for uniting themselves into a powerful movement.

We will do everything possible to make the United Rubberworkers of America a stronghold of the working class against any onslaughts of capitalism or any of its agents.

Sales Tax Big Issue at S. P. Convention

By New Haven Correspondent

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 16.—Just before midnight tonight the two-day Socialist state convention succeeded, after a bitter seven-hour fight, in putting itself on record against . . . a sales tax! A resolution introduced to the resolutions committee on the Italo-Ethiopian situation, the only sign of awareness of the outside world during the whole convention, was referred to the State Executive Committee as being a national matter. The debate on the sales tax waged fast and furious for seven hours; the war question was dismissed as being "outside the jurisdiction of the state body."

On the sales tax issue Mayor McLevy and the three state legislators from Bridgeport, Taft, Secor and Eccles, held their machine firm to the end in favor of voting for the sales tax in the next session of the state legislature as the only remaining method of "raising relief for the starving unemployed." Even on the final ballot, faced with a substitute resolution more conciliatory in tone than the original, they rallied 49 votes against 75. All but three of the 28 Bridgeport voters remained loyal to the very end.

McLevy Arguments

McLevy in the debate shouted that he and his legislators had vindicated themselves as Socialists by fighting for an income tax, and then for a dividends and interest tax, but they had been defeated and relief was still needed. Where does all your theory and principles get you, the McLevy supporters maintained, when you have the practical problem of feeding the desperate unemployed? Besides, they argued, it is not true that we are introducing something new with the sales tax, which our opponents claim would merely soak the poor to support the poor; in Waterbury today the employed workers are forced to contribute a sum out of their weekly wages to care for their less fortunate brethren.

Later, in answer to this, a Waterbury worker, Philip Brainard, vice-chairman of the convention, made the best fighting speech in defiance of the Bridgeport machine. In his own factory he had organized the men, and they didn't pay the levy on wages. Waterbury Socialists were trying to do the same for the whole city. Outside of Brainard's speech there was no mention whatsoever of the possibilities of fighting for higher relief standards by militant organization from below, rather than by political maneuvering and compromising by the Socialist parliamentarians.

We set forth below a few of the choice thoughts of the chief cogs in the McLevy machine:

State Senator Taft: "I don't subscribe to a sales tax, but under certain conditions to save fellow workers from starving, I am willing to reach in my pocket and give a half dollar." (This last offer of generosity was repeated twice, indicating that the senator was willing to contribute at least a dollar and a half on his own hook.)

State Senator Secor: "We know you can't instruct us to be against the sales tax. You haven't the guts. You know you'd be subject to the corrupt practices act." (The majesty of the law seemed to impress the opposing delegates somewhat; the question of disciplining McLevy and the Socialist legislators was carefully avoided in this discussion.)

Secretary of the Party Freese: "If there is any advocate of the sales tax in this hall, he had better get out now. But there's nobody here like that. . . . You want to break up all our plans with this damn fool resolution."

State Chairman Plunkett: "If you pass this resolution you'll have to expel all those favoring a sales tax if you're honest. Expel the Socialist Party then!"

"Function of Socialist Legislators"

In the ranks of the opposition, Perlstein as well as Brainard made a good showing. "What is the function of a Socialist minority in any government?" he asked. "It's not our problem to run the capitalist government. It's our duty to make our own position clear and to educate." A worker whose ardor was somewhat dampened arose in this discussion and said: "I was once in the Republican Party, and that was the wrong place, so I went to the Democrats, and that was the wrong place. Then I joined the Socialist Party. I thought the Socialists would work for the workers every day in the year. But after this how can we speak before the workers any more? Is this the wrong place too?"

At last, after an adjournment, a substitute resolution was brought in. As Allen pointed out, it restated the party's stand against the sales tax, but was careful not to aim itself at the Socialist legislators. But McLevy remained unappeased, with something of a martyr-like attitude. "Do you want to put your Socialist legislators in a straitjacket," he demanded, "so they can't use their influence? . . . I still think the important issue is relief. I don't want to climb into political office on the backs of starving workers." The substitute resolution was then quickly passed, but the McLevy machine was powerful enough to roll up two-fifths of the votes. All in all, the victory was a hollow one.

Every Socialist worker must draw lessons from this experience. It must be obvious to the leftward-moving workers in the S.P. that a party which permits such a level of discussion, such suggestions of unprincipled maneuvering for purposes of prestige, such ignoring of the crucial issues of the day, has something fundamentally wrong with it.

Mooney in Court In Legal Struggle To Gain Freedom

Tom Mooney's appeal for a writ of habeas corpus in the California courts opened last week. The overwhelming proofs of his innocence, the perjury of the state's witnesses, the flimsiness of the state's evidence, and his own alibi have long ago convinced the jurors and even the judge of the original trial.

But capitalist courts are in no hurry to free class war prisoners. After nineteen years in prison Tom Mooney's appeal was heard by the U. S. Supreme Court last year and he was sent back to try the courts of the state that originally framed him. He was condemned to many more months, perhaps years in prison, to all the tortures of a new trial, to the exorbitant expenses of a new trial. No matter if he is innocent, the cruel game of capitalist justice must be played to the end.

The defense is now trying the case before a referee in the California courts. So far they have suffered two setbacks, in failing to obtain a judge instead of a referee, and in the refusal of the court to bring Billings, who was convicted with Mooney into the court.

The outcome of the case cannot be predicted—but California law is hostile, and fresh from the triumph of framing the eight Sacramento criminal syndicalism defendants. Whether the labor-hating capitalists who first sent Mooney to prison for his activities as a labor organizer are more afraid of him in prison or out will determine the outcome. For nineteen years the case has been kept alive by Mooney's own heroic battle and by the organized support and pressure of labor all over the country. And only that pressure can free him.

Spartan Slugged in Picket Of Hearst News Reel

Some time ago a group of organizations including Spartacus Youth League branch of Boro Park, Yipsels of Bensonhurst, and the League against War and Fascism branch of Bensonhurst as well as several other organizations, organized a campaign in Brooklyn to remove Hearst's Metrotone news from the theatres in which they are shown.

The campaign revolves around the anti-labor attitude of Hearst and the previously mentioned organizations have been concentrating in removing Hearst's film from Loew's Oriental theatre.

Open air protest meetings when held were invariably broken up by "our" honorable defenders of private property, the police, and members of participating organizations were thrown into the hoosegow.

Last Sunday two Spartacans, comrades Bert Kane and Jack Lee while picketing were attacked by a group of thugs. Fortunately, neither were hurt seriously. When interviewed the following was the story obtained from the attacked comrades:

They had been picketing for over an hour when the manager of the theatre motioned to the cops standing near the corner. The discussion that took place between these two gentry was very evident from the incident that took place at the conclusion of their "negotiations."

Workers of Brooklyn, Boycott Hearst's anti-labor propaganda machinery. Don't attend theaters at which his Metrotone News is shown.

the mouth by a tear gas bomb fired at her just as she was descending from a street car. The Minneapolis Journal writes that "the receiving room at General Hospital took on the appearance of a wartime behind the lines hospital as the stream of wounded started coming in. The hospital corridors were literally running with blood."

Fighting continued until 2 o'clock in the morning, with the armored cars patrolling for blocks around, continually pouring tear gas into small groupings wherever they gathered. Finally the pickets and the crowd left, vowing to come back the next night.

Mass Pressure Closes Down Plant

The reaction to the wanton police savagery was so great that the next morning the mayor was forced to clear out all scabs and gunmen from the plant. These people were escorted to St. Paul. The grand jury immediately prepared a white-wash investigation, as Tetzlaff hid himself in the bosom of the Citizens Alliance. In the meantime, the rank and file of the Farmer-Labor party were boiling at the actions of their strike-breaking mayor and city council. A special meeting was hurriedly arranged for Thursday night at the large Eagles Hall, called by the Farmer-Labor Women's Federation and the F. L. Veterans Association.

Mayor Boos Down

The hall was packed with rank-and-file Farmer-Laborites as Mayor Latimer, the first speaker, was introduced from the platform. The mayor turned pale as he was booed by the enraged crowd. Finally he managed to make himself heard and made a lame statement, crying that the Hennepin County grand jury bound him hand and foot, promising that a "thorough investigation would be made of all that occurred" and begging for three more months, at the expiration of which it was understood he would have fully proved himself. Alderman Ed Hudson, another Farmer-Labor member, was jeered when he started to say that what was done by police at the riot was done "by men who in the skirmish lost their minds."

"You're trying to whitewash the mayor. Don't play politics!" yelled the audience.

State Representative Bellman (F. L.) drew cheers from the audience as he placed direct responsibility for the situation upon Latimer, and demanded the dismissal of the policemen participating in the riot.

Alderman Scott earned the cheers of the crowded hall by taking a clear-cut position on the whole affair, and exposing the excuses of Latimer and the police. He called for the expulsion of Latimer from the Farmer-Labor party, and asked that he resign as mayor.

It remained for Bill Brown, president of Local 574, to say what had to be said. Brown completely exposed the gutlessness of Mayor Latimer, told the crowd how a true working class mayor would have acted even though it led to his impeachment, and called for immediate removal of the police butchers.

Brown also completely exposed the mayor's latest "employer-employee" arbitration board, which is a 1935 pocket edition of the Citizens Alliance. He was cheered for several minutes, as Latimer, sitting at the back of the stage, looked like a whipped dog. As other Farmer-Laborites rose and tried to ease the pressure on the mayor, the meeting almost broke up through indignation. Order finally was restored and the meeting was officially adjourned. It fell to Harry Mayville, local Stalinist, to demonstrate the Communist Party's bankruptcy by telling the Farmer-Laborites that "your party is not rotten. I and my party want to see a mass Farmer-Labor party in the state and city."

Now we see the Workers Party know better than Mayville that the Farmer-Labor rank and file are certainly not "rotten"; but we also know that if ever the workers have had a chance to see the complete impotence of reformism, it has been in this state and city during the past few years. To claim otherwise is to cry for a Stalinist moon.

The meeting ended with representatives of the next day's relief demonstration appealing to the crowd for support. As Latimer left the hall with his bodyguard through the rear door, he was accosted by an angry iron worker and struck in the mouth. Friends hurried him away to his limousine.

Latimer Gets In Deeper and Deeper

As was to be expected, the Citizens Alliance-dominated grand jury completely exonerated the police from Wednesday's murderous onslaught, saying "we believe the police department did the best they could with the number of men they had." The report concluded with the observation that "the unemployment being so great, so many people with nothing to do but follow disturbances for excitement, the spirit of unrest existing in Minneapolis will undoubtedly be responsible for additional outbreaks." (As though the unemployed demonstrated "for excitement," instead of for increased relief, for jobs, and in a spirit of solidarity with employed workers.) The grand jury also asked for an addition of 200 to the police force.

The Farmer-Labor mayor fell in with this report and meekly asked for 200 more police. This was too much for the Farmer-Labor councilmen even, one of whom, Alderman Pearson, said: "I am opposed to the proposal to add more policemen for the explicit purpose of clubbing laboring men." The anger of the city rose even higher.

On Saturday afternoon, hundreds of workers participated in the funeral processions of the two bystanders shot down Wednesday night.

Investigations Continue

Latimer intends to continue his phony riot investigation this afternoon at 4:30, calling in some "impartial observers." When representatives of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense called on the mayor's secretary yesterday and offered scores of witnesses, including many people who live in the neighborhood of the scene of the riot, they were told that no more witnesses are needed.

The Central Labor Union, the Hennepin County F. L. Association and the Non-Partisan Labor Defense plan to hold separate public hearings during the next few days, so that the true story of what took place can be brought to light for all to see and understand.

Workers Party Plans Meeting

On Friday night, Sept. 20, a meeting at the Pythian Hall is called by the Minneapolis branch, Workers Party of the U. S., where V. R. Dunne, prominent Minneapolis trade unionist and member of the National Committee of the Workers Party, will speak on "Three Months of Farmer-Labor Rule in Minneapolis: What They PROMISED and What They GAVE!"

Among the questions to be discussed by comrade Dunne are: the Mayor's employer-employee board and the meaning of the phrase, "industrial peace"; can the Farmer-Labor Party be reformed?; what is the meaning of the present attacks upon progressive trade unionists in Minneapolis and throughout the nation?; what is the attitude of a real workers' political party toward the trade unions? etc.

In the meantime, resentment among all the workers continues to seethe and grow. And what a working class there is in Minneapolis! For dauntless, inspiring courage against all odds, for solidarity against the bosses and the labor fakers, Minneapolis workers need not bow to working class fighters anywhere in the world.

Hundreds of relief workers in Local 574's Federal Workers Section have already demanded that the united front with the Stalinists be immediately broken off. They can no longer stomach the quackery of these charlatans.

Governor Olson, eager to place his heel on Latimer's neck as a maneuver to get back in the good graces of the Minneapolis workers, has mobilized 150 national guardsmen in St. Paul and is keeping them in readiness for any further outbreaks.

Today a movement was making headway to read Latimer out of the Farmer-Labor party, and petitions for his impeachment began to circulate all over town.

At this writing, word comes that the Non-Partisan Labor Defense will open its public trial tonight at the General Drivers Auditorium. The trial of the people vs. Mayor Latimer, Police Chief Forestal and the city administration will get under way with the hearing of dozens of witnesses to the Wednesday massacre—witnesses that were refused a hearing by Latimer's star chamber proceedings.

French Fascists in Rally Say 'Our Time Will Come'

By H. F. ROBERTS

Last week the Croix de Feu, the principal Fascist organization in France, gave another of those sudden demonstrations of its strength in a series of surprise rallies around Paris and in other sections of the country. Upwards of 30,000 men listened to their leader, Colonel Francois Casinier de la Roque who assured them: "Our time will come."

The ability of the Croix de Feu to mobilize forces of this size with military precision and complete secrecy up to the very moment of the demonstration gives some idea of the latent forces of Fascism which are waiting their chance to take over power in France. Unlike some of the other, smaller Fascist organizations in the country, the Croix de Feu does not draw for its membership on declassed lumpen proletarians. Its ranks are made up principally of substantial petty bourgeois citizens drawn from the upper strata of the middle classes. Almost all its members are war veterans, and their sons, now in their early twenties, are organized in Les Volontaires Nationaux, the youth organization of the Croix de Feu.

Unlike the other Fascist groups, the Croix de Feu does not flaunt its armed bands but it is widely known that the Croix de Feu has not only built up large stocks of arms and ammunition but has also organized an air squadron credited with having nearly 100 planes. On one or two occasions arms caches of the Croix de Feu have been uncovered by police who have been drawn off the case as soon as the identity of the owners of the cache became known.

Supported by Finance Capital

De la Roque enjoys the financial and political support of finance and heavy industrial capital. The Wendels and their Comité des Forges are the principal contributors to the Croix de Feu war chest. The organization is closely related to the French General Staff, a number of whose most prominent figures are actually in its ranks. The political power of the Croix de Feu represents is already formidable. During the last cabinet crisis which brought Laval into power, he was consulted in the inner governmental councils and was reported to have threatened to bring his forces out into the streets if any attempt was made to install a so-called left-wing government.

The Croix de Feu is the most serious Fascist movement in France. When the French bourgeoisie decides that the time has come to finish with the organizations of the working class, it will depend upon de la Roque and his followers to do the job. He is equipped to do it not only by virtue of his connections with the General Staff but also through his close contact with the leading strata of the two great veterans' organizations, the Union Nationale des Danciens Combattants and the Union Federale des Anciens Combattants whose membership runs up to a million and whose leadership is thoroughly Fascist in tendency and in connections.

Other Fascist Groups

Among these are the Camelots du Roi, the youth group affiliated to the Action Francaise, the royalist organization. These young blades, mostly of the student type and drawing their support largely from the ex-aristocracy, have had a long and active experience in street fighting against the workers. They have figured prominently in all street actions during the past ten years and they are well-armed with carbines and revolvers. They number now about 5,000. Another, slightly smaller organization is that of Les Jeunes Patriotes which used to have close connections with the army and which in years past has been utilized as a strikebreaking agency. It is now organized in the so-called "Front National" together with a new and powerful organization known as La Solidarite Francaise. The latter maintains regularly trained armed bands, counts no less than 10,000 in its ranks and has a powerful weapon in the Paris daily, "Ami du Peuple," which is more or less its official mouthpiece.

Unlike the above-named groups, all of which would deny the appellation "Fascist," the Francistes, who came into being about the time of the affair of February 6, 1934, openly and violently claim the honor of being the Fascists of France. They number some 5,000, most of whom are enrolled in armed bands which conduct a regular course of training in the art of civil war. They enjoy subsidies from a number of big capitalists and are generally credited with accepting subsidies from the propaganda agencies of both Hitler and Mussolini for carrying on pro-Fascist propaganda in France. Its organ, "Le Franciste," uses exceedingly radical language.

Fight for Workers' Militia

All of these groups constitute sources of well-trained civil war cadres from which the Croix de Feu and the General Staff will draw when the time comes to settle the question of France's future, arms in hand. It is to reply to the threat represented by these various organizations that the French Bolshevik-Leninists are agitating for the organization of an armed workers' militia trained to defend itself effectively against the inevitable Fascist attack. This demand is stamped as a "provocation" by the Stalinist and Socialist bureaucracies who combine their "fight against Fascism" to demanding formally that the government disarm the Fascist bands!

There is no fixed or rigid formula for the development of Fascism. People who fail to see any spectacular movement similar to that of the Nazis before they came to power delude themselves if they think that there is therefore no serious Fascist threat. Fascism may come to power in France by nothing more complicated than a military coup d'etat engineered by the General Staff and the Croix de Feu. If the workers are not mobilized for their own power, if they are not armed and organized to repel the attacks of the growing Fascist bands, we will have in France a repetition of the events in Austria and in Spain—a heroic but futile last-minute resistance. NOW is the time to prepare, and the deliberate refusal of the Stalinist and Socialist bureaucracies to put the French workers on the alert is a gross betrayal, heavy even now with possible future catastrophes.

Packed Hall Hears Cannon Lecture in First of Series of 4

Over 400 workers packed the Irving Plaza Hall last Sunday evening to hear the lecture on "From Lenin to Stalin" by James P. Cannon. The audience, including dozens of Stalinists and Socialists listened with great interest to the glaring contrast between the Third International under Lenin's leadership and the Third International under Stalin.

The speaker presented a scathing criticism of the Seventh Congress of the Comintern. Each period of working class history is symbolized by two people, he stated: Marx and Engels were the scientific founders of the modern revolutionary movement; Noske and Scheideemann symbolized social democratic betrayal and treachery; Lenin and Trotsky were the organizers and leaders of the Russian Revolution and the Communist International; and now for the Seventh Congress Stalin-Laval are the symbols of Stalinist social patriotism. The pre-Congress document of the Seventh Congress was the Stalin-Laval communiqué in which Stalin recognizes the need for maintaining and strengthening the army of French imperialism.

The need for a Fourth International "which has no fatherland" but aims to lead the workers for the conquering of the entire world was the conclusion of comrade Cannon.

The lecture on "From Lenin to Stalin" was the first of a series of four entitled "On the Road to the Fourth International." The subjects for the remainder of the series are: Sunday, September 29, "Working Class Policy in the Impending War"; Sunday, October 6, "The Struggle Against Fascism"; Sunday, October 12, "The Road to the Fourth International."

Comrades who wish to attend these lectures will have to come early. Doors open at 7:30. Lecture will begin at 8:15. All lectures are being held at Irving Plaza Hall, Irving Place and 15th Street.

Reaction Rules Ill. Federation Of Labor Meet

By GERRY ALLARD

BELLEVIEW, Ill., Sept. 20.—The State Federation of Labor which completed its sessions here last week voted to outlaw the Illinois Workers Alliance and the Progressive Miners of America, and also voted to support the state imposed three cent sales tax.

The machine-gear convention also voted to taboo any strikes against scab WPA wages. Resolutions forwarded by local unions for a labor party were also defeated. The convention failed to record itself progressively on any burning labor issue; instead it threw overboard any pretensions to liberalism and adopted a definite class collaboration, right wing attitude.

The condemnation of the Illinois Workers Alliance was no surprise. Last Spring while the Illinois jobless were fighting for their very right to exist, holding large demonstrations against shutting down of relief stations and against the sales tax, Rueben Soderstrom and Victor Olander, president and secretary, respectively, of the Federation, issued public statements condemning the Alliance for leading the fight and endorsing the sales tax. Olander is a member of the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission while Soderstrom is a Republican member of the legislature.

The recent convention of the Illinois Workers Alliance mapped out an energetic program to carry forth the demands of the jobless. Officers of the Alliance state that the position of the Federation of Labor will have little or no bearing in the future relations between the unemployed and the rank and file in the various trade unions.

Edward C. Morgan, state secretary of the I.W.A., stated that "the Federation officials have fought the Alliance from the beginning. We built the Alliance despite them. In cooperation with the rank and file of the Federation of Labor we shall continue our fight against the sales tax, against the scab WPA wage and for a clean, progressive and militant labor movement. The position of the Federation officials doesn't amount to a hill of beans."

Charles Rossie of Du Quoin, a militant miner, and Simon Trojer of Chicago, a Socialist leader, were recently elected chairman and vice-chairman of the state unemployed body.

Militants Held In Chinese Jails Appeal For Aid

By LO SEN

Comrade Niel Sih, one of the leaders of the Communist League of China, and his young wife are suffering the tortures of hell in a Kuomintang prison in Nanking. Word seeped out of the prison walls to our comrades in Shanghai with a desperate appeal for aid. Of our four other comrades, Sze Chao-seng, Wang Yao-hua, Hu Hwang-chang and Liu Chia-liang, there has been no news since they were shifted from Shanghai to Nanking in April this year. Some idea of what they are going through can be gained from the story of another comrade of ours who only recently gained his liberty after four years incarceration.

He was periodically hung up by his thumbs and suspended from a beam so that his feet came just short of the floor. "He was kept chained by the ankles for the whole time he was in and was quite unable to walk when finally given his liberty." The ordeal shattered his nerves and his health. "As he conversed with me," writes one of our comrades from Shanghai, "violent trembling fits kept seizing him, especially when describing some of the tortures to which he was subjected. Many of our comrades died in that hell hole, he told me. There were few captulators. He did not capitulate. That alone speaks volumes. In addition to everything else, he contracted tuberculosis. His body is broken but the spirit flames as brightly as ever."

The same fate, or death, is now faced by Niel Sih and our other comrades. The Communist League of China has appealed for demonstrations of international solidarity and protest against the bestial terror waged by the Kuomintang against all revolutionaries. We cannot remain content with merely feeling deeply for the sufferings of our Chinese comrades. We must make that sympathy manifest in demonstrations, in active protests. We must make our voices heard. We must reach across the sea and stretch the hand of firm solidarity to our imprisoned comrades.

Act now! Our comrades in China are appealing to us and awaiting our reply. That reply must be made—now and at once!

Chaining the Workers to Imperialist War Machine

By J. P. MARTIN

The Executive Committee of the Socialist and Labor International met at Brussels on August 16-18. In the course of the session a resolution and appeal to the workers of the world against Mussolini's African adventure was passed unanimously, with one abstention by Alter, the representative of the Polish "Rund." "The L.S.I. could not in any case resign itself to war," said the appeal, "Not even as a means of deliverance for the Italian people." Stupidity number 1; for imperialism can never prove a means of "deliverance" for a people, unless that people is prepared to transform such a war into civil war for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie (Not war, but revolution will deliver the people... from Fascism). More: it is not enough to say that "one should not in any case resign oneself to war." One must give specific directives for making war impossible. This is what the L.S.I. proposes:

L. S. I. Program

1. Organize great demonstrations of public opinion "to (a) Force the League to take the measures, as it is obliged under Article 11 of the Covenant (!), necessary to safeguard peace, the closing of the Suez canal to Italian military traffic; (b) force Italy to accept arbitration."

2. The Socialist and Communist parties of Italy are organizing a congress of emigrant Italians to protest the Abyssinian war for the end of September, at which the L.S.I. will be represented.

3. If war breaks out all the same "the L.S.I. expresses the hope that the working masses of Italy will be able to utilize the war in overthrowing the real enemy of the Italian people, which is not at Addis Ababa, but in Rome."

Leon Blum in commenting on these decisions in Populaire for August 21 writes: "On the governmental plane, the war can no longer be stopped except by a close coordination of effort between France and England on one hand, and between France and Russia on the other." According to Populaire only the coordinated efforts of France, Britain and the U.S.S.R. can stop the Italian war. Without awaiting the Council of the League the three aforementioned powers should "offer a realistic, sincere and complete arbitration to Italy." "If Italy accepts," Blum continues, "we may hope for peace; if she refuses Italy is forever branded the aggressor."

Game of "Peace"

To us all this seems a game with "peace" and the "workers" as pawns. The illusion of arbitration plunged the world into the conflagration of 1914. And after that conflagration the League has proved itself incapable of arbitrating even so minor an affair as the Chaco war. It will do no better with Mussolini, whom the three powers, France, Britain and the U.S.S.R., are even now counting for his support in the international race. Besides why go through all this rigmarole to prove Mussolini the aggressor? Is there anyone who does not clearly understand that Italian imperialism is for new territory in Africa? And why wait so long to intervene? Is there any hope of accomplishing now, in extremis, what was not done earlier, that is when Mussolini first started sending troops to Africa? Didn't the Negus of Abyssinia appeal to the League on January 14, that is eight months ago?

But let us suppose for a minute that the U.S.S.R., France and Britain do really take the proposed step. What will it lead to? It will prove what everybody already knows; that Italy is the aggressor; as it is certain that Mussolini will accept no arbitration that he is not sure of in advance.

France and Britain, although jealous rivals of Italian imperialism, are not anxious to offend their compeers at Rome. Recent negotiations have shown that in the matter of concessions, both France and England are willing to make them to Mussolini—at the expense of Abyssinia. There will be no change in Mussolini's attitude, unless by such a change he stands to gain even greater loot. Would this preserve peace? Not at all, it will only show that the road is open to brigands, that all that is needed to win spoils is audacity.

"Sanctions"

It is pretty clear that there will be no change in the preparations which have been going on for eight months now, with the complicity of the League. And then what? Then we will invoke sanctions, they tell us, and from that pass on to a boycott, which the League is obliged, by its statutes, to institute. The

League Votes Application Of Sanctions

Traitor Internationals Paralyze Independent Action of Workers

As the League of Nations Council decides to invoke sanctions against Italy should the negotiations between Great Britain, France and Mussolini fail to reach a solution on Ethiopia, mutually satisfactory to the imperialist robbers, the traitorous Socialist and Stalinist internationals are mobilizing the workers for support of the anti-Italian imperialists.

Even more boldly than the official diplomats, these internationals which speak in the name of the working class, demand sanctions against Italy, that is, call upon the imperialist governments of France and England to declare war against imperialist Italy.

Great Britain and France have not yet given up attempts to come to an agreement with Mussolini. Their interest is not the independence of Ethiopia, for not only are they oppressing millions of colonial people throughout the world, including Africa, but they have already offered Italy control of Ethiopia. They are interested in defending their own imperialist possessions in Africa.

France hesitates over the prospect of withdrawing its troops from the continent and leaving itself open to an attack from Hitler. English diplomats are already speaking of sanctions as a threat against Abyssinia. There will be no change in Mussolini's attitude, unless by such a change he stands to gain even greater loot. Would this preserve peace? Not at all, it will only show that the road is open to brigands, that all that is needed to win spoils is audacity.

New Social-Patriotic Betrayal

In the midst of this dispute among the imperialist powers, the joint conference of the Second International and its trade union adjunct, the International Federation of Trade Unions, held early this month, decided to put pressure on the League of Nations so "that the Covenant, the whole Covenant, be now applied, including the sanctions provided for in the Covenant."

And if this policy is accepted by the League of imperialist powers, the social-patriotic betrayal of 1914 will be repeated—this time the working class is informed of the plan even before the war breaks out:

"The two Internationals, conscious of their duties towards peace, are ready to fulfill them in their entirety, and confidently assure the League of the wholehearted support of the workers, both women and men, they represent, in any measures it may take for the effective application of whatever sanctions may be necessary against the aggressor."

Nothing could be clearer than this open pledge of social-patriotism!

Comintern "Welcomes" Decision

"The Communist International welcomes this decision," brazenly states the letter of that organization to the Second International. (Daily Worker, Sept. 26, 1935). What is needed according to the new comrades-in-arms of the Vandeveldes, Blums and Bauers is "an international movement against war of such power that the League of Nations would be compelled to undertake really effective action against the aggressor of Italian fascism and German fascism under its pressure."

"Pressure" on the imperialist League of Nations to declare war against Italy and Germany! Acceding to the decision of the Socialist International to support the League "in any measures it may take for effective application" of sanctions! Could social-patriotism be more open and brazen!

What is needed is the complete independence of the working class from their imperialist masters. The boycott of shipments of goods and munitions to Fascist Italy and the supplying of material aid to the Ethiopian people must be the action of the working class itself.

THE INTERNATIONALISTS NEED OUR HELP!

By L. TROTSKY

The recently published letter of the Bolshevik-Leninist who had made his escape from the U.S.S.R., depicts a horrible scene of persecutions and reprisals on the part of the bureaucracy, and a no less horrible picture of the physical straits in which hundreds and thousands of devoted, unselfish and self-sacrificing revolutionists find themselves. Recently their terms of exile and imprisonment have been extended two, three, and even five years, without any new charges whatsoever. A considerable number of them have been in prison and exile since the beginning of 1928, i.e. for a period of almost eight years. It is apparent even from the official Soviet press that additional hundreds, if not thousands of old and young revolutionists have been subjected to arrests, exile, and incarceration during the current year, for not sharing the international policy of Stalin, or for merely disapproving his brutality with regard to Zinoviev, Kamenev, and others. Letters from exile received by relatives, as rare exceptions, depict a situation that is hopeless and that gives no sign of improvement. For instance, an old revolutionist writes from exile, "There is no sense in sending money here, it cannot be used here. . . . Nothing is to be obtained here, not even vegetables." Another exile, cut off from his friends for years, deprived of the opportunity to correspond with his family, even with his children, writes on a postcard which came through accidentally: "We are on the road of the old Lafargues," thus hinting at an attempt at collective suicide, most probably through a hunger strike.

News from prisons arrive much more rarely than from exile, and they depict new horrors, which leave far behind everything that Stalin perpetrated during the first years of his struggle against the Left Opposition. That is how matters stand.

Moral and Material Aid

Moral and material assistance must be given, and it is needed immediately. The moral aid should consist in the exposure on the widest scale possible of the Bonapartist bestialities to which the captive revolutionists are being subjected. Any scrap of information that arrives must be given the widest possible circulation, the attention and sympathy of the workers must be aroused in those true heroes who have remained faithful to the banner of revolutionary internationalism over a period of several years under conditions of complete isolation, cut off from all information, and subjected to unheard of privations. It is necessary to protest openly and with all our might and main against the Stalinist terror which is directed not in the defense of the revolution against the class enemies but in the defense of the autocratic rule of the bureaucracy against the vanguard workers.

The material assistance must come in the form of collections of funds for transmission to addresses in our possession: the men in exile and in prison, wherever they are able, share the remitted sums fraternally between themselves.

But agitation, protests and collection of funds do not suffice. It is necessary to provide constant and correct organizational assistance to those revolutionist-internationalists about whom the Second and Third Internationals remain unconcerned, who are ignored by the reformist trade unions, and whom the bourgeoisie of the entire world rightly consider to be their bitterest enemies.

Prisoners in China

The question, of course, is not restricted to the U.S.S.R. In China, the prisons of Chiang Kai-Shek, the former ally of Stalin, hold numerous Bolshevik-Leninists, with Chen Du Siu at their head, the old revolutionist, founder of the Communist party, who is serving an eleven year prison term. The leaders of the so-called "united front" painstakingly avoid all reference to the very name of Chen Du Siu, a name, however, that should become known to every revolutionary worker. In Germany, Italy, Spain, Poland, Greece, Indo-China, and a number of other countries the fighters for the Fourth International fill in increasing numbers the jails and concentration camps of the reactionary dictatorship. Even in Holland, the classic land of "democracy," revolutionist-internationalists like Sneevliet and Schmidt have paid severe tribute to the jails of capitalism during the recent years.

However, concerned here are not only the Bolshevik-Leninists and the fighters for the Fourth International. In the countries of the Old and New Worlds, the numerous revolutionary organizations and groups that stand outside both old Internationals and that have not taken their place under the banner of the New International count no few victims in their own ranks. The same applies to colonies. Suffice to name, for instance, the Hindoo revolutionist Roy, now serving a 14-year jail sentence, who was shamefully betrayed by the Comintern in whose ranks he had fought.

Severe Trials Ahead

The still closer drawing together of the Second and Third Internationals as well as the trade union bureaucracies on a common platform of social-patriotism—the ground for which was laid by the Moscow Congress—holds in store especially severe trials for the proletarian fighters, who stand under the banner of internationalism and revolutionary defeatism. Screening themselves by patriotic necessity, and even perhaps by concern for the "defense of the U.S.S.R.," the police and the prosecuting attorneys of capital will henceforth deal the internationalists redoubled blows, in order thus to remove the obstacles in the path of the "united front" of Stalin-Laval-Cachin-Blum-Joubaux, and also in the path of . . . the new imperialist war.

He is blind, or at any rate nearsighted, who fails to see this perspective. Revolutionists must prepare themselves beforehand for supreme trials and sacrifices. The working class is divided into different political camps; between those organizations which enter neither into the Second or the Third Internationals there are also serious disagreements. These cannot be eliminated artificially. But if there is a sphere in which honest revolutionary workers can and should combine their efforts, it is in the organization of assistance to the fighters who are captives of the bourgeoisie and who have been betrayed by the social-patriots. It is necessary to set immediately to the creation of a joint-party and an international association to give aid to the revolutionists persecuted for their fidelity to the principles of internationalism.

All the parties and groups standing under the banner of the Fourth International would of course readily join such an organization. But this is not enough. It is necessary to come to an agreement with all the other independent revolutionary parties, as well as the left wing minorities within the old Internationals and the trade unions. The question is of a burning political character. Great battles are ahead. It is necessary to build not only the army, but also at the same time to prepare the Red Cross and the sanitary corps.

THE A. F. OF L. AND THE TEACHERS UNION

By A. J. MUSTE

The rejection by the recent Cleveland convention of the American Federation of Teachers of William Green's demand that Local 5, New York, be "reorganized" in order to make it possible for the Linville-Lefkowitz faction in the Local to get rid of the opposition, must be considered as a part of the larger movement of insurgency within the A. F. of L. Recently there have been numerous and weighty instances of the insurgent spirit. In Minneapolis Local 574 of the Teamsters has had its charter lifted by the Teamsters' International, and one of the dominant figures in the A. F. of L. machine, and has to battle in addition a combination of local trade union bureaucrats, Farmer-Labor politicians and Chamber of Commerce. Nevertheless Local 574 has not only been able to stand up under this attack but has organized new groups of transportation employees, has been the leading factor in a series of militant strikes and the mainstay of a widespread progressive movement in Minnesota and adjoining states.

Forcing Dillon on Auto Workers

A few weeks ago the federal automobile locals met in convention in Detroit for the purpose of establishing an international union under an A. F. of L. charter. At the beginning of the convention Green in person laid down an ultimatum to the effect that the delegates must accept Francis J. Dillon, who as head of the A. F. of L. work in automobiles had consistently sabotaged an effective organization campaign and betrayed the General Motors strike last May, as the president of the organization at least for the first year. They were also informed that the jurisdiction of their international would not cover the skilled craftsmen in the industry; in other words, that their demand for a genuine industrial union could not be granted.

Although in the main the delegates to this convention had not come from the progressive states in the federal unions, they promptly rejected by a decisive majority the demand that they accept Dillon as the first president of their union. Notably, the Toledo delegates, who had been elected as conservatives in their local union, voted unanimously against Dillon.

Despite this clear and to nearly everybody unexpected expression of rank and file revolt, Green felt strong enough in this case to impose Dillon in the teeth of the rejection of the delegates. Nevertheless, the action was a real blow to his prestige and a clear indication that among the members is profound distrust of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, a spirit of independence and a strong demand for trade union democracy.

Somewhat later in the same week the struggle in the American Federation of Teachers convention came to a head. Doubtful of being able to put over their reorganization of Local 1 proposal on the delegates, Linville, Lefkowitz, Borah and other reactionaries appealed to Green. Having the habit of issuing decrees and on every occasion whacking "Communists" over the head, Green sent a strong message to the Teachers. They must get rid of "Communist" influence, and to reorganize Local 5 and kick out the opposition was the one way to make their union safe for Americanism and "true trade union principles."

There has been a reluctance, natural enough in a way, in the A. F. of L. as a small international, depending largely upon A. F. of L. support in state legislatures for advancing the interests of the teachers, to alienate the A. F. of L. leadership. But we are living in a new economic era and Bill Green is not Sam Gompers. The teachers by a decisive majority rejected Green's demand. Whereupon the reactionary minority walked out of the convention, clearly revealing themselves and all such bureaucrats as Green as splitters of the labor movement. There is this difference between the case of the Auto Workers and that of the Teachers, that so far, at any rate, Green has not been able to impose his will upon the latter. Local 5 has not been reorganized.

During the past week the Rubber Workers have been in convention in Akron, the demand on the part of the federal locals in that industry for an international union also having become so insistent that the A. F. of L. had to yield. In Akron Green was present in person as he had been in Detroit. Once again he undertook to lay down an ultimatum. The Rubber Workers must accept Coleman Claherty, the Francis Dillon of the industry, as their president for the first year. Again a howl of protest arose. A pungent two hour debate started in the course of which, according to a press report, "the A. F. of L. officialdom was criticized strongly." When on the following morning the vote of 44 to 9 for rejecting the proposed appointment of Claherty was announced, Green, perhaps "softened up" by the blows received at the Automobile Workers' and the Teachers' conventions, capitulated completely and announced to the delegates: "I accept your judgment in the matter as final."

All this has an important bearing on the question of what is likely to happen in the case of the A. F. of L. at the approaching A. F. of L. convention and what should be the course of the progressive elements in Local 5 and in the Teachers Union throughout the country. It seems to me most unlikely that an attempt to take away the charter of the entire Teachers Union or to "reorganize" the Federation will be made. Such an action is without precedent in the A. F. of L. It is true that the A. F. of L. frequently steps in to support of the machine of an international union, in reorganizing a local, or an entire group of locals. In this case, however, the recognized international officials are opposing the reorganization of the local. It is true also that where two distinct organizations emerge as a result of an intra-union conflict, the A. F. of L. determines which has "jurisdiction," and, of course, almost invariably "recognizes" the conservative group. At yet, however, the locals which walked out of the A. F. of L. convention have not dared to organize a separate national union and to apply for an A. F. of L. charter which would invalidate the charter of the present A. F. of L. Even in normal times the A. F. of L. Executive Council tends to proceed slowly in such matters, since, after all, per-capita tax income is one of its first considerations. That the drastic action of outlawing the A. F. of L. at this convention will be taken seems most unlikely because these are far from normal times in the Federation.

Struggle for Leadership

There is, in the first place, a struggle for leadership in process and in consequence a division within the official family itself. It is not yet clear whether John L. Lewis will openly contest the presidency with Green in Atlantic City. The mere fact, however, that the contest is possible will tend to prevent extreme and precipitate action in the Teachers' case. Each side will be looking for votes and anxious to maintain the present organization intact though, of course, Lewis, no more than Green, entertains any affection for the progressives and militants, not to speak of the revolutionists, in the Teachers' union.

In the second place, with such evidences of insurgency in the rank of the workers as I have already noted (and these instances could easily be multiplied) the A. F. of L. bureaucrats, no matter how much it may irritate them, will have to think twice before they run the risk of adding fuel to the flames of revolt by pulling off so raw a deal as would be involved in the reorganization of the entire Teachers' International or the setting up of a dual organization which certainly at the outset would represent a decidedly small minority of the organized teachers.

Conditions Favor Progressives

The Executive Council of the A. F. of L. and the progressives throughout the union face on the whole, therefore, at this moment a favorable situation. There is no doubt that they can, for the present at any rate, have the upper hand, counting upon the general spirit of insurgency among the workers and in the A. F. of L. unions, provided that they stand their ground firmly and carefully avoid giving the bureaucrats any impression of fear or weakness—an attitude of which the bureaucrats know only too well from long experience how to take advantage. The proposition, for example, which the Stalinists made in Local 5 to conciliate Linville and Lefkowitz by dissolving all groups in the union is, even from the lowest tactical point of view, unsound. To run after a retreating enemy, so to speak, urging him to stop in order that you may give him concessions, in fact, turn over your sword to him, is more than a little ridiculous.

This is, however, not to say that the progressives in the A. F. of L. do not have a stiff fight now and will not have a stiffer one in the future. The reactionaries, both in the A. F. of L. and in the A. F. of L. generally, will fight back. The Teachers must utilize the present opportunity precisely in order to consolidate their positions, strengthen their forces, organize the progressive elements locally and nationally and equip themselves for effective resistance against counter-attack and for future advances and victories for progressive, militant unionism.
